THE BEST RELIGION;

Wherein is largely explaned the Summe and principall Heads of the GOSPELL.

In certaine Sermons and Treatiſes, the Particulars and Dependance whereof are ſet downe immediately after the Epiſtle.

With a large Alphabeticall Table.

By GR. WILLIAMS Doctor in Divinity, and Deane of Bangor.

ACTS 16. 17.
Theſe men are the ſervants of the moſt high God, which ſhew unto us the way of ſalvation.

LONDON,
Printed by George Miller, for Philemon Stephens and Chriſtopher Meredith at the golden Lion in PAULS Church-yard
MDCXXXVI

D.T. 19.20

UMI

TO HIS MOST EXCELLENT MAIESTIE CHARLES,

By the grace of GOD, KING of Great Britaine, France and Ireland, DEFENDER OF THE FAITH, &c.

().

Most Gratious and Dread SOVERAIGNE:

IT is not alwaies the forme, but somtimes the matter, and often-times the parties reflection upon themselves, and their owne private obligations, that make Authors presume to mount up their Dedications to the very Thrones of Kings and Princes. The forme and manner of this my Worke is plaine and homely, suting better the capacities of those meaner sorts of your Majesties Subjects that are to reade the same, then any waies able to yeeld the least satisfaction to your Majesties most wise and exact judgement; The matter thereof is of a better and more pretious alloy, digged out of the mines of the holy Scriptures, as they are expounded by the most Auntient and best Moderne Fathers of the Church, and yet containing nothing new or unknowne to your sacred Majesty: But the Author or Collector, (or what other name soever the Reader shall be pleased to put upon him) is your Majesties Creature, so infinitely obliged by favour upon favour, as that hee hath boldly adventured upon this Dedication, not for the worth of the matter, or the quaintnesse of the manner, but onely that, over and beside his continuall prayers for your Majesties happinesse and prosperity, hee might professe himselfe in all thankefull humility

988164

The meanest, but most obliged of all your Majesties Servants

GR: WILLIAMS.

The Epiſtle to the Reader, ſhewing the coherence and dependance of theſe Sermons and Treatiſes one with another.

Deare Chriſtian Reader,

I Have little to ſay for this worke, beſides what the parents of the blind man ſaid of their ſonne, (though in ſome reſpect it is newly come forth, yet in regard of the truth and ſubſtance of it) it is old enough, let it ſpeake for it ſelfe; onely for the dependance of the one Sermon or Treatiſe upon the other, I ſay that in the firſt Sermon is ſet down the covenant of God made with Noah, and the promiſe of ſending a Saviour to redeeme us. In the ſecond is ſhewed the impulſive cauſe that moved God to ſend his Sonne, to ſave all thoſe that believe in him. In the third is ſhewed the comming of that Saviour to ſave us poore ſinners. In the fourth is manifeſted the power and ability of this Saviour to helpe us, to defend us, and to deliver us out of the hands of all our enemies. In the fift is handled the invitation that he maketh, and the inſtruction that he giveth to all men to come to him, that they may have reſt and happineſſe. In the ſixt is ſhewed how earneſtly he perſwadeth us to imbrace his doctrine, and to yeeld unto his inſtruction. In the ſeventh is explained, how he doeh with the fire of affliction purge our hearts to weane us from all the droſſe and vanities of this world, and with the fire of love inflame our affections to long after him, and to be united to him. In the eight is more fully ſhewed what is requiſite for us to do, that we may be received by him, and conjoyned with him. In the ninth is ſhewed what we ſhould avoid, and what to do after we have given our ſelves to Chriſt. In the tenth is ſhewed the royall entertainment that Chriſt maketh unto his followers. In the eleventh is ſet down how dearely it coſt him to entertaine us, and to purchaſe us unto himſelfe, and therfore that we ought not to neglect ſo great ſalvation. In the twelfth is expreſſed thoſe chiefeſt gifts and graces that he beſtoweth upon his children and followers, that they may be inabled and encouraged to do him ſervice. In the thirteenth is ſhewed the folly of them that would faine follow him, but yet faile in the manner of it. In the foureteenth is ſet downe the properties of his true ſervants, how they behave themſelves in his ſervice. In the fifteenth is unfolded their longing deſire to be with him. In the ſixteenth is ſhewed their conſtant reſolution to cleave unto him, and the folly of them that are obſtinate to refuſe him. In the ſeventeenth is handled their chiefeſt deſire and delights in this world, untill they be received to eternall life. And in the ſeven ſucceeding Treatiſes are ſhewed the meanes how this our Saviour hath redeemed us, what he hath done for us, and how we ſhall come through him to be eternally happy for evermore. This is the ſubſtance of this Worke.

For the printing of it, all the faults and eſcapes that yet I ſaw are onely literall, and I thinke but few of them are worthy of an errata; where thou meeteſt with any, I pray thee mend them with thy pen, and pray for him, that doth and will both truly love thee, and moſt heartily pray for thee while he liveth,

GR. WILLIAMS.

The ſeverall Sermons and Treatiſes contained in this Booke.

1 THe Myſteries of the Rainebow, Preached before the King, upon GEN. 9.13. I do ſet my bow in the cloud, &c.

2 Gods Love to the World, Preached before the King, upon IOHN 3.16. God ſo loved the world, that he gave his onely begotten Sonne &c.

3 The worthieſt Saying, Preached before the King, upon 1 TIM.1.15. This is a faithfull ſaying and worthy of all acceptation, that Ieſus Chriſt, &c.

4 The Beſt Helper, Preached before the King, upon ROM. 8.31. If God be for us, who can be againſt us?

5 The Way to Happineſſe, Preached at Weſtminſter, upon MATTH. 11. 28, 29, 30. Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, &c.

6 The fruitfull Knocking, Preached at Weſtminſter, upon REV. 3.20. Behold I ſtand at the doore and knocke, if any man heare my voice &c.

7 The Celeſtiall Fire, Preached before all the Judges, upon LUKE 12.49. I came to ſend fire upon the earth.

8 The Neceſſity of Repentance, Preached at White-Hall, upon LUKE 13.5. I tell you nay; but except ye repent &c.

9 S. Peters Charge, Preached at Weſtminſter, upon IOHN 21,21,22. Peter ſeeing him, ſaith to Ieſus, Lord, and what ſhall this man do? &c.

10 The Royall Feaſt, Preached at Weſtminſter, upon MATTH. 22. 11, 12, 13. And when the King came in to ſee his gueſts, &c.

11 The Paſchall Sacrifice, Preached at Weſtminſter, upon 1 COR. 5.7. For Chriſt our Paſſeover is ſacrificed for us.

12 The three chiefeſt Graces, Preached before the King, upon 1 COR. 13. 13. Now remaine faith, hope, and charity, theſe three; &c.

13 The Fooliſh Builders, Preached at White-Hall, upon MATTH. 7.26, 27. And every one that heareth theſe ſayings of mine, and doth them not, &c.

14 The weeping woman, Preached before the King, upon IOHN 20. 11. But Mary ſtood without at the ſepulcher weeping.

15 The Dove-like Wings, Preached before the King, upon PSAL. 55.6. O that I had wings like a dove, then would I flie away, and be at reſt.

16 The Reſolution of Pilate, firſt preached at S. Pauls Croſſe, afterwards inlarged, upon IOHN 19.22. What I have written, I have written.

17 The Delights of the Saints, firſt preached at S. Pauls Croſſe, afterwards inlarged, upon ROM. 1.7. To all that be at Rome, beloved of God &c.

18 The miſery of Man, Preached at S. Pauls Croſſe, upon ROM. 6.23. The reward of ſinne is death.

19 The Knowledge of God, Preached before K. Iames, upon EXOD. 34.6, 7. The Lord, the Lord, ſtrong, mercifull and gracious, &c.

20 The Incarnation of the Word, Preached at S. Maries in Cambridge, upon IOHN 1.14. And the Word was made fleſh.

21 The Paſſion of the Meſſias, Preached within the Cathedrall Church of S. Paul, upon LUKE 24.46. Thus it behoved Chriſt to ſuffer.

22 The Reſurrection of Chriſt, Preached within the Cathedrall Church of S. Paul, upon MATTH. 28. 5,6. He is not here, for he is riſen, &c.

23 The Aſcention of our Saviour, and Donation of the Holy Ghoſt, Preached at S. Maries in Cambridge, upon EPH. 4.5. Wherefore he ſaith, when he aſcended up on high, he led captivity captive, &c.

24 The Duty of Chriſtians, Preached before K. Iames, upon 1 THES. 5. 28. Brethren pray for us.

THE MYSTERIES OF THE RAINEBOVV.

GEN. 9. 13.

I doe ſet my bow in the cloud, and it ſhall be for a token of a covenant betweene me and the earth.

I Will not ſay of this Text, as Origen ſaith of all Scripture, that it is like a tree, which hath a barke and a ſubſtance, or like a nut that hath a ſhell and kernell; a literall and a myſticall ſence; but I will compare it rather to a rationall man, that hath body and ſoule; in as much as the myſticall ſence doth ſo farre ſurpaſſe the literall, as the ſoule of man doth tranſcend the body in all degrees of excellencies; and, quia progrediendum a notioribus, becauſe our progreſſion ſhould proceed from the beſt knowne, I will begin with the letter. Ego ponam arcum in nube.

The excellency of this Text.

King Salomon, the wiſeſt among the ſonnes of men ſaith, vade ad formicam & diſce ſapientiam; goe unto the Emet or Piſmire, behold her waies and be wiſe; for ſhee having no guide, governor, nor ruler, prepareth her meat in the ſummer and gathereth her food in harveſt; So thou ſhalt learne providence, in a faire day to provide a cloake for the tempeſt, in peace to foreſee warre, and in youth to lay up ſomewhat for old age. And maiſt thou learne ſo much from the Piſmire, and yet, when thou walkeſt in the field, and beholdeſt that excellent forme, and thoſe admirable colours of the Rainebow, canſt thou learne nothing? as if God made the Sun to no end, and placed it before thine eyes to no purpoſe? remember therefore I beſeech you what the Pſalmiſt ſaith, quam mirabilis Deus in operibus ſuis, ô how wonderfull is God in all his workes? and if he be ſo wonderfull in his workes, yea in the ſhadow of his workes; ô then how admirable is he in his Eſſence? and then conſider I pray you wherefore God hath put this bow in the cloud; to be a ſigne of the covenant betwixt God and the earth: and this will teach thee confidence in the mercy and promiſes of God; for when I ſee the bowe in the cloud, I will remember my covenant, and there ſhall be no more waters to deſtroy all fleſh: and therefore I intreate you all to marke, though not all, yet ſo many myſteries of this bow, as the compaſſe of one little hower will give me

That the meaneſt creatures may teach us ſomething.

Pro. 6. 6, 7, 8.

Pſal. 78. 4 & 139. 14, &c.

Verſ. 15.

licence to expreſſe; and when I have done my beſt; I ſhall leave it as an invaluable mine, wherein more treaſure may be found then I could extract in ſo ſhort a time. I will put my bow in the cloud.

Lorinus in Pſalm.

The ſword and the bow the chiefeſt inſtruments of warre; and what they ſignified.

In former times (ſaith Lorinus) the ſword and the bow were the chiefeſt inſtruments of warre: gladius vicinos, arcus remotos petit; the ſword cut off the higheſt, the bow deſtroyed the remoteſt; that is, myſtically, the cloſe hypocrites, which ſeeme nigh to God, and the prophane ſinners, that are very farre from him, as Aquinas noteth; or as Saint Chryſoſtome ſaith, gladius acerbitatem, arcus celeritatem pœnæ deſignat; the ſword ſheweth the ſharpneſſe, and the bow ſignifieth the ſwiftneſſe of the puniſhment; or as venerable Bede and Saint Gregory doe obſerve, gladius preſentes, arcus futuras pœnas denotat; the ſword intimates the preſent, and the bow foretells the future vengeance that ſhall fall upon the offenders. Therefore it was the cuſtome of the Romanes, when they intended warre againſt any people, to ſend a young man, accompanied with three others, to brandiſh his ſword, or to ſhake a ſpeare againſt them: as Virgil ſpeakes of Turnus

The practice of the Romanes and Egyptians when they denounced warre.

Virgil. Æneid. l.

——jaculum intorquens emittit in auras principium pugnæ——he ſhooke his dart and threw it off to give the ſignall of the fight: and the Egyptians ſaith Pierius, when they reſolved to make warre, ſent an archer with his bow bent, to ſtand before their enemies thereby to give them notice, what they ſhould expect: and in the Scriptures we doe finde, that conterere arcum, to breake the bow is omne robur belli confringere, to overcome all the ſtrength of warre; which the Auncients expreſſe by the bow: and therefore in the bleſſing of Ioſeph, it is ſaid, ſedet in forti arcus ejus, his bow ſhould abide ſtrong, and the Prophet David, reſolving to repoſe all his confidence in God, ſaith, I will not truſt in my bow, it is not my ſword that ſhall helpe mee. Whereby you ſee the bow was the Symbole, and the chiefe ſtrength of warre.

Pierius in Hieroglyph.

Gen.49.24.

Pſal.44.7.

And yet when Almighty God had moſt juſtly deſtroyed the old world for their abominable impiety, and out of the ocean of his mercy had moſt graciouſly promiſed never to deſtroy it ſo againe, he confirmes this promiſe with the moſt admirable ſigne of a bow; ſaying, I will put my bow in the cloude, and that ſhall be ſigillum fœderis, the ſeale of my covenant, and a perpetuall ſigne of an inviolable peace betwixt me and the earth.

Gods waies different from our waies.

Eſay 55.8. 1 Cor.1.18. Rom.1.16.

So we ſee, Gods waies are not as mans waies, and his thoughts are not as our thoughts: for, we count the preaching of the Word fooliſhneſſe, he makes it the power of God unto ſalvation to every one that beleeveth: we eſteeme the beſt preachers and the holieſt men in this world no better then the vrieſt filth, and the vileſt of-ſcouring of the whole earth; we thinke their life madneſſe and their end to be without honour; but the Lords delight is in them that feare him, and their death is pretious in his ſight, even as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, right deare in the ſight of the Lord is the death of his Saints; we magnifie and admire the great men of this world, we adore the rich, and ſtoope unto the ſhadowes of the mighty; but God lookes unto the lowly, he loves them that are poore in ſpirit, and he chooſeth the fooliſh things of this world to confound the wiſe, and the baſe things, yea things which are not, to bring to nought things that are; that no fleſh ſhould glory in his preſence.

1 Cor.4.13.

Sap.5.4.

Pſal.

Pſal.116.13.

Eſay 66.2. Matth.5.3.

1 Cor.1.27,28,29.

God worketh all things for the beſt unto his ſervants.

And we may further obſerve from hence, how graciouſly God worketh all things together for the beſt, for them that love him; and, as to the wicked, thoſe things which ſhould be to their advantage, are unto them an occaſion of falling; their wealth, whereby they might honour God, by releeving his poore members, turnes to be their ruine, when they ſpend it with Dives in pride and prodigality; and the ſagacity of their naturall wit, which might further them to underſtand the divine truth, makes many of them cry out with the Poet; Ingenio perij qui miſer ipſe meo; alas, alas, my wit hath undone me, when I uſed the ſame to ill ends, to abuſe thoſe that ſerved God; ſo to the godly, every thing turnes to his profit; his heavineſſe into joy, his wants into plenty, and his preſent contempt into everlaſting glory; even as you ſee here, iridem, quæ prius erat nuncia pluviæ inſtantis

Ovidius.

inſtantis nunc eſſe ſignum diluvij nunquam venturi, God makes the hieroglyphique of warre to become the olive brance of peace: for, I will put my bow in the cloud, and it ſhall be the ſigne of the peace, betwixt me and the earth. Where obſerve,

Paraus in hunc loc. ſup. Gen.

3. Parts.

1. The agent, who doth this; I;
2. The act, what is done; will put my bow in the cloud.
3. The end, why he doth it; to be a ſigne of the peace betwixt God and the earth.

1. Part. The agent.

1. For the Author or agent, I have put; that is, I, who have made the heavens and formed the cloudes, that deſtroyed the world with a deluge, and delivered my ſervant Noah from that deſtruction, I do now put my bow in the cloud. To teach us, that although the bow and the cloud, and the like, be naturall things, yet God ruleth all theſe things, and his providence watcheth over all; for hee hath made ſummer and winter; he maketh the ſtorme to ceaſe, he bringeth the windes out of his treaſure, he wounds and heales, he kills and makes alive, and a ſparrow lights not upon the ground without the divine providence of Almighty God; becauſe, as the Poet ſaith, — Ludit in humanis divina potentia rebus: or as another ſaith, Aſtra regunt mundum, ſed regit aſtra Deus: the ſtarres doe guide the world, but God diſpoſeth all the ſtarres: And therefore, though God be the God of nature, yet we muſt not ſo aſcribe things to nature, as to forget the providence of God, which hath nature at his command.

That God guideth all things.

Pſal. 74. 17. & Pſal. 107. 29. 1 Sam. 2. 6. Matth. 10 29.

2. For the act; three things are to be conſidered.

2. Part. The act. 3. Things to be conſidered.

1. The time of doing it.
2. The thing done.
3. The place where it was done.

1. For the time, in the Hebrew text it is in the future tenſe, I will put, in the Septuagint it is τίθημι, I have put, and in the vulgar latine it is pono, I doe put; whereupon the queſtion riſeth; whether this bow was before the flood or not; To which, Albinus, with ſome others, whom Aquinas mentioneth, anſwer not; becauſe Moſes ſaith, the Lord had not yet rained upon the earth; therefore no bow, becauſe no cloudes.

1. The time. Paraus in hunc loc. Whether the Rainebow was before the flood. Thom. ad loc. Gen. c. 9.

But to this we may reply, that the Prophet ſpeaketh this, as he ſpake that, of Adam; there was not a man to till the earth: that is, in the beginning of the creation; but immediately after, God created man, and within a while, the heavens were overſhadowed with cloudes, and they ſhowred downe raine upon the field. And againſt this we may object; if the bow was not before the flood, then God did not finiſh all the workes of creation in ſixe daies? Aleuinus anſwereth, that although the bow was not before the flood; yet God may be ſaid to finiſh all his workes in ſixe daies: becauſe the cauſes of this bow, (which according to the Philoſophers, are; lux ſolis & nubes certo modo affecta; the bright beames of the ſun ſhining upon a hallow and dewie cloud, right oppoſite unto the ſame; whereby the moſt admirable colours of the Rainebow are caſt forth by reflection, through the divers mixture of the light and ſhade) were before the flood, though the effect was hindered, and the generation of the bow differred till the ceſſation of the flood: but againſt this Pererius ſaith; Quorſum hanc iridis generationem Deus prohiberet, certe nulla ratio reddi poteſt; there is no reaſon that can be rendred, why God ſhould hinder the generation of this bow, but that, poſita cauſa ſequeretur effectus, the ſun caſting forth his beames upon the glaſſe of the watérie cloud, the Rainebow ſhould preſently appeare unto the world: And ſo the Greeke Fathers, Origen, Saint Chryſoſtome, Cyrill, and of the Latine Doctors; Aquinas, Lyppomanus, Eugubinus, Abulenſis, and Dionyſius Carthuſianus, are of the ſame minde: therefore I ſay, that, as the element of water, and the bread and wine of the Euchariſt, were created from the beginning, and yet were not inſtituted for the ſignes of our regeneration, and of the paſſion of Chriſt, till after the comming of our Saviour, ſo the Rainebow was before the flood, though not till now, after the flood, appointed to be the ſigne of the peace betwixt God and the earth.

Hic ubi ſol vatis tempeſtatem inter cæcam adverſa fulſit nimborum aſpergine contra, tum color in nigris exiſtit nubibus arcus, &c. Lucretius l. 6 p. 169

Colleg. Conimbricē. ſe, in l meteor. tract 5 c 2. p. 47. The cauſes of the Rainebow.

Perer. ſuper Gen. cap. 9.

The conſent of antiquity that the Rainebow was before the flood.

That the former doctrine teacheth us, to relie upon the Word of God

Muſc. ſuper hunc loc. Gen.c.9.

The Word of God teacheth us the right uſe of all things.

Ariſt. meteor. l.3. Seneca nat. queſt. l.1.a c.3. uſque ad c.9. Iulius Scalig. exercit.80. adverſ. Cardan. de ſubtil.

And this very point, that God putteth, non ſignum portentoſum, ſed arcum antea uſitatum, not any fearefull ſigne to ſtrike a terror; nor any new created meteor, to move curioſity, to prie into it, but an uſuall ſigne ſpringing from a naturall cauſe, as Muſculus ſaith, doth teach us, to relie more upon the Word of God, that ſheweth the right uſe of this bow, then upon the bow it ſelfe; which of it ſelfe, is but a barren ſigne without profit; for if you giue me a man ignorant of Gods Word, though he can diſpute of it, as learnedly as Ariſtotle, meteor l.3. as amply as Seneca nat. queſt. l.1.a c.3. uſque ad c.9. and as ſubtilly as Iulius Scaliger, exercitat.80. adverſ. Cardan: yet he ſhall never underſtand the right uſe of this bow, here expreſſed in my Text, to ſignifie the promiſe of Gods grace, nor can he perceive any other thing thereby, but that it is imago radiorum ſolarium in nubibus impreſſa; the image of the ſunne-beames impreſſed and imprinted upon the cloudes. The like may be ſaid of the Water of Baptiſme; even as Naaman did of the waters of Iordane; what is this more then other waters? are not Abana and Parphar, rivers of Damaſcus better then all the waters of Iſrael? So the Bread and the Wine in the bleſſed Euchariſt, they be but poore things in themſelves, in reſpect of outward ſhew; and the ſpirit of Iulian would but laugh at our ſimplicity in magnifying them ſo much as we doe; and he might laugh at us well inough, if the Spirit of God, out of his holy Word, did not teach us the moſt ſacred uſe and divine inſtitution thereof.

2 Reg.5.12.

2. The thing done.

2. For the thing done, it is, I will put my bow, touching which, wee muſt conſider { 1. Cujus ſit. 2. Qualis ſit. } that is

{ 1. Whoſe bow is put, my bow.
{ 2. What manner of bow it is, and how it differeth from all other bowes.

1. Whoſe bow it is.
That many are ſaid to have bowes.
1. Men have bowes.
What Iacobs bow ſignifieth.
Gloſſa ſuper. Gen.48.22.
Matth 4.4.7.10.

1. He ſaith, I will put my bow, becauſe we read of many that have bowes; as eſpecially

1. Men. 2. Divels. 3. God. For

1. Iacob had a bow, *Gen.*48.22. and that myſtically ſignifieth either his hope in God, which lifted up his minde on high, or the conſolation he conceived of Gods Word, whereby he overcame the Sichemites, as ſaith the gloſſe; and which is ſufficient to ſupport us againſt all our enemies; for our Saviour Chriſt did overcome the divell, with the arrowes that he ſhot out of this bow; and we may overcome them too, if we uſe but the ſame art, and when he tempteth us to ſin, take a ſhaft out of this quiver, and ſay, ſcriptum eſt, it is written thou ſhalt not doe ſuch a thing; for theſe arrowes are like Hercules ſhaft that killed Neſſus, or like Davids peble-ſtone that hit Goliah in the forehead, and ſo laid him flat upon the ground.

2 Sam.17.49.

What is the bow of the wicked.

Pſal.64.3.

And as the godly, ſo the wicked likewiſe have their bowes, that is, their mouthes, as the Prophet David ſheweth, when he ſaith, they ſhoot out their arrowes, even bitter words; lies, ſlanders, blaſphemies, and the like; and this is a bow indeed, like a bow of ſteele, that piercеth to the very heart; God bleſſe every good man from the ſame.

2 The Divell hath his bow and what it is.
Origen ſuper 1. regum.

2. The Divell hath his bow; and that is, as Origen ſaith, either his pride, and rebellion againſt God, or his malice and grievous temptation towards men; whereby he laboureth to ſubdue all faithfull ſoules: and his arrowes are thoſe wicked men, Iewes, tyrants, heretiques, and the like, which he uſeth as his inſtruments to overcome the godly.

Gregor. Mor. l.19. 28.
3. God hath his bow: and what it ſignifieth.
Aug. ſup. Pſal.7. Hieron. ſup. Zach. 10.

3. God hath his bow, and this ſignifieth, ſometimes, the holy Scriptures, as Saint Gregory ſaith; becauſe from hence, as from a bow, many terrible ſentences and threatnings are ſhot forth to the hearts of men to keepe them backe from ſin, ſometimes it ſignifieth the Preachers of Gods Word, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith, becauſe thy doe, either with Ionathan, ſhoot out the arrowes of Gods warning, to perſwade ſinners to repentance, or els with Moſes, denounce the curſes of the law and throw forth the moſt deadly darts of vengeance againſt all ſuch as goe on on ſtill in their wickedneſſe: ſometimes it ſignifieth vim ejus punitivam, the puniſhing power of God, as both Saint Baſil and Saint Hilarie doe expound the Pſalmiſt, where he ſaith, the Lord hath bent his bow and made it ready, he hath prepared in it the inſtruments of death; and ſo the bow of God, being an equivocall word, ſignifieth many other things.

Baſil. ſup. pſal. 9. & Hilarius ſup. Pſal. 7. 13.

But here, as all interpreters do conclude, it is literally taken for the Rainebow; becauſe the Lord ſaith, I will put my bow in the cloud; And yet I muſt confeſſe the other bowes of God are oftentimes put in the cloudes; as

That here God meaneth the Rainebow.

How Gods bowes are put in the cloude.

1. When the Scriptures are put in the cloud. Act. 16. 14.

1. The Scriptures may be ſaid to be put in the cloudes, when they are not underſtood of the hearers; which indeed is never, till the Spirit of God openeth our hearts, as it did the heart of Lydia, and openeth our underſtanding that we may underſtand the Scriptures.

2. When the Doctors of the Church are put in a cloud. Epheſ. 2. 12. Sap. 5. 6.

2. The Doctors of the Church are put in a cloud, when they preach darke myſteries, not intelligible, perhaps to themſelves, much leſſe to others; or when the hearts of their hearers are ſo hardned in ſin, and their eyes ſo darkned, through ignorance, that they can neither ſee the wondrous things of Gods law, nor perceiue the gracious promiſes of the Goſpell, but are as barbarians to our preaching, not knowing the language of Canaan, becauſe they are ſtrangers to the will of God, and the light of underſtanding hath not ſhined unto them.

3. When the threatnings of Gods anger are put in the cloud. Ionah 3. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. Gen. 6. & 7. Mat. 24. 38. Gen. 19. 14.

3. The comminations of Gods anger and the threatnings of his vengeance are put in the cloud, either when the ſinners do repent with the Ninivites, and ſo their judgements paſſe away with the clouds; or when with Damocles, they doe not behold the ſword that hangeth over their heads, and muſt cut their throats, when they have done their feaſts; but are as the old world, that mocked at Noah, when he told them of the deluge, or as the ſonnes of Lot, that gibed at their father, when he ſpake of the deſtruction of Sodom.

Pererius in Gen. ſup. hunc loc. Pareus in hunc loc.

But, the putting of theſe bowes in a cloud, are, for the moſt part, no ſmall ſignes of fearefull iudgements, to be ſhunned and prayed againſt of all faithfull ſoules, and that bow which is here ſpoken of, is put for a ſpeciall argument of Gods mercy; and therefore this can betoken nothing els but the Rainebow, as Pererius and the reſt of the Commentators upon this place have obſerved.

Ariſtot. meteor. l. 3. Scaliger exercit. 8. §. 11.

Two ſorts of Rainebowes.

And yet, there is one doubt more to be reſolved; becauſe Ariſtotle, Scaliger, and the reſt of the Philoſophers have ſet downe, there be two ſorts of Rainebowes, one of the Moone, and another of the Sunne: But, as there is a great deale of difference betwixt the naturall cauſes of theſe two; ſo there is as much, and much more, betwixt the myſticall and ſpirituall ſignification of them both; for the firſt ſignifieth the wrath of God, and the ſecond is a ſymbole of his mercy; for

The differences betwixt the myſt. ſignification of the bow, of the Moone and of the Sunne.

1 Difference.

1. The bow of the Moone, according to the Philoſophers, noteth a long, ſtormie, and tempeſtuous weather; and the bow of the Sunne, according to the greeks, is called ἶρις σοφίας; the bow of wiſdome; becauſe the heate and colour thereof, mixed of fire and water, is an infallible ſigne that the wiſedome and providence of God is ſo watchfull over his people, that no univerſall danger ſhall ever happen unto the world either by fire or water to the laſt day: and therefore certaine Catholique Doctors do conjecture, (and it is but a conjecture) that for the ſpace of 40. yeeres before the day of judgement, this bow ſhall not appeare; and the author of the Scholaſticall Hiſtory ſaith, that tradunt ſancti quod quadraginta annis ante judicium non videbitur arcus cœleſtis, id quod etiam naturaliter oſtendet deſiccationem aeris; holy men do affirme that 40. yeares before the day of judgement no Rainebow ſhall appeare; which ſhall ſerve as a naturall ſigne of the draught in the aire already begun: and ſpecially to foreſhew that the clemency of God (by reaſon of the horrible ſins of thoſe times) is then to be ſuſpended from the world, and the judgement of fire is approaching nigh.

Gemin. de exemp. l. 1. c. 40. p. 50.

Autor Hiſtor. Scholaſt. in lib. Gen. c. 35.

2. Difference. Ariſtot. meteor. l. 3. Gemin. quo ſupra.

2. The bow of the Moone, if we beleeve Ariſtotle, appeareth but very ſeldome; not above twice in 50. yeeres ſaith Geminianus; the reaſons which he ſets downe, l. 1. c. 4. de cœlo & elementis, for brevities ſake I muſt paſſe over; but the bow of the Sunne, as experience ſheweth doth appeare very often; To teach us, that Deus pronior ad miſericordiam quam ad iram, & preſtabilior ad parcendum quam puniendum; God is apter to pittie then to puniſh, and to ſhew mercy then to be angry; for his wrath endureth but the twinckling of an eye, and he deſireth not the death of a ſinner, ſaith the Prophet. And therefore, for once we ſee the bow of juſtice, we ſee, and find and feele, the bow of mercy, not 50. times; but 50. times, 500. times; for his anger is but to the third and fourth generation of them that hate him; but he will ſhew mercy, not to a thouſand, but to thouſands, I know not how many, of them that love him and keepe his Commandements.

God more prone to pitty then to puniſh. Pſal. 30. 4.

Ezek. 18. 32. & c. 33. 11.

Exod. 20. 5, 6.

3. Difference.

3. The bow of the Moone appeareth alwaies in the night, the other alwaies in the day; to teach us, that they which walke in darkeneſſe ſhould expect none other end then the wrath of God; but they that doe the workes of the light, mercy and bleſſings ſhall encompaſſe them on every ſide.

4. Difference. Collegium Conimb. in Lmet. Ariſtot. tract. 5. c. 2. p. 46.

4. The bow of the Moone is onely beautified with one colour and that is white, ſaith Collegium Conimbricenſe; and this ſheweth the equity and the purity of Gods anger, that it is free from all the obſcurity of paſſions and perturbations; juſtum judicium, non injuſta vindicta, a juſt judgement upon wicked ſinners, and no unjuſt revenge of ſuppoſed wrongs: but the bow of the Sunne, omnia meteora, & colorum varietate & pulchritudine vincit, as well in variety of colours as in excellency of forme, is more ſpecious and more admirable then all other meteors whatſoever; to teach us, that the mercy of God is above all his workes, and is more glorious, more excellent, and more amiable unto us then all other divine attributes whatſoever.

The mercy of God, the chiefeſt of his attributes. Pſal. 145. 9.

That the Raine-bow of the Sunne is here meant.

And therefore, though God hath a bow of the Moone, to ſignifie his juſtice, as well as a bow of the Sunne, to ſhew his mercy; yet becauſe he had ſo lately, not onely ſhewed, but alſo uſed that bow of his wrath, and ſhot forth the arrowes of his anger againſt the old world; and this bow is put to be the ſigne of the peace betwixt God and the earth; it is moſt manifeſt that here is meant the bow of the Sunne, to ſignifie the love and not the hatred of our God, and to put him in minde of the preſervation and not the deſtruction of his creatures. So you ſee both whoſe bow, and what bow is here meant.

2. The quality of this bow. Two things to be conſidered. 1. The forme. Three things obſervable. 1. Like a ſemi-circle.

2. For the quality of this bow, wee are diligently to conſider both { 1. The forme of it, 2. The colours of it, } and

1. For the forme of this bow we muſt obſerve it to be { 1. Like a ſemi-circle. 2. Without an arrow. 3. With the back towards heaven. }

1. The orbicular figure and forme of globe is the moſt perfect, ſaith the Philoſopher; therefore the crowne and diademe is made round, and the Monarches of this world doe beare the effigies of a ball in their hands as Golhofredus viterbienſis noteth in theſe rimes:

Aureus ille globus pomum vel palla vocatur,
Vnde figuratum mundum geſtare putatur,
Quando coronatur palla ferenda datur, and a little after
Taliter hunc mundum geſtat manus una rotundum
Regius includit ſic omnia climata pugnus
Taliter omne quod eſt regia pompa tenet,

Viterbienſis chronic. parte. 19.

To note the perfection of their government, that, as in reſpect of their places none are greater, ſoli Deo minores, being above all men and under none but only God, ſo in regard of their offices they ſhould be better then all others: becauſe they are to rule all others; and to go in and out before them, as the Scripture ſpeaketh; and yet this bow, notwithſtanding all the faire ſhewes and various colours thereof, is but halfe a circle, as Ariſtotle, Aquinas, Olympiadorus, Vitellio, Albertus Magnus, Daneus, and all that I read of, doe confirme: and therefore, if we reſpect his forme, which is the beſt part of any thing, this bow muſt needs be imperfect;

Ariſt. meteor. l. 3. c. 5. Thom. ibid. vitellio. in perſpectiva propoſitione. 74. Albert. M. l. 3. tract. 4. c. 25. Daneus. tract. 2. dies 2. c. 17 p. 41.

imperfect; Not that God doth any thing imperfectly or doth faile in any thing of his intentions; but that hee intended the same to bee thus; to teach us

What we learne hereby.

1. That there is no perfection in the best things of this life, in any thing under heaven; for though they be as glorious in shew as the Rainebow in his colours, yet are all but vanity of vanities, lilia agri, folia venti, nothing and worth nothing, as Nazianzen saith; And therefore why should we set our hearts upon these demi-things, not able to make us halfe happy, riches, honours, pleasures and the like, and not rather moderately joy in this world that we might eternally injoy the world to come?

1. No perfection in any thing under heaven.

2. That this Iris, so called of εἰρήνη, peace, (as some derive it) because it is the signe of the peace betwixt God and the earth, being but a semicircle, appearing, onely in our hemisphere, might put us in minde, that this time onely, dum super terram vivimus, while we live here upon the earth, is the time of mercy, a time to make our peace and reconciliation with God; because our Rainebow, that is our signe and token of peace, is here onely set forth unto us; now is the time acceptable, now is the day of salvation, & postea non situm erit in nobis pœnitere; and hereafter when this life is ended, it will not be in our power to gaine repentance, or to wash away our sinnes with any teares, as Saint Chrysostome saith; And therefore we should seeke the Lord while he may be found, and call upon him while he is neere; or if we doe now put off to make our peace with God, and thinke to have our soules purged in purgatory, then (as Saint Bernard saith) we may expectare salutem in medio gehennæ, quæ operata est in medio terræ; waite for salvation in the midst of hell which was wrought for us in the midst of the earth, but it shall be to no end, to no purpose; because we refused the same when he waited for our conversion.

2. Our time of repentance onely in this life.

Chrysost. de Lazaro, ser. 2.

Esay 55.6.

2. Seeing (as Saint Ambrose doth observe) God saith, ponam arcum, non sagittam; I will put my bow, not mine arrow, yea my bow, though with a full bent, yet without an arrowe, it sheweth the abundance of Gods love, and his proneſse to shew mercy towards us; for the bow doth not wound us, but the arrowe; and he sheweth the bow of his mercy, that we might escape the arrowes of his justice. So unwilling is the Lord to punish us, and so desirous he is to do us good, were we but willing to accept his goodnesse, ô that there were such a heart in them, to feare me and to keepe my Commandements, that it might goe well with them and their children for ever. I will instance but in one example of the Prodigall childe; for he no sooner resolved to goe to his father, but his father prevented him, and seeing him a farre off, had compassion on him, and ran and met him, and (as Saint Augustine well observeth) nondum uno verbo audito, squalidum & deformem amplectitur; before he had spoken one word unto his father, the father falleth upon his necke, and kissed this ragged, defiled and deformed sonne; and therefore he is called πάτηρ οἰκτιρμῶν, the father of mercies, as if mercy did as naturally proceed from God, as the child doth from his father; and the father of mercies, in the plurall number, because the earth is full of his mercies, and his mercy is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that feare him, and his righteousnesse unto childrens children, as the Prophet speaketh.

2. Without an arrowe. The greatnesse of Gods mercies.

Deut. 5.29.

Luke 15.20.

2 Cor. 1.3.

Psal. 103.17.

3. In that this bow is directed with his backe towards heaven, it sheweth, how God never shooteth downe the arrowes of his judgements against us, but when we shoote up the darts of our sinnes against him; for, as when a man throweth a stone on high, the same falleth downe againe; and, if he looke not well unto it, perhaps in his owne forehead; so when we shoote up the arrowes of our iniquities towards heaven, they will light downe with a vengeance upon our heads, if we doe not warily eschew them by repentance; or as Moses threw up ashes towards heaven, and God turned them downe into a feareſull plague against the Egyptians, so, cum cœlum petimus stultitia, when, with the gyants, we will war against heaven, then God will turne our wicked sins into feareſull judgements against the sinners. And therefore, if men will add thirst unto drunkennesse

3. With the back towards heaven.

Exod 9.10.

How much wee ſhould be afraid to ſin.

and provoke the Lords anger againſt them, then will the Lord make his arrowes drunk with blood, and his ſword ſhall devoure the fleſh of his adverſaries. And this ſhould teach us to be afraid of ſinne, to hate the very garment that is defiled with iniquity, to ſhun the very termes of ſuperſtition, and to deteſt the very circumſtances that may ſeduce us to evill. So you have ſeene the forme of this bow.

2. The colours of this bow.

2. For the Colours of this bow, I told you before what it was, ſpeculum ſolis, ſo excellent, that of all the things generated in the middle region of the aire, there is nothing more beautifull to behold, or more worthy to be obſerved then this celeſtiall bow; and therefore Cicero demanded, why it was not accounted in the number of the gods; and the greeke Poets call it, θαυμάντις, the daughter of admiration, by reaſon of the moſt admirable colours that are in it, whereof the Poet ſaith,

Cicero de nat. deor.

Virgilius Æneid. lib. 5.

Mille trahit varios, adverſo ſole colores; it ſeemes to ſhew a thouſand colours to our eyes: but according to the three places of the cloud, from whence there ſprings a divers refraction of the light and ſhade, the higheſt, middeſt, and loweſt, ſo there are in the bow three ſpeciall colours, { 1. ὑαλυγος, the cerulean, or waterie 2. πρασινος, the greene, or graſſie } colour. 3. ξανθος, the yellow, or fiery Ariſtot. met. l. 3. c. 4. 5.

Albertus l. 3. tract. 4. c. 14. Daneus r. 2. dies 2. c. 17. Colleg. Conimbr. tract. 5. c. 2. pag. 46. in lib. met. Ariſt.

Whereof Collegium Conimbricenſe ſaith,
1. Qui ſupremum locum nubis obtinet eſt puniceus; that which reſides in the higheſt part of the cloud is the yellow or fiery colour.
2. Qui mediam nubem pingit eſt viridis, that which impreſſeth the midſt of the cloud is greene.
3. Qui infimam partem tenet eſt purpureus, that which holdeth the loweſt place is of purple colour.

The three colours of the Rainebow teach us three things.

And theſe three colours of the Rainebow ſhould put us in minde of three ſpeciall things.

1. The cerulean colour ſhould recall into our mindes the judgement of water, that is paſt.

2. The graſſie colour ſhould make us underſtand the ſtate of grace preſent.

3. The yellow colour ſhould teach us to foreſee the judgement of fire, which is to come: And to ſpeake of them a little more particularly.

1. The judgement of water. Wherein two things are obſervable.

1. In the judgement of water, we ſhould conſider { 1. The cauſe 2. The effect } that is, { 1. The ſinne committed by the old world. 2. The puniſhment inflicted by God. }

1. The ſinne.

1. For the ſinne of the old world, it was univerſally ſpread over all the parts of the earth, and over all ſorts of men; not onely the wicked and prophane ſonnes of Beliall, the accurſed generation of ungodly Caine, but alſo the of-ſpring of holy Sheth, the ſonnes of God, did ſell themſelves to commit all evill, when they joyned themſelves with the daughters of men; And thoſe ſins of theirs, that are chiefly ſpecified in the Scriptures, are diſtributed into theſe two maine ſtreames { 1. A deadneſſe of heart, and a moſt careleſſe ſecurity of doing good. 2. A contempt of all piety, and of holy Noah, the preacher of righteouſneſſe. }

Matth. 24. 38. 1 Pet. 3. 20. & 2 Pet. 2. 5.

Our Saviour ſpeakes of the firſt of theſe, and Saint Peter ſets downe the ſecond.

And truly, if we compare our owne times with theirs, I feare we are not ſhort of them in any kinde of ſinne; for have we not all ſinned, and many of them that profeſſe religion, cauſe the name of God to be evill ſpoken of among the wicked, when they give occaſion unto the world, to terme them hypocrites, becauſe their converſation is not anſwerable to their profeſſion? others commit all iniquity, even with greedineſſe, being (as the Apoſtle ſaith) filled with all unrighteouſneſſe, drunkenneſſe, adultery, cruelty, and above all, which is worſe then all, a moſt fearefull ſwearing and prophaning of the moſt bleſſed name of God in every place, in every mouth: ô that my head were full of water and mine eyes a fountaine

Rom. 1. 29.

Ieremy 9. 1.

taine of teares, that I might weepe inough, and bewaile theſe ſearefull ſins. And yet we are not onely thus given to ſinne; but alſo, which is a greater abomination, to a careleſſe contempt of all godlineſſe: I call heaven and earth to witneſſe, that I have often grieved at my heart, when perhaps I have ſmiled with my face, to ſee the prophaneſſe of men, and that contempt of God and good men, which I have obſerved in many places. The old world had but one Noah, whom they contemned, for which it is branded, carbone notabilis atro; and we have many hundred Noahs, many preachers of righteouſneſſe, and yet we follow the exhortations of none of them, but contemne them and their doctrine to the great diſhonour of Almighty God: but

The great prophaneſſe and iniquity of our times

2. Let us heare of the puniſhment of the old world; their ſin you ſee was intollerable, and if you marke it, you ſhall find their puniſhment anſwerable: for the great and terrible God, whoſe anger is a conſuming fire, did open the fountaines of the great deepe, and ſet wide the cataracts of heaven, and the waters prevailed over all the earth; and ſo deſtroyed man and beaſt from the face of the earth: a moſt lamentable ſpectacle, beyond our apprehenſion, that our good God ſhould be ſo farre provoked againſt man, as to deſtroy all living things with ſo terrible a deſtruction.

2. The puniſhment of the old world. Gen. 7. 11.

Queſt. But alas, what had the creatures done? Wherein had the beaſts of the field offended, or what iniquity had the foules of the heavens commited againſt God, that they ſhould be thus deſtroyed with man?

Why the irrationall creatures were deſtroyed.

Reſp. I anſwer that theſe, being created for the uſe of man and abuſed by ſinfull man, therefore, as a King condemning a rebell, confiſcates all his goods; ſo God puniſheth the inſtrument with the principall, and all that were created for man with man. You ſee the puniſhment.

O therefore, let us feare, leaſt our ſinnes being like theirs, we ſhould likewiſe periſh with them; for though God promiſed that he would never deſtroy the world with waters, yet did he never promiſe, that he would not deſtroy wicked ſinners; nay, he hath threatned to deſtroy them: for if men will not turne, he will whet his glittering ſword and his hand ſhall take hold of vengeance; and therefore, if we would eſcape Gods fearefull judgements let us forſake our ſinnefull waies; and if we have no regard of our ſelves, yet let us pittie our loving wives, our litle children, our faithfull ſervants, and all other poore ſillie creatures that never offended us, and yet many times, for our ſinnes, muſt likewiſe periſh with the ſinners.

The many reaſons that ſhould move us to be afraid to ſinne. Deut. 32. 41, 42.

2. The greene or graſſie colour doth note unto us the mercy and grace of God, that makes all things to flouriſh for our good; for though our ſinnes deſerved ſo much ill at the hands of God, yet doth God ſtill ſpare us, and his mercy is like the ſea, compaſſing the earth, on every ſide, or like the Sunne, ſhining upon the good and upon the bad, upon the juſt and upon the unjuſt.

2. The ſtate of grace. Matth. 5. 45.

And this goodneſſe of God towards us is principally ſeene in three things.

The goodneſſe of God ſeene in three things.

1. Giving of graces.
2. Preſerving from evill.
3. Sparing from puniſhment.

} for

1. Giving of graces.

1. God telleth the Iſraelites that he led them with the cords of a man, even with the bands of love, that is, beneficijs & muneribus quibus detinuit eos, with manifold bleſſings and benefits which he had beſtowed upon them.

Hoſeah 11. 4.

2. Preſerving from evill.

2. The Prophet David telleth us, how God brought forth his people with joy and his choſen with gladneſſe, that is, out of Egypt; and then, he ſuffered no man to doe them wrong, but rebuked even Kings for their ſakes: and cauſed the ſtarres in their order to fight againſt Siſera, & conjurati veniunt ad claſſica venti.

Pſal. 105. 43.

Iudg. 5. 20. Claudian.

3. The ſame Prophet ſheweth how unthankfully this people continued againſt God, worſhipping the idols of Canaan, and ſhedding innocent blood, even the blood of their ſonnes and of their daughters, whom they offered unto divels, and yet God was ſo mercifull that hee deſtroyed them not, nor ſuffered his whole diſpleaſure to ariſe.

3. Sparing from puniſhment. Pſal. 106. 36, 37.

And

How God dealeſ with us.

And thus God dealeth with all people, and above all with us: for

1. How God bleſſed us: Eſay 23.8.

1. As he ſaid of Tyrus, thy merchants are princes, and thy chapmen the nobles of the world: ſo he may ſay of us, that he hath bleſſed us above meaſure, above our fellowes, above all the reſt of our neighbour nations, and hath delighted to doe us good; even ſo much good, that we are wearie of it, and doe as the Iſraelites did with Manna, begin to loath our owne happineſſe. Pyndarus ſaith, βρέχει θεων βασιλεὺς ὁ μεγας χρυσαις νιφάδεσσι πολιν; it is an opinion of the people that the gods rained gold upon the Rhodians; and I thinke, if ever people received ſhowers of gold from God, it is we of this kingdome of great Britaine.

Num. 11.6.

The happineſſe of the Rhodians.

2. How God preſerved us in 1588.

In 1600.

In 1605.

2. How many times hath he preſerved us from the hands of our enemies, and from all the evill that we feared, as ſpecially in 88. when the power of our enemies threatned to bring us all into bondage: then in 1600. when, at the death of our Queene occubuit ſol, our joy began to faint, and yet nox nulla ſequuta eſt, our ſorrow was ſuddenly turned into joy; and then in 1605. from the Gunpowder treachery of home-bred enemies, that had decreed us all as ſheepe unto the ſlaughter.

3. How oft God ſpareth our ſinnes.

3. How often hath God winked at our ſinnes, and ſpared to puniſh us, that he might provoke us to repentance; I need not ſeeke farre for example, but leave every man to be the beſt example unto himſelfe: yet, leaſt any man ſhould bee partiall in his owne cauſe; I will deſire you to open your eyes, that you may ſee the great ſinnes of the world, and thereby conſider the great goodneſſe of God in ſparing us: for

Some particulars of our ſinnes.

1. Pride.

1. Pride, that will have the firſt place, is growen to that height, that we know not whether it walketh in the habit of man or woman, men doe ſo transforme themſelves like women, and women like unto men, that ſometimes we ſcarſe know them by their cloathes, if there were no difference in their faces:

——Quid mirum, ſi vobis cura placendi
Cum videant comptos ſecula noſtra viros?

Eſay 3.16, &c.

The Prophet Eſay ſpeaketh againſt womens pride; and Ieſabel onely, in Scripture, is ſaid to have painted her face; but now they ſay, men, not onely powder their hayre, to ſhew their vanity, but alſo paint their faces, to ſhew the height of their iniquity.

2. Oppreſſion.

Aſcham in deſcript. German.

2. Oppreſſion commeth in the next place; for pride cannot be maintained without it; and commonly this is proper to great men; for poore men are not able to oppreſſe; but in having other mens goods, they leeſe all mens hearts, and many times their owne lives; for thoſe men, that will take mens goods, when they liſt, without equity, ſhall want mens hearts, when they need, without pittie; whereas thoſe men, that have mens hearts, ſhall never lacke their goods, as Cyrus ſaid unto Craſus: Yet great men will heare but what and whom they liſt, not the Preachers, but the Polititians; and therefore many times, they faile, when they would not; becauſe they heare whom they ſhould not; for as they doe by authority contemne the advice of Gods Miniſters, ſo God doth provide by right judgement, that they ſhall have leave in the end, to beare both the loſſe and ſhame thereof themſelves.

3 Whoredome and adultery.

3. Whoredome now is deemed but, as Eraſmus ſaith, magnatum ludus, a ſport, not ſinne; and therefore, my heart trembleth to ſay what I ſee; but I am now in the Pulpit and may ſay without feare, though perhaps not without ſcoffes; the prophane gallants of theſe times, will even boaſt of their beaſtlineſſe, and if you tell them of their ſinnes, they will but throw dirt in your face, making the beſt, as bad as themſelves, that themſelves might be bad without reproofe.

4. Drunkenneſſe.

4. Drunkenneſſe is growne common, and moſt fearefull oathes are feareleſſly uſed in every mouth, when we account that but a vaine precept, which ſaith, God will not hold them guiltleſſe that take his name in vaine.

5. Hypocriſie.

1 Reg. 8.29. John 4.20. 1 Reg. 12.29.

5. Hypocriſie hath inlarged her dominion beyond all; for beſides thoſe ambodexters, that will profeſſe to ſerve the Lord at Ieruſalem, and yet do offer oblations in Dan and Bethel; to ſerve Chriſt, and yet joyne with Antichriſt: how many millions

millions of men have we that like ferrie-men, doe looke one way, and row another way, that will profeſſe great piety, who more religious in their talke then they, and yet are filled with all unrighteouſneſſe, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh. Rom.1.29.

6. Becauſe theſe are peccata ad extra, the ſinnes of the ſonnes of Behall; Schiſme creepes into the Church, and it begins to grow ſo grievous, that it grieves me to thinke of it: the Apoſtle indeed ſaith, there muſt be hereſies; but muſt we needs be thoſe heretickes? yet behold the ſtate of our Church; when it was firſt cleanſed from the duſt and filthineſſe of idolatry and ſuperſtition by thoſe godly Martyrs, that ſpent their blood in the defence of truth, then preſently ſtart up thoſe brood of vipers, that oppugned the orders and ceremonies of our Church; but as the Church was purged in patientia Martyrum, ſo theſe men at laſt were ſuppreſſed, and their folly diſcovered in ſapientia Doctorum, by the wiſdome of our reverend Biſhops, and the painefull labours of the Doctors of our Church; but ſcarce could theſe flames be quenched, but behold a greater fire is kindled; for they beate at the leaves and we ſtrike at the root, and under the name of the Church, we ſeeke the ſupplantation of the Church: ô let us take heed; leaſt, as you ſee Satan fight againſt us more and more, ſo we ſhould grow worſe and worſe; for this contention is but a bridge, but a paſſage to a greater evill; not as the former, like childrens fight about trifles, but like Hanniballs beſeeging of Saguntum to breake the peace, to make way into Italy. 1 Cor.11.19. Carowright and the reſt of his ſucceeding partaine. The factions in Germany and the Low-countreys.

And therefore, if we deſire the peace of the Church, let us ſhun this leaven; becauſe the good, which we aime at, by refining of ſome things with nice diſtinctions, can never equalize that evill, which we bring by innovation.

And, that we may the better ſuppreſſe all ſchiſmes, I commend unto your conſideration but theſe two points { 1. Heare them not / 2. Preferre them not } that are any waies tainted with this fault: reade not their bookes, heare not their Sermons, and be no meanes to raiſe ſuch men, that are ſuch weedes in the garden of Gods Church; but remember alwaies what Salomon ſaith, He that walketh uprightly walketh ſurely; it is better to heare a plaine honeſt Sermon, without danger, then the beſt compoſed and moſt learned Sermon, that doth ſecretly convey any poyſoned point of doctrine into our ſoules. The Authors counſell againſt all ſeditious Innouators. Pro.10.9.

Many other ſinnes are amongſt us, ſo many, as doth more then abundantly ſhew, the greatneſſe of Gods mercies towards us; that, notwithſtanding the infidell diſputeth againſt faith, and the wicked Chriſtian liveth againſt faith, unde cum uterq; aduerſetur fidei, neuter per illam poteſt habere ſalutem; yet, the mercy of God ſtill ſpareth us, to ſee, if his mercies can leade us to repentance: if not, then

3. We ſhould caſt our eyes upon the third colour of the Rainebow, which is the fiery colour; and this puts us in minde of the judgement of fire in the laſt day: touching which, obſerve 3. The judgement of fire.

{ 1. The time / 2. The manner } of it. 1. The time of it.

1. For the time, our Saviour ſaith, it is not for us to know the times and the ſeaſons, which the Father hath put in his owne power; yet the Apoſtle tells us that it is the laſt time, the laſt houre, and that within a very little little while he that ſhall come will come, and will not tarrie: and therefore we may aſſure our ſelves that it is nigh at hand; or, if the day of judgement be further of then that thou ſhalt live to ſee it, yet the day of thy death may be neerer then thou art aware of, for Acts 1.7. 1 Iohn 2.18, Heb.10.37.

Quem dies veniens vidit ſuperbum
Hunc dies fugiens vidit jacentem. Seneca Thyeſt. act. 3. chor.

Whom the morning ſaw ſtrong, the evening ſaw him dead; and Saint Gregory ſaith, qualis hinc quiſq; egreditur talis in judicio preſentatur, as death leaveth a man, ſo judgement ſhall finde him: for, as the tree falleth ſo it lieth, ſaith the Wiſeman. Greg.did.l.4.c.39 Eccl.11.3.

And therefore, in a word, this ſhould teach us, to prepare our ſelves, to be alwaies alwaies ready for the comming of the Lord, whenſoever he commeth, and, as the Poet ſaith, omnem crede diem tibi diluxiſſe ſupremum, to thinke every day to be our laſt day.

2. The manner of the laſt judgement.

2. For the manner of this judgement we may note theſe two things.

Two things obſervable.

1. The fearefullneſſe of Chriſt his comming.
2. The terribleneſſe of his proceeding.

1. The fearefullneſſe of Chriſt his comming. Matth 24.29, 2 Pet. 3.10. Aug. de civit. Dei Lib. 20. c 30. Thom. 2 d 47. ar. 3. Pſal. 67. 2.

1. Saint Hierom ſaith, that whatſoever he did, he thought he alwaies heard that dolefull voice of the Arch-angell ſounding in his eares, ſurgite mortui, ariſe you dead and come unto judgement; and when he thought of the day of judgement, he trembled every joynt of him; for in that day, there ſhall be ſignes in the Sunne and in the Moone and in the Starres; the Sunne ſhall be darkened and the Moone ſhall not give her light, the Starres ſhall fall from the skies and all the powers of heaven ſhall be moved, the elements ſhall be diſſolved with heat and the earth ſhall be conſumed with fire.

A queſtion reſolved.

But whether this fire ſhall be before the day of judgement or after it, Saint Auguſtine makes a queſtion; and he ſeemeth to be of opinion it ſhall be after; yet Aquinas ſaith it ſhall be before the execution of judgement; but to reconcile them we ſay that there ſhall be

Of the fire of Gods judgement.

1. Ignis conflagrationis, and this ſhall be before, for there ſhall goe a fire before him and burne up his enemies on every ſide.

2. Ignis condemnationis, which burneth, and yet ſhineth not, as Anſelmus ſaith, but onely ſo farre as may be ſufficient for the damned to behold thoſe things which ſhall torment them, as Aquinas ſaith; and this ſhall be after the day of judgement for evermore.

What a dreadfull thing is ſinne.

And this ſheweth what a dreadfull thing is ſinne; for what have theſe poore creatures deſerved, that they ſhould be thus ſeverely puniſhed, thus travell in ſorrow and paine, but becauſe they roſe not up againſt us, when we roſe up againſt God? ô fearefull contagion of ſinne, that ſubjecteth the very heavens unto vanity: and therefore moſt wretched are we, in whom dwelleth nothing els but iniquity: but to go on.

Luke 21. 25, 26.

Then the diſtreſſe of nations ſhall be great, and men ſhall wither away for feare ſaith our Saviour Chriſt; for when deſtruction ſhall be diſpatched as a whirlewinde, and God ſhall burne the earth, as Holofernes did the countrey of Damaſcus; ô then what feares ſhall affright the hearts of men, and what heapes of perturbations ſhall run upon the damned ſort, when they ſee theſe things playing their laſt act, upon the fiery ſtage of this world? And then they ſhall ſee the Son of man clothed with the cloudes, as with a garment, and riding upon the heavens as upon an horſe, and comming flying upon the wings of the wind in the glory of his Father with his Angels. O deere brethren, ſi talis & tantus ſit horror venientis, quis poterit terrorem ſuſtinere judicantis? if the very comming of Chriſt be ſo terrible, who ſhall be able to indure his judgement ſaith Emyſſenus. Well: you ſee his comming, let us now conſider his proceedings and therefore Iudith 2. 27.

Matth. 24. 30.

Deut. 33. 26.

Pſal. 18. 10.

Matth. 16. 27.

2. The terriblenes of the proceeding of Chriſt.

2. I have ſworne by my ſelfe ſaith the Lord, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteouſneſſe, and it ſhall not returne, that every knee ſhall bow unto me: alas, if all the bodies of an army did lie naked upon one heape, what a ruthfull ſight would it make? and what a ſpectacle then will that be, when ſo many myriads of men, like the ſand of the ſea, ſhall be muſtered together and ſtand quaking and trembling before the face of Chriſt?

All things denouncing vengeance to the wicked.

Then ſhall all eyes be opened, and the wicked ſhall ſee all things crying vengeance about them; for above them ſhall be an angry judge ready to condemne them, beneath them hell open like a boyling furnace ready to receive them, on the right hand their ſinnes accuſing them, on the left hand the divels ready to torment them, within them a guilty conſcience like Prometheus vulture gnawing them, without them the damned ſoules bewailing, and on every ſide the world burning.

The great diſtreſſe of the ungodly.

O good God, what will theſe wretched ſinners doe, being thus invironed with with ſuch miſeries? how can their heart ſuſtaine theſe anguiſhes? they ſhall cry to the mountaines (ſaith our Saviour) that they would fall upon them, and hide them from the face of Chriſt, but it will not be; for then Satan will begin to play his part, and ſay, not bone Deus, to move him to clemency, but ô juſte Iudex, ô juſt Iudge, to ſharpen him to ſeverity, though theſe wicked ſinners are thine by creation, yet are they mine by tranſgreſſion, and though thou haſt ſuffered for them, yet I have beguiled them, and they have ſerved me; for they have forſaken Sacramenta tua thy Sacraments, and they have followed blandimenta mea, my allurements, they would not be perſwaded by thy Preachers, but they would needs follow their owne pleaſures, ſaying one to another, come, let us crowne our ſelves with roſebuds before they be withered, let our ſtrength be the law of juſtice, and let us do even what we liſt; therfore, ô juſt Iudge, ſeeing they belong unto me, let them even be condemned with me: ſo, he that allured them to all vanities, doth now pleade to caſt them into all torments.

Luk.23.30. Revel.6.16.

How Satan will plead againſt the wicked.

Sap.2.6,7,8,9,10, 11,12.

Then the Lord will looke upon them: but how ſhall they be able to indure his lookes? for fire is kindled in his wrath, and it ſhall burne to the bottome of hell; out of his mouth goe lampes, and ſparks of fire leape out; out of his noſtrells commeth ſmoke as out of a bayling caldron; his countenance will be ſo grimme, his lips ſo burning, and his face ſo full of indignation, that the very Saints will tremble at his lookes: Who ſhall hide me (ſaith holy Iob) till the anger of God paſſeth over? and who may abide the day of his comming (ſaith Malachy?) for hee is like purging fire, and like a fullers ſope: and therefore how ſhall the wicked abide his looks? and if not his looks, then how his words? for now they ſhall heare that dreadfull ſentence, i lictor liga manus, goe executioner, and binde thoſe kings in fetters and thoſe nobles with links of iron, and goe ye all accurſed into everlaſting fire, into utter darkneſſe where ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth; this is the doome of the wicked. And here, their muſicke ſhall be horrors and howlings, their meate ſhall be balls of fire, their drinke ſhall be fountaines of teares alwaies diſtilling downe from their eyes; and in briefe, here their torments ſhall be intollerable, their time endleſſe, and their companions divels; for as Saint Auguſtine ſaith, here, nec tortores deficiant, nec torti miſeri moriantur, ſed per millia millia annorum cruciandi, nec tamen in ſecula liberandi, there ſhall be a will never ſatisfied, and a nill never gratified, when they ſhall never injoy the eaſe they would, but ever ſuffer the paines they would not. And this is the laſt judgement, noted in the fiery colour of the Rainebow.

Deut.32.22.

Iob 41.19,20.

Iob 14.13.

Mal.3.2.

The dreadfull ſentence of the wicked.

The lamentable ſtate of the damned.

I will make none other Application of it, then what S. Peter doth; Seeing theſe things muſt be thus, what manner of perſons ought we to be in all holy converſation and godlineſſe? and how are they deceived that make God all of mercy, and ſo quite forget his juſtice; for do we not ſee in the Rainebow, as well the fiery colour of his wrath, as the graſſie colour of his mercy? and therefore though the mercy of God be great, yet we ſhould conſider that mercy and wrath come from him, and his indignation falleth downe upon ſinners; and as you ſee it in this ſigne of the peace betwixt God and us, mercy and wrath are met together, ſo our ſong ſhould be of mercy and judgement together, and not to deale herein, as the harlot would have don with the child that ſhe challenged, to divide it, or, as the divell deales with the Scripture, to alleadge what he liſt, and to leave what he likes not; but as the mercy of God is a ſoveraigne antidote, to preſerve us from deſpaire; ſo the feare of judgement ſhould deterre us from all ſins. And ſo much for the ſigne, I will put my bow.

The application of the former point.

2 Per.3 11. Not to make God all of mercy.

Eccleſ.

Pſal.101.1. 1 Reg.3.26. Matth.4.6.

2. For the place, where this ſigne is put, the Lord ſaith, I will put my bow in the cloud; and this is done for theſe two ſpeciall reaſons.

3. The place. In the cloud, for two reaſons.

1. That it might be ſeene of all, and that all might take notice of the mercy of God; ſo the brazen Serpent was lifted up in the wilderneſſe, that every one might behold it; and Chriſt is preached to all creatures; to ſhew unto us that God excludeth none, except we doe exclude our ſelves from his grace.

1. Reaſon.

Numb.21.9. Mar.16.15.

2. That we might ſee both the power and the mercy of God, that he is more

2. Reaſon.

powerfull to ſave us, then the creature is to deſtroy us: and that in the midſt of our miſeries, he remembers mercy; for naturally this bow is a ſigne of raine, Quia ſignificat copiam nubium liqueſcentium; becauſe it reſideth alwaies in a heape of watery cloudes: & therefore Ovid ſaith this adminiſtered raine unto the deluge.

Nuncia Iunonis varios induta colores
Concipit iris aquas, alimentaq́, nubibus affert.

What the Raine-bow naturally ſignifieth.

Ovid. Metam. lib. 1.

And Virgil ſaith, —— ant bibit ingens arcus: and ſo the Philoſophers ſay, arcus ortus a meridie, magnam vim aquarum vehit; the bow oppoſite to the Sunne and Moone, foreſhewes plenty of raine: and the Divines yeeld hereunto, as Danæus writeth; And yet, when the cloudes are ready to drowne us for our ſinnes, God putteth this bow therein, as a bridle into their noſtrells, to preſerve us from deſtruction. And therefore Virgil. Georg. l. 1. Seneca natural. queſtion. l. 2. c. 6. Plinil. 18. c. 35. Danæus tr. 2 dies 2. de meteor. c. 17. Pareus in hunc loc.

1. This ſheweth the greatneſſe of Gods power, to convert the ſigne of raine, and the feare of our deſtruction to an aſſured argument of our preſervation; and not onely to ſuſpend the power of naturall cauſes, that they ſhould not produce their owne moſt proper effects, as the fire not to burne the three children; but alſo per contraria media agere, to bring things to paſſe by contrary meanes, as to make the light to ſhine out of darkeneſſe; that although we ſhould not neglect ſecond cauſes, yet we ſhould not relie upon the meanes, but upon the power of God: and

1. To ſhew Gods power.

2. This ſheweth the greatneſſe of Gods mercy, to helpe us then, when we have moſt need of helpe, tempore opportuno, in the beſt ſeaſon, in the fitteſt time; for he doth not bring forth this bow, when the heavens are cleere; but when it is full of cloudes, & nubes denſæ terræ imminent, and thoſe cloudes do threaten feares unto the earth, then doth he mingle conſolations to our miſeries; becauſe then they are beſt welcome and moſt acceptable unto us, and doe moſt of all magnifie the goodneſſe of God, by ſhewing him to be Deus in opportunitatibus, a God in the needfull time of trouble. And ſo much for the Scituation of this bow; in the cloud.

2. To ſhew Gods mercy.

Non producit arcum nisi cum cœlo ſereno, ſed tempore pluvio; quando terræ nubes denſæ imminent, ut rebus triſtibus aliquid immiſceret conſolationis. Muſculus ſup. hunc l. c.

4. For the end, why God putteth this bow in the cloud, it is to be the ſigne of the peace betwixt God and the earth: therefore, there was a warre betwixt them; Adam began it in paradiſe, when he would needs poſſeſſe the whole inheritance of Gods vineyard, and not yeeld ſo much as the fruit of one tree to God for an acknowledgement of his ſoveraignty; but impar congreſſus, he was found too weake in this duell, as having neither any right on his ſide, nor any might at all to defend himſelfe; therfore the Lord God thruſt him out by head and ſhoulder; and when he might have utterly ſpoiled him, and juſtly ſent him downe quicke into hell, yet did hee ſpare him, and left him a place ſtill on earth, to ſee if now deſpoiled of all armes and deſtitute of all ſtrength, being but a naked man, he would yeeld obedience unto his Majeſty; And yet his poſterity will needs renew the warre; they begin, like the Pheniceans to ſnatch their neighbours daughters, and to take them wives of all that they liked; that is indeed, to follow their owne pleaſures to do what they liſt, and to ſay, dirumpamus vincula ejus, let us breake the bonds of God, and caſt away his yoke from us, let our ſtrength be the law of righteouſneſſe, and let us all be partakers of our wantonneſſe: therefore God muſters up his army, he calls the heavens from above, and the earth from below, that he might judge his people, and make warre againſt theſe rebells. Warres indeed, —— nullos habitura triumphos, on our part: worſe then the ſervile warre of Rome, when the maſters were driven to fight againſt their ſlaves; the Creator is forc't to deſtroy his creature; and though he might have ſent myriads of Angels, whereof the meaneſt had beene able to deſtroy millions of men, yet he takes a milder courſe, and ſends none other then the drops of raine; to ſhew, what poore things were able to ſubdue theſe proud rebells; ſo the warre was at an end, when God had made an end of all fleſh; and not one man was found ſufficient to ſtand before God.

4 The end why the bow is put in the cloud.

The warre men make againſt God.

Gen. 6. 12.

Sap. 2. 11. & 12 &c.

Lucan pharſ. l. 1.

Yet God, that had conquered all the world, and reduced them all uſque ad unum to one poore family, conſiſting but of eight perſons, doth moſt freely and moſt

God offereth peace.

most graciously offer peace to these vanquished men; Æneas denied the same to Turnus, begging favour; but God tendereth the same to the world, that desir'd it not; parcere prostratis scit nobilis ira Iehovæ; and therein he shewed his noble anger, that is not onely free from all obliquity, but so apt to be converted into clemencie. Virgilius Æneid.

And as he granted peace, so he promiseth to put this bow in the cloud to be a signe of that peace; & signum est res, qua præter speciem quam ingerit sensibus, aliquid aliud ex se facit in cognitionem venire; and a signe is that thing which besides the shape that it representeth to our sences, makes some thing els to come into our mindes and memories: and we finde three sorts of signes. A signe what it is. Three sorts of signes.

1. Signa stuporis, signes of wonder to amaze us, such as we reade of in 2 Reg. 20. 11. the going backe of the sunne in the diall of Ahaz.

2. Signa terroris, signes of terror to fright us, as you may see in Ioel 2. 31.

3. Signa amoris, signes of love to rejoyce us: as in Paradise, God gave unto Adam, the tree of life; to Gideon, the fleece wet when all the ground was drie, and the next night drie, when all the ground was wet; and to his whole Church he gave this signe to assure her of her deliverance, under the type of the deliverance of Hierusalem from the hand of Rezin and Aram, and Remaliahs sonne; that a Virgin should conceave and beare a sonne. And the reason, why God confirmeth his love with the signes and tokens thereof, is, because love is an inward affection, and therefore cannot be perceived without some outward demonstration of the same; and the rule is infallible, that per exteriora cognoscuntur interiora, inward things are ever knowne by outward signes: And therefore, let a man professe what love he will, let him give me what words he please, and let him promise as much as I can desire, yet if I never find any signe or token of love, I shall never beleeve that he loved me; for as the Poet saith, virtus nisi cum re vilior alga, vertue it selfe without fruit is worth nothing, so the profession of love, without any signe of love, is but verba dare, that is, in plaine english, to deceive you. And therefore God, which doth really more then he doth verbally promise, doth put this bow in the cloud for a signe of that peace, which he made with the earth: for seeing the covenant of peace was, that hee would destroy the earth with water no more, which, as it is most generall, so it is most free, most gratious and a most absolute covenant, without any eye or respect to any thing, save onely his owne blessed will and goodnesse; and we are not very apt, to beleeve his goodnesse, especially such great goodnesse, as will no waies permit us to relie any thing on our owne goodnesse, wherewith we are bewitched, and so much in love with all, as Narcissus was with his owne shadow; therefore God saith, this shall be the signe of my covenant, I will put my bow in the cloud, not as we do with men, to put them in minde of their promise, but to shew you, that I am not forgetfull of my promise, but do thinke of you, when you thinke not of me: for he saith not, when you put your bow in the cloud, or when you put me in minde of the promise I made unto you, I will then thinke upon my covenant to spare you; for so we might often inough be destroyed, before we would once put him in minde to deliver us; but when we fight against heaven and provoke God to destroy us for our sins, and never thinke of his goodnesse, then doth he remember his promise to spare us; and to assure us thereof, he puts his bow in the cloud, to be an infallible signe, that he is ever mindfull of us. And this sheweth how the goodnesse of God omitteth nothing, that may confirme our faith in the promise of Gods mercy; and therefore we should banish all incredulity and beleeve in him without wavering. And so much for the literall interpretation of these words, and those speciall mysteries that do spring from the particular heads thereof. Gen. 2. 9. Iudges 6. 37, 38, &c. Esay 7. 14. Why God confirmeth his love with signes. Fruitlesse love worth nothing. The covenant what it was. Gen. 9. 11. The nature of this covenant. How incredulous we are to beleeve God, and why.

2. Having spoken of the literall sence of these words, which I said, was like the body of man, a grosse and massie substance, and therefore required a larger time to anatomize each part thereof; we are now to speake of the mysticall interpretation 2 Of the mysticall interpretation of these words.

pretation of it, which being like unto the ſoule, a more ſubtle and ſpirituall eſſence, is more reducible into a narrower place, and therefore may be contracted and explained in a ſhorter time; and this part is like a pearle or a diamond, to be valued rather according to the quality, then the quantity, the goodneſſe and not the greatneſſe thereof. I will put my bow in the cloud, to be a ſigne of the peace betwixt me and the earth: where the parts muſt be the ſame, as they were before:

1. The agent.
2. The act.
3. The end.

1. The agent. Pſal. 100. 2.

1. The agent is God; for it is he that hath made us and not we our ſelves; he preſerved Noah from the flood, his off-ſpring from deſtruction, and the elect from damnation; for we muſt know that this deliverance of Noah from the flood, was a type and a figure of our redemption from hell; and the Apoſtle makes it ſo; therefore this covenant with all fleſh is but the ſhadow of the covenant of grace, and God is the author of the one as well as of the other; he is the maker of them both.

The covenants of God compared. 1 Pet. 3. 21.

I, but you will ſay, he makes not the one, as the other; the one being abſolute and generall, the other particular and conditionall. It is true, there is a great deale of difference betwixt the one and the other; and yet the Lord himſelfe compares this with that; for this is as the waters of Noah unto me, ſaith the Lord; for as I have ſworne that the waters of Noah ſhould no more goe over the earth, ſo have I ſworne that I will not be angry with thee nor rebuke thee. And here; this is as abſolute and as irreſpective as the former, and ſo it is in many other places of the Scripture, even in the firſt covenant that he made with Abraham: In bleſſing, I will bleſſe thee and thy ſeed for ever: What is the reaſon therefore, that it is ſometimes abſolute and ſometimes conditionall, is not the condition alwaies included, though it be not every where expreſſed?

Eſay 54 9.

Gen. 12. 2. & c. 22. 18.

God doth all things abſolutely.

How God brings his owne decrees to paſſe.

I will tell you the truth in a word; if we look to this agent, that doth whatſoever pleaſeth him, he doth all without reſpect to any thing, but to his owne will; for of his owne will begat he us, with the word of truth; but if we looke to the waies, and the meanes, whereby he brings that abſolute will of his to paſſe, we find them to be conditions to be performed on our parts: and therefore when God ſpeakes abſolutely, he lookes upon his owne will and decree, which he intended from all eternity; but when he ſpeakes conditionally, he lookes upon the waies and meanes, whereby he purpoſeth to bring that decree to paſſe. And this is the reaſon, that although we muſt doe theſe things, or we ſhall never be ſaved; yet God muſt worke them all in us, or we ſhall never be able to performe them: and therefore, whom God intendeth to ſave, he ſends his ſervants, as he did Philip to the Eunuch, to call them; he openeth their eares to heare his words, and he openeth their hearts, as he opened the heart of Lydia, to beleeve his ſayings; and then he infuſeth into them, all other graces, hope, love, patience and the reſt, to make them fit temples for the Holy Ghoſt to dwell therein; for he is the fountaine of graces, the garden of ſpices, and the onely Gardiner that muſt ſow every good ſeed in our ſoules, as our Saviour ſheweth; every plant, that the father planteth not, is but a rotten weed, and muſt be plucked up; and every flower that this Gardiner ſetteth not, is but deadly poyſon to deſtroy us; for every thought of our heart is prone to evill continually, and if any good be in us, it is not of us, but from him, that loved us, and thereby made us to love him againe as the Apoſtle ſheweth, and Saint Auguſtine likewiſe, when he ſaith, Deum non diligeremus, niſi Deus prius dilexiſſet nos & feciſſet nos dilectores ſui: we ſhould not, we could not have loved God, except God had loved us firſt, and thereby made us to become lovers of him againe. And therefore

Phil. 2. 13.

Acts 8. 29.

Acts 16. 14.

That all our good proceeds from God.

Matth. 15. 13.

Gen. 6. 5.

1 Ioh. 4. 19.

Aug. de bono perſeverant. to. 7. c. 21.

1. Our owne unworthineſſe. Matth 8. 8.

1. If we conſider our owne unworthineſſe, we may all ſay with the Centurion, Lord I am not worthy that thou ſhouldeſt come under my roofe, and with Anſelmus, Quid reſtat ô peccator, niſi ut in tota vita tua deplores totam vitam tuam? What remaineth ô wretched ſinner, but that, throughout thy whole life, thou ſhouldeſt ſhouldſt deplore thy whole life, and implore the favour of him which is the fountaine of all grace?

2. Our weakenes.

2. If we conſider our owne weakeneſſe, we may eaſily ſee how naked we are of all grace, and how deſtitute of all good; and how unable to performe the leaſt thing, that may conduce to eternall life! ô that I could, as I wiſh, vilifie the rotten raggs of the beſt of nature, which the Church of Rome, (receiving them from the Schoolemen, they from ſome of the Greeke Fathers, and they, buſied about the firſt foundations of Chriſtian Religion, received undiſcuſſed from the Schoole of Plato,) doth ſo highly extoll; and I wiſh I could, as I deſire, magnifie yea deifie the graces of Gods ſpirit, which S. Paul, and after him Saint Auguſtine and Proſper, and laſt of all our moderne Divines, that were driven to diſcuſſe theſe points, have ſo excellently ſet forth unto us.

The conceit of our naturall good whence it ſprang.

Ob.

But here the Ieſuites and Pelagians will object, if no good be in us, but what this agent doth; then where is the merit of vertue, and how can God be juſt in puniſhing the wicked for want of juſtice?

Sol.

1. For merit I confeſſe, we have none; for when we have done our beſt, we did but our duties, and we are but unprofitable ſervants, worthy of nothing, becauſe nothing is ours, that is good; for if our hearts be right, God hath infuſed that rectitude into them; and if we beleeve, thats the gift of God; therefore God tells us plainely, ſalus tua ex me, thy ſalvation, yea all that conduceth to ſalvation, is onely and wholly from me; and Saint Auguſtine ſaith, cum coronat Deus merita tua, quid coronat niſi dona ſua? Saint Bernard is as plaine as he, and the point is ſo plaine that I need not ſtand upon it.

Luk. 17. 10.

That we can merit no good at Gods hands.

That we have cauſe inough in our ſelves to deſerve damnation.

2. Though we have nothing in us, to merit heaven; yet we have inough and more then inough, of our ſelves, to move God, moſt juſtly, to caſt us downe to hell; for there is no man, but he hath ſufficient meanes of grace offered and beſtowed upon him, to proceed to obtaine a greater meaſure, if his owne malice did not block up the mercy of God, and ſtay that current grace, which otherwiſe would carrie him to ſalvation; and therefore well might the Lord ſay, perditio tua ex te, thy deſtruction is from thy ſelfe; becauſe thou art not onely infected with the originall corruption of thy depraved nature, but doſt alſo moſt wilfully refuſe mine offered grace; which doth juſtifie God in all his waies, and make all wicked men without excuſe. And ſo much for the Author of all ſpirituall grace.

2. The act.

2. Having heard of the agent, we muſt conſider the act. I will put my bow in the cloud, and that is, I will give my Sonne Ieſus Chriſt to take your fleſh upon him, as Saint Auguſtine doth interpret that Rainebow, which is about the throne of God; for as the bow is the chiefeſt ſtrength of warre, ſo is Chriſt the power of God; and therefore the Prophet Habukuk calleth him the bow of God, ſaying, ſuſcitans, ſuſcitabis arcum tuum; Hab. 3 9. the two hornes ſignifie the two natures, the inviſible ſtring, ſheweth the incomprehenſible union; he is without an arrow; becauſe he came not to condemne the world, but that the world through him might have life; and the three colours teach Chriſt to be, King, Prieſt, and Prophet, or to conſiſt of body, ſoule and Dietie; or els to be Revel 4 3. & c 10. 1.

Lorinus in Pſal. 7. p. 108. v. 14.

1. Ceruleous, skie-coloured, in reſpect of his fervent prayers that were moſt heavenly.

2. Greene, by reaſon of his ſpirituall graces, that did alwaies flouriſh and waxe ſtrong in him.

3. Red, becauſe of his ſufferings, that died his garments with blood, ſo that the Angels wondering thereat, ſay, Who is this that commeth from Edom with red garments from Bozra? Eſay 63. 1.

Lorinus in Pſal. 17. v. 12. p. 234.

And, as the bow doth moſt fitly reſemble Chriſt, ſo by the cloud, wherein this bow is put, ſome doe underſtand the Scripture; for they teſtifie of him, as our Saviour ſaith, and there we may find him, if we will ſeek him; and the Writers of the holy Scriptures are a cloud of witneſſes, thoſe of the Old Teſtament like a thicke darke cloud, and thoſe of the New Teſtament very cleere and bright, as Origen ſuper Cant. h.4.& ſuper Mat. h.30,35. Ambroſ. ſup. Pſal. 67. Hieron. ſup. Eſay 5.14. Ambroſ. in l. de inſtit. virgin. c.13. Procop. in Eſay c.19. Auguſt. tract.34. in Iohan.

Origen and Saint Ambroſe doe declare; others, by this cloud doe underſtand the bleſſed Virgin, wherein this bow, this ſtrength and power of God, was put to be made man; according, as the Prophet ſaith, behold the Lord rideth upon a ſwift cloud, and ſhall come into Egypt, that is, in the armes of the bleſſed Virgin, which fled thither from the rage of Herod: as the ſaid Saint Ambroſe ſpeaketh; others doe underſtand hereby the body of Chriſt, which is a light cloud, nullo terrena perturbationis aut peccati onere gravatum; burdened with no waight of ſin, and hindered by no terrene perturbations; and it is compared to a cloud, non quia obſcurat, ſed quia temperat ſolis radios, not becauſe it darkeneth, but becauſe it tempereth thoſe glorious rayes of his divine Majeſty, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith.

Why the Saints are compared to the clouds.

But Rupertus, venerable Bede and others, by that cloud, which he is ſaid to ſit upon, Revel. 14.16. doe underſtand the Church of Chriſt, that is, all faithfull ſoules, which are compared unto a cloud, both in reſpect of their good and evill. For

1. Reaſon.

1. The cloud is eaſily capable of any celeſtiall impreſſion, ſo are the Saints of all the graces of Gods ſpirit; the cloud lightly aſcendeth upwards, ſo is their deſire in heaven; the cloud is a recreation to the labourers, ſo are they to all thoſe that are troubled and afflicted; and of the cloudes, ſome are white, ſome blacke, and ſome red; ſo of the Saints, ſome are white through the innocency of their upright life; ſome are blacke, through the griefe and ſorrow for their ſins, and ſome are red, of crimſon die, by reaſon of their patient ſuffering for righteouſneſſe ſake.

2. Reaſon.

2. The cloud is a vaine and empty thing; very infirme, and of no ſtability, carried about with every wind; ſo is the beſt of us, if we conſider our owne ſtrength, void of good, and led away with every vanity: the cloud is begotten of groſſe and terreſtriall vapors; ſo are we of carnall luſts, that make us ſo earthly minded; the cloudes obſcure the gliſtering beames of the Sun from our ſight; ſo our carnall deſires do hinder the glorious light of truth to ſhine in our hearts; the cloudes deceive us very often, when they ſeeme to promiſe ſweet ſhowers of raine, and yet will turne to moſt tempeſtuous winds; ſo do we deceive our owne ſoules, by thinking our ſelves happy in thoſe things which make us miſerable; and the clouds gathered together doe promiſe nothing but raine, winds, thunders, and as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh, haileſtones and coales of fire; even ſo our thoughts and workes can promiſe nothing unto us, but fire and brimſtone, ſtorme and tempeſt, this is our portion for ever; Therefore God putteth this bow in theſe clouds, (and ſo it is in the originall in the clouds, and not in the cloud,) to aſſure us, that although they threaten nothing but death and deſtruction; yet they ſhall not deſtroy us for ever.

Pſal. 18.12.

Pſal. 11.7. Vulgata editione in nubibus.

3. The end. How the Antients ratified their peace with pledges.

3. The end, why God puts this bow in the clouds, is to be a ſigne of the covenant betwixt God and us; becauſe the Antients uſed to ratifie their peace with ſignes and pledges of peace: and the chiefeſt pledge was, when they gave their children hoſtages to their enemies; ſo doth God; And therefore his love muſt needs be great, when the ſigne of his love is ſo great; the payment muſt needs be much, when the earneſt is ſo excellent, and the peace muſt needs be firme, when he gave us his onely Sonne for a pledge.

Nam ſi in his, quæ minoris eſt ponderis, ita eſt ſollicitus; quomodo erit circa id in quo noſtræ felicitatis ſumma verſatur? Petrus Martyr in hunc loc.

And this ſhould teach us never to doubt of Gods mercy, never to feare drowning, while Chriſt is in the ſhip, nor the greateſt cloud of ſin, while our Saviour Chriſt is in our hearts; for God is truth and cannot lie, and he proclaimes it to the whole world, he deſireth not the death of a ſinner, but deſireth every ſinner to beleeve this truth; and therefore he puts his bow in the clouds, his onely Sunne into our hands, that we might be ſure of his peace: And yet for all this, for all his covenant, for all that he ſaith and doth, we are ſtill full of infidelity, and had rather truſt to the rotten ragges of our owne unrighteous righteouſneſſe, then to all the moſt gracious promiſes of our moſt mercifull father; ſuch and ſo great is our folly that we had rather relie upon our owne weake and feeble ſtrength, then to have

Moſes,

Moſes, nay, then to have Chriſt himſelfe, to ſtand in the gap to turne away Gods anger from us: And therefore Chriſt doth no where ſo much and ſo often reprove his Diſciples for any thing, as for their infidelity, as you may ſee in Matth. 13.58. Mar. 16.14. Where you may obſerve, that, although God upbraideth not, as Saint Iames teſtifieth, that is, any good, that he doth unto us; yet the Evangeliſt ſaith, that our Saviour upbraided his Apoſtles and Diſciples, for their unbeliefe. Matth. 17.20. Mat. 6.6. Iames 1.5.

And the reaſon is; becauſe that, as φιλαργυρία, the love of money is the root of all evill; not onely, becauſe it is with a man in age as it is with a tree in winter, when there is ſap and life in the root, though there ſhould be little or none, to be ſeene in the branches; ſo in old and crooked age, covetouſneſſe will hold life in the root, when for want of ſtrength, many other vices will wither and decay; but alſo, becauſe a root is of a ſpreading and of a growing nature, eſpecially when it is planted in a fruitfull ſoyle; ſo the corrupt heart of a covetous man will produce abundance of other vices; even ſo infidelity and diſtruſt of Gods goodneſſe, is a mother ſinne, that bringeth forth many brats and baſtard brood; for did we beleeve the threatnings of God, we would not be willing to commit any ſinne; did we believe his goodneſſe, we would not continue in ſinne; or had we any confidence in his mercy, we ſhould never be dejected at any miſery, nor afraid at any death; the Poet ſaith Why covetouſnes is called the root of evill. Infidelity the mother of many evills and miſchiefes. Fit quoq; longus amor, quem nō fidentia nutrit.

Spes facit ut cultis mandentur ſemina terris,
Spes facit, ut vites excolat agricola;
Æquore is animam credat mercator ut undis
Spes facit: —— hope makes the husband-man commit his ſeed unto the ground, hope makes him prune his vines; and hope makes the Merchant, to intruſt his ſoule unto the raging waves; nay more, Iacobus Billius Anthолog. Sacra.

—— Inter ſe immanes ſævīq; latrones
Vt pacem teneant, ſtetq; fides ōq; facit.

Hope and faith and truſting one another, makes the wild and wicked theeves to hold peace and amity among themſelves; and yet ſaith he ō cæcos animos! Chriſto diffidimus omnes;

Cum tamen inveniat prædo vel ipſe fidem. We are ſo blind that we will diſtruſt Chriſt, and will not beleeve God, though he be truth and ſweares the ſame; for he ſweares the wicked ſhall not enter into his reſt, and he ſweares he will not faile David; that is, any faithfull man that truſteth in him, and walketh uprightly, as David did; he will never faile him for ever. Why then ſhould we ſay, with Ariſtophanes, Pſal 9 5. ult. Pſal. 89.3. & v. 35.

Haud etenim perſuaſeris unquam
Nec ſi etiam perſuaſeris iſtud; we will not be perſwaded, though our conſciences ſhould be convicted for our incredulity; for, as when Carbo promiſed ſomewhat unto the people of Rome, and confirmed the ſame with many oathes and execrations; the people ſware againe, that they would not beleeve him; quia probis & injuratis habenda eſt fides, levibus autem ne juratis quidem; becauſe good men are to be truſted without oathes, and light vaine men not to be truſted though they ſhould ſweare never ſo much; ſo God, being truth it ſelfe that cannot lie, we ought to truſt his word, and put our whole confidence in his promiſes; and happy are they that truſt in him, for they ſhall never be confounded. ὁ γὰρ πειθόμενος, οὐδὲν μὴ πεισθῇ. Ariſtophan. Eraſm. Apoleg. lib. 6. Fide, ſed cui vide.

But I hope by this which I have ſhewed, you may ſufficiently ſee the goodneſſe of God: ſuch goodneſſe, as requires all thankefullneſſe, and all ſervice, to expreſſe our thankfullneſſe for the ſame. It is an old proverbe and true, no fiſhing to the ſea, no ſervice to the Court; yet this is truer, that to ſerve God is farre better; for he taketh pleaſure in the proſperity of his ſervants; and though in the ſervice of men, we may wait long, deſerve well and gaine little; yet, if we ſerve God, we ſhall never need to ſay with that great Cardinall, if I had ſo faithfully ſerved my good God, as I endeavoured to pleaſe my late Maſter, I had never come to this ill paſſe; nor to ſay with the Prophet, in vacuum laboravi, I have loſt all my time, but our reward ſhall be laid in ſtore, and for one houres ſervice, for a little moment of time we beſtow in his ſervice we ſhall have everlaſting happineſſe, we ſhall enjoy the crowne of life; which I beſeech God to grant to your Sacred Majeſty, to you Noble Lords, to us all, and to all thoſe that love the Lord Ieſus; to whom with his Father and the holy Spirit be all praiſe and glory for ever and ever, Amen.

* * *

GODS LOVE TO THE VVORLD.

IOHN 3. 16.

Οὕτω γὰρ ἠγάπησεν ὁ θεὸς τὸν κόσμον, ὥστε τὸν υἱὸν αὐτοῦ τὸν μονογενῆ ἔδωκεν, ἵνα πᾶς ὁ πιστεύων εἰς αὐτὸν μὴ ἀπόληται, ἀλλ' ἔχῃ ζωὴν αἰώνιον.

For God ſo loved the world, that he gave his onely begotten Sonne: that whoſoever beleeveth in him ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life.

HE that would draw the wide world, ſaith Syneſius, into a little map, muſt not exemplifie all countries or kingdomes to the full, but paſſe over many to expreſſe the chiefe: And here, in my Text, is the whole world, here is God, which is greater then all worlds, Chriſt, the onely begotten Sonne of God, a gift, the like was never beſtowed, love, the beſt of all affections, faith, the chiefeſt of all graces, death and life, yea eternall life, the onely things to be ſhunned or deſired, to be drawne within the compaſſe of one little houre; And therefore I muſt paſſe by many, and I can but ſcarce ſalute thoſe very points that I handle.

The bleſſed Apoſtle and great Clarke, Saint Paul, ſaith, he deſired to know nothing, but Ieſus Chriſt, and him crucified; and truly, as he was brought up at Gamaliels feet, ſo I deſire to ſit at his footſtoole; which perhaps may gaine me this applauſe, to be thought too ſimple among the ſubtill Politicians of the Church; but wiſedome is juſtified of her children; and I had rather be thought a foole in the world, ſo I be wiſe unto ſalvation, then to ſayle over the greateſt ſea with falſe blaſts; therefore I beſeech you hearken unto this Text, which teacheth nothing els but Ieſus Chriſt, and is as the King of Heralds, that proclaimeth, Gods univerſall love to all mankind; and it is a part of that divine conference, which happened betwixt two of the beſt and moſt learned Doctors of the world, Ieſus Chriſt and Nicodemus: for Ieſus Chriſt is the wiſedome of God, ὃς αὐτὸς πάντα νοῆσε: qui per ſe omnia cognoſcit, which knoweth all things of and by himſelfe; and he is innocency it ſelfe, in whoſe mouth was found no guile; and Nicodemus is here commended by three excellent notes of worth.

1 Cor. 2. 2.

Matth. 11. 19.

Heſiod.

First,

The excellency of Nicodemus in three things.

Firſt, He was a Phariſee, the beſt ſect among the Iewes; and he ſeemes to be the beſt of them;

1. By this his inquiſition after the kingdome of heaven, when he came to Ieſus, and ſaid, Rabbi, wee know that thou art a teacher come from GOD, Verſe 2.

2. By that act of juſtice, in defending the innocent againſt all the Sunedrim of the Iewes, when he ſaith, doth our law judge any man, before it heare him, and know what he doth?

Iohn 7. 50.

3. By that moſt commendable worke of piety, in joyning himſelfe with Ioſeph of Arimathea, ſo carefully to bury, and ſo coſtly to imbalme the body of Ieſus, when he was dead.

Iohn 20. 39.

Secondly, he was a Ruler of the Iewes, that is, a Magiſtrate, an officer and a man of great authority among his people; and

Thirdly, that which is not uſuall among all rulers, he was a great Scholler, a Doctor of the law, and a teacher of the ſimple, as our Saviour ſheweth, when he ſaith, art thou a Maſter, or, as ſome tranſlate it, a Doctor, that is, a teacher in Iſrael and knoweſt not theſe things? Ver. 10.

Ver. 10.

And theſe words are the words of Chriſt, the teacher of Nicodemus, which was a teacher in Iſrael; for though Athanaſius, and ſome others of our later Divines, ſeeme to underſtand theſe words to be the words of the Evangeliſt, commenting, as it were, upon the words of Chriſt going before; yet Saint Cyril, Saint Chryſoſtome, Saint Baſil, Saint Ambroſe, and the greater part both of antient, and moderne Divines, do with one conſent, underſtand them to be the words of Chriſt.

Athanaſ. cont. Arian. Ser. 5.

Cyril. l. 2. c. 51. Chryſoſt. hom. 26. Baſil. in Pſal. 7. Ambroſ de penit. l. 1. c. 10. & 11.

And therefore, this onely conſideration, that they are the words of Chriſt, is very ſufficient to move attention; but you may further obſerve, if you pleaſe, that they are one of the beſt and moſt comfortable ſayings of all the ſayings of Chriſt; for though every word of Chriſt be gratious, yet all his words are not alike gratious unto us; but theſe words are one of thoſe foure moſt comfortable ſayings, which the Church hath picked out of all the writings of the New Teſtament, as the beſt and moſt befitting our meditations, when we come to receive the bleſſed Euchariſt; and they doe containe (as Mathuſius obſerveth) all the cauſes of our ſalvation: as,

This Text is one of the foure moſt comfortable Texts of all the Scripture. Mathuſ. in Iohn c. 3. v. 16.

1. Cauſam προηγουμενην, the impulſive cauſe, that moved God to ſave us, which was his mercy, and meere love to us. So God loved the world; and ſo the Apoſtle ſheweth, Titus 3. 4.

Titus 3. 4.

2. The meritorious cauſe, that deſerved ſo much good for us, not our owne workes, but the merits of Ieſus Chriſt; he gave his onely begotten ſonne.

All the cauſes of our ſalvation.

3. The materiall cauſe, that was to receive all this good, the World; for God ſo loved the world.

4. The inſtrumentall cauſe, on our part, that apprehendeth all this good, which is faith; that whoſoever beleeveth in him.

5. The finall cauſe, that is, the benefit, which we reape from Gods love, our deliverance from hell and the inheritance of eternall life; that whoſoever beleeveth in him ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life. But I deſire you to obſerve theſe three parts.

Three ſpeciall parts.

1. An inexplicable propoſition.

1. An inexplicable propoſition; God ſo loved the world.
2. An infallible demonſtration of that love; that he gave his onely begotten Sonne.
3. A moſt comfortable concluſion, iſſuing from the premiſes; that whoſoever beleeveth in him ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life.

Wherein foure things are obſervable.

1. In the propoſition I find foure remarkable parts.

1. The lover, God:
2. The thing loved, the world
3. The affection, love
4. The manner, ſo; God ſo loved the world or briefer

1. The agent; God.
2. The object; the world.
3. The act, love.
4. The extent, ſo.

1. For

1. For the agent, I find many that pretend and profeſſe to love, yet none that loves indeed, without ſome by-reſpect, but onely God; for, the world pretends to love us, and we profeſſe to love our ſelves; but if we were not fowly blinded with the perſwaſion of theſe falſe loves, we might eaſily perceive, that the love of the world will deceive us, and the love of our ſelves will deſtroy us; for

Hos amat, hos opibus cumulat, miroq; favore
Perſequitur mundus, quos videt eſſe ſnos.

1. The world loves his owne, as our Saviour ſaith; and what it promiſeth to many, it will performe to few; ἀργύρου χρυσοῦς λαλεῖσθαι; you ſhall have ſilver ſtreames, length of daies, ſtore of wealth, what you will; good Lord, what worlds it promiſed to Alexander, what wonders to Iulius Caſar, to cut Iſthmos, to ſubdue the Parthians, and to doe more then ever man did, as Sueton: ſaith: and ſo it doth to all; proijcit ampullas & ſeſquipedalia verba, you ſhall want no faire promiſes; for it hath as many complements as the formall courtier; but it is as deceitfull, as the moſt cunning citizen, and will performe as little as the leaſt of theſe, juſt nothing; for ſome of them, which the world promiſed to equalize with Craſus, it left as poore as Iob; and others, to whom it promiſed Neſtors yeeres, as that foole which ſaid, thou haſt ſtore laid up for much time, it cut them off in a moment, as it did him, this night ſhall they fetch away thy ſoule from thee; and then we might ſay with Saint Bernard, ubi ſunt amatores mundi, ô where be the lovers of this world, which ſo lately flouriſhed among us? they are ſuddenly gone, and their memoriall is periſhed with them: for the world hath deceived them, and performed nothing with them; or, if any thing, yet to no purpoſe; becauſe all that is in the world is but vanity of vanities, that is, extreamely vaine and nothing but vanity, ſaith the Preacher; or as Saint Iohn ſaith, all that is in the world is either luſt of the fleſh, or luſt of the eyes, or pride of life; and pride, will give a fall to the greateſt worldling, were he as proud as Lucifer; for that God reſiſteth the proud. And therefore fallax eſt hic mundus, finis dubius, judex terribilis, pœna infinibilis, ſaith Pet. Bleſen. this world is moſt deceitfull, the end doubtfull, the judge terrible, and the puniſhment endleſſe; nay our beſt friends of whom we have deſerved moſt, have or may deceive our expectation: And this ſhould teach us, that as the world loves not us, ſo we ſhould doe as the Holy Ghoſt adviſeth us, not to love the world, nor to put any truſt in man.

2. We love not our ſelves; for though the Apoſtle ſaith, that in the laſt daies men ſhould be lovers of themſelves, yet res eſt omnium peſſima, hominem nempe φιλαυτον falli a ſe ipſo: wee find this love to be worſe then the greateſt hatred in the world; becauſe no hatred can be worſe then falſe love; for if it had beene an open enemie that had done me this diſhonour, I could well have borne it; but being thou my companion, and mine owne familiar friend, the abuſe is above expreſſion, beyond ſupportation.

But who can beleeve, that his love to himſelfe is ſo pernicious to himſelfe; when as, Terence ſaith, verum illud verbum eſt, vulgo quod dici ſolet, omnes ſibi malle melius eſſe quam alteri; it is moſt true that all men wiſh better to themſelves then to any other.

I anſwer with the Poet, that cæcus amor ſui, all love, excepting the love of God, is blind, and the love of our ſelves blindeſt of all; then, turpia decipiunt cæcum vitia, the fowleſt ſtaines are never ſeene by blind eyes; we will not know our owne faults; or if we ſee them, licet alijs nihil remittimus, though we remit nothing unto others, but write their ſmalleſt faults in marble, yet we will eaſily forgive all unto our ſelves; but our good, if any be in us, though it be but like a mole-hill, God knoweth how little, yet, unuſquiſq; quod ipſe repetit aut ſolum aut optimum ducit, every man thinkes his owne mole-hill to be a mountaine: And therefore when this blind love ſhall lead us, poore blind men, towards our happineſſe, it will bring us to fall into the ditch; even to the ditch of eternall deſtruction:

1. The agent. Many pretend to love us.

Anthol. Sacr. Iacobi Billij.

1. How the world deceives us.

Sueton in vita Iulij Cæſaris.

Luk. 12. 19.

Vbi ſunt amatores mundi, qui ante pauca tempora nobiscum fuerunt? nihil ex ijs remanet niſi cineres & vermes. Bern. in lib. meditt.
Eccleſ. 1. 2.
1 Ioh. 2. 16.

Terent. in Andr. 2. 4.

The Spaniards proverbe.
Q. Curt. l. 7.

struction: and so we find it, that man hath no greater enemie then himselfe; his owne heart, and his love to follow his hearts desire, destroyeth his owne soule: And therefore the Spaniards have an adage, and it is a very good one, Dios mi, guarda mi, de mi; ô my God defend me from my selfe; for if we hated not our selves no enemies could hurt us; And for this cause our Saviour saith, that whosoever will be his Disciple, he must forsake himselfe and follow him; because he knew that if we would follow our owne desires, we should destroy our own soules; so well, so ill, we do love our selves; therfore God willing to lay a speciall punishment upon the most rebellious Israelites, saith, I gave them over to follow their owne hearts lusts, and let them follow their owne imaginations, Psalme 81. 13.

Licet alij nihil remittimus, omnia tamen nobis ipsis ignoscere familiare est. Q. Curt. l. 7.

The Spaniards proverbe.

But God loves truly; Quia Deus est aeterna veritas, & vera charitas, & chara aeternitas, as Saint Augustine saith, confess. l. 7. because God is true, and God is love; and therefore true love; And no wonder saith Saint Augustine that God should love; Quia sicut necessarium est Deum intelligere, sicut & necessarium est ipsum vivere; ita necessarium est Deum amare; for as it is necessary that God should understand, as it is also necessary that he should live; so it is necessary that he should love; because he is an intellectuall nature, whose property is to understand and to love: and as he is a pure act, which is subject to no change, so he must alwaies love; els, if he could sometimes love and sometimes not love, he should be subject to imperfection, which cannot fall upon the God-head, saith Saint Augustine.

It is necessary for God to love himselfe.

Aug. de trinit. lib. 15. c. 20.

2. For the act or the affection, love, God loved the world; and love, as it is the strongest of all passions, as strong as death, saith Salomon, and it hath killed many a one, saevus amor docuit, natorum sanguine matrem commaculare manus; yea it brought Christ himselfe to death, and as the Christian Poet saith

Huc me sydereo descendere fecit olympo
Hic me crudeli vulnere fixit amor.

2. The act. Love the strongest of all passions.

His love fastened him to the Crosse; so love is the best of all affections, as the fire, which is the chiefest of all the elements; for Orpheus and Empedocles say that love, which they calleth φανητα, is the beginning of all humane things; Hesiod. saith, the first thing that God breathed on the first chaos of all things was love. Zeno the stoick saith, it is the best instrument of friendship, concord, liberty; and therefore most availeable for every Common-wealth; and Phaedrus saith, Maximorum bonorum est causa; it is the chiefest cause of the greatest good; and, if we consider the most eminent love to be nothing els but the fecundity of all goodnesse (for the Philosophers say, love is the sonne of beauty, as the Poets faigne Cupid to be the child of Venus;) and the whole universe to flow from the love of the all powerfull God, which tyed all things together with the most admirable knot of love; it will easily appeare how plentifull, how sweet and how profitable is the fruit of love, whereby all well ordered families, all flourishing Cities, all famous Kingdomes, all the Orbs of heaven and all other things whatsoever desire connexion and unition; and therfore Boetius saith, ô felix hominum genus, si vestros animos amor, quo caelum regitur, regat; we are happy men, if love, which ruleth heaven, ruleth us; Saint Chrysostome saith, he had rather be the most unfortunate man with love, then to enjoy wealth, honour, and all other endowments of fortune, with hatred and dislike; and Athenaeus saith, that, sapientes alij in Gymnasijs una cum Mercurio & Hercule amorem statuerunt, ejq; sacrificabant, many wise men in former times did sacrifice unto love as to a god; and no wonder, if they had understood the true love; because God is love, and without love, as Lucretius saith, the world could not subsist; and the want of love is the cause of all mischiefe; and therefore Saint Paul saith, love is the fulfilling of the law: And if humane love, the love of man to man, be so excellent, then how much more excellent is the love of God to men; this is like fire indeed, which turneth all that it toucheth and can master unto it selfe, and then never resteth, till it goes, and brings likewise with it, that substance, which it converted, unto

The excellency of love. Orpheus in Carmin.

Boet. de consol. l. 2. met. 8.

S. Chrysostomes choice.

1 Iohn 4. 8.

Lucret. de rerum nat. l. 1.

Love like the fire.

it

it selfe, unto his owne place, which is the highest and the chiefest of all elementary places; So is the love of God, desirous to unite us, to convert us, and to one us, that is, to make us one with himselfe, as Saint Iohn testifieth, and as Saint Peter saith, to be partakers of the divine nature, and then to bring us to the highest, to the happiest place of all places, where himselfe doth rest, as our Saviour sheweth; Father I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me, where I am: So excellent is the affection of love. And it containeth three speciall things.

Iohn. 17.21.

Iohn. 17.24.

1. Bene velle, to wish well
2. Bene facere, to do well
} to the thing loved.
3. Complacere, to delight our selves in that we love.

Three things contained in love.

And God doth all this to the world: And therefore surely this should teach us to love God againe; quia amor amoris magnes, because love is the chiefest loadstone of love, and the law of equity tells us, not to love them that love us is a kind of injustice, that repugneth honestie; because a lover doth wholly yeeld himselfe unto him that is loved, of whom while he is judged as his own, he cannot choose but be beloved, when every one by nature loveth those things that are his owne; therefore Petrarch saith, nullum cor adeo durum, quod dilectione & servitute non molliatur; and besides all this, love is never preserved unlesse it bee answered with love againe; therefore Themistius orat. 6. produceth Themis to say unto Venus, that although true love may be borne alone, yet it cannot live alone, but she must beget another love, ut alter alterius incrementi sit causa, that the one may be the meanes of the preservation of the other. * Piccolom. p. 578. And because Gods example, in all morall actions, is every where made a patterne of our imitation, therefore we should all love one another; for why should we thinke our selves too good, to love them whom God loveth? Indeed there is a great stirre in the world about the certaintie of our salvation; and I confesse many arguments may be made, and many signes may be given to confirme us in the hope of Gods saving health; but I doe assure you that, as the rivers doe all fall into the sea; so all the demonstrations that can be produced, doe all end in this point of loving one another; for how shall I know that Christ died for me? by my faith that beleeveth it; and the spirit of God that perswadeth me to be assured that I am the child of God: how shall I be sure my faith is true, and that this spirit which is in me, is the Spirit of God? even by the workes of faith and the fruits of this spirit; and what is the chiefest worke of faith, and the best fruit of Gods spirit in a sanctified man, but the love of God? and how can we love God whom we have not seene, if we love not our neighbours whom we do see? therefore we need not ascend up into heaven, or search into the secrets of God, to see whose names are written in the booke of life, but descend into the closet of our owne hearts, and looke into the dispositions of the same; whether we love all men, not onely our friends and familiars, but even our enemies and strangers; and if they have wronged us, be ready to forgive them, even as God for Christ his sake hath forgiven us, and then manifest this inward grace by the outward effects of doing good to them; for if we do this, we may be sure of Gods love; but if we revenge our selves on them that submit themselves to us, and love none but whom wee like, be we what we will, we can never be sure of Gods saving grace, as both Saint Augustine and Saint Paul do make it plaine unto us; for Saint Augustine saith, universa inutiliter habet, qui unum illud (scilicet amorem) quo universis utatur non habet; he hath all things in vaine, which hath not love, which onely makes us able rightly to use all things; and Saint Paul tells us plainely, if he had all faith and gave all his wealth unto the poore, yea and his body to be burned, yet if he had not love, all were nothing and worth nothing to him.

* Therefore Varro, that called her first sonne ipse love, brought forth another son, whom she called amicus i. love for love.

How we may bee certaine of our salvation.

1 Iohn 4.20.

1 Cor. 13.

3. For the object of his love, it is said to be the world; and this may be said to be a wonder, and a great wonder too; that God should love the world; and that in many respects;

3. The object of Gods love.

A seven-fold wonder that God should love the world.

1. Because God hath omne bonum & delectabile in seipso, all good and delectable things in himselfe, and hath need of no extrinsecall thing that he should love it, as if he had not an all-sufficient object within his owne bosome, which might adæquate and challenge his whole infinite love; as Saint Augustine saith.

1. Reason.

Idem de trinit. l.8. c.3.

2. Reason.

2. Because there is no necessity, that he should love his creatures, as there is a necessity for him to love himselfe; which he cannot choose but love; (it being as impossible for him to slake his love to himselfe, as it is impossible for him to cease to be a God; which notwithstanding is no more impotency in him that he cannot doe it, then it is impotencie in him that he cannot die; quia Deo competit perfectum posse, & non ea quæ defectum potentiæ significant; because it is agreeable to the divine nature, to be able to doe all things which shew ability, not infirmity: as Bonavent: saith;) And therefore, that he would freely love that, which he could choose either to love or not love; (for it was in his owne free liberty, whether he would make the world, and so whether he would love the world or not) it is, and must needs be, an argument of great love and of great wonder, that he should so love it.

It is impossible for God to slacke his love to himselfe.

Bonavent. Ser. 35.

3. Reasen.

3. Because he loveth it without any utility, without any profit unto himselfe; for if he had lov'd the world for his owne good, though never so little, then had it not beene so great a wonder, that he had lov'd it; but as the Psalmist saith, bonorum meorum non eges, God hath no need of any thing that is without himselfe: When as he hath all desiderable excellencies within himselfe: therefore to love the world, not for his owne, but for the worlds good, is very great and very wonderfull: for what is the Creation of the world to the perfection of God? he was the same that he is before we were; and our production from nothing to being brought nothing unto him; so if we were reduced againe into nothing, wee could detract nothing from him; Quia nec melior si laudaveris, nec deterior si vituperaveris; because he is neither the better for thy praise, nor the worse for thy dispraise; but as the Apostle saith, he is yesterday and to day and the same for ever; and his essentiall glory can neither be augmented nor diminished by the being or not being of any creature.

No profit to God to love us.

Aug. in Psalm. 50.10.
Heb 13.8.
Cyrillus Libe. Thesaur. cap. 6.

4. Reason.

4. Because there was no reason, desart or merit in us, that he should love us; for though we find something worthy of love in the the thing that is loved; yet God found nothing in us, for which he should affect us; for how should hee find any thing in that which was nothing? Ideo prius fecit amabiles unde amaret; therefore he made us delectable that he might delight himselfe in us; saith Saint Augustine.

No desert in us that he should love us.

5. Reason.

5. Because our demerits, whereby we deserved so much hatred, and not love, by reason of our manifold sinnes and corruptions, required that he should rather hate us, for our evill, then love us, for any good that was in us.

Much cause to hate us.

6. Reason.

6. Because he did this, not onely for wicked men, whom he saw to be unworthy of this, but also for such wretched men, whom he foresaw would be ingratefull for all this; for so Saint Chrysostome saith, Commendat Deus charitatem suam, quod pro ingratis filium dederit; God doth herein exceedingly commend his love, that he giveth his Sonne to those that are unthankefull to him for his Sonne; & si ingratum dixeris, omnia dixeris; and there cannot be a fouler beast then an unthankefull man; And therefore I make this the wonder of all wonders; for though men had beene unworthy of so great a favour before it was shewed; yet if he had foreseene, they would be thankefull for it, when it should be exhibited, this might be somewhat considerable; but to love them, whom he knew would hate him, and to give his Sonne for them, that should trample his Sonne under their feet, and account the blood of the covenant as an unholy thing, and doe despight unto the spirit of grace; that is most admirable beyond all admiration.

Chrysost. hom. 26.

Quia nihil est, tam inhumanum, tam immane, tam ferum, quam commissere, ut beneficio, non dicam indignus, sed victus esse videare. Cicero in orat pro Planco.

Heb. 10. 29.

7 Reason.

7. Because notwithstanding all this, yet this love is grounded upon good reason and joyned with great wisdome; for in our loves, if there be no merit to deserve it, (as God knowes, few of us love for merit, but for affection sake, and our affections to men are as to Iewels, according to opinion wherein most are much deceived;) then we say, quid deceat non videt ullus amans, love is blinde, Ovidius epist. 4. Ante polos cæli luna bas sumita nobis, scilicet ut nullus sana nemo in amore videt Propert. 2. 14.

and

and wants reason, when we love that which deserves no love, perhaps hate; and therefore we conclude this love to be admirable, but not reasonable; either because it springs out of the ignorance of the demerits of the thing loved; or out of the vehemency of our passions and transported affections; quæ, quod non amabile est, sæpe amore dignum apparere faciunt; which doe often make that to appeare worthy of love, which in it selfe deserves no love; saith that wise and learned Cardinall.

No reason oftentimes in our love. Tolet. in hunc versum.

But the love of God to us proceeds, neither out of ignorance of our unworthinesse; for alas he knoweth what is in man, better then any man knoweth himselfe, he understandeth our thoughts long before; neither out of any passion, which is not in God; but out of the depth of his unsearchable wisedome and equity, which our wisedome and reason are too weake to understand.

Ob. But you will say, that love seemes to be very rash, when we love that, which hath no cause of love, and we no reason to love it;

Sol. I answer that in those things, which are loved, there is no cause found, why God should love them; but in God which loveth them, there is both a good cause and a just reason of loving them, and that is, his infinite and incomprehensible goodnesse, which is the sole cause why he loveth us, as he testifieth himselfe, by his Prophet, propter meipsum & propter nomen meum, for his names sake and his owne glory he loves us all.

Chrys. in Epist. ad Tim. homil. 7.

1. Why God loveth us.

And so you see, it is a wonder, and a seaven-fold wonder that God should love the world; and yet behold, and behold it with admiration; God so loved the world; and his love to the world is eternall and beyond all eternity as Saint Augustine sheweth; Nam sicut concilium creandi æternum fuit, licet opus novum; for, as the worke of making the world be new, as also the worke of the incarnation of Christ is a new worke, as the Prophet sheweth, the Lord hath created a new thing in the earth, a woman shall compasse a man; and yet the counsell or decree of God touching the making of these things was from everlasting; so that which Boetius saith, l. 3. met. 9. may well be here said, mundum mente gerens pulchrum, pulcherrimus ipse; he bare the world eternally in his eternall mind, as Barradius doth expound it. So, though the effect of Gods love did appeare in time, as first, when hee produced things that they might have their being; yet his love to these things was before the the foundation of the world, as the Apostle sheweth.

Gods love to us from everlasting. Aug. de civit. Dei l. 12. c. 17.

Ier. 31. 22.

Boetius l. 3. met. 9. Barrad. to. 1. l. 6. c. 6 p. 267.

Ephes. 1. 4, 5.

Ob. But yet here we must stay, and take up Nicodemus his question, how can these things be? that the same fountaine should yeeld forth sweet water and bitter: the same tongue, the same Evangelist should say, God so loved the world; and againe, love not the world, nor the things that are in the world; for if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him.

John 3. 9.

Iames 3. 11.

1 Ioh. 2. 15.

Sol. I answer, that the world is taken divers waies, specially

1. Pro mundo creationis, for all the creatures in the world that are made and created by God, as the Philosopher takes it, in his first booke de cœlo & mundo.

Mundus est qui constat ex cœlo & terra, & terrenis, cœlestibusq; naturis. Possidon. in meteor.

2. Pro mundo corruptionis, for the vanities and corruptions of the world, which invaded all creatures through the sin of man, as the Apostle sheweth, that the creature was made subject unto vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him, who hath subjected the same in hope; and so Saint Bernard takes it, where he saith that mundus est ubi malitiæ plurimum, sapientiæ modicum, omnia viscosa, omnia lubrica, nulla pura; ubi animæ periclitantur, corpora affliguntur, & omnia vanitas atque afflictio spiritus: the world is that which hath a great deale of malice, little wisedome, all slippery, all intangled, nothing good, where our soules are endangered, our bodies afflicted and all is vanity and vexation of spirit.

Rom. 8. 20.

Bernard. in quadr. sermone.

The quality of the world.

And if you take the world in the first sence, for the creatures of God, God loveth them all, and he hateth nothing of all that he made; because, as Plato saith, charitas Dei est causa creationis mundi & originis omnium rerum, the love of God is the cause of the creation of all things, therefore he cannot hate them being created:

Plato in Tymæo.

The love of God the cause of all things.

ted: But if you take the world in the second sence, for the corruption of the world, which is indeed a world of corruption; then God, which is of pure eyes, doth perfectly hate the same; and whosoever loveth this world, the love of the father is not in him; quia ut oculi pariter cælum & terram nequaquam conspicunt, sic amor Dei & mundi pariter in uno corde habitare non possunt; because that as the eye of man, at the same instant, cannot behold both heaven and earth, so the heart of man cannot containe both the love of God and of the world at the same time; saith Saint Cyprian.

1 Ioh. 2. 15.

Cypr. de 12. abusiv.

Love of the world excludes the love of God.

Iohn 17. 9.

Ob. But then againe it may be objected, that our Saviour denieth to pray for the world; therefore certainely he loves not all the created world, but onely some few men that were given him out of the world, as himselfe confesseth; and these are called the world, because they are of more worth then all the rest of the world.

The world of men taken three waies

Sol. I answer that this world of men is taken three waies.

1. For worldly, vitious, sinnefull men, as, if I should yet please men, I should not be the servant of Christ; and againe, they are of the world, therefore speake they of the world, and the world heareth them: And in this sence the world is to be taken, where Christ saith, I pray not for the world, that is, for the wicked brood of ungratious and ungodly men, that have erred from the wombe, and will runne on in all sinne unto their graves; because this world is that which pertaineth unto the masse of perdition; quia totus in maligno positus; because all this world lieth in wickednesse.

1. For wicked men Gal 1. 10.

1 Ioh. 4 5.

2. The world is taken for the predestinate and elected people of God, which doe live and wander in this sensible world; as where Abraham is said to be the heire of the world; because he is the father of all the faithfull, to whom the whole world doth belong; and more plainely where Saint Paul saith, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himselfe; that is, the whole company of Gods elect; because none but the elect are reconciled unto God.

2. For the predestinate men. Rom. 4. 13.

2 Cor. 5. 19.

And in this sence, some doe understand the words of Christ in this place, so God loved the world; even as Saint Iohn saith in another place; behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sonnes of God; for this is to be understood of the elect onely, as the words immediately following doe make it plaine, therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not: And therefore say they, Saint Iohn speaking here, as he doth there, of the great love of God to men, is to be understood here as there, of his love unto the elect, which he doth so exceedingly love.

1 Iohn 3. 1.

But I answer, that the words following in this place will not permit the restriction of this word, world, unto the sole company of the elect; because then the explanation of the words must needs be thus, God so loved the elect, that whosoever of the elect should beleeve in him, should not perish but have everlasting life; which is most absurd; because this explication gives just suspition that all the elect are not saved, but onely those of them, that will beleeve in him; whereas it is most certaine, that as many as are elected shall be saved, and God which hath decreed the end, hath likewise decreed the meanes to bring them to that end. And therefore

These words not to be restrained onely to the elect.

All the elect shall be saved.

3. The world is taken for all men promiscuously, good and bad, without respect either to election or reprobation, as things altogether unknowne to us, who are chosen or who are refused.

3. All men, Ioh. 15. 19. 1 Cor. 4. 9.

And in this sence I take our Saviours words in this place, God so loved the world, that is, genus humanum, as Dionysius Carthusianus expounds it, the whole race of mankind, all the children of men, as they are his creatures and the workes of his hands. And I find Dilexit mundum i. genus humanum, prefertim homines prædestinatos. Dionysius Carthusianus in hunc loc.

1. The Scriptures approving
2. The Fathers confirming
3. Reason requiring

} it to be thus: for

1. Proofe.

1. The Apostle saith, Christ tasted death for all men; and the grace of God which which bringeth salvation unto all men; and Christ is the reconciliation, not for our sinnes onely, that is the elect, but also for the sins of the whole world.

Heb. 2.9. 1 Tim. 2. 6. 2 Cor. 5.15. Titus 2.11. Rom. 1.16. c. 3.22, 23. 2. Proofe.

2. Pope Leo saith, Quia primi hominis universa posteritas uno simul vulnere sauciata corruerat, venit Christus non extraneus ab hominum genere; sed alienus a crimine, in quo diabolus, quod suum diceret, non haberet, qui dum in eum savit, quem sub peccati lege non tenuit, jus impiæ dominationis amisit; quia effusio pro injustis sanguinis justi, tam potens fuit ad privilegium, tam dives ad pretium, ut si universitas captivorum, in redemptorem suum crederet, nullum tyrannica vincula retinerent; quoniam, sicut ait Apostolus, ubi abundavit peccatum, ibi superabundavit & gratia; because the whole posterity of the first man Adam, being all wounded together with one blow, had most suddenly and desperately fallen, and were all liable to the same misery; therefore Christ, being no stranger from the nature of man, but wholly free from all sinne, hath come into the world; and because in him the divell could not have any thing, which he might say was his; therefore while he did unjustly rage on him, whom, under the law of sin, hee could not hold, he hath lost all the pretended right of his unjust dominion; because the effusion and shedding of his righteous blood, for the sinnes of unrighteous men, is so powerfull for our priviledge, and so availeable for our satisfaction and the price of our redemption, that if all the company of captives, should beleeve in their Redeemer, not one of them all could be detained by the tyranny of the divell; because, as the Apostle saith, where sinne abounded grace superabounded. The Author of those comments upon the Psalmes, which are ascribed to Arnobius, is of the same minde; and Hincmarus a very ancient and a very learned Author, hath ex professo, written a whole booke in confutation of them that said, that Christ came to die for the elect onely. I could bring a cloud of witnesses to confirme this point: but the truth is to be proved, rationum pondere non authorum nomine, rather by the weight of reasons then the name of Authors, and one sound reason without Authors is better then ten, grave Authors without reason: and therefore Vide Maldonat. in hunc, loc.

3. If God did not love all, so that he gave his Sonne for all, then the wicked might have a just excuse for not beleeving in his Sonne, and God could not bee just for condemning them for their unbeleefe; for if faith be the onely instrumentall meanes that saves a man, then questionlesse infidelity, and not beleeving in Christ is the most principall thing that condemnes him; and so our Saviour saith, this is the condemnation, that is materia condemnationis, the matter or chiefe cause of condemnation, as Saint Chrysostome, Saint Cyrill, Theophylact and Euthymius doe expound it; that light is come into the world, that is himselfe, which is the true light, and men love darkenesse more then light; and Saint Iohn more plainely, Ver. 18. saith, he that beleeveth in Christ hath eternall life, and he that beleeveth not, is condemned already; not that he shall not afterward come to judgement to be condemned, but that he hath the cause of condemnation already in himselfe, even as it was said to Adam, in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt die the death; not that he should presently die, sed quod statim in se mortis causam habiturus, as Saint Chrysostome, Theophylact, and Euthymius understand it. And if Christ was not given for them, then are they condemned for not beleeving a lie; for not beleeving that to be, which never was; which is most absurd to say, and most injurious to thinke, that God would damne a man for not beleeving Christ to be his Christ, when as he was never given him; but when God the Father shall say, accipe unigenitum meum, & da pro te; and God the Sonne shall say, tolle me & redime te; and yet wretched man will not accept of this offer, then may he be most justly condemned, and his mouth fully stopped, that he is without any excuse, and the most gracious God is so justified in his sayings, that hee is cleere when we are judged: and this Saint Hierom intimates, when he saith, signum adventus dominici est, in toto orbe evangelium prædicari, ut nullus non credens sit excusabilis, the signe of our Saviours comming is the preaching of the Gospell in all the world, that none which beleeveth not, might have any excuse.

3. Proofe.

Ansel. in l. cur Deus homo.

Hieron. super Matthæum.

Rep. But it may be said, are they not condemned for their sins, but solely for this, for not beleeving in Christ.

Sol. I answer, if they beleeved this, they should be free from all sins; because he came to pay all our debts; but because they beleeve not this, they remaine in their sinnes, and shall be condemned for their sinnes, and for this sin, above all other sinnes, that they make God a liar, and will not beleeve him, that he hath sent Iesus Christ.

Esay 53. Ob. But it is objected againe, it was prophesied, he should beare the sinnes of many, and our Saviour saith, hee came, dare animam suam redemptionem pro multis.

Sol. I answer in a word, if he was given for all, then surely for many; because though many comprehends not all, yet certainely all includeth many.

O then behold the great mercy of God, and consider quid misericordius intelligi valet quam quod unicus peccatori, æternis tormentis damnato, & non habenti unde se redimat, Deus donet filium unigenitum; What can be thought on so full of mercy, then that God should give his onely Sonne, to every sinner condemned to the torments of eternall death, and having no meanes in the world of himselfe to redeeme or to helpe himselfe? And therefore whosoever will, may, and whosoever will not, ought to beleeve in the Son of God; and thou art inexcusable ô man, whosoever thou art, that wilt not beleeve in Iesus Christ; because the Lord is loving to every man and his mercy is over all his workes.

4. The manner of Gods loving us, how great his love is. Ephes. 1.6. & c.2. 4.7.

4. For the manner how God loved the world, it is expressed in this word ουτως. So; and it sheweth the vehemencie, the ardencie and the excellencie of his love; Saint Paul calls it the great love and the rich mercy of God, yea the exceeding riches of his grace, exceeding the love of a father, and preferred before the tender bowels of a mother: so inexplicable to us that we know not with what words to expresse it, or by what Similies to explaine it; for he so loved the world, that it passeth our understanding to conceive how much, how well; and therefore much more it passeth our speech, to utter after what manner, he loved the same: Yet, that so great love might not be passed over unconsidered in the particulars, because it passeth our apprehensions in the generall, our Saviour sets downe the best demonstrations in the world, to shew some view thereof, though it be but as Moses saw the land of Canaan from the top of mount Nebo, afarre of; so our sight thereof is very dimme, in respect of that knowledge which we shall have of it hereafter, when we shall enter into the celestiall Canaan where we shall see him face to face.

Esay 49.15.

So much for the proposition: God so loved the world.

2. The infallible demonstration of Gods love.

2. Because love is an inward affection, that cannot be well expressed without some outward demonstration of the same, therefore our Saviour saith, God gave his onely begotten Sonne: so here is an externall effect of his internall love; and it is set downe by foure words.

1. Dedit 3. Suum
2. Filium 4. Vnigenitum.

But these foure words are full of matter, full of consolation, full of admiration; as

1. Why one man gives gifts to another.

1. That God gave his Son; a great gift; And there be many causes why one man gives gifts unto another, as specially, either because

1. He needs his helpe, or
2. He feares his greatnesse, or } but
3. He desires his friendship.

Psal. 16 2. Iob 22 3. Iob 35.6,7,8. Iob 22.28. 1. God needs not our helpe.

First, God needs not our helpe, as the Prophet David speaketh, Deus meus es tu, & bonorum meorum non eges, thou art my God, my goods are nothing unto thee: and Elyphaz saith the truth unto Iob, is it any pleasure to the Almighty that thou art righteous, or, is it any gaine to him that thou makest thy way perfect? and so Elihu more fully saith, if thou sinnest, what dost thou against him, or if thou be righteous, what givest thou him, or what receives he at thy hands? thy wickednesse may may hurt a man as thou art, and thy righteousnesse may profit the Sonne of man; but wherein can a man be profitable to God, whereas he needs not any thing, but giveth to all things, life and breath and all things, as the Apostle sheweth? Act. 17.25.

Secondly, God needs not give us any thing for feare of any of us, of all of us; for alas he is the Almighty, who can resist him? and we are but dust and ashes, nothing and able to do nothing; and therefore 2. God feares none.

Thirdly, though God is no waies bettered or benefited by our friendship, yet he gives this gift to us onely because he desires our love for our good; nam deliciæ meæ cum filijs hominum, for my delights is to be with the sonnes of men, saith the Lord: and therefore hee bestowes gifts upon us; and Salomon saith, a gift in secret pacifieth anger, and a reward in the bosome strong wrath, Pro. 21. 14. 3. Why God bestoweth gifts on us. Pro. 21.14.

And gifts, saith the Philosopher, maxime omnium ingenuos animos devinciunt, doe chiefely ingage ingenious mindes, nay wild beasts acknowledge good offices, and there is no living creature so untractable, but with kinde handling is made more gentle, and he that persevereth in bestowing gifts will extort an acknowledgement from the most obdurate creature; for they blinde the eyes of the wise saith the Prophet; and Stories are not wanting to shew how many they have corrupted to doe evill, as Tarpeja for a few bracelets to betray the Cittie of Rome; and we know gifts brought great preferments to many unworthy men; therefore why should not gifts much sooner win us unto God? The Comedian saith, liberalitate liberos retinere satius esse credo quam metu; bounty gaineth us sooner then feare; therefore God, ostendit ubera prius quam verbera, doth first shew the dugge before hee fetcheth the rod, and he giveth gifts before he layeth on stripes; and his gifts are, nimis copiosa, multa & magna; very many and very great. Seneca l. 1. c. 3. What gifts have done. Titus Livius. Terent. in adelp. act.

But as in all affaires, the manner of doing is to be respected as well as the matter don, so in gifts, that which importeth most is the manner of giving; for Fab: Verrucosus compareth those disgracefull benefits, which are presented by niggardly hands, to stale and mustie-bread, that an hungry man must needs take, and yet cannot eate: therefore a commendable gift must have these three speciall properties; to be { 1. Speedie. 2. Voluntary. 3. Free. } for Senec. de benef. l. 2. Three speciall properties of a commendable gift.

1. As that cruelty is greatest which protracteth the paine, whereas to dispatch him of life is a kinde of mercy; so the lesse time I am held in suspence, the more thankes I owe; because the expectation of things, how good soever, is both tedious and displeasant; and some had rather their hopes were soone denied, then long delayed; and therefore the Philosopher saith, that gift is ungratefull, which hath a long time stucke betweene the fingers of the giver, as if he had robbed himselfe when he bestowed the same; Therefore God doth speedily bestow his gifts, and assoone as ever he saw Adams need he prevented his demand, and presented this great favour before it was sought after, saying that the seed of the woman should breake the Serpents head. 1. Speedie. The greatest cruelty what it is. Seneca. Tedious expectation of things how odious.

2. Inforced courtesies have no merit, and extorted favours are not thankesworthy, when they are halfe lost by much craving: therefore God loveth a cheerefull giver, and is himselfe a most voluntary benefactor; and therefore Scaliger saith, ne crede datum, quod dabis, aut dato libenter; invita manus jugulat gratiamq; vultus. 2. Voluntary. Idem quo sup. Scalig. in epidap. l. 1. p. 122.

3. Though a reward is properly that, which we must some way necessarily undergoe; yet a gift is such a thing as nulla necessitate, jure aut officio cogniso sed sponte præstatur, & si non præstetur, nulla reprehensio adhibenda est; saith * Anton: Govanus. Therefore God bestoweth this gift most freely upon us, and that, as we find, in all respects; for 3. Free. * Comm. in orat. Cicer. in vatin. p. 2057. Donum est quod ex mera liberalitate dantis exhibetur. Halensis 2a. 4. q. 8. memb. 4. p. 94.

{ 1. He gives it and doth not restore it. 2. He gives it and doth not sell it. 3. He gives it and doth not exchange it. } for

1. If we had deserved any thing at the hands of God, then in giving him, he had but rendred our deserts; or

2. If after he had given him, our workes had beene of worth equivalent to the value of this gift, then he had sold his Son and not given him; or

3. If we had beene required, to doe this, or not to have him, then had he but exchang'd his Son with us. But

1. We did nothing that could deserve any good from God.

2. We have nothing that is equivalent to such a gift; for man knoweth not the price thereof saith Iob.

3. He requires nothing of us, but onely to beleeve that he loves us, and hath given his Son for us; And therefore our Saviour saith, freely yee have received, freely give; and here God is said to give his Sonne: ὃ δῶρον dicitur esse donatio rei licitæ, nullo jure cogente, sed mera liberalitate facta collatio, saith Hostiensis.

But we are further to observe that, in this one giving of Christ, God hath given him many waies and to divers ends; as specially,

1. In his incarnation. 3. In his Passion.
2. In his conversation. 4. In the Eucharist.

1. He gave him in his incarnation, to be made man, to be made flesh, to be made grasse, for all flesh is grasse, for our sake, as the Prophet Esay saith; Vnto us a child is borne, and unto us a Sonne is given, that is, natus ex humanitate, & datus ex divinitate; as Emyssenus saith: And this condemnes that conclusion of Arrianisme, as Saint Cyril calls it, that Christ was made man, ut ipse magis exaltaretur quam ut humanum genus redimeretur, that himselfe might be exalted, rather then men should be saved; for that illative particle, wherefore, in *Phil.*2.9. from whence they first inforced that conclusion is not to be understood διπλογικῶς, causally to note the end, but ἀποβατικῶς, consecutively to shew the event of his humiliation: therefore all antiquity and all confessions doe perpetually run in this stile, that for us men and for our salvation he came downe from heaven and was made man; and Saint Paul plainely saith, you know the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, how that he being rich, for your sakes became poore, that you through his poverty might be made rich; to shew that he which needed nothing, to supplie our need, became nothing.

2. He gave him in the whole course of his conversation; for as he was not borne for himselfe, so he lived not to himselfe but to us; he preached to us, hee fasted for us, he healed us, and fulfilled all righteousnesse, even all the righteousnesse of the law for our sake; for he was made under the law that we might bee redeemed from the bondage of the law.

3. He gave him in his passion, and so gave him that we might doe with him what we would, use him or abuse him at our pleasure; so we did; beat him, buffet him, scoffe him, scourge him, spit in his face, nayle him to his Crosse, throw him to his grave; he was our owne, for he was given us, and therefore we would doe with him what we would: ô good God, hast thou thus given thy Sonne to us, and doe we thus use him when we have him?

Quam male pro meritis tractant Agamemnona Graij?

But what was the cause of this? the Apostle telleth us, hee was delivered for our sinnes: ô hatefull sinne, that we drinke like water, and yet must cost the dearest blood of Christ: alas beloved, we feare not the greatest sinnes, our oathes are as nothing: our pride, handsomenesse, and our carnall lusts but youthfull pleasures; but the Prophet tels us, if we had but the least sparke of grace, we would looke upon him whom our sinnes have pierced, and we would lament for him as one lamenteth for his onely sonne.

4. Though we had made our selves unworthy of this gift, by our base and more then barbarous usage of him; yet that this gift might at last returne to our profit, he gives him us in the Eucharist, as he saith himselfe, pater meus dat vobis panem verum, my father gives you the true bread, that we might eat him, and feed on him,

1. God doth not restore it.
2. He doth not sell it.
3. He doth not exchange it.
Iob 28.13.
Quia donum est datio irredibilis, sine spe retributionis, ut testatur Halensis 10.4.q.17. memb.6 p.555. otherwise Non est beneficium quod in quæstum mittitur; as Seneca saith de benef. l.4.
God gave his Son foure waies to us.
1. In his incarnation.
Cyril thesaur.l.3.
Why Christ was incarnate.
Confessio. Nicen. ephesin. & chalc.
2 Cor.8.9.
2. In the whole course of his conversation.
Gal.4.4.
3. In his passion.
How basely wee used Christ when we had him.
Sin the cause of all Christs sufferings.
Zach.12.10.
4 In the Eucharist
Iohn 6.

him, and so live by him, as a man liveth by his meat; and as the Prophet saith, What could the Lord do more for his vineyard? So I may say, what could the Lord do more for the world? Deus semper largitor semper donator est. quia non mihi sufficit quod semel dedit, nisi semper det; God gives him alwaies, and bestowes him daily upon us; because it is not enough that he gave him once, unlesse he give him continually; Ideo peto ut accipiam, & cum accepero rursus peto; therefore I seeke that I may have him, and when I have him, I seeke him still againe; I am covetous in seeking, and he failes not in giving, in giving him daily unto us, saith S. Hierome; and therefore, let us take heed, that we neglect not so great salvation; for, if now at last we shall despise this gift, and eat the same unworthily, then there is no hope of mercy; because there is no more gifts to be given, no more sacrifice for sinnes to be offered; and this is the last time it shall be offered, at supper, after which we go to rest, or shall never enter into his rest, because we do eat and drinke our owne damnation. And so much for the giving.

May 5. Note Gods gifts. Christ daily given us.

Hieron contra Pelagian. Heb. 2. 3.

1 Cor. 11. 29.

2. Dedit filium, he gave his Sonne; Saint Iames saith, every good giving, and every perfect gift is from him; and he gives us our selves, our health, our wealth, our prosperity; great gifts no question, as they know best, that want any of these; and yet these are nothing, and worth nothing, in comparison of internall gifts, the endowments of our minds and morall vertues: but if we look in Dona Spiritus Sancti, into the gifts of Gods Spirit, we finde all vertues to be but drosse in respect of these; and yet all these flow from Christ; and from his fulnesse we receive grace for grace; and therefore the giving of Christ is rightly said to be the greatest of all gifts, the fountaine of all graces, and a gift that (in a manner) obscureth all other gifts; for, if he had given the whole world, it had beene as nothing, for it was all made of nothing; if he had given a servant, Saint or Angell, it had not beene much; because a servant abideth not alwaies in the house, saith Christ; but for a man to give his owne issue, is much; because, as Sophocles saith, μεγα το τίκτειν εστι· κἂν γὰρ κακὸς πάσχοι, μέτρον ἂν τίκτοι φιλοῦντος τοκεύς: So great is the force of procreation, that although a man should suffer much evill, yet he cannot easily hate his owne begetting: if therefore a man gave his daughter, as Agamemnon did Iphigenia, and Iephtah did his onely daughter, after his returne from the slaughter of the children of Ammon, it had beene something; because daughters are our flesh and bloud: and therefore, as nearer, so dearer unto us than any other worldly thing: yet a daughter in respect of a sonne, is as nothing; because a sonne is not onely our flesh and bloud, but also the strength, the hope, the glory of their parents, and the setling of patrimonies and kingdomes with no trouble and much joy unto posterities: which (by the way) sheweth how much we are all bound to God for your Majesties royall issue, that he gave you such a hopefull Sonne; and especially this sheweth the unspeakable and most infinite love of God, quod proprio filio non pepercit, that he gave not a servant, not a daughter, not a sonne by adoption, not an Angell, but his owne proper, co-essentiall and co-eternall Sonne, and spared him not, but gave him up for us all, Rom. 8. 32.

2. What the gift is. Iam. 1 17. All gifts from God.

John 1. 16.

The giving of Christ the greatest of all gifts.

Iohn

Sophoc. in Elect.

Iudges 11. 35.

And if we do further observe what manner of Sonne he was, we shall see his love still ascending; καὶ γὰρ καινὸν γενόμενον ἐκ δίκης τρέφε; for, if our children be evill, it is an extreame calamity, saith Euripides, as good lost as found; and Salomon saith no lesse: but ἐυδαιμονία τῷ πατρὶ παῖς ἀγαθὸς ἐκ σοφῆς γυναικός; a wise sonne is the joy of his father, saith Menander; and Salomon saith the like; and Agatho saith, ὦ τρὶς μάκαρ ὅστις εὐτέκνων πατὴρ; O how sweet a thing it is for parents to have dutifull and obedient children: and Christ the Sonne of God was wise in heart, and mighty in strength, being the wisdome of God; and he was obedient to his Father in all things, it was meat and drinke to him to doe his Fathers will; therefore he was Filius dilectionis, the Sonne of his Fathers love, or his deare Sonne, as the Father himselfe professeth, saying, this is my beloved Sonne in whom I am well-pleased; and so he might well say, because he had never offended him at any time: therefore, though for a man to give a sonne that were prodigall, or foolish, or disobedient, and brought nothing els but griefe and sorrow unto his parents, might seeme no great matter; yet for God

Euripid. in Oreste.

Pro. 19. 13.

Pro. 10 26.

Iob 9 4. Luke 11.

What manner of Sonne Christ is.

Matth. 3. 17.

God to give such a Sonne, so wise, so dutifull, and so well-beloved of his Father, must needs be an argument of no small love to man.

3. God gives his owne, and not that which is anothers.

3. The Evangelist saith, δεδωκεν τον υιον αυτου: He gave his Sonne; for many will be contented to cut large thongs out of another mans hide, and to give that which is none of their owne; faire almes out of another mans purse: and what is this, but, as Paschalis saith, aliena donationibus effundere est sua crimina ostentare; quia donum est largitio de suo, non de alieno; to brag and boast of their owne vices: therefore God gives his owne, and not another mans sonne.

Cardin. Paschalis in l. de vert. & vitijs.

Indeed we have nothing of our owne to give; for, what have we that we have not received of him? and what we have received, is not on all parts ours: and therefore whatsoever we give, we give but what was given us; we give him his owne againe: and therefore our gifts are but small gifts, no gifts indeed, whatsoever we give; but he gives us Filium suum, his owne Sonne; and therefore a gift.

4. God gave his onely Sonne.

4. He gave his onely begotten Sonne, a word that amplifieth the greatnesse of Gods love, more than all that hath beene yet spoken; for, if he had had many sonnes, he might the easier have spared one; but having no more but onely one, by giving him, he could give no more: The father of the prodigall child had two sonnes, and when he lost one, he had another; but he that hath no more sonnes, than Isaac had blessings, but one sonne; if he leeseth him, he leeseth all: therefore the Prophet Ieremie willing to expresse the greatnesse of that sorrow, which the Israelites should take up for their sinnes, saith, they should make their mourning as one that mourneth for his onely sonne; most bitter lamentation; because no losse can be greater than the losse of an onely sonne: and the Prophet Zachary useth the same expression: therefore, as Abraham is commended for his obedience above all other men, because he refused not to offer up his onely sonne; so the Epitasis and the height of Gods love is here manifested, that he gave his onely begotten Sonne.

Luke 16.

Gen. 27. 38.

Ier. 6. 26.

Zach. 12. 10.

Ob. But you will say, God hath many sons; for, we are all his sons; the elect by adoption, and all by creation are the sonnes of God: therefore how can he be said to give his onely Sonne?

Iohn 1. 13. How God hath many sonnes.

Sol. I answer, if he were but as weare, then could he not be his onely Sonne; But God hat hath two sorts of sonnes.

1.

1. Essentially; so Christ is the onely Sonne of God, begotten of his Father before all worlds, God of God, light of light, and very God of very God, as our Nicen Creed teacheth us.

2.

2. Adoptively; so all that are in Christ, are likewise with Christ the Sonnes of God; and thus he which eternally was unigenitus absq; fratribus, the onely begotten Sonne of God without brethren, is become, by his incarnation, primogenitus inter multos fratres, the first-begotten among many brethren, as Fulgentius speaketh.

Fulgentius in responsione ad ob. Arrianorum.

The richnesse of this gift.

And by this you may guesse at the richnesse of this gift, which comprehendeth all gifts in it selfe; for, if you would have wisdome, here is the essentiall wisdome of God; if you would have righteousnesse, he is the Sunne of righteousnesse, and brings with him everlasting righteousnesse; if you would have redemption, with him is plenteous redemption, and through him we have redemption, that is, the forgivenesse of our sinnes; if you would have life, he is the resurrection and the life; and if you would have any thing, he is heire of all things; and if you believe in him, though you have nothing, yet shall you possesse all things: and therefore despise not this gift, but rather as our Saviour saith, sell all that you have, that you may gaine this Iewell.

Dan. 9. 24. Psal. 36. 7.

Col. 1. 14. Ioh. 11. 25. Heb. 1. 2.

Mat. 13. 46.

To whom God gave his Sonne.

But here we must consider yet, to whom he gave this Sonne, which will still amplifie the greatnesse of Gods love; for though some say he gave him onely for the elect, the godly, that are beloved of God, and do love God againe; yet if we consider the words precedent and subsequent, I doubt not but it will appeare he gave his Sonne for all men, even for the greatest and the vilest sinners; for in the words words before, Christ saith generally, God so loved the world, which, as I shewed before, must bee understood of all men; and in the words following, he speakes indefinitely, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish; therefore when all are loved, and none excluded; but that any one, and every one may believe, if they will believe; it must needs be that he gave his Sonne for all.

The conceits examined.

That he gave his Sonne for all men

Ob. But then you will say, that hereby we teach universall grace, which the best Divines deny.

That there is a twofold grace.

Sol. I answer, that there is { 1. An universall / 2. A particular } grace; for

1. Vniversall grace.

1. The Creation of the world is an universall grace, and so is the preservation of all worldly things, and many other graces of Gods Spirit, which the Lord giveth unto all; and so I take the giving of his Sonne to be an universall grace, for all men; because he gave him to the world, and lifted him up, as the serpent was lifted up in the wildernesse, that whosoever would looke upon him, and believe in him, might not perish, but have life everlasting.

John 3.14. Numb.21.9.

2. A speciall grace

2. There is a speciall grace, which God gives to some, not to all; as the grace of true repentance, saving faith, and the like: for repentance is the gift of God; and it is given to you to believe, saith the Apostle; and it is given to you to know the mysteries of the kingdome of heaven, but to others not, saith our Saviour: and these graces are not given to all; for all men do not repent, all men have not faith, and all do not understand the mysteries of the kingdome of God.

Phil. 1.29. Marke 4.11.

The grace of exhibition and of apprehension, two severall graces.

Therefore, though the grace of apprehension or appropriation of the Sonne of God by faith, be not universall; for all men do not apprehend Iesus Christ to be their Saviour, neither is this grace given or offered unto all, but onely to whom it pleased God, out of his more speciall love to make partakers of his Sonne; yet the grace of exhibition or donation of the Sonne of God is universall; because God gave him unto all; that all, if they would believe, might not perish; or if they would not believe, their perdition should be from themselves, and they should rest without excuse, and God should be justified in his sayings, and cleare when they are judged.

So you see the great love of God, and you may see it with admiration, that which I can never sufficiently expresse, and you never perfectly perceive, that God should give his Sonne, and not his servant, his onely begotten Sonne, and not any of his adopted sonnes, to us men; and alas, What is man that he should be mindfull of him, or the sonne of man that he should so regard him? The very best of us in his best estate, being altogether vanity, that is, nothing but vanity; πᾶσα γὰρ ἐσμεν χαμαιγενῶν; for our bodies we have of earth, and as Sophocles saith, ὀρῶ γὰρ ἡμᾶς εἴδωλα καὶ κούφας σκιὰς πλὴν ἰδὼν ἔγωγε μηδὲν ἂν βροτὸν σκιᾶς; I see we are nothing but images, and shadowes of no worth, of no continuance: and yet God gave his Sonne not onely for the best of men, but also for all wicked men, sinfull men, that delight in nothing but in sinne: so great is the love of God to man, if man had but a little grace to consider of this great love.

Psal 8.4.

What the former doctrine teacheth.

And this should teach us,

1. Lesson.

1. To understand wherein the speciall love of God doth principally consist; not in giving wealth, honours, or the like, but in the gift of his onely Sonne.

2. Lesson.

2. To study what we should render unto the Lord for this great gift, that he hath bestowed on us: and if we find nothing worthy of him, then as Eschines said unto his master, let us give our selves to him, that gave himselfe to death for us; or if we have any thing, as who is so poore but he hath some thing, then let us give some thing to him, who hath given all we have to us: and it is S. Gregory Nazianzens counsell; Da exiguum ei, a quo multum habes; imo da omnia ei, qui omnia donavit tibi; & nunquam Dei munificentiam vinces, etiamsi teipsum bonis adjungas, Orat.9. Give a little to him from whom thou hast much; nay, give all to him, which hath given all to thee; and if thou shouldst give thy selfe with

Nazian. Orat.9.

with thine; yet ſhalt thou never exceed him in giving; give what thou wilt he will give thee more.

3. Leſſon. The benefit of prayer.

3. To put our whole truſt in God, that he will deny us nothing that we ſhall aske him in Chriſt his name; quid enim negabit petentibus; qui non petentibus dedit unigenitum? For what can he denie us, if we aske it, when as he gave us his onely Sonne, when we did not aske him? And it is the Apoſtles rule, Seeing God hath given us his Sonne, ſhall he not with him give us all things alſo? Rom. 8. 32. And ſo much for the demonſtration of Gods love; He gave his onely begotten Sonne.

Rom. 8. 32.

3. The end why God gave his Sonne. Ioh. 3. 16.

3. He gave his Son, that whoſoever believeth on him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life; and this is the end of his giving; & it is like the ſuperlative degree of compariſon; the firſt was good, the ſecond better, and this is beſt of all; like that wine which our Saviour kept unto the laſt; for what is it to me that he loves the world, if he love not me? Or what is it to me that he gave his Son, if he gave him not for me? But here is my comfort, that he gave his Son for me; and here is thy comfort, that he gave his Sonne for thee; and here is comfort for every man, for any man that will be comforted, that he gave his Sonne for all, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life.

The difference betwixt Gods doing and our doing.

Vide Barrad. to. 1. l. 6. c. 6. p. 267. 1. & Aug. de Civit. Dei l. 11. c. 17. & tract. 112. in Iohan.

And as God ſhewed his goodneſſe in loving the world, and his bounty in giving his Son, ſo here he ſheweth both his wiſdome and his power in drawing ſo much good out of our evill: For, as Ionathan ex favo mellis periculum mortis retulit, out of the honey drew the danger of death; ſo we draw evill out of good, and turne the grace of God into wantonneſſe; our wealth and honours make us proud; our favours with great men, to diſdaine our betters; and our powers, to oppreſſe the innocent; and as a Father ſaith, Ex vitæ longitudine peccatorum multitudinem, ex pulchritudine libidinem, & ex Dei miſericordia in peccatis perſiſtentiam depromimus; From the length of daies we draw forth a multitude of ſinnes, from beauty luſt, and from the abundance of Gods mercy a preſumptuous perſeverance in ſinne. But as the Bee ſuckes honey out of the henbane, and Samſon out of the eater drew meat, and out of the ſtrong drew ſweetneſſe; So God, which commanded the light to ſhine out of darkneſſe, did from the death of Chriſt bring eternall life to as many as believe in him; for he gave his Son, that whoſoever believeth on him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life.

And here are three things obſervable.

Three things obſervable.

1. The extent of the gift, to all.
2. The Inſtrument that apprehends this gift, faith.
3. The end why it was given, to bring us to eternall life. Or briefer thus,

1. The receiver, whoſoever,
2. The meanes, believeth,
3. The benefit, ſhall not periſh, but have everlaſting life.

1. The receivers, all that will believe.

1. The Logicians tell us, that in nuc, whoſoever, is a note of univerſality, and is equivalent to all; therefore this word being limited to the believers, and extended to all that will believe, it doth plainely ſhew that all men have an intereſt in the Sonne of God, and are no wayes exempted from him, if they exclude not themſelves by unbeliefe; and whoſoever ſaith, Chriſt was not given for all, he doth contract the greatneſſe of Gods love, and deprive the greateſt part of men of his bounty, and he ſeemes to make our Saviour Chriſt to ſpeake improperly; becauſe if he was onely given for the elect, and the whole world is to be expounded for the elect, then it had beene a properer ſpeech to ſay, God ſo loved the world, that he gave his onely begotten Sonne, that all they, believing in him, ſhould not periſh; becauſe, whoſoever, intimateth that all, for whom he was given, would not believe in him.

2. The inſtrument that layeth hold on the gift, is faith.

2. The inſtrument or meanes, whereby every one is to lay hold on this gift, is faith; God requires no more but to believe in him; but, as God requireth no more of us than love; yet, becauſe love is an inward affection, and therefore cannot be knowne but by outward actions, God enjoyneth us to manifeſt our love to him

by

by our love to our neighbours, and our love to our neighbours by the workes of love; ſo faith, being an inward grace, it muſt ſhew it ſelfe by outward fruits; and ſo that faith is here meant, which (as the Apoſtle ſaith) worketh by love. I might here diſcuſſe what faith, and then by what act of faith, we are made partakers of this gift; but I muſt haſten to that which followeth: and therefore

3. If any man ſhall aske me what preferment hath the believer, or what benefit is it to have faith in Chriſt? I anſwer, much every way: for whoſoever truſteth in him ſhall not be confounded; he ſhall lacke no manner of thing that is good; and though the world and worldly men do rage and ſwell againſt him, their hatred boyle, and their malice burne within them; yet if we truſt in God, we need not feare what man can do unto us: And to be briefe, the prerogatives of the faithfull are here ſet downe to be twofold, 1. exemtè, not to periſh. 2. simpliciter, to have eternall life.

3. The benefits of believing two-fold.

So we are come to the higheſt ſtep of Iacobs ladder, to eternall life; we need go no higher, we can deſire no better; but to ſpeake a little of theſe two more particularly.

The firſt benefit of believing in Chriſt is liberatio a malo, he ſhall not periſh; and I find three ſorts of men that are deemed to periſh.

1. Benefit.

3. Sorts of men deemed to periſh.

1. The ſinfull,
2. The miſerable,
3. The damned.

} And he that believeth in Chriſt need not feare any of theſe; for the Prophet David ſaith, thou haſt delivered my ſoule from death, mine eyes from teares, and my feet from falling; that is, from falling into ſinne, from the teares of theſe preſent miſeries, and from the death of hell, the lake wherein there is no water. For

1. Sort. 1 Ioh. 3. 9.

1. He that is borne of God ſinneth not, that is, unto death, or with his whole heart, but is ſorrie that he ſinneth, even when he ſinneth; and therefore S. Paul ſpeaking in the perſon of a regenerate man, ſaith, when he ſinned, it was not he that ſinned, but ſinne, i. the ſinfull corruption which dwelled in him, and which he laboured by all meanes to ſuppreſſe.

Rom. 7. 17.

2. Sort.

2. Though the faithfull may ſeeme miſerable, when they are neglected, maligned, and oppreſſed; deprived of their hopes, diſdained of their friends, and abuſed by their foes; yet in all theſe things they are more than conquerours; they have exceeding comfort, they are very rich, they are truly noble, and they ſhall be ſurely bleſſed; becauſe they are indued with thoſe vertues, qua tantummodo faciunt beatum; and therefore whatſoever the world thinks, Omnia cooperantur in bonum, all things ſhall worke together for their good, and they may truly ſay, perijſſent, niſi perijſſent, they had beene miſerable, if they had not felt ſome miſeries.

Rom. 8. 37.

Macrobius Rom. 8. 28.

3. Sort.

3. They that believe in Chriſt ſhall not periſh everlaſtingly; that is, in hell, ubi nec tortores deficiunt, nec miſeri torti liberantur, ſed per millia millia annorum cruciandi, nec in ſecula liberandi; where the cruell tormentors do never ceaſe to puniſh, and the miſerable tormented are never freed from torments; but are ever plagued, and never to be delivered, becauſe they had not believed in Chriſt.

Secondly, though this which hath been ſpoken is much, yet it is but a privative good, quod nihil ponit in eſſe, and therefore nothing, in regard of that which followeth; for he that believeth in Chriſt ſhall have everlaſting life.

2. Benefit is two-fold.

1. Life.
2. Everlaſting life.

1. Life.

1. Light, the firſt-borne of all viſible creatures, which hath no poſitive contrary in nature, which transfuſeth it ſelfe in a moment, and pierceth all tranſparent bodies, which giveth life to all colours, and is the mother of all beauties, and is a creature ſo beloved of the Creatour, that he thought the ſame alone, to be a ſufficient dowrie for all the heavenly bodies, muſt needs be a moſt excellent and tranſcendent thing; and yet to me the Prophet David ſeemes to preferre life before

The excellency of the light.

Life preferred before the light.

Psal.36.9. the ſame, when he ſaith, With thee is the well of life, and in thy light we ſhall ſee light; for what good doth light to inanimate things? Therefore S. Iohn, ſpeaking of the eternall Word, ſaith, In it was life, and the life was the light of men; and we ſee how nature favoureth life; in plants, the root, wherein the life lies, is hidden within the ground; in beaſts, the Serpent fenceth his head; and mans heart, the fountaine of life, is not onely incloſed with a thicke skinne, but alſo environed with a ſtrong wall of ribbes; and, as Anatomiſts do obſerve, the bones about the heart do beare the faſhion of a ſword, to defend it; and although Menander ſaith, ζὴν δείλαιον ὅτις ζὴν ἀσθενοῦσι τύχῃ; it is a miſerable thing for them to live, whoſe life and happineſſe fortune doth envy; and Philemon ſaith, ἐν βίοις ἀνθρώπου ὁ βίος ἄλλα ξυμφορά: our life is no life, but calamity; yea ſuch calamity, that is, as S. Auguſt. ſaith, dubia, cæca, ærumnoſa, doubtfull, blind, grievous, which humours ſwell, griefes extenuate, heat drieth, the ayre infecteth, food puffeth up, hunger macerateth, joyes diſſolve, ſadneſſe conſumes, careſulneſſe weareth, ſecurity dulleth, riches extoll, poverty dejects, youth is wanton, age feeble, infirmity breaks us, and after all this, death taketh us away, and puts an end to all our joyes; ita ut cum eſſe deſierit, nec fuiſſe putetur, ſo that when we ceaſe to be, it may be thought we have never beene; yet for all this, and whatſoever els can be ſaid of the miſeries of this life; the Philoſopher ſaith moſt truly, vita ipſa etiamſi nullum aliud bonum conſequatur, per ſe tamen amatur, optatur, expetitur; life it ſelfe, though it ſhould bring none other good, yet for it owne ſake, it is loved, deſired and ſought after; it being ſuch a bleſſing, as the happieſt man deſires it, and the moſt miſerable is unwilling to forgoe it; and the Divell, the father of lies, ſaith truth herein, a man will give all he hath for his life; for, as Eſau ſaid, loe I die, and what good will my birth-right doe unto me? So when we are dead, wealth, honour, all the world is not worth a pin to us: and therefore life is ſweet to the very beaſts, and the beſt thing in this life is our life.

Pſal.36.9.

Ioh.1.4.

How nature favoureth life. Plin. Hiſt. Nat.

How miſerable is the life of man.

Aug. in Original. tractans illud Tob. que eſt vita noſtra.

How excellent a thing is life.

Iob 2.4. Gen.25.32.

And this ſheweth,

What the former doctrine teacheth. 1. To reprove murderers.

1. How execrable are thoſe bloud-ſuckers that take away the life of man, the braveſt Painter, who can moſt artificially proportion, colour and ſhadow all viſible ſhapes, cannot give life unto a flie; and ſhall we be ſo ready to take it away from man? If any doth, though as S. Bernard ſaith to Eugen. Non eſt meæ humilitatis dictitare vobis, it becomes not me to abridge Majeſties of that prerogative, wherein they do moſt reſemble God, and is the higheſt of all earthly dignities, to give life to him that deſerveth death; yet this excellencie of life, and the odiouſneſſe of this fact may put them in mind, not to be too facile in the condonation of wilfull and moſt horrible murders; if my ſonne be ſuch, let me die before I beg his life.

2. The excellency of Chriſt his grace Rom.1.

2. This ſheweth the exceeding grace of Chriſt, and what a benefit it is to believe in him; for the juſt ſhall live by faith; he ſhall live the life of nature, and which is more, he ſhall live a life of grace, which will bring him to the life of glory, whereof the former is but a ſhadow: for if we conſider the ſhortneſſe of this naturall life, though it be accompanied with all felicities, ſo that a man may ſay with Menander, ὡς ἡδὺ τὸ ζῆν μὴ φόβοισιν τῆς τύχης; how ſweet is it to live, when fortune ſmiles on us? yet all this indeed is but juſt nothing; for what is our life, but a dreame, a thought, a nothing?

What a meane thing is the life of nature.

Paulatim morimur, momento extinguimur uno.

We are all but as yeſterday; or ſuppoſe we ſhould live long, like Neſtor or Methuſalem, or as S. Auguſtine ſaith, toto illo tempore, all that time, ſince Adam was caſt out of paradiſe to this very day; yet this is nothing in reſpect of everlaſting life; and ſeven yeares to come ſeeme longer to us than ſeven ſcore that are paſt: therefore he that believes in Chriſt ſhall live to all eternities, as long as God and Saints ſhall raigne in heaven, or Divels and damned ſpirits ſhall be tormented in hell, for ever and ever. And if you aske me what is that, I muſt anſwer, as Simonides did, concerning God, the more I conſider of it, the leſſe I can ſatisfie my ſelfe and others.

The

The Romans, Grecians, Egyptians and others have laboured much to expresse it: Some have resembled it by a circle, which hath neither beginning nor ending; others, by an intellectuall Sphere, whose circumference is every where, and center no where; and others, to an alwaies present duration, that admits no distinction either of past or future time: And when they have all said what they can, all is but the shadow of the shadow of it; for if all the times that can be reckoned should be concluded into one, as houres, dayes, weeks, moneths, yeares, lustraes, olympiads, indictions, jubilees, ages; and add to these the most slow motion of the eight Sphere, which they say makes up the Platonique yeare; and then multiply these how you will; by hundreds, thousands, millions, myriads, and millions of myriads, and compare them to what you please; the starres of heaven, the sands of the sea, the grasse-piles of the earth, the leaves of the trees, the drops of raine, and all numerable things; yet all these come too too short to expresse eternity.

What eternity is, and how immeasurable.

Quia in æterno, nec præteritum est nec futurum.

And yet God created us for eternity, that we should live for ever, and live in joyes, not in torments; but he would have us to make this life the way to future glory, and we would have the consummation of all glory in this life. Adam would not stay to be translated to heaven, but he would presently be as God, that he might have his heaven upon earth; therefore by making himselfe wiser than God, he became most miserably foolish: and so shall we, if we looke not well into this eternity; for as Zeuxes being asked, why he was so slow in painting such a picture, answered, quia æternitati pingo; so we write, we preach, we labour, and do all we do, for eternity; and we shall be eternall, either in happinesse, or misery; for they that do good shall go to everlasting life, and they that do evill, to everlasting fire; this is the Catholike Faith.

God made us to live for ever.

Therefore the thought of this eternity should make us good: it made our fore-fathers carefull in their prayers, liberall in their donations, joyous in their miseries, and glorious in their deaths; and so it should make us. It is true, it cannot be, but the good man and honest should have enemies more than any; ἀνάγκη τῶν σφόδρα ἐναντίων; But what is that? Let him think of eternity, and that will teach him gladly to suffer a little, that he may be happy for ever.

But we must remember that everlasting life is twofold.

Everlasting life twofold.

1. Which ever hath been, and ever shall be; and so God onely is eternall life; Nam quicquid viget movetuŕq, per se semper, nec videri aut tangi potest, æternum sit necesse est; For whatsoever doth alwaies live and move of it selfe, and cannot be seene or touched by any thing, must needs be eternall, saith Lactantius, lib. de Epist. rei. cap. 17. And Cicero saith, Fuit quædam ab infinito tempore æternitas, quam nulla circumscriptio temporum metiebatur, spatio autem qualis ea fuerit intelligi non potest, quod ne in cogitationem cadit, ut fuerit tempus aliquod, nullum cum tempus esset; There hath beene a certaine eternity from all time, or from all infiniteneſse of time, which eternity no circumscription of time did or ever could measure; but what manner of thing that eternity should be, it cannot be understood, nor fall within the compasse of our thoughts and cogitations, that there should be some time when no time was: which is a very strange thing, and yet most true. Lib. 1. de nat. Deorum. And this is consonant to what Aristotle saith, Δεῖ ἴσως τῶν αἰσθητῶν αἰσθητὰς, τῶν δ' ἀϊδίων ἀΐδια, τῶν δὲ φθαρτῶν φθαρτὰς εἶναι ἀρχάς, ὅλως δ' ὁμογενεῖς τοῖς ὑποκειμένοις. Oportet forte sensibilium sensibilia, æternorum vero æterna, corruptibilium corruptibilia esse principia, omnino vero homogenea ipsis subjectis. Of sensible things there must be sensible beginnings, but of eternall things there must be eternall beginnings, and of corruptible things corruptible beginnings, altogether agreeable to their subjects. De cœlo lib. 3. cap. 7.

Lactan. in l. de Epist. rei. c. 17.

Tullius de nat. Deorum. lib. 1.

Arist. de cœlo lib. 3. Cap. 7. Homogenea, i. ejusdem generis cognationis.

2. There is another eternall life, of those things which had beginning, but shall never have an end: and that is principally of Angels and men, both good and bad; for the good shall go to everlasting life, and the bad to everlasting fire, which is therefore called eternall death, because it is destitute of joy, and void of all the comforts of life, and makes them continually wish for death; and yet as the Poet saith, Everlastingneſse.

Ovid. Nec finire licet tantis mihi morte dolores. Metam. l. 1.

Nec mortis pœnas mors altera finiet hujus,
Horaq́ erit tantis ultima nulla malis.

No death shall end the torments of this dying life, no time shall set a period to these perpetuall paines; but they shall eternally live a most lamentable life in a dying death.

Lactan. instit. l. 6. O that wee would consider this sweet saying of Lactantius continually.

And therefore I will conclude with that remarkable saying of Lactantius; Hæc vita temporalis, quia brevis est, idcirco & bona ejus & mala brevia sint necesse est; Illa vero spiritualis, quia sempiterna est, idcirco & bona ejus & mala sempiterna sunt; This temporall life, because it is fraile and short, therefore the good things and the evill things thereof, must needs be short; but that spirituall life, because it is for ever and ever, therefore the joyes and sorrowes, the good and the evill things thereof must needs be everlasting. Ita fit, ut & bonis brevibus mala æterna, & malis brevibus bona æterna succedant; So it comes to passe, that eternall sorrowes may succeed momentany pleasures, and everlasting rest may be acquired after a short suffering; Ideo cum proposita sunt homini bona & mala, considerare unumquemq́ secum decet, quanto satius sit pro perpetuis bonis mala brevia pensare, quam pro brevibus & caducis bonis mala perpetua sustinere. And therefore seeing good and evill, fire and water, life and death are proposed and set downe before every man; it behooveth us to consider, how much better it is, to suffer a little evill, that we may gaine eternall joyes, than for a few momentanie pleasures to sustaine everlasting torments: And I wish to God, that all of us would alwaies think of this, that we might despite the vanities of this present world, discharge our duties without feare, and do that which is just and honest, come of it what can come, that so we might not perish, but have everlasting life, through Iesus Christ our Lord, to whom be glory and dominion, for ever and ever. Amen.

THE VVORTHIEST SAYING.

1 Tim. 1. 15.

This is a faithfull saying and worthy of all acceptation, that Iesus Christ came into the world to save sinners; whereof I am chiefe.

THe wise man saith, wisedome is better then rubies, and all the things that can be desired are not to be compared to it; and Menander saith, οὐκ ἔστι σοφίας κτῆμα τιμιώτερον; there is no possession more pretious then wisedome; and wee find the summe of all wisedome to consist either { 1. In actions, or 2. In sayings. } for

Pro. 8. 11. The praise of wisdome. Wisedome two-fold.

1. Illa clara est sapientia, non quæ in verbis volat, sed quæ virtutibus constat; that is a speciall point of wisdome to be conversant in, and to practise vetuous actions saith Saint Gregory; & prima sapientia est vita laudabilis, & apud Deum pura mens, per quam puri puro junguntur, & Sancti Sancto sociantur; and the chiefest wisedome is an unblameable life, whereby the pure mindes are united to the most holy God, saith Nazianzen; therefore the wise Emperor M: Aurelius, sapientiæ studium non verbis aut decretorum scientia, sed gravitate morum vitæq; continentia usurpavit, saith Herodian; Yet

1. In actions. Gregor. in moralibus. Nazian. in Apol. p. Herodian l. 1. p. 9.

2. In lingua sapientia dignoscitur, by the speech wisedome shall be knowne, and learning by the word of the tongue; therefore the Poet saith, omnia verbis prius experiri quam armis decet; it behoves us to trie all things first in words, before we enter into deeds; and Menander saith, σοφῶ παρ' ἀνδρὶ πρῶτον εὑρέθη λόγος; the speech is first found with every wise man; and Phocilides saith, θεῖος δ' ἐστὶν ἔπαινος σοφίης λόγος ἐστὶν ἄριστος; the best speech of inspired wisedome is from God.

2. In sayings. Eccles. 4. 24. Terent. Eunuch Act. 4. Scen 7.

But all wise sayings are not of like worth; for though the sentences of the Greek sages were excellent, recorded and remembred to this very day, as of Bias, οἱ πλείους κακοί, the wicked are many, which not onely Plato testifieth, but also Christ himselfe confirmeth; of Solon τέλος ἰδεῖν μακρὸς βίος, behold the end to which Plinie assenteth, saying one day judgeth another, and the last day judgeth all: and the Wise man sheweth no lesse, when he biddeth us, to commend no man before his death; because the mutations of all earthly instabilities do permit none, be he never so great, to be sure from falling into inevitable inconveniences; of Chilo, γνῶθι σεαυτόν, know thy selfe, which as Plato saith, was written in letters of gold upon the portalls of Apollos temple, and Iuvenal affirmeth it came downe from heaven; becauſe if men know themſelves, they would not be ſo proud, ſo malicious, and ſo inordinate as they are; of Cleobulus ἄριστον μέτρον, keepe the meane; of Periander μηδὲν τὸ πᾶν, all things are poſſible to the induſtrious, and reſtraine wrath; of Pittacus καιρὸν γνῶθι, know the time and nothing too much; and of Thales ἔγγυα πάρα δ' ἄτη, ſponde, prope eſt damnum, flie ſuretiſhip; ſo the Mottoes and Simboles of the Romane Emperors, regiſtred by Reuſnerus, and of the Germanes by others; they are very pithie and remarkable; yet none of them all are neere comparable to the ſayings of the holy Scripture; wherein the treaſures of all wiſedome are to be found. Salomon wrote 3000. proverbes, beſides many other wiſe ſayings and ſentences; whereof the beſt is, Feare God and keepe his commandements; for to feare God is the beginning of wiſedome, and to keepe his Commandements is the perfection of all happineſſe: but he that is wiſer then Salomon, the wiſedome of God Ieſus Chriſt, as he did all things well, ſo he ſaid all things wiſely; and among all his ſayings, as Chilo's know thy ſelfe, was judged the wiſeſt Aphoriſme for every man to learne in this life, ſo the beſt theoreme to bring us to eternall life, the wiſedome of all wiſedomes is, to know God, and whom he hath ſent Ieſus Chriſt.

Auson. l. 1. c. 5. Plato in Timæo Plin. l. 14. c. 10. Eccles. 11. 14. Plato de leg. l. 3. c. 9.

Modus eſt optimus.

1 Reg. 4. 32.

Eccleſ. 13. 13.

Ioh. 17. 3.

And, as the proverbe is, qualis diſcipulus talis diſcipulus, as is the maſter, ſuch is the ſcholler; ſo the Diſciples of Chriſt, being all inſtructed by the ſpirit of wiſedome, did moſt plentifully ſow their wiſe ſayings in every place; and Saint Paul, as he was more learned then the reſt, ſo he left more excellent ſayings then any of them; and if we joyne utile dulci, the profit with the prudencie, or the ſweetneſſe with the ſhortneſſe of this Text; I thinke we may ranke it among the beſt of all his ſayings; for this is a faithfull ſaying, teaching us to know both God and our ſelves; which is all that we need to know. And therefore, as, if I were to preach for a kingdome, I would preach nothing but Ieſus Chriſt and him crucified; ſo being to chooſe my Text, I would aſſoone take theſe words, as any other Scripture.

Three parts of the Text.

And they devide themſelves into theſe three parts.

1. The exordium.
   1. A preparative exordium to move us to attention: this is a faithfull ſaying, and worthy of all acceptation.
   2. A demonſtrative propoſition for our conſolation; Ieſus Chriſt came into the world, to ſave ſinners.
   3. A particular inſtance, for illuſtration; whereof I am chiefe.

Berchor in titulo ſermo.

1. Λογος eſt, it is a ſaying, or a ſpeech, and we find that there is a twofold ſpeech:

   1. A humane ſpeech. } and
   2. A divine ſpeech }

   1. The humane ſpeech is either { 1. Good. 2. Bad. }

Of the firſt the Apoſtle ſpeaketh in 1 Cor. 12. where he ſheweth how God hath given ſpeech and languages unto men to edifie the Church, and to doe good one to another, for as much as we are members one of another; and

Of the ſecond Salomon ſpeaketh in Prov. 15. where he ſaith, that grievous words ſtirre up anger, ver. 1. and the mouth of fooles powreth out fooliſhneſſe, ver. 2. againe, the mouth of fooles feedeth on fooliſhneſſe, ver. 14. and the Prophet David calleth them bitter words; but my Text hath no relation either with wicked words or fooliſh ſpeeches.

Pſal. 64. 3.

2. The divine ſpeech is likewiſe twofold { 1. Naturall 2. Scripturall } both good, both excellent.

The firſt is ſermo ſimplex, the other multiplex, the firſt is Sermo Deus, the Word God, whereof Saint Iohn ſaith, In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and God was the Word: and the other is Sermo Dei, the Word of God, whereof our Saviour ſaith, thy Word is truth.

Iohn 1. 1.

Iohn 17. 17.

And

And my Text is a part of the Word of God, and it is commended here two waies;

{1. From the fidelity / 2. From the excellencie} thereof.

1. πιστος eſt; It is a faithfull ſaying; ſome coppies have a humane ſaying, ſaith Gorham; and Saint Auguſtine reades it ſo: as if the word had beene χρήστος λόγος: Selneccerus, Soto Major, and others doe ſeeme to approve of this reading; and Fayus thinks, (ſo doth Gorham too) that Saint Auguſtine reads it ſo, becauſe the Apoſtle had ſpoken much of the man Chriſt Ieſus; and hee ſaith, that ἄξιος ἀποδοχῆς λόγος, is that which all men ought to know and apply themſelves unto: becauſe ἀποδοχὴ ſignifieth that doctrine, which is delivered by the teacher and received by the hearer, as the baſis of the whole edifice, or as the firſt principle of any ſcience againſt which there is no contradiction.

Hereupon the firſt points of divinity, among the antient Latine Fathers were called traditions, as Iren. l. 2. c. 9. ſpeaketh of the tradition of the Creation of the world, and the tradition of the reſurrection of the fleſh; becauſe theſe points were undoubtedly received and infallibly delivered frome one to another throughout all ages.

And therefore, ſeeing dulcius ex ipſo fonte bibuntur aquæ, this ſaying being the foundation of all Chriſtian religion, & certiſſimum ἀξίωμα inter Chriſtianos, like Saint Peters confeſſion, thou art Chriſt, the Sonne of the living God, upon which the whole Church is built, and from which all the doctrines of Chriſtianity doe flow: we ſhould heare this or nothing; becauſe, without this all is nothing, and our building is but vaine without foundation; this being, as the Apoſtle ſaith, πιστος λογος.

And Selneccerus ſaith, that, quod apud Deum eſt χρήματα ἐν ὁμολογήματι decretum & concluſum, & quod apud homines eſt ἀσφαλὲς, ſecurum & certum, fraudeq; carens, hoc πιστὸν eſt, what is decreed and concluded by God, that it ſhall come to paſſe, and what is ſure and certaine with men, void of all ambiguity and ſtrife, the ſame is a faithfull ſaying. And ſuch is this; Chriſt came into the world to ſave ſinners: therefore this ſhould be received with all joy, and beleeved without any doubt: Nam quum adeo magna ſunt, quæ data ſunt, haud dignum eſt, nos manere increàulos; for ſeeing the gifts are ſo great, our unworthineſſe is the greater, if we remaine incredulous, ſaith Theophylact.

And if Satan ſhall ſeeke to weaken our faith herein, we ſhould oppoſe unto him.

1. The promiſe of God, confirmed by an oath, that ſo by two immutable things, in which it is impoſſible for God to lie, we might be aſſured of this truth: that Chriſt came into the world to ſave ſinners.

2. The nature of a juſtifying faith, which wee find to be πληροφορία, ὑπόστασις, πεποίθησις, καὶ μαρτύριον.

3. The examples of Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob, David, and all Saints, that never doubted any ſaying of God, but againſt hope beleeved in hope that he would accompliſh all his promiſes.

4. How the Scripture blameth all and every doubting of Gods truth, and tells us plainely, that whatſoever is not of faith is ſinne.

5. What Saint Auguſtine ſaith, fidelis Deus ſe noſtrum fecit debitorem, the moſt faithfull God hath made himſelfe our debtor, not by receiving any thing from us, but by promiſing ſo great and ſo many things to us: and leaſt the bare promiſing might ſeeme too little, etiam ſcriptis ſe teneri voluit, he would bind himſelfe by writing, and give us a bill of his hand, which is the holy Scripture, to performe his promiſe; and that nothing might be wanting, fidei poſuit mediatorem, he ſent his onely Sonne, to ſeale theſe writings with his owne death, and to leave the bleſſed Sacraments for viſible remembrances thereof: that ſo by all meanes we might be aſſured Ieſus Chriſt came into the world to ſave ſinners.

1. The fidelity of this ſaying.

Gorham in hunc loc.

Aug. de verb. Apoſt. ſer. 7. Fayus in hunc verſ.

πιστος λογος nihil aliud eſt quam doctrina patrum recepta, ab Adamo derivata, & ad diem judicij duratura atque ab omnibus recipienda qui ſalvari volunt. Selnec. in hunc loc.

Lucret. de rerum nat. l. 1.

Matth. 16. 16.

What is a faithfull ſaying.

Sed quia immenſa eſt dominis benignitas, dignum eſt ut credamus verbo, & ſuſcipiamus beneficium. Theophilactum in hunc locum

What things ſhould ſtrengthen our faith. Heb. 6. 17, 18.

Rom. 14. 23.

Aug. in Pſal. 110.

How carefully God doth all things that we might beleeve him.

2. The excellency of this ſaying expreſſed three waies.

2. It is not onely πιστὸς λόγος, a faithfull ſaying, but it is alſo πάσης ἀποδοχῆς ἄξιος, worthy of all acceptation; where obſerve, for I muſt not leeſe a crumme of this bread.

1. A worthy ſaying.

1. It is a worthy ſaying; ſo is every ſaying of Scripture; yet I finde none ſo called but this and three more, whereof

1 Tim.4.8,9.

The Firſt is, Godlineſſe is profitable unto all things, having promiſe of the life that now is and of that which is to come; this is a faithfull ſaying, and worthy of all acceptation.

2 Tim.2.10,11, 12,13.

The ſecond is, Therefore I endure all things for the elects ſakes, that they may alſo obtaine the ſalvation which is in Chriſt Ieſus, with eternall glory; it is a faithfull ſaying; for if we be dead with him, we ſhall alſo live with him; if we ſuffer, we ſhall alſo raigne with him; if we denie him, he will alſo denie us; if we beleeve not, yet he abideth faithfull, he cannot denie himſelfe.

Titus 3.8.

The third is, That we being juſtified by his grace, ſhould be made heires according to the hope of eternall life; this is a faithfull ſaying; and theſe things I will that thou affirme conſtantly, that they which have beleeved in God might be carefull to maintaine good works.

Berchor. in titulo digni.

And therefore no doubt but this is κατ' ἐξοχὴν dignum, a ſaying exceedingly worthy, & illud dicitur dignum, quod eſt aptum vel congruum, ad aliquod habendum vel faciendum, ſive bonum fuerit ſive malum, and that is ſaid to be worthy, which is fit to have or receive any thing, whether it be good or evill; for as our Saviour ſaith, the labourer is worthy of his hire; *Luk.*10.7. ſo the Apoſtle, ſpeaking of the wicked, ſaith, they that doe ſuch things are worthy of death; and the Wiſeman ſaith, the Egyptians did worthily ſuffer thoſe fearefull plagues; and in the 2 of *Mach.*15.21. it is ſaid, that God giveth victory to ſuch as are worthy.

Rom.1.32. Sap.16.1. 2 Mach.15.21. & vide Act.5. & 1 Tim.5.

Therefore, that you may know, whether this ſaying be worthy to be received or rejected, you muſt note that all ſayings may be ſaid to be, either

Foure kinds of ſayings.

1. Wicked. 3. Good, or
2. Idle. 4. Excellent.

1. Wicked.

1. Wicked ſayings are ſuch as tend either to the diſhonour of God, or the offence of our neighbours; and this doth neither, but doth bring the greateſt glory unto God and the chiefeſt happineſſe unto man.

2. Idle.

2. Idle ſayings are ſuch as neither honour God, nor profit man: and this doth both;

3. Good.

3. Good ſayings are ſuch as do good, or at leaſt are ſpoken to that end that they might do good, to adminiſter grace unto the hearers; and ſo is this.

4. Excellent.

4. Excellent ſayings are ſuch, as the wiſeſt men have ſelected for the beſt axiomes of any ſcience, or the infallible principles of any art; dicta ſapientum, the mottoes or parables of the learned, that are like the red lettters in the rubrick, or like the greateſt ſtarres in the firmament, more remarkable then all the reſt. And ſuch a ſaying is this, that Chriſt came into the world to ſave ſinners: quia in hoc uno ſermone, omnes theſauri divinæ bonitatis offeruntur; becauſe in this one ſaying, all the treaſures of Gods love and goodneſſe are offered unto us, as Mathuſius ſaith; all that the Patriarchs deſired to know, all that the Prophets longed to ſee, all that the Apoſtles preached unto us, and all the happineſſe that man can wiſh is here ſet downe, in verbo abbreviato; in the comming of Chriſt to ſave ſinners: and therefore we ſhould diligently obſerve, and moſt attentively hearken to each point of this worthy ſaying.

Mathuſius in hunc loc.

2. Saying worthy of acceptation.

2. It is not onely a worthy ſaying, but it is alſo worthy of acceptation: & illud dicitur acceptabile, quod eſt placitum, & approbatum, tanquam melius & magis utile; that is ſaid to be acceptable, which is pleaſing and approved as the better and moſt profitable for any one; therefore good things are alwaies acceptable, not evill, ſaith Berchorius: yet as children that want right judgement, do chooſe toyes and trifles in ſteed of more excellent things, ſo do ſinners, whoſe underſtandings are blinded, love carnall pleaſures better then eternall happineſſe: but no wiſe man doth ſo: therefore ſeeing this ſaying is ſo exceedingly Berchor. in tit. accept.

good

good in it selfe, it ought worthily to be accepted of us all.

3. It is worthy of all acceptation; that is, to be { 1. Heard. 2. Beleeved. } { 3. Obeyed. 4. Propagated. } for

1. Faith commeth by hearing; and therefore harden not your hearts, stop not your eares; but hearken to this saying, and your soules shall live.

2. Because to heare it onely is not to receive it, for the Iewes heard it as well as we, and better then we, from the mouth of Christ himselfe; but the word preached did not profit them, because faith was not mixed in them that heard it: therefore to shew that to receive the Word, is to beleeve the Word, Saint Iohn saith, as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sonnes of God, even to them that beleeve on his name.

3. Because faith without obedience may increase our stripes in hell, but never bring us to injoy the happinesse of heaven, therefore we have received grace to preach the Word of God, that obedience may be given to the faith of Christ, that men should discharge those duties which we teach them.

4. Because (as Cicero saith) non nobis nati sumus, we are not borne to our selves, but are bound to do good to others that as the Apostle saith, others may have fellowship with us in that fellowship, which we have with the Father and with his Sonne Iesus Christ: therefore, as the shepheards when they found the babe in the manger, made knowne abroad the saying which was told them concerning that child, and as the poore man, that was forbidden by way of ostentation to say any thing, yet by way of gratification did a great deale more publish the good deeds of Christ; so should we propagate this saying to all men, ut nati natorum & qui nascentur ab illis, that our posterity, which are yet unborne, may say, we have heard with our eares and our fathers have told us; that Christ came into the world to save sinners.

And as this saying is worthy of all acceptation, so it is worthy to be accepted at all times and of all men, rich, poore, noble, beggers, young and old, male and female; for there is none so young but this may instruct him, none so wise, but this may make him wiser, none so poore, but this may comfort him, none so great, but they have great need of this, and the greater they are the greater is their need hereof; because the meane man shall obtaine mercy, sed potentes potenter cruciabuntur, the mighty men shall be mightily punished. And so much for the exordium, which is the first part of this Text, this is a faithfull saying and worthy of all acceptation.

2. The proposition which is so excellent, and the saying that is so worthy is, Iesus Christ came into the world to save sinners: and it containeth three parts:

{ 1. The person. 2. The act. 3. The end. }

1. The person is here most lively expressed by his names, Iesus, Christus; and these names doe sufficiently, though but inclusively, shew both the nature and the quality of this person, that he was void of sin and full of grace.

For his names, they are, as you see, two: { 1. Iesus. 2. Christ. } and

1. Iesus is that proper name, which was given him by the Angell before he was conceived in the wombe and it is most agreeable to his nature; for he created all things, by him all things were made, and without him was not any thing made that was made; he preserveth all things, upholding them with his mighty Word; and, because God will have all men to be saved, he came to save all men, that is, to pay the price of salvation for all men, good and bad; therefore what name could befit him better then Iesus, which signifieth a Saviour?

Ob. But the Prophet Esay saith, his name shall be called Wonderfull, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of peace; and in another place he saith, he should be called Immanuel, that is, God with us.

Sol. I answer that these are particular names, signifying some speciall properties of

3. A saying worthy of all acceptation: which is fourefold.
1. To be heard: Esay 55.3.
2. To be beleeved. Heb.4.2.
Iohn 1.12.
3. To be obeyed. Rom.1.5.
4. To be propagated. 1 Ioh.1.3.
Luk.2.17.
Deut.6.7.
Virgil.
2. The proposition.
Three points.
1. The Person.
His names.
1. Iesus.
Ioh.1.3.
Heb.1.3.
1 Tim.2.4.
Esay 9.6. & Chap. 7.ver.14.

of the Messias, as that he should be wonderfull in his conception, in his birth, in his life, in his death; he should be a Counsellor, to teach us the way of peace; he should be the mighty God, in respect of his divine nature, which is God of God, light of light and very God of very God; and being so, he is, as Esayas saith, God with us, when the Word was made flesh, as the Evangelist saith: But this name Iesus is the most proper name of Christ, which sheweth all his whole office, and the end for which he came into the world to save sinners.

Phil. 2, 9, 10.

And therefore Iesus is that name which is above all names, whereat, even at the naming of it,* every knee should bow, both of things in heaven, and of things in earth, and things under the earth.

* As some understand it.

2. Of the name Christ.

2. Christ, which signifieth annointed, sheweth the fitting of him to be a Iesus; for there were three things requisite to inable Christ to become a Saviour: 1. Power. 2. Sanctity. 3. Knowledge.

Three things requisite to inable Christ to be a Saviour.

1. Power, that he might be able to subdue our enemies.
2. Sanctity, that he might be worthy to satisfie the wrath of God
3. Knowledge, that he might understand, how to teach his people.

And therefore God annointed him 1 to be a King, which is an office of power, 2 to be a Priest, which is an office of Sanctity, as Aaron the Saint of the Lord; and 3 to be a Prophet, which is an office of Knowledge; for

1. That Christ was a King. Psal. 2. Matth. 2.

1. Touching his Kingly office, the Prophet David saith, I have set my King upon my holy hill of Sion; and assoone as ever he was borne, the Wise men said, that he was the King of the Iewes, simul natus, simul Cæsar, a King from his cradle; and Pilat that condemn'd him, doth confesse it, that he was Rex Iudæorum, maugre all his enemies, that did take his life, but not his Kingdome from him; and Saint Iohn saw his name written upon his vesture, and upon his thigh, King of Kings, and Lord of Lords. And therefore seeing Christ is King, exultent justi, let the righteous rejoyce, for he hath power to defend them from all harme; and seeing Christ is King, contremiscat populus, let the wicked tremble; for if they say, we will not have this man to raigne over us; which is as strange, as if the members should cast away their head; then shall he rule them with a rod of iron; and breake them in peeces like a potters vessell; or say with that King in the Gospell; those mine enemies, that would not I should raigne over them, bring hither, and slay them before me: The just reward of all rebellious subjects.

Luk. 19. 27.

2. That Christ was a Priest.

2. Because it was not inough to free us out of the jawes of hell, but we must also satisfie the wrath of God, against whom no power was able to prevaile, therefore it became us to have such a high-priest, as was holy and undefiled, that he might offer such a sacrifice unto God, as might appease his wrath against sinfull man: to this end, the Lord sware and will not repent, thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedech. And therefore seeing Christ is Priest, I will not despise the office of a Priest, I will not despaire for the multitude of my sins; because I know that his sacrifice is sufficient to make satisfaction for all sins, and for the sins of all the world; for if the blood of bulls and of goates and the ashes of an heifer, sprinkling the uncleane, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternall spirit offered himselfe without spot to God, purge our consciences from dead workes to serve the living God? he hath troden the wine-presse alone; therefore I will trust in none other, and were my sins as red as scarlet, yet the least drop of his blood is able to make them all as white as snow.

Heb. 7. 26.

Heb 9. 13, 14.

3. That Christ was a Prophet.

3. Because no playster will heale the wound, except it be laid unto the sore, therefore, that the benefit of Christ his sacrifice might be made ours, when we apply the same unto our selves by a lively faith; God annointed him to be a Prophet; to teach us both what to beleeve concerning himselfe, and also what to doe that we might please our God; for a Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren like unto me, him shall ye heare in all things whatsoever hee shall say unto you: and it shall come to passe that every soule, which will not heare that Prophet shall be destroyed from among the people. And therefore, seeing no

Acts 3. 22, 23.

benefit

be nefit of Chriſts ſacrifice without faith, no faith without hearing, and no hearing without Chriſt, who is that Prophet, which muſt teach us; we ſhould take heed that we ſtop not our eares againſt the voice of Chriſt; for if he that deſpiſed Moſes law died without mercy under two or three witneſſes, of how much ſorer puniſhment, ſuppoſe ye, ſhall he be thought worthy of, which ſhall neglect ſo great ſalvation, and deſpiſe the words of this great Prophet Ieſus Chriſt, that came into the world to ſave ſinners? and Saint Auguſtine ſaith, non minor eſt reus, qui verbum Dei negligenter audit, quam ille, qui corpus Chriſti indigne ſumat; to heare the word of Chriſt negligently, and to eat his body unworthily, are both alike culpable in the ſight of God. Aug. 1. cauſ. 1. quæſt. cap. interrog. and Saint Paul tells us, that to eat unworthily is to eat our owne damnation, 1 Cor. 11.29. and therefore to heare negligently can be no leſſe.

What a fearefull thing it is to deſpiſe the hearing of Gods Word.

Heb. 10.28,29.

2. Leaſt we ſhould be deceived under the errour of names, becauſe many men are called what they are not, as Antiochus was ſyrnamed Epiphanes, that is, illuſtrious and glorious, when the Lord tells us plainely that he was a vile and a baſe perſon, and Judas had a name ſignifying praiſe, when as never man was leſſe worthy of praiſe then he; therefore Saint Paul includeth the quality of his perſon under the title of his name; becauſe he muſt be righteous, or he could not be Ieſus; that is, he muſt be free from all ſinne himſelfe, or els he could not ſave ſinners; and Saint Iohn plainely calleth him, Ieſus Chriſt the righteous; and Saint Peter ſaith, that there was no guile in his mouth; and that which is a great deale cleerer, to cleere him from all evill, Chriſt ſaith unto his greateſt enemies, which of you can reprove me of ſinne? if you can, ſpare me not; for a good conſcience beggeth no favour: ſo juſt was he in all his waies, and holy in all his workes; and ſo much for the perſon, Ieſus Chriſt.

Dan. 11.21.

2. Of the quality of Chriſt his perſon, how holy and righteous he is.

1 Iohn 2.1.

Iohn 8.46.

2. The act of this perſon is, venit in mundum, he came into the world; a great act no queſtion: nam magnos magna decent, for worthy men do promiſe worthy deeds; or otherwiſe, monſtroſa res eſt locus ſummus, & actus infimus, lingua grandiloqua & manus otioſa, it were a monſtrous thing, as Saint Bernard ſaith, to heare the tongue ſpeaking proud things, & to ſee the hands doing nothing: or at leaſt, as Horace ſaith, it were ridiculous to ſee the mountaines in travell, and to bring forth nothing but a mouſe; to heare talke of great men, and to find nothing but great names, a ſtrange thing. And therefore his perſon being ſo excellent, farre above all men, above all Angels, the act muſt needs be moſt remarkable, ſuch as was never done by any of the ſonnes of men; and ſo it is; for theſe two words, venit in mundum, do ſhew that this act of Chriſt, omne tulit punctum, and that it is both admirable unto all, and profitable unto us.

2. The act of the perſon.

Bernardus de conſidar. ad Eugen.

Horat. de arte Poet.

1. Admirable, quia venit, and
2. Profitable, quia venit in mundum.

1. Admirable.

1. The Schooles ſay, that triplex adventus Chriſti, there is a threefold comming of Chriſt.

1. In our fleſh; 2. By his ſpirit; 3. In all glory. The firſt was in humility, the ſecond is in mercy, and the third ſhall be in majeſty: the firſt is paſt, the ſecond in being, the third is to come: and if at the ſecond comming we doe make a right uſe of the firſt comming, we ſhall receive ineſtimable joy at the laſt comming of our Saviour Chriſt. But I am to ſpeake of the firſt, which is anſwerable to this time, and which I ſay is admirable at all times; becauſe it ſheweth both the nature, and the will, and the love of Chriſt.

The firſt comming of Chriſt ſheweth

1. The nature of Chriſt; that he was both God and man. 1. God, quia ſi antea non fuiſſet, venire non potuiſſet, becauſe he could not come, if he had not beene before he came; for how can he come which is not? and therefore he began not to be, when he came into the world, as we doe; but he was from everlaſting, as both the Wiſe man and the Evangeliſt ſheweth. 2. Man, becauſe the God-head, being immoveable, cannot be ſaid to come; and therefore this comming of Chriſt ſignifieth nothing els but the incarnation of the Son of God, and this venit in mundum, & verbum caro factum eſt, is all one.

1. The nature of Chriſt.

Fayus in hunc loc.

2. As

2. His will. Gorham in h.loc. How willingly Christ came to us. Rawleigh. Histor. Mund. l. 5. c. 1 § 4. p. 278, 282. ex Thucid.

2. As venit sheweth his nature, so his will; and this is plaine; Quia non mandato missus, non meritis tractus, non mercede inductus, sed gratis venit; for he was not sent by any command, he was not moved by any merit, nor yet induc'd by the hope of any gaine; but he came freely, not as Niceas was sent against Syracuse, full sore against his will, which brought him a full lamentable successe; but of his own accord exivit a Patre, & venit in mundum, Ioh. 16. 28.

3. His love.

S. Walter Rawleigh p. 287.

3. This venit sheweth his love, yea his great love, farre greater than the love of Dion, who after he was twice banished by them that he had twice saved, came the third time to hazard his own life to deliver them from death; the love of his countrey surmounting all the injuries he had received from his enemies; For Christ was the Sonne of God, and we sinfull men; he was in heaven, the place of all happinesse, and we on earth, the sink of all miseries: And therefore to yeeld that we should come to him had beene much; and to have admitted of our petition had been favour enough, as much as we could desire, and farre more than we could deserve; but for him to come to us, when we not onely refused to come, but also ran away from him, this love passeth all understanding; for it cannot be denied by any man that is indued with common sense, but, licet magnum erat facere mundum, & majus exaltare hominem, tamen maximum est humiliare seipsum; though it be a great matter for a King, to raise a beggar to be his companion; yet it is farre greater, when for the love of that poore lazar, the King is well contented to make himselfe a beggar; and this our Saviour did, cum exinanivit seipsum, when he emptied and disrobed himselfe of all his royall dignities, and made himselfe of no reputation, by taking upon him the forme of a servant: And therefore though God be wonderfull in all his works, yet is he more wonderfull herein than in all, that he, which is so good and so great, should come to us, that are so vile, and such nothing.

The greatest signe of Christ his love.

Phil. 2. 7.

2. Profitable. Egesippus de bel. Hierosol. l. 3. c. 2.

2. Because there may be many acts that are admirable, but not profitable, as to see Simon Magus flying in the ayre like a bird, it might well be admired by all, but it could be profitable to none; and I have seene Iuglers doing tricks to be admired, but cui bono, what profit they brought to the beholders, I cannot tell: therefore the Apostle sheweth that this act of Christ is not more admirable in it selfe, that he came, than it is profitable unto us, that he came into the world; for he might have come into the ayre, to save the fowles of heaven, which were more worthy of love than we; or he might have gone to hell, to redeem the Divels, which were of far more excellent nature than we are: and if he had done this, it had beene very admirable unto all, but nothing profitable unto us; and therefore non assumpsit Angelos, he took not the nature of Angels; but he tooke the seed of Abraham; this is our comfort.

Heb. 2. 16.

Ioh. 17. 9. Iam. 4. 4.

Ob. But how comes it, that he comes into the world, when as he professeth, not to pray for the world, and the Apostle testifieth that the love of the world is enmity with God?

That there is a twofold world.

Gen. 1. 31.

Sol. I answer with S. Augustine, that we find a twofold world, unum quem fecit Deus, alterum quem regit Diabolus, one which God made, another which the Divell doth guide; the first is good; for God looked upon all that he made, and loe they were exceeding good; the other is evill, being the invention of man, through the suggestion of the Divell: therefore Christ came into the world, which he made, to preserve his owne, which he loves, and to destroy the other, which he hates: And this is the place where he came, into the world, which he had made, and which we had filled with a world of wickednesse; and therefore, when he came unto his owne, his owne received him not, but sought him out as a partridge upon the mountaines, and persecuted him unto death, even the bitter and most shamefull death of the crosse.

Ioh. 1. 11. 1 Sam. 26. 20.

But it may be he deserved no lesse, unlesse he came to a good end; for many come into the world, and it had beene better for the world they had never beene borne, as Agathocles came into Athens to be a plague unto the Athenians, and Arrius was borne to infest the whole Church; and therefore we must heare the case,

caſe, and diſcuſſe, to what end he came into the world, before we condemne the world; but the Apoſtle putteth this out of doubt: For

3. To what end Chriſt came into the world.

3. He came into the world, to ſave ſinners: this was the end of his coming: { 1. To ſave, 2. To ſave ſinners. }

1. To ſave.

1. He came not to the world, as Alexander came to Perſepolis, to root out, and to ruine the ſame; nor yet as Xerxes came to Greece, to waſt and to deſtroy that countrey; for alas, he deſireth not the death of a ſinner, he takes no pleaſure in the deſtruction of the living; for we have ſeene and do teſtifie, that the Father ſent the Sonne to be the Saviour of the world, ſaith the Apoſtle; and ſo Chriſt ſaith, I came not to condemne the world, but that the world through me might have life. For though God made not death, yet man made himſelfe ſo miſerable, that S. Paul laments the condition of our mortall infelicity with a miſer homo, quis liberabit, O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from this body of death? Rom. 7. 24. and we ſee the kingdome of Satan ſo wondrous powerfull in all ſorts of perſecutions; perſequitur ambitio, perſequitur avaritia, as he perſecutes the ambitious with repining envy, the malicious with deadly revenge, and the covetous with the greedy deſire of ſordid gaine; the Poet can tell us;

Ezek 18.32.

1 Ioh. 1. 14.

Rom. 7. 24.

Amb. in Pſal.

Horat.

Non domus & fundus, non æris acervus & auri,
Ægroto domini deducunt corpore febres:

It is not the ſand of Tagus, nor the gold of Ophir, nor all the treaſures of this world that can abate the violence of a burning fever; how then can they ſave our ſoules from ſinne, or keepe our darling from the Lion? And for the gods of the Heathen, which S. Clemens termeth, παιδας ἑαυτῶν, the ſlaves of their owne paſſions, that ſerved their owne luſts; they are but ſilver and gold the worke of mens hands; good for nothing, but, as it is ſaid of Hercules, ἀπόμυιος, to drive away flies; for when the Capitoll was like to be taken by the Gaules, dormiebant dij, vigilabant anſeres, the gods of Rome were faſt aſleep, and their geeſe preſerved their lives: And therefore quis tam excors, who is ſo mad, ſaith Lactantius, as to conceive they rule as Lords in heaven, which were unworthy to live as men on earth? Or to think they can keepe our ſoules from hell, when they could not preſerve themſelves from death? But the Pſalmiſt tels us, that ſalvation is of the Lord; and my text ſaith, that this Lord is Ieſus Chriſt, that came into the world, to ſave ſinners: And therefore we ſhould not, with Darius, that refuſed the counſell of Artabazus, which profered his life in his defence, and followed the advice of Naburzanes, that plotted his deſtruction, ſhut our eares to Chriſt, that came to ſave us, and liſten to the ſerpent which laboureth to deſtroy us.

Clem. Alex. Exhort. ad Gen.

Amb. in Hexam.

Lact. de falſ. relig. l. 1.

Pſal 3 8.

Rawleigh p. 161.

2. We muſt conſider { 1. Whom he came to ſave, and 2. From what he came to ſave them. } For

2. Whom he came to ſave.

1. He came not to ſave the juſt that needed no Saviour, or deſerved not to die, but to ſave ſinners, that is, ſuch as had merited the ſentence, and were even ready to be ſent to eternall death: And therefore this doth exceedingly commend the love of Chriſt; for what is a ſinner but an enemy to God, that being made the beſt, made himſelfe the worſt of all Gods creatures: The Prophet David ſaith, Domine quid eſt homo? Lord, what is man? I can anſwer him, the nobleſt of Gods creatures, made in the image of God: But if he had ſaid, Domine quid eſt peccator, Lord, what is a ſinner? I could give him none other anſwer, but the worſe thing that can be named: yet Chriſt came into the world to ſave ſinners.

Chriſt came to ſave ſinners.

Pſal. 144. 3. Gen. 1. 27.

Gb. But you will ſay, all are ſinners; therefore Chriſt came to ſave all; as Mathuſius ſaith.

Mathuſius in hunc loc.

Sol. I anſwer, that it is not alike with God and the things of this world; for the goods that are mine are not anothers, but the ſame God is the God of all, in omnibus integer, in ſingulis integer, intire in all, intire in each, as S. Auguſtine ſaith, de Verb. Apoſtoli. that is, in all without mixture or confuſion, in each without fracture or diviſion; for if the ſound of a word may be convayed into a thouſand eares, or the light of the Sun to as many eyes; then how much eaſier is it for the goodnesse of God, and the true light, Iesus Christ, to disseminate his graces into all sinners, that so he may be σωτηρ πάντων, the Saviour of all them, that will call upon his name, and put their trust in his mercy: Yet, that we be not deceived, we must understand that there be too sorts of sinners, some that sin, and yet thinke themselves so sinneless, as they little feare their sins, and little care for any Saviour: these Christ calleth righteous, that is, in their owne conceits; others sinne, and then presently see their sinnes and desire to be delivered from their sins; and these are here understood by sinners. For though Christ came satisfactorily to save all sinners, that is, to make satisfaction for the sins of all men, good and bad, that, if they refuse salvation he may be justified in his sayings, and they may be without excuse; yet effectually or applicatively he came neither to save nor to call those righteous men, but these sinners, qui sua peccata recognoscunt, which doe see, and are sorry for their sinnes, as Hugo saith; or, which be weary and are heavie laden, as our Saviour saith.

That there are two sorts of sinners.

Hugo Cardin. in hunc loc.

Matth. 11. 28.

And therefore, seeing Christ came not to save such sinnefull men, or to call such righteous men, as still shut their eyes, and harden their hearts, against his offered grace; wee must loath our sinnes and be weary of wickednesse, if wee would bee delivered from our sinnes, and be eased by our Saviour Christ.

2. A twofold salvation.

2. There is a salvation of the outward man, from the sword of the enemie, and from the hand of the destroyer: and this is full of honour and renowne: and therefore the greatest Worthies of this world have esteemed it their chiefest glory to be stiled, Fathers of their countrey: and Seneca in l. de clemen: tells Nero, nullum ornamentum regali dignius fastidio, there can be no greater Majesty, no crowne of glory, like that, which is got by publique safety, the defence of States and Kingdomes: yet this salvation of my Text is of a farre higher straine; for he came to save these sinners, non a bello visibili, neq; a gladio barbarorum, as Saint Chrysostome saith; not from our temporall enemies, as Iosuah did, but from our sins, as Saint Matthew sheweth, and that with an everlasting redemption, as the Prophet Esay speaketh, Esay 45. 17 from death, hell, and all the power of the divell: And therefore, if we suffer afflictions, it is no wonder; because, though generally all salvation belongeth unto Christ, and whosoever crieth unto him, he will heare his prayers and will helpe him, and maugre all his greatest enemies, he will deliver him out of all distresse; yet principally he came to save us from the infirmities of our flesh, that we be not tempted above our abilities; and, when we sinne, from the punishments of hell, that we be not damned for our transgressions.

From what hee came to save these sinners. Matth. 1. 21.

The chiefest comfort of Christians.

Pro. 18. 14.

And therefore this is the chiefest consolation of all Christian soules, that Christ came to save them from their sinnes; for if I be poore, the rich can helpe me, if I be sicke the Physitian can heale me, if I be in disgrace the King can honour me, or if I have any other externall calamity, yet the spirit of a man can beare his infirmities, and patience is an excellent remedy, the best Vibilia, to helpe us to passe throughout all dangers; but a wounded spirit, or a troubled conscience pressed downe with the weight of sinne, who can beare? or who can deliver us from these miseries? well: here is our comfort, come unto Christ, all ye that are weary and heavie laden, that is, under the waight and burthen of your sinnes; and he, will ease you; because he came into the world to save sinners. And so much for the proposition, which is the second part of my Text.

3. The instance.

3. The particular instance is, ὧν πρῶτός εἰμι ἐγω; whereof I am chiefe; where observe,

The great endowments of S. Paul.

1 Cor. 15 10.
2 Cor. 12 4.

1. Who is chiefe, I, and what was he? none other then Saint Paul, a man for paines indefatigable, I laboured more then they all; for knowledge most excellent, for I speake with tongues more then they all; for revelations most admirable, for those things were revealed unto him that were not lawfull to be uttered; for suffering most patient, for he suffered more then they all; for proficiency in learning most commendable, for he profited more then they all; and for innocency

Gal. 1. 14.

noceney of life moſt unblameable; for hee knew nothing by himſelfe: therefore no wonder that hee ſhould bee maximus, the greateſt; but that hee ſhould be maximus peccatorum the greateſt of ſinners, this is ſtrange: and yet obſerve

1 Cor. 4. 4.

2. He doth not ſay I am a ſinner, or a great ſinner, which is very great, that ſo holy an Apoſtle ſhould be ſo great a ſinner, but he ſaith, what is moſt, I am the greateſt of ſinners; and therefore you may behold

2. Obſerve

1. His great humility; for he braggs of nothing but of his infirmities; he boaſteth not of his good parts, but he confeſſeth his great ſins.

1. His humility.

2. His intire ſincerity, for he hideth not his ſins, as did Adam, he leſſeneth them not, as did Saul, nor layeth the blame upon others, as did Aaron; but hee doth ingenuouſly confeſſe, he was the greateſt of ſinners. And ſo all the Saints of God uſe to doe, non extenuare ſed augere peccata, ſaith Saint Auguſtine; for Tertullian ſpeaking of himſelfe, ſaith, peccator omnium notarum ſum, nec vlli rei niſi pœnitentiæ natus; I am a ſinner of the greateſt note, and borne for nothing but to repent: and the reaſon is, that although, in foro litigioſo tutiſſima defenſionum, non feci; before mans tribunall the beſt defence is, not guilty, ſaith Quintilian, yet, in foro conſcientiæ, before the throne of God, the beſt plea is, meme adſum qui feci, in me convertite ferrum; I have done it, I have done it, ô Lord be mercifull unto me a ſinner. And hereby we ſee the difference betwixt the true Saints and falſe Hypocrites; for the Hypocrite with the Phariſee will boaſt of his vertues, God I thanke thee that I am not as others be; but the Saints with S. Paul will confeſſe themſelves worſe then all others, the greateſt of ſinners, not worthy to be called Gods Sons.

2. Sir.

Tertul. in l. de pœnit. in fine.

Sit modò, non feci, dicere lingua memor. Ovid. amor. l. 3. Eleg. 13. Pſal. 32. 5.

Luk. 18. 11.

Ob. But here the queſtion is demanded, and it cannot eaſily be decided how Saint Paul that was ſo great a Saint, could ſay that he was the greateſt of ſinners?

How Saint Paul was the greateſt of ſinners.

Sol. The anſwer hereunto is very divers; alij atque alij, aliud atque aliud opinati ſunt; for

1. The Manachees concluded from hence μετεμψυχωσιν animarum, that Adams ſoule was transfuſed into Saint Pauls body; becauſe the Greeke word πρωτος ſignifieth not the greateſt but the firſt: But to this Gorham anſwereth, that he was the firſt, not in order of time, but in greatneſſe of ſinne, as Ariſtotle is ſaid to be the firſt Philoſopher, becauſe he is the chiefeſt, and Cicero is ſaid to be oratorum primus, quia optimus: and ſo Virgil calleth the chiefeſt Carthaginians, primos Pœnorum, that is, the firſt of the Carthaginians.

Gorham in hunc loc.

2. Soto Major and others thinke this to be a figurative ſpeech, implying that Saint Paul was a great ſinner, but not the greateſt of all.

Soto Maior. in hunc loc.

3. Hemingius, Lubin, Selneccerus, and many more thinke he ſaith this not in any fayned humility, but in true ſincerity, out of a remembrance of his former iniquity; as either,

Mathuſ. in hunc loc. Lubin in hunc loc.

1. Becauſe no ſinne is greater then infidelity, though it ſhould fall on a man otherwiſe of an unblameable life, as Selneccerus ſaith; and Alexander Halenſis reaſoneth thus: omne peccatum, quod deſtruit fundamentum totius Chriſtianæ religionis eſt maximum, & infidelitas eſt hujuſmodi, Ergo, &c. and upon theſe words of the Prophet Ieremy. Thren. 1. peccatum peccavit Hieruſalem, he citeth the words of the Gloſſe, infidelitas eſt peccatum, quo retento omnia retinentur, & quo ablato omnia auferuntur, and then he inferreth, that omne tale eſt maximè peccatum, Ergo, infidelitas eſt maxime peccatum, Hales. Tom. 2. q. 136. memb. 5. p. 626. 2. and therefore they doe moſt hainouſly ſinne that runne away from Chriſt, when they have offended God; becauſe Chriſt came to ſave ſinners; & quo gravior peccator, eo gratior Chriſto, ſi vera fide ad eum confugiat; and the greater is the ſinner, the deerer he is to Chriſt, if he flyeth to him by a lively faith; becauſe the greatneſſe of our ſins doth the more magnifie the grace of God, which is ſo much the more excellent, by how much the ſinner is more indigent of it.

The greatneſſe of Saint Pauls ſin. 1. Reſpect.

Payn. in hunc loc.

2. Becauſe no ſin is greater then to perſecute Gods ſervants, for he that toucheth

2. Reſpect.

you, toucheth the apple of mine eye (and so the bondage of the Israelites in Egypt, for abusing Ioseph; the punishment of Corah, Dathan and Abiram, for despising Moses; the devouring of the children, for mocking Elizeus; and the captivity of the whole nation of the Iewes in Babylon, for contemning Gods Prophets; doe sufficiently shew the hainousnesse of this sinne) and it seemes the Apostle meanes no lesse, when he saith, hee was a blasphemer, and a persecuter and injurious; and in another place, not worthy to be called an Apostle, because he persecuted the Church of God; And therefore though some like no mirth so well as to sport themselves with Gods servants, yet you see in Saint Pauls judgement, such abusers of them are the least of all Saints, and the greatest of all sinners.

Numb. 16. 32. c
2 Reg. 2. 24.
2 Chron. 36. 15, 16, 17.

1 Tim. 1. 13.

Ephes. 3. 8.

3. Respect.

3. Because the greater a man is in any respect, honour, place, knowledge, or what you will, the greater is his sinne; for hee that knoweth his masters will and doth it not, shall be beaten with many stripes; And therefore Saint Paul being so excellent a man, of the greatest knowledge, profiting more then all his fellowes, it is no question but he sinning, must needs be the greatest sinner: & sic ad literam est hodie, qui primi sunt in dignitate, primi sunt in Domini persecutione; saith Hugo Cardinalis: and I may not apply this to the Prelates of our Church, though many times the governours of Gods Church have beene so.

Hugo Cardinalis in hunc loc.

4. Respect.

4. Because Quo quisq; altius ascendit in agnitione Christi, eo profundius peccati atrocitatem agnoscit, the more any one is inlightned with grace, the more odious he shall see his sinnes, as Mathusius saith; and therefore Saint Paul, being now indued with the greatest measure of grace, seeth his sinnes to be greatest of all: A most fearefull point to such sinners, as see not their sinnes, because they have no grace: It was Judas curse, let his eyes bee blinded that they see not; but ô God, let me never bee thus accursed, as not to see my sinnes.

Mathusius in hunc loc.

Psal. 69. 24.

5. Respect.

5. Because a man knoweth his owne sinnes, and the circumstances aggravating every sin; and for other mens sinnes, he knoweth them not, or not their greatnesse, because not their circumstances; for the same act of sin may be committed by two persons, and the sinne may be most odious in the one and not neere so haynous in the other; when the one doth it wittingly and of malice, the other ignorantly and of weakenesse: and none knoweth with what minde any sin is committed but onely God and our owne consciences; And therefore in this respect, not onely Saint Paul, but also every sinner may truly say ego maximus, I am the greatest of all sinners; because I know mine owne sinnes and the greatnesse of them; but other mens sins I know not; and the circumstances of their sins, that make them lesser or greater, I am ignorant of.

And this is all I could find in Authors, in what respects Saint Paul might say, he was the greatest of sinners.

The exposition of the Author upon this place.

But if your favour will give me leave to set downe what I thinke; I beleeve the Apostle means not that he was simply the greatest of all sinners, in any or all of these respects; because he speakes this of himselfe, as now he is, and not as he had beene: and it is no question, but not to beleeve in God, which now Saint Paul did, or els to apostate from grace, or to despaire of Gods mercy, which now Saint Paul did not, is a greater sinne then any beleeving Christian can commit; and the least cherished sinne is greater then the greatest sinnes repented of: And therefore Saint Pauls Quorum must be referred not simply to all sinners, but respectively to all those sinners, that Christ came effectually to save; and that is, such as doe perfectly see, and are heartily sorry for their sinnes; of these he was the greatest; because having more grace then the rest, he saw his sinnes greater, and therefore sorrowed for his sins more then the rest. So he was the greatest of all penitent sinners: ô that I were the next unto him.

S. Pauls Quorum to whom referred

And this exposition seemeth plaine to me from the word ijsti, I am; for sin

ſinne being once committed, though the teares of true repentance may waſh away the ſtaine, and ſo ſave us from the puniſhment of it; yet all the water in the ocean ſea can never blot out the being thereof; for if thou lookeſt to heaven, there it is laid in ſtore with God and ſealed up among his treaſures; Deut. 32. 34. if thou lookeſt to hell, there Satan hath it in a booke of remembrance; and if thou lookeſt into thine owne ſoule, there it is indelebly regiſtred in thy conſcience. So ſtrange a thing is ſinne, that being but once done and done in a moment, it can never be undone for ever, unleſſe it be done away by the blood of Chriſt; for though thou mayſt ſleepe in ſinne, and die in that ſleepe; yet when the trumpet ſhall awake thee from the duſt, thou ſhalt be ſure to meet thy ſinne againe; And therefore David ſaith, peccata mea coram me ſemper, Pſal. 51. 5. looke where I will, I ſee my ſinnes; ſo Saint Peter after he denied his maſter, never heard the cocke crowing in all his life, but he wept bitterly, ſaith Clemens Romanus; and ſo Saint Paul alwaies ſaw his ſinnes; and therefore ſaith not, I have beene, but I am the greateſt of ſinners, that is, of thoſe which doe ſee and ſorrow for their ſinnes; And this I take to be the meaning of the Apoſtle: and it may ſerve to teach us what a heynous thing is ſinne, and how fooliſh be all ſinners, that, for the pleaſure of one moment, for as ſoone as ever the ſinne is done, the pleaſure is gone, will bind themſelves to perpetuall ſorrow while they live, if they have grace, or to eternall torments for ever and ever, if they have no grace.

And now to apply all this; for my ſelfe, I can boaſt of nothing but of mine infirmities, I have ſuffered, onely by the meanes of them that had leaſt reaſon to doe it, I thinke, more then any of my fellow Miniſters, ſo much, that I may ſay with the Poet The application.

Scire meos caſus ſi quis deſiderat omnes,
Plus quam quod fieri res ſinit, ille petit. Ovid. Triſt. l. 1. Eleg. 4. p. 182.

But how juſtly they did it, I leave it to the judge of all the world to decide it; to forgive them, if they did ill, to ſuppreſſe him that was not able to reſiſt; and to teach mee ever to acknowledge the juſtice of God, and to confeſſe with Tertullian, that I am a ſinner of the greateſt note, even the greateſt of all ſinners and the leaſt of all Saints, not worthy to be named a Saint, or a ſervant of Ieſus Chriſt; and therefore, in all humility I doe beg this grace, ut montibus & ſylvis, that in all places, I may alwaies lament my ſtate, and bewaile with teares my ſinfull life, and every offence that I committed againſt my God; that as I do find my ſelfe the greateſt of ſinners, ſo I may not be found the leaſt of penitents. This ſhall be my prayer for ever.

For your Gracious Majeſty, let the all-ſeeing eye of heaven be my witneſſe, I daily bleſſe my God for your zeale, piety and equity: yet give me leave to ſpeake the truth; no fleſh can be without ſinne; the juſteſt man falling ſeven times a day, and it well beſeemes the greateſt Monarchs to ſay to God, with David, we have ſinned againſt thee; that as their places make them higheſt and require them to be holieſt here on earth; ſo this grace may place them among the higheſt in the heavens.

For you Noble Lords, you know you are great, coram hominibus, and you are honoured here, as you ought, in aula regis: ô looke that you be great, with John Baptiſt, coram Domino, and that you may be received with all Saints, in regnum Dei; I doubt not but the ſins of many of you are great; your greatneſſe countenancing your ſins, and your ſins growing the more exceedingly ſinfull by your greatneſſe, and your owne ſoules doe know how highly ſome of you doe offend your God, and how ſlowly you do good to men: And therefore take heed, leaſt as we find you the greateſt men, ſo the God of heaven do find you the greateſt ſinners: or if ſo, that he find you withall among the greateſt penitents; or if not, you may find your ſelves, ere long, in the number of them that ſhall have the greateſt torments. I pray God give you that grace rather to confeſſe your ſelves great ſinners, then to ſtand upon the typtoes of your great honours; for with God there is no reſpect of perſons, but he will bind Kings in fetters and Nobles in linkes of iron, and then potentes potenter cruciabuntur, the mighty men ſhall be mightily tormented.

And you of the meaneſt ſort, you may be no meane ſinners, when a baſe varlet as Achillas the ſlave ſlew Pompey the great, Tranſilla, Valentinian the ſecond, and Raviliac, or the like, that are not worthy to feed with the dogs of the flocke, may kill a Prince, a King or an Emperor; and a beggar may blaſpheme the Holy Ghoſt, the pooreſt man commit the greateſt ſin, the meaneſſe of the perſon exempting none from the greatneſſe of ſin. And therefore, from him that ſitteth upon the royall throne, to him that walloweth in the aſhes, I wiſh us all this grace, to avoid ſin; for why ſhould we doe that, we muſt undoe, or be undone for ever? why ſhould we twiſt that thread we muſt untwine; or build that houſe, we muſt pull downe, or be pulled for it to hell? but, becauſe we doe continually ſin, I wiſh that every one would acknowledge himſelfe the greateſt ſinner, and deſire to be the greateſt penitent, to waſh his ſins in a flood of teares, that he may not burne in the flames of fire; that ſo all of us may be ſaved, through him that came into the world to ſave ſinners, Ieſus Chriſt our Lord, to whom be all Glory and Honour and Immortality, now and ever, Amen.

THE BEST HELPER.

Rom. 8. 31.

Εἰ ὁ Θεὸς ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, τίς καθ' ἡμῶν?

If God be for us, who can be against us?

THese words are an allusive speech, whereby Saint Paul, a most valiant Captaine, would incourage all Christians, undauntedly to goe on, in their most holy profession, without the least feare of their greatest adversaries; and they seeme to be an uncontroulable answer to a tacite subtill objection, that some fearefull Christians might make against themselves; for the Apostle, in this Chapter, would have all true Saints to beleeve the certainty of their salvation; against which, the weake in faith might object. The coherence.

Ob. They have great and many enemies, that doe continually labour, and most spitefully strive, to worke their ruine; and therefore how can they undoubtedly beleeve they shall be saved?

Sol. The Apostle answereth, if their eyes were opened, with the servant of Elizeus, they should see more strength on their side, then possibly could bee against them; because, as the Prophet David saith, the Lord is on their right hand; therefore they cannot fall; for if God be on our side, who can be against us? 2 Reg. 5. 17.

In which words observe:

Two speciall parts.

1. A suppositive proposition; if God be on our side?
2. An interrogative conclusion; who can be against us?

1. Part. A suppositive proposition, Wherein are foure branches.

1. In the proposition, there are foure things considerable.
   1. The assistant, God;
   2. The assisted, us;
   3. The conjunction of these, God with us;
   4. The Quere concerning these, if God be with us.

1. Branch. Of God.

In the first we may see an invincible power; in the second an incredible weakenesse; in the third a most admirable union; and in the fourth, either an unspeakable comfort, if he be with us; or a most intollerable terror, if he be against us?

1. Of ſtrength.

Iudges 3.31.
Iudges 15.16.

2. Of wealth.
Gen.1.10.

Cant.6.4.

Saluſt. de bello Iugurthino.

Dan.2.40.

3. Of wiſedome.
Ciceronis commentator in Cato. Ma. p.24.
Eccleſ.9.18.

Eccleſ.9.13. Ver.16.

Pro.21.22.

1. The power of God.

Gen.17.1.

Matth.3.9.
2. The wealth of God.
Pſal 24.1.

Matth.6.11.

3. The wiſedome of God.
Rom.16.27.
1 Cor.1.25.

The wiſdome of a Generall ſeene in two things.

1. There be three things that are moſt availeable to inable men to prevaile againſt their enemies. 1 Strength; 2 Wealth; 3 Wiſedome. For

1. Shamgar with an oxe goade ſlew 600. Philiſtines; Sampſon with the Iaw-bone of an aſſe ſlew a thouſand of them; Hercules by his ſtrength did wonders; and many more, being ſtrong men, prevailed much againſt many enemies: Yet

2. As one drop of water hath no power, one ſparke of fire is not ſtrong, but the gathering together of waters, which the Lord called ſeas, and the communion of many flames doe make both theſe raging and invincible elements; ſo unus vir nullus vir; one man is no man; but a multitude of men uniting their forces together, is terrible like an army with banners; And theſe cannot be maintained without meanes; meat cannot be bought, and wages cannot be paid without money: therefore Plutarch ſaith, ἀργυρίοις λόγχαις μαχοῦ, καὶ πάντα νικήσεις; fight with ſilver ſpeares, and thou ſhalt overcome all things; τὸ ἀργύριον ἐστιν αἷμα καὶ ψυχὴ βροτοῖς; becauſe money is the blood and life of man; and Iugurth, that was a brave Commander (as Saluſt writes) was wont to ſay, that money is the ſinewes of warre, and if he had inough of that, he could win Rome, that ſtrong Cittie, whoſe leggs and feet were of iron, which ſubdueth all things, as we find in Nebuchadnezzars viſion; —— populumq́ potentem, in ſua victrices convertere viſcera dextras; and make that potent people, to turne their ſtrength againſt themſelves; but

3. Parva ſunt foris arma, niſi ſit concilium domi; power not directed is but armed follie; and ſtrength will availe naught abroad, except counſell doth guide all at home; becauſe wiſedome is better then weapons of warre, and a man of underſtanding then all ſtrength; and when we do any thing without wiſedome, then our ſtrength ſhall be as the ſtubble, and our worke as the ſparke of fire, both ſhall be kindled together and none ſhall extinguiſh it, ſaith the Prophet; for prudence is the mother of fortitude, and that bold enterpriſe, which wiſedome bringeth not forth, is no vertue but temerity, ſaith Saint Bernard; and therefore Salomon ſaith, this wiſedome have I ſeene under the ſunne, and it ſeemed great unto me; there was a little cittie, and few men within it; and there came a great King againſt it and beſieged it, and built a great bulwarke againſt it; but there was found in it a poore wiſe man, and he by his wiſedome delivered the cittie; and then he ſaid, wiſedome is better then ſtrength; becauſe ſtrength could not prevaile againſt wiſedome, but a wiſe man ſcalleth the cittie of the mighty, and caſteth downe the ſtrength of the confidence thereof: And therefore our wealth without wiſedome is but a prey unto our enemies, and our ſtrength, to our ſhame, ſhall be troden under feet.

But in all theſe, we know God is moſt excellent; 1. His power is omnipotent; 2. His wealth is innumerable; 3. His wiſedome is unſearchable. For

1. He tells Abraham that he ſhould not feare; becauſe he was el ſhadai, a God ſtrong and all-ſufficient, able to doe whatſoever he will, and more then ever he did, as of theſe ſtones to raiſe up children unto Abraham.

2. The earth is the Lords, and all that is therein; the compaſſe of the world, and they that dwell therein; So God is onely rich; and the greateſt Monarch of this world muſt beg of him the leaſt crumme of bread, when he ſaith, give us this day our daily bread.

3. Saint Paul ſaith, that he is onely wiſe, and ſo wiſe, that he maketh the wiſedome of the world folly, and the fooliſhneſſe of God, that is, which the world counteth fooliſhneſſe, is wiſer then all the wiſedome of men.

And, as in all things els, he is wiſe in heart, as Iob ſpeaketh, ſo ſpecially in thoſe two things, which Vegetius ſaith are the two chiefeſt points of wiſedome in a Generall; as

1. In finding out the deſignes and purpoſes of his enemies.
2. In keeping ſecret his owne intentions, from his adverſaries.

For,

For, inopinata magis premunt mala, thoſe dangers are leaſt avoided, which are unknowne or unexpected; & anima conſilij ſecretum, and thoſe counſels are beſt carried, which the enemie ſees in execution, before he heares them by relation: becauſe, as expedition is the life of action, ſo is ſecrecy of deliberation. But Lipſ. Polit. l. 5.

Plut. de Gra.

First, God knoweth the very thoughts of men; and which is more, he maketh us to know the devices of Satan, as the Apoſtle ſaith, and as we find it in the King of Syria, who could not ſpeake a word in his bed-chamber, but Elizeus knew it.

1. Inveſtigando.

2 Reg. 6. 12.

Secondly, for his owne purpoſes, he can keepe them ſo ſecret, that the Apoſtle demaundeth, Who hath knowne the mind of the Lord? His waies are paſt finding out, and his counſels or judgements like the great deepe; we may ſoone drowne our ſelves, if we ſeeke to dive into them: And our Saviour tels us, that he hideth theſe things from the wiſe and prudent, and revealeth them unto babes: And therefore ſeeing God is ſo ſtrong, ſo rich, ſo wiſe; if he be with us, the Apoſtle may well demaund, who can be againſt us?

2. Celando.

Rom. 11. 34. Pſal. 36. 6.

Mat. 11. 25.

And yet beſides all this, he is whatſoever we can wiſh; for if we deſire quietneſſe; he is the God of peace, and he maketh warres to ceaſe in all the world, he breaketh the bow, and knappeth the ſpeare, and burneth the charets in the fire; if we long for warre; he is the Lord of hoſts, and he ſtirreth up the ſpirit of Princes, and gives the victory to whom he pleaſeth; if we live upon the land, the earth is his, and if we ſerve him, he will make the wilderneſſe a ſtanding water, and water-ſprings of a drie ground; or if we ſaile upon the ſea, he is the Lord both of ſea and land, he maketh the ſtorme to ceaſe; and, as Ulyſſes is ſaid to have the winds in a bag, to carie him where he liſted; ſo the Lord bringeth the winds out of his treaſures, and bringeth us to the haven, where we would be; ſo if we be in want, he exalteth the poore out of the mire, and maketh him the companion of Princes; if we be ſicke, he is the beſt Phyſitian in the world, he needs but ſay the word, and as the Centurion ſaith, my ſervant ſhalbe whole; if we be hungry; he is the bread of life; and to ſhut up all in a word, whatſoever we deſire, he is all in all; And therefore if he be with us, we need not care who be againſt us. And ſo much for the Aſſiſtant, God.

How God is all in all. Pſal. 46. 9.

Pſal. 107. 35.

Pſal. 107. 30.

Pſal. 113.

Mat. 8. 8. & Luke 7. 9.

2. The aſſiſted are ſet downe in, us, if God be with us; and what are we? οὐδὲν καὶ οὐδενὸς ἄξιον, nothing and worth nothing, as Plato ſaith: weake in ſtrength, poore in wealth, wicked in behaviour, and fooliſh in all our actions.

2. Branch. Of us.

For 1. The ſtrongeſt man may be killed with a ſword, with a pin, with a peble ſtone; for his breath is in his noſtrils, and when that goeth forth, he is turned againe to his duſt, and then all his thoughts periſh; and therefore let not the ſtrong man glory in his ſtrength, when he ſeeth Goliah the gyant kill'd with a ſtone, and Herod the King, eaten with lice; contemptible things to diſpatch Monarchs.

1. How weake we be.

1 Sam. 17. 49.

2. Naked we came into the world, and naked we ſhall returne againe, and that little wealth we have, during our abode in this world, is as uncertaine as the weather, when, as the Poet ſaith,

2. How poore we be.

Irus & eſt ſubito, qui modo Cræſus erat.

Rich Cræſus in one day may become as poore as Irus; as we ſee examples of it every day before our eyes.

3. We are, of our ſelves, able to do no good, not to will that which is good, no, nor thinke a good thought, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh; but we are filled with all unrighteouſneſſe; aberravimus ab utero, we are prone to all evill from our mothers womb, and ſo we do continue unto our graves; for behold you are of nothing, or worſe than nothing, as the Originall reads it, and your worke is of naught, an abomination is he that chooſeth you; ſaith the Prophet.

3. How void of good we are.

Eſa. 41. 24.

4. We may truly ſay of every man, as Abigail wiſely ſaid of her husband, that Nabal is his name, and folly is with him; becauſe we ſeeke our owne death in the errour of our life: and ſo moſt of us will confeſſe it in the laſt day, We fooles have erred from the way of truth, and the light of underſtanding hath not ſhined

4. How wicked we be.

Sap. 5. 4, 6.

shined unto us. ô superi, quantum mortalia pectora cæcæ
Noctis habent?——We are so involved in darkenesse that we know not what to doe. So you see, what a wretched thing is man; Saint Bernard saith, materia vilis, operatio turpis, exitus flebilis, damnatio detestabilis; his substance vile, his workes filthy, his end lamentable, and his damnation detestable; and the Poet is not afraid to say, Bernard. de consider. vilitatis humanæ.

Homerus in 5. Iliad.

οὐ μὲν γάρ τι πνέω ἐπὶ θύμορον ἀνδρὸς πάντων ὅσσα τε γαῖαν ἐπὶ πνείει τε καὶ ἕρπει.

There is truly nothing more miserable then man, of all the things that breath and creepe: And therefore, if God be not with us, we be nothing, and we can do nothing, whersoever we are, or whatsoever we be. And so much for the Assisted, us.

3 Branch. The conjunction of God with us.

3. Having walked upon the wings of the winde, to shew the excellency of God, and grovelled upon the earth, to display the misery of man, I am now come to bring heaven and earth together, God to us; if God be ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, for us, that is, on our side, or as we vulgarly translate it, si Deus nobiscum, if God be with us, that is, for our good: and therefore we must observe { 1. How God may be said to be with us. 2. To what end he is said to be for us.

Two things observable.

1. God with us. Two waies.

1. God is with us, either { 1. After a generall 2. After a speciall } manner: For

1. After a generall manner.

1. It is an old rule of the Schoole, Enter, presenter, Deus est ubiq; potenter; he is not farre from every one of us, but as Moses said of the law, so we may say of the Lord, he is not hid from us, if we would open our eyes to behold him; we need not say, who shall ascend up to heaven, to fetch downe the Lord; quia juxta est verbum prope; for behold, he stands at the doore of every mans heart and knocks to enter in: nay, he is yet a little neerer to us; est Deus in nobis, he is in us, and we are in him; for in him we live, and move, and have our being; he being the cause, the maker and sustainer of all things, as the Apostle sheweth, when he saith, that in him and through him, and for him are all things, to whom be glory for ever Amen.

Deut. 30. 11. Rom. 10. 6. Revel. 3. 20. Act. 17. 28. Rom. 11. 36.

Gods presence should terrifie the wicked.

And this should be a terror to the wicked, to thinke that whatsoever they do, they doe it in the sight of him that shall judge them, and call them to a strict account for every thought, conceived against his Majesty: and therefore it should make them afraid to sin; because that when they burne with lust, and boyle with hatred; when they scorne the just and wrong the innocent, they doe all this, not onely in conspectu Dei, within the compasse of Gods sight, but also in sinu divinitatis, in the bosome of that Deity, which, though he suffereth them for a time, to run on, like a wilde asse used to the wildernesse, yet he will find them out at the last, and then cut them off and destroy them.

Ier. 2. 24.

And it should rejoyce the godly.

And as this is a terror unto the wicked, so it may be a comfort unto the godly, to thinke that he, which should heare their prayers and send them helpe, is so neere unto them; and it should move them, to relie still upon him; because we are sure of his presence, whersoever we are. But

2. After a speciall manner.

2. Though God be with all his creatures, in respect of his omnipresence; yet he is not with all alike, in respect of his benignity; for

First, He is with his Saints and Angels in heaven, per gloriam, by his mercy and goodnesse, perpetually to rejoyce them.

Secondly, He is with the Divels and damned spirits in hell, per justitiam, by his power and justice exceedingly to torment them.

Thirdly, He is with all Creatures on earth, per providentiam, by his wisedome and providence, most excellently to sustaine them.

Fourthly, He is with the Wicked, as a publike notarie, to register all their actions, as he saith by Moses, are not these things laid in store with me and sealed up among my treasures? Deut. 32. 34. And God is with his Saints two waies.

Fiftly, To come neerer unto the Apostles meaning, in my Text, he is with his Saints on earth two speciall waies.

1. By

For { 1. By his eternall and internall affection. 2. By his temporall and externall manifeſtation of it.

1. He loved us with an everlaſting love, when he choſe us in Chriſt Ieſus before the foundation of the world; and ſo in his eternall decree, he was united to us in love, before he created us of nothing.

1. By his eternall love. Ephes. 1.4.

2. Becauſe inward affections, cannot be knowne of us without ſome outward demonſtration of the ſame, therefore it pleaſed God, to make his kindneſſe and love towards man to appeare, and that, after he made us, and we fell from him, by a double union of himſelfe with us; as

2. By his externall manifeſtation of that love.

Two waies.

For { 1. By a reall aſſumption of our fleſh to him; 2. By a ſpirituall union of himſelfe to us.

1. When the fullneſſe of time came, God ſent his Sonne made of a woman, Gal. 4 4. and the Word was made fleſh, Ioh. 1.14. and ſo he was indeed Immanuel, God with us, Eſay 7.14. And

1. Aſſuming our fleſh.

2. That there might be a happy merchandize betwixt heaven and earth, as Tertullian ſaith, Chriſt tooke our fleſh upon him, to make us one with him, and he gave his ſpirit to us, to make himſelfe one with us, to dwell in us, and to walke in us, as Moſes ſaith. And therefore Chriſt, in reſpect of this double union of God with us, ſaith, I am the vine, and you are the branches, I am the head, and you are the members.

2 Giving his ſpirit. Tertul. de carne Chriſti. Levit. 26.12.

And this ſheweth the Prerogatives of Chriſtians; that we are θειας κοινωνοὶ φύσεως, 2 Pet. 1.4. conſortes divinæ naturæ, partakers of the divine nature; and do receive all our life of grace from Chriſt; and therefore it ſhould teach us, not to defile the Temple of God; for if any man defile the Temple of God, him ſhall God deſtroy,

The Prerogatives of Chriſtians.

1 Cor. 3.19.

2. God is ſaid to be, not onely with us, but alſo for us, that is, for our good:

2. God for us, two waies. 1. Temporally, Foure waies.

And { 1. Temporally; 2. Spiritually.

1. He is with his ſervants temporally, foure ſpeciall waies, { 1. To deliver them from adverſity; 2. To advance them to dignity; 3. To preſerve them in proſperity; 4. To proſper them in all their affaires.

1. When Ioſeph was ſold, God forſooke him not, but delivered him from ſinne, and went downe with him into the pit, ſaith the Wiſe man; when Ionas was caſt into the ſea, the Lord was with him in the whales belly, and brought him ſafe unto the ſhore; and when the three children were caſt into the fiery furnace, the Lord was with them, walking in the midſt of the flame, to preſerve them from all harme. And this is the comfort of all Gods Saints, that although they bee as ſheepe in the midſt of Wolves, or doe walke in the valley of the ſhaddow of death, yet, as David ſaith, they will feare none evill; becauſe God is with them, and his rod and his ſtaffe ſhall comfort them.

1. To deliver us. Sap. 10.13. Ionah 2.2,10. Dan. 3.25. Matth. 10.16. Pſal. 23.4.

2. He left not Ioſeph in his bonds, till he brought him to the Scepter of the Kingdome; he advanced Heſter from a poore captive maid, to be a great Queene; and ſo he exalteth all the humble and meeke, ſo farre as he ſeeth it meete for them; for promotion commeth neither from the Eaſt nor from the Weſt; but it is the Lord, that exalteth the poore out of the mire, and bringeth downe the high lookes of the proud.

2. To advance us. Heſter 2.7.17. Pſal. 75.7.

3. Becauſe that to be advanced is not alwaies bleſſed, when many evill men

——Tolluntur in altum,
Vt lapſu graviori ruant.——

And the wicked are oftentimes in great proſperity; therefore God is with his ſervants, to preſerve them from ſinne, as he preſerved Ioſeph from his miſtreſſe, and from the malice of their foes, as he preſerved Mordecay, in Ahaſuerus court; for it is no queſtion, but when God honoureth them that honour him, and raiſeth thoſe that he loveth, envie will ever pine thereat, & populi meditati ſunt inania, and the people will imagine vaine things: but what ſhall be done to the man, whom the King delighteth

3. To preſerve us. Claudian l. 1. in Ruffin. Gen. 39.10,12. Heſter 6.6, 7.8. c. 8.

to

Psal. 2. 1.

to honour? or what can be done against the man, whom the Lord intendeth to advance? even nothing; because God is with his servants, to preserve them from all malice.

4. To Prosper us. Psal. 1. 4.

4. God is with us, to bless us in all that we take in hand; for whatsoever the godly man doth it shall prosper; and therefore the Master of the prison looked not to any thing that was under Iosephs hand; because he saw the Lord was with him, and whatsoever he did, the Lord made it to prosper; And except the Lord be with us, the watchman waketh but in vaine; we may rise early, and goe late to bed and eate the bread of carefullnesse, and yet, when we have wearied our selves, fished all night, and used all meanes, with Saint Peter, we shall catch nothing, if Christ be not with us; but if he be with us, we shall be sure of blessing; because all fullnesse is in him, and no blessing can proceed, but from him.

Gen. 39 3. Psal. 127. 1.

John 21. 3.

Observ.

And yet this must not make us to expect a prosperous successe in every enterprize we undertake; for so we see Gods deerest servants and best Saints did often faile; and Christ himselfe in whom the fullnesse of the God-head dwelleth σωματικως bodily, in the judgement of the world was not blessed, when he hanged upon the tree; but the meaning of the Holy Ghost is, that howsoever things may seeme for a time; the hearts of the godly filled with sorrow, and their faces clouded with reproaches: yet, all things in the end, shall worke together for the best, to them that have God with them.

Coloss. 2. 9.

Sap. 3. 2. & c 5. 4.

And therefore, howsoever the world thinketh their life to be miserable, and their end without honour, yet surely it shall goe well with the righteous, Esay 3. 10. because they have God with them; for if the heathens thought their dumbe idolls would helpe them, if they were with them; and therefore carried them whithersoever they went, as Æneas saith to his father, Tu genitor, cape sacra manu, patriosq; penates; and Rachell stole her fathers gods, and the house of Obed-edom was blessed, because the Arke of God was in it; then how much surer of blessing shall we be, if the God of Abraham and the feare of Isaac, as Iacob said unto Laban, be with us?

Virgilius Æneid. lib. 2. p. 176.

Gen. 31. 34. & v. 42.

2. Spiritually.

2. God is with us for our spirituall good; so in a transcendent and a farre more excellent manner then the former; and that, as Saint Augustine observeth, foure speciall waies.

Aug. de verb. Apost. serm 16.

God is with us foure speciall waies.

1. In our predestination to life. 3. In our justification from sin;
2. In our vocation to grace. 4. In our exaltation to glory.

And upon these foure doth Saint Paul principally inferre the words of my Text, If God be with us, who can be against us? as if he should say, if God hath predestinated us to be the members of Christ, who shall seperate us from Christ? or who can plucke us out of his hands? if he doth call us by his spirit, who can hinder us to come unto him? if he will justifie us by his grace, who can condemne us for our sinnes? and if he will glorifie us in heaven, who can cast us downe to hell? I must answer all this with Anselmus, nemo nos ladet nisi qui Deum vincat; no creature can hurt us, but he that can overcome God himselfe: so God is with his servants both for their temporall and their spirituall good.

Anselm. in Rom. c. 8 31.

And besides all this, he is with us, to comfort us in all our afflictions, to guide us unto all truth, to preserve us from many sinnes, that, besides those we doe commit, without his preventing grace, we were sure to fall into, and to effect in us all the good we doe; when he worketh in us, both the will and the deed; and for many other transcendent ends, which the time will not give me leave to touch.

Phil 2. 13.

And therefore, if God be with us and for us, we need not feare, we need not care who be against us. And so much for the benefits of this conjunction, God with us.

4. Branch. The Quere: if God be with us.

4. We are now to enter upon the Quere, and to make search into this doubt, if God be with us; for you see here is no certainty, but that he is with some, not with with all, els the Apoſtle ſpeakes this in vaine, if God be with us; And therefore, having hovered in the aire, all this while, or ſayled about, in the vaſt ocean, I muſt now touch upon ſome ſhore, either in a happy port of ſalvation, if God be with us; or upon the quick-ſands of deſtruction, if he be againſt us: God grant us all a ſafe landing.

Ob. But you will ſay, if God be with us, is no word of doubt, no more then ſi Deus eſt animus; or if Chriſt be riſen; but a word of art, implying, it is ſo, God is with us; as you may ſee from the context of theſe words.

Sol. I anſwer, it is certaine that God is with his elect, whom he hath predeſtinated and will glorifie: but it is not certaine who are his elect, when the Apoſtle tells us plainely that God onely knoweth who are his: and we find two ſorts of men that do ſowly deceive themſelves in the diſcuſſion of this Quere, if God be with us. 2 Tim. 2. 19.

Two ſorts of men deceived.

1. Some that have God with them, and yet think it not, as Iacob ſaid, God was in this place and I knew it not; when the ſight of their ſins is ſo great, and the ſence of Gods grace is ſo little, as the greatneſſe of that darkneſſe is not able to comprehend the ſmaleneſſe of this light. 1. Sort. Gen. 28. 16.

2. Others that thinke God to be with them, when he is not; and theſe are multiplied above number; for what man is ſo wicked, as to be perſwaded that God is not with him? but Satan is a ſubtle Sophiſter, & decipimur ſpecie recti, and we are many times deceived under the colour of truth; for Severinus Bb of Collen, thought a very holy man, confeſt unto his Deacon, after his death, as Lavater ſaith, that he was puniſhed for neglecting divine ſervice; and Hoſpinian tells us of a Monke, that led a very ſtrict life, yet being dead, and to be buried, he raiſed himſelfe upon the beere and ſaid vocatus ſum, I am called to give an account of my ſtewardſhip; and then againe, he ſaid, accuſatus ſum, I am accuſed and found guilty before God; and laſt of all, he moſt fearefully cryed out, condemnatus ſum, I am eternally condemned for my ſinnes; whereupon Bruno erected the Carthuſian order; which they ſay, is the ſtricteſt of all orders: and Sulpitius Severus ſaith, that S. Martyn was informed in his prayers, that an altar much honoured, where he lived, was erected for the memory, not of any celeſtial Saint, but of a wicked robber, which injoyed no bliſſe in heaven, but was moſt juſtly tormented in hell. 2. Sort. How fearefully many delude themſelves. Lavat. de ſpiritibus ambulant. Sulpit. ſeverus in vit. S. Mart.

And therefore, though I cite not theſe Stories as authenticall, to worke beliefe; (but, as Goliahs head was cut off with his owne ſword, ſo to confute ſillie ignorants with their owne arguments, and to teach us to looke after better inſtructions, to preſerve our ſoules from ſuch dangerous deviations, by conſidering what a fearefull thing it is to be with the divell or a thiefe, when we thinke our ſelves to be with God or his Saints, ſeeing, as Melchior Canus ſaith, nihil refert, diabolum colas an hominem condemnatum, it skilleth not whether you worſhip a divell or a damned ſoule,) yet this ſhould perſwade us to looke more carefully to the diſcuſſion of this Quere, whether God bee with us or not. And 1 Sam. 17 51. Canus lib. 3. c. 5. q. 5. con. 3.

I confeſſe it is very hard to know it, when Satan, the ſpirit of darkneſſe, doth ſo often transforme himſelfe into an angell of light, and bold preſumption doth ſo uſually maske under the habit of a true faith; yet Saint Bernard ſaith, Deus, quibus certitudinem negat cauſa ſolicitudinis, fiduciam præſtat gratia conſolationis; there is a way to find this truth, if we ſeeke it out; but we muſt goe, not as many uſe in our dayes, firſt to looke into Gods Cabinet, to find whoſe names are written in the book of life; and then boldly to ſay, without bluſhing, I am predeſtinate to ſalvation, and whom God hath predeſtinated, them he juſtifieth, and whom he juſtifieth, them he ſaveth, therefore I am ſure to be ſaved, which I am ſure is the worſe way for us to know this truth, and they may feare the wrong way to heaven; but as Noahs children went backward, or as Hercules followed veſtigia retrorſum, when he went into Cacus den, ſo muſt we begin a poſteriori, from the back-parts of Iehovah, if ever we will underſtand the truth of this Quere; as, I find in my 2 Cor. 11. 14. The error of theſe dates. Rom. 8. 30. Gen. 19. 23. Virgil.

selfe the fruits of sanctification, therefore God hath justified me, therefore called me, therefore predestinated me, therefore I shall be saved; this is sure if the first be sure; so we are come to the touch-stone of this truth; the fruits of Gods spirit; by these fruits you may know, and I know no waies els, for you to know, whether God be with you, or not.

Two speciall fruits of Gods spirit.

But these fruits are very many, I will name two of the most principall of them.

1. That knowledge, which produceth faith;
2. That love, which proceedeth from this knowledge.

Knowledge of God and love of God must go together.

And both these must goe together, or els we cannot be with God, nor God with us; quia non potes aut amare quem non noveris, aut habere quem non amaveris; because it is impossible for thee, either to love, whom thou knoweſt not, or to injoy whom thou lovest not, saith Saint Bernard. And therefore

1. Saving knowledge.

1. Christ saith, this is eternall life to know thee to be the true God, and whom thou hast sent, Iesus Christ, Ioh. 17.3. for God being light, in whom is no darkneſse at all, if we dwell in darkneſse we cannot be with God: and therefore, if ignorance be the mother of devotion, I know not, I am sure it is a stranger from God, and God is with none of them that sacrifice with the Athenians ἀγνώστῳ θεῷ, to the unknowne God; But because God in himselfe is ἀρρητος, that is, tantus ut nec possit verbis enarrari, nec sensibus æstimari, so great that he cannot be shewed by any words, nor conceived in any of our understandings as Lactantius saith, therefore we must onely know him, as he hath revealed himselfe in his Word; or els, instead of knowing the true God, we shall but faine unto our selves false gods: and therefore they that heare not Gods Word, are not of God, as our Saviour testifieth, and God is not with them.

1 Iohn 1.5,6,7.

Act. 17.23.

Iohn 8.47.

2. Perfect love.

2. Because knowledge doth but bring us unto God, therefore we must have also love, if we would be united unto God; for seeing charity is a bond, yea the bond of perfection, as the Apostle calleth it, that tyeth, as man and wife, or man and man, so God and man together; therefore we must needs have this bond of love, or els we can never be united unto God; and this love of God must be a sincere and constant love; sincere, without hypocrisie; and constant, without apostacie; the sincerity of which love was typified in the High-priests mariage; for he was forbidden to marrie a widdow, a divorced woman and a whore; a widdow, because he had not her first love; a divorced woman, because hee had not her just love; and a whore, because he had not her whole love: And our love to God must be constant, that neither life nor death, nor any other thing may separate us from the love of God, as the Apostle saith.

Colos. 3.14.

Vide pet. Cunæum de repub. Heb. l. 2. c. 3. p. 194.

And that we deceive not our selves in this surest signe of Gods being with us; for every one thinks he loves God, we must know that, as Saint Gregory saith, probatio dilectionis exhibitio est operis; our love to God is seene in our lives and conversations; for if you love me, keepe my commandements; saith our Saviour. And therefore, if we be with our sinnes, God is not with us; for hee that is borne of God sinneth not, and he that committeth sinne is of the divell, saith the Apostle; and the holy spirit of discipline fleeth from deceit, and dwelleth not in the body subject unto sinne, saith the Wise man; and therefore Esay tells us plainely, that our transgressions have made a separation betwixt God and us: and our sinnes have hid his face from us, which is a lamentable thing: And this is that which makes χασμα μεγα, the great distance and inaccessible gulfe betwixt God and us. But that I should thinke such sinnes to be with any of you as separate God from you, God forbid; yet if any man fostereth in his bosome, oppression, envie, pride, swearing, drunkennesse, or the like, he may assure himselfe, God is not with him, and will not be, till Achans cursed thing, this filthy sinne be removed out of his heart, and, with the head of Sheba, throwne over the wall; for, as when Phocas, a wicked Emperour, thought to secure himselfe with the strength of his walls, a voice was heard from heaven, as Cedrenus saith, that said, if hee built his turrets, like the tower of Babylon, to the clouds; yet hee should perish; because there was alwaies

1 Iohn 3.8,9.

Esay 59.2.

Iosh. 7.

2 Sam. 20.22.

ἐνδον

ἐνδον τὸ κακον, a wicked traitor within, that is his ſinne, which would betray him; ſo it is moſt certaine that our ſinnes will deſtroy us, if we deſtroy not them, & Deus, quos vult perdere, dementat. And ſo you ſee, how to know, whether God be with us; if wee lead a holy and a godly life, cleanſing our ſelves from all wickedneſſe; Which if wee doe, as I hope wee all doe; then may wee enter upon the ſecond part of my Text: Who can bee againſt us? — 2 Cor. 7.1.

Secondly, Who? alas deere Saint Paul, doſt thou aske who can be? who cannot be? Geball, and Ammon, and Amalek, with them of Tyre, which have holpen the children of Lot, all our neighbours round about us; all forſooke thy ſelfe ô Paul, when thou ſtoodſt before Cæſar; and thou knoweſt the priests of Baal, which did eat at Ieſabels table, were foure hundred and fifty, and Elias that was zealous for the Lord of hoaſts was left alone; and our Saviour ſaith, you ſhall bee hated of all men, for my names ſake; of all men; a ſtrange thing! yea a mans enemies ſhall be of his owne houſhold: and doſt thou aske, who can be againſt us? — The ſecond part. Pſal. 83.7. — 2 Tim 4.16. — 1 Reg. 18.19.c.19. 10. Matth. 10.22.

But I will aſcend to the top of Gilgall, to diſcover the whole garriſon of the Philiſtines, and I find them divided into three regiments: under three great commanders: 1. The World. 2. The Fleſh. 3. The Divell. — Three regiments againſt us.

1. This world is a wilderneſſe of ſinne; the very region of death: under every ſtone there is a Scorpion, and in every buſh a fiery Serpent, in auro, in cibo, in omnibus laquei, there are ſnares in our cofers, ſnares in our diſhes, and ſnares in every thing, that we take in hand: ſometimes by proſperity, it ſeekes to allure us to forget our God; & periculoſior eſt blandus quam moleſtus; and it is then worſe when it fawneth, ſaith Saint Auguſtine; and ſometimes by adverſity, it laboureth to ſeparate us from God; And therefore, in hoc mundo non timere, non periclitari, impoſſibile eſt; to live in this world, and not to bee indangered by the world, is impoſſible; ſaith Saint Auguſtine. — 1. The world. How many waies it ſeeketh to deſtroy us.

2. Our owne fleſh, with the frailties of our owne natures, is, like Iobs wife, a boſome traytor and the greateſt enemy that we have; for the world is an exterior enemie, without us, but intus eſt equus trojanus, this our fleſh, de peccato nata, in peccato nutrita, ipſa origine nimis corrupta, & multo amplius prava conſuetudine vitiata; borne in ſinne, bred in ſinne, and ſetled in ſinne, as Saint Gregory ſaith, is like the Trojane horſe within our walles: & in ſinu noſtro Sinones, and the worſe traytors are within our boſomes; for Caine denied to be Cuſtos fratris, his brothers keeper; but we are worſe then Caine, not onely denying to be the keepers, but alſo indeavouring to be divells unto our neighbours, and Apollions to our ſelves, that is, deſtroyers of our own ſoules. And therefore the Saints of God feare no enemies ſo much as themſelves; and theſe civill warres, —— nullos habitura triumphos; a heavie caſe; when a houſe is divided, and a man cannot truſt his owne ſelfe, but his fleſh will betray his ſoule unto the divell, unleſſe he doth continually watch this carnall Dalilah, and with many ſighes and groanes ſubdue the ſame unto the ſpirit. — 2. The fleſh. Iob 2.9. How dangerous an enemy our own fleſh is. — Gen. 4.9. — Revel. 9.11. — Lucan pharſal. l. 1.

But, if you will goe with me a little further, I will, as Ezekiell ſaith, ſhew you greater abominations: I will diſcover you a knot of enemies, combined together in this one body of ſin; For — Ezek. 8.6.

1. The eyes, which ſhould behold the thing that is juſt, are become arch-traytors unto the ſoule, when by looking upon a woman, they cauſe the heart to luſt, and the man to commit adultery with her; and therefore, as κόρος ſignifieth, tam ancillam quam pupillam, ſo Saint Peter joyneth both together, ſaying, they haſt eyes full of adulteries, that is, wanton, or indeed wenching eyes. — 1. Eyes. — Matth. 5.28. — 2 Pet. 2.14.

2. The eares, which ſhould bee the conduit-pipes of knowledge, to conveigh faith into our ſoules, are too often made the impure tunnells to ſucke — 2. Eares.

Ephes 4.29. in σαπρὸν λογον, the very dreggs of all filthy communications.

3. Tongues. Act. 2.11. 3. Our tongues, which should set forth magnalia Dei, doe set on fire the whole frame of nature, to speake evill of them that are in authority, to disturbe the publique peace of states, and to set private men together by the eares.

4. Hands. 4. Our hands, which should worke the thing that is honest, doe effect nothing but wickednesse, to take bribes, to shed blood, and to doe all other acts of unrighteousnesse.

5. Hearts. 5. Our very hearts, though they be but very litle, a small lumpe of flesh, scarse inough to serve a kite for his breakfast; yet totus non sufficit orbis, the whole world is too little to satisfie their vast and exorbitant desires.

And that which makes the malady and malice thereof most incurable, is, the secretie and subtilty of their unsearchable wickednesse; for the heart of the sonnes of men is full of evill, and madnesse is in the same while they live, saith the Wise man: And therefore Apollodorus the tyrant, dreaming that he was flead by the Scythians, and that his heart was throwne into a boyling cauldron, heard his heart saying, I am the cause of all this my selfe; and Saint Basil, fled to the wildernesse, to shunne the vanities of the world, complaineth of his heart, saying, omnia reliqui, sed cor meum non reliqui; I have forsaken all, yet my heart will not forsake me; and I have temptations inough, because I have my heart; for though we never saw ill example, and should bee never tempted outwardly to any ill; yet our owne hearts would both tempt us and teach us all manner of ill; And therefore, seeing this body of ours, is but a body of sinne, a cage of uncleane birds, and a den of all beastly lusts, which fight against your soules; it is apparant, there be inough against us, whosoever is with us? And yet

Eccles. 9.3.

Plut. de tarda Dei vindicta circa medium.

1 Pet. 2.11.

3. The divell. 3. Besides all these, there is one more, the divell, who is the grand-captaine of all these; and he, like a roaring lyon, sometimes openly, seeketh to devoure us by extreame violence, and sometimes slily, like the subtle serpent, he seekes to creepe into our hearts by his most wicked suggestions; and alwaies malitiously he laboureth to destroy both body and soule; and we see how he stirreth up the glow-worme zeale of the factious, without knowledge; the subtill spirit of the Iesuites against our Church, beyond conscience, the greedy ambition of some others to be popular, to have applause for suffering for the common good, the drunken desire of the hereticke to be martyred, he cares not for what, and the repining discontents of many more, that are ever gaping, arripere ansam, to snatch up all occasions of necessities and inconveniences to make way for their presumptuous wickednesse, and to conspire together, to ruine both the head and members, both the Church and Common-wealth. And therefore, being thus invironed and begirt by vanity, trechery, subtiltie, and cruelty; O good God, what created power under heaven is able to dissolve that villany, which these base confederates have combined to effect.

Yet, if God be with us, as I assure my selfe he is, with your Gratious Majesty, your wise Counsellors and all your loyall subjects; then I will say to you, as Moses said to the Israelites, feare ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord, which he will shew to you to day; for the Egyptians, whom you have seene to day, you shall see no more for ever: the Lord shall fight for you; and ye shall hold your peace. For

Exod. 14.13:

1. Enemy overcome. John 16.33. Gal. 6.14. 1. Our Saviour tells us; he hath overcome the world; and Saint Paul saith, the world was crucified to him, and he to the world: and therefore the world could do no more hurt to him, then a crucified man can doe to us, just nothing; for though, hac domus antiqua, the common house of this world, if you please to understand it, be alwaies against us; yet God hath promised, and we have found the performance of it, to make Kings our nurcing Fathers, and Queenes our nurcing Mothers; and I pray God continue them such Fathers unto the Fathers of our Church, as they have beene hitherto.

2. The

2. The spirit helpeth the infirmities of our flesh, and he that searcheth the heart, knoweth what is the minde of the spirit, and will either graciously preserve us from sinne, and say to us as he did to Saint Paul, my grace is sufficient for thee; or els he will mercifully forgive us our sinnes, and say to us, as hee did to the poore man, thy sins are forgiven thee, be of good cheere.

2. Enemy overcome. Rom. 8. 26. 2 Cor. 12. 9.

3. For the divell, our Saviour saith, hee is cast out of doores, and Saint Paul saith, that Christ hath led captivity captive: and therefore wee need not feare him; because he that is in us is greater then he that is in the world, and if we resist him, hee will flie from us; for being now tied, like a dog in a chaine, he can never prevaile against us, nisi eivires ex vitijs nostris præbeamus, unlesse our selves yeeld him strength by our sinnes: And the Lord will destroy all that have ill will to Sion; and the counsell of Achitophel against good King David, the God of heaven will avert it to his owne destruction.

Matth 9. 2. 3 Enemy overcome. Iohn 12. 31. Ephes. 4. 8.

And therefore, when neither the world, nor the flesh, nor the divell, nor all the divels in the world can prevaile against them, that have God with them; I may well demand, who can be against them? or what is it that can separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Iesus? shall tribulation, or distresse, or persecution, or famine, or nakednesse, or perill, or sword? no, no, not any of these, not all these, not any thing; for we are more then conquerors through him that loved us, and is alwaies with us, for us, on our side; and they that strive against us, do but kicke against the pricks, and to fight against God, as Gemaliel saith; And to make it appeare more plaine to any vulgar sence, I will tell you a story, onely for the benefit of the application; of a poore man, like Naboth that served God truly, and trusted in him constantly, and had a little land, bordering upon the possessions of a wealthy and potent Knight, who, like Ahab, was sicke for the love of the poore mans tenement, because he denied to part with the same upon any termes; whereupon his Lady, like a painted Iesabell, bad her husband be of good cheere, for she would bring his desire to passe without delay; and to that end, she commanded two of the sonnes of Beliall, to take two of their masters best oxen, and secretly to shut them up in the poore mans barne; and the next day, after much search, the Constable finds them in this unsuspected place; so the poore man was fettered and carried to prison; and die, they say, he must for that which he never did; but his wife and children, that perceived the plot, to be for his land more then for his life, perswaded him to part with that, which they saw, he could not keepe, that he might keepe that which they were very sorry he should loose; he answered that he had ever served God, and never distrusted of his assistance; and therefore, that he would ever relie upon his helpe, and never doubt of his deliverance; then the Iurie heard his cause, the witnesses failed not to bring full proofe, and the guiltlesse man was found guilty; yet he like Iob still persisted in his innocency, and continued constant in the confidence of Gods promise, that God would not leave the righteous in the hand of the ungodly, nor condemne him when he is judged; but at last, when his deerest friend told him, the Iurie for life and death, were all agreed to find him guilty; then said he, surely God is dead, and the Knight shall have my land to save my life; so he did; and whatsoever money he had or could get, he would bestow on such cates, as would make a funerall for that God, which while he lived had ever beene his most faithfull friend; and as he intended to do the same, an old man, like Mercury, meets him, and desired him, before he made his funerall, which he could not dissuade him from, nor perswade him to beleeve, that God was an immortall spirit, which could not die, he would deliver that letter, which he gave him, into the hands of the Knight; which he did; and immediatly the Knight reading the contents, was like Ieroboam taken so that he could not stirre; then he called for the poore man, confessed his fault, restored his land, and rewarded him well for his great wrong; so the poore man said, now I see God may seeme to sleepe but he cannot die, and he will not suffer the righteous to fall for ever; for a while they may, but not for ever; and therefore happie are they that trust in God, and that have him to be their helper; for if God be with us, he will ap-

Rom. 8. 35.

Act 9. 7.

The legend of Gods funerall.

1 Reg. 21.

Verse 5.

Verse 10.

The horrible wickednesse of false witnesses.

Iob 2. 9.

Psal. 37. 34.

1 Tim. 1. 19.

1 Reg. 14. 4.

vide Psal. 145. 14.

point a guard of Angels to waite upon us; and though we should live in the world like the black-moore, qui in ortu solis positus, habet colorem noctis, that is, live in the face of all earthly dignities, and yet be esteemed no better then the very rubbish and refuge of men; yet if God be with us, his eyes will be upon us for our good, and a crowne of glory shall be laid up for us for evermore: O God what is man Psal. 8. 4. that thou art mindfull of him, or the sonne of man that thou so regardest him, thus, thus to be with him, to be for him?

But if God be not with us, all that is with us will availe us nothing; for in vaine Exod. 17. 11. doth Iosua lift up his sword to fight against Amalek, except Moses lift up his hand to pray for helpe from God; and in vaine do we watch and ward, digg and delve, do what we will, what we can, we shall loose both our labours and our Psal. 121. 4. selves, except the keeper of Israel, that doth neither slumber nor sleepe, be with us, to blesse us and to guide us in all our waies.

And, to invert the Question, if God be against us? who can be for us? I know none that can resolve it, but by answering, none: for as old Ely saith, if one man 1 Sam. 2. 25. sinne against another, the judge shall judge him, but if a man sinne against the Lord, who shall intreat for him? no counsell can prevaile against wisdome, no strength can overcome him that is Almighty.

And therefore, to end all, if our sins be with us, God is not with us; and we may be sure, they will consume us, if we forsake not them; if wicked men be with us, we may feare to be partakers of their plagues; but if God be with us, we shall want no manner of thing that is good; for as Philosophy told Seneca, that vir bonus sine Deo nemo est, no man can be good, no man can be happy without God; so Divinity tells us, that man is onely good, and shall be onely happy, which hath God, which is all in all, and is blessed for evermore, To whom be Glory and Honour and Immortality, both now and for ever, Amen.

Iehovæ Liberatori.

THE WAY TO HAPPINESSE.

Matth. 11. 28, 29, 30.

Come unto me all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you reſt.
Take my yoke upon you, and learne of me, for I am meeke and lowly in heart: and ye ſhall finde reſt unto your ſoules.
For my yoke is eaſie, and my burden light.

The Exordium. Plutarch. in vita Pyrrhi.

When Pyrrhus King of the Epirots, a moſt wiſe Prince and excellent Souldier, made warre againſt the Romans, a moſt learned and a potent people, and could neither by policie nor power ſubdue certaine holds that he expugned; he would ſend Cyneas a noble Orator, to perſwade them to yeeld, without any further reſiſtance; and ſo they did; and Pyrrhus would confeſſe that Cyneas gained more and better Cities by his eloquent tongue, than himſelfe had ſubdued by his powerfull ſword; Therefore this Orator was excellent, that could do ſo much; and this King was wiſe, to uſe ſuch meanes; for what ſweeter way, what better courſe to win Cities, than with faire words, without blowes, without bloud? So God the Father, being to warre againſt the world, doth ſend, not the rod of his power, but the word of his wiſdome; not a Warriour, but an Oratour; not becauſe he cannot ſubdue, but becauſe he would not undoe the ſame; and this Oratour is not Cineas, the ſcholler of Demoſthenes, but Chriſt, the wiſdome of God, to perſwade all men to yeeld unto his Fathers mercy, that ſo they might not fall into eternall miſeries; And theſe are the very words which he uſeth, Come unto me all you that be wearie and are heavy laden, and I will eaſe you.

The forme of ſpeech deliberative.

The forme of ſpeech is deliberative, whereby we purpoſe not wholly to praiſe any body, nor to determine any matter in controverſie; but to adviſe our neighbours to that thing, which we thinke moſt needfull for them; or to call them backe from thoſe follies, which we know do very much hinder their profit or eſtimation. And this text may well be called, The right way to true happineſſe: whereat every man doth moſt eagerly aime; becauſe man was created in the likeneſſe of God, in reſpect of eſſence, faculty, perpetuity; For as in God there is one eſſence and three diſtinct perſons, ſo in the ſoule of man there is one eſſence and three diſtinct powers, the memory, the underſtanding, and the will; which, according to Scotus, are eſſentially the ſame with the very eſſence of the ſoule, as the three perſons of the Godhead are really the ſame with the divine nature: and theſe faculties are given to us, that we might imitate God in righteouſneſſe and true holineſſe, as the Apoſtle ſheweth: Therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith, O anima mea, inſignata Dei imagine, deſponſata fide, dotata Spiritu, dilige eum a quo tantum dilecta es, & quære quærentem te; O my ſoule, formed after Gods image, eſpouſed to him by faith, and indued with his Spirit, love him that ſo much loved thee, and ſeeke him that doth ſo earneſtly ſeeke for thee; and Cicero ſaith, Sic mihi perſuaſi, ſic ſentio, cum tanta ſit celeritas animorum, memoria præteritorum, providentia futurorum, tot artes, tot ſcientiæ, tot inventa, non poſſe eam naturam, quæ res ipſas contineat, eſſe mortalem; So I have perſwaded my ſelfe, and ſo I thinke, that ſeeing the celerity or ſwiftneſſe of the ſoules of men is ſuch and ſo great in the memory of things paſt, in the providence and fore-ſight of things to come, and ſo many arts, ſciences and inventions are found out thereby, the ſame nature, which containeth all theſe things, cannot poſſibly be mortall: So Plato, in his Timæus, ſaith, anima immortalis eſt, & ſecundum quod vicerit paſſiones, vel victa fuerit, præmiabi ur vel punietur poſt hanc vitam; the ſoule of man is immortall, and as it vanquiſheth the paſſions of the body, or is thereby vanquiſhed, ſo it ſhall be rewarded or puniſhed after this life: So Seneca ſheweth the ſame thing; and S. Bernard ſaith, it is not onely immortall, but alſo of ſuch a noble nature, as that the ſame alone is capable of the divine nature; & licet cæteris omnibus occupari poteſt, impleri tamen non poteſt; quia capax Dei eſt, & quicquid Deo minus eſt, non eam adimplebit; and though it may buſie it ſelfe with all other things, yet cannot it be ſatisfied with any thing; becauſe it is capable of the Godhead, and whatſoever is leſſe than God, can never fill the ſoule of man; as the whole world, being round, can never fill the vaſt deſires of our hearts, that are triangle-wiſe.

How the ſoule is the image of God.

How the ſoule is the image of God.

Scotus ſuper prim. ſent. diſtinct. 2.

Ephes. 4. 24.

Aug. in citatur in gemma. prædicam.

That the ſoule is immortall.

Cicero de Senect.

Vide Colerum de animarum immortalitate.

Senec. in lib. de tranquil.

That every man naturally covets happineſſe.

Therefore man naturally aimes at happineſſe, and every one deſires to be bleſſed; but ſince the infernall raven hath picked out the eyes of our underſtanding with a ſplinter of the tree of knowledge, and now we do but (like the gooſe) lick up the water that glides upon the glaſſe, or, with the Sodomites, grope for the doore when we are not neare it; and yet the Philoſophers beſtowed much coſt, and tooke great paines to find out the ſame; Quia omnium Philoſophorum commune ſtudium erat, quærendo, ſtudendo, diſputando, vivendo, beatitudinem apprehendere; becauſe it was the common aime of all Philoſophers, by ſeeking, ſtudying, diſputing and living, to find out and lay hold on true happineſſe; as S. Auguſtine ſaith; and Boetius ſheweth the reaſon, which I have ſhewed to you before; Quia naturaliter eſt nobis inſerta veri boni, cupiditas; becauſe the deſire of truth and good is naturally ingraffed in every one: Therefore

Gen. 19. 11.

Aug. Tom. 6. Tract. de Epicur. & Stoic. c. 4.

Wherein the Philoſophers placed happineſſe. Boetius de conſolat. lib. 3.

1. In practique life.

1. The Academicks placed the ſame in practique vertues; and to that end, they wrote much of lawes and of common-wealths, and in that reſpect, propter eximiam rerum maximarum ſcientiam politici Philoſophi ſunt nominati, for the great knowledge they had in publique buſineſſes, they were called politique Philoſophers.

2. In the theory and underſtanding. Plutarch. de legend. & audiend. Poem. & Pont. p. 32. 30.

2. The Peripateticks placed their happineſſe in the intellectuall part and theory of divine and humane things; and, as Plutarch ſets it downe, they underſtand the chiefeſt happineſſe by an abſolute habitude and intire poſſeſſion of all good things, or rather an accompliſhed perfection of this life, holding on a proſperous courſe according to the rules of nature; or, as Cicero ſaith, they placed the ſame in the knowledge of true Philoſophie, which they divided into three parts.

1. Naturall, that is, phyſicall knowledge of the nature of things.
2. Rationall, which conſiſted in logicall diſcourſes.
3. Morall, which pertained to a civill life and converſation.

3. The

3. The Stoicks ſaid it was not onely in the theorie, or the knowledge of things, but eſpecially in the practice of all goodneſſe, and leading our lives according to the ſtrict rules of morall vertues, by deſpiſing the vanities of this world, and living ſo, as if we were alwaies dying; ſo Seneca ſheweth the chiefeſt happineſſe conſiſteth in a vertuous life, and the habit of a good mind, which is therefore vertuous, for none other end, but for vertues ſake; Quia bonum nihil niſi honeſtum, qua virtus mixta nullam requirit voluptatem; ſed ad bene vivendum ſeipſa eſt contenta; becauſe nothing can be good, but what is honeſt, than which vertue requireth none other pleaſure, but is fully ſatisfied and contented with it ſelfe, as Cicero ſaith.

3. In theorie and practice.

Seneca in lib. de vit. beat. c. 9.

Cicero de fin. bon. l. 1. & 2. & 3. & Off. l. 3. & Tuſc. l. 5. &c.

4 The Epicures went beyond this, and came neareſt unto the truth; for though ſome, as S. Auguſtine relates it, thought him the moſt ſenſuall, and of all men worthieſt to be rejected; becauſe he thought happineſſe to conſiſt in pleaſure, whereby he begot more diſciples and followers than all the other Philoſophers; becauſe, as the Poet ſaith, Trahit ſua quemque voluptas, we are all prone to follow after our pleaſures; yet Lactantius and Ioſephus ſay, it is true, he placed the chiefeſt happineſſe to conſiſt in pleaſure, but not that pleaſure, which is ſenſuall or carnall, but in that which is quidam flos fructuſq; virtutis, the flower and fruit of vertue; and ſo not onely Seneca, which commends him much in many of his Epiſtles, but alſo Clemens Alexandrinus, Tertullian, S. Ambroſe, and S. Hierome do ſeeme to underſtand the ſame; and not unlikely, if we conſider how ſparingly he himſelfe lived, how painefully he wrote ſo many volumes of Philoſophie, and how his Precepts tend to the ſame purpoſe; for he ſaid, vilibus cibis eſſe vivendum, & pane naturæ ſatisfieri; quicquid ſupra fuerit, ſpectare ad vitium voluptatis; men ought to live with meane diet, and to be contented with naturall bread, becauſe whatſoever is more than this, pertaineth to the vice of voluptuouſneſſe, as S. Hierome teſtifieth: and Seneca ſaith, this was one of Epicurus charge, that we muſt of neceſſity ſerve Philoſophie, to the end we may obtaine true liberty; and he concludeth his 11th. Epiſtle with the admonition of Epicurus, that we ought to chooſe ſome good man, and alwaies fixe him before our eyes, that we might ſo live and do all things, as if he alwaies lookt upon us; and Seneca ſheweth the reaſon; that the greateſt part of ſin is taken away, when a witneſſe is alwaies with him that would offend.

4 In the pleaſure ſpringing of the uprightneſſe of a practique life.

Lactant. inſtit. l. 3. 3. c. 1.
Ioſeph. antiq. l. 10. c. 14.

C. Alexand. ſtrom. l. 2 c. 12.
Tertull. in Apol. c. 38
Ambroſius Ep. 25. ad Eccl. ſ. Vercell.
Hieron. com. Iovin.

Idem ſup. Exech. l. 4 c. 13.
Senec. in Epiſt. 8.

Therefore it was not Epicurus his fault, that he is ſo generally condemned, but the miſtaking of the carnall and the vulgar ſort, that aſſoone as ever they heare the name of pleaſure, apprehend it preſently of the fleſhly luſts and momentany delights of this world; whereas he meant it indeed of that internall joy, which a vertuous man conceiveth for doing good; quia jucundi acti labores, for though labour is very painefull, yet we conceive a great deale of pleaſure and delight, when we have done our paines; and though finis laborum & bonorum operum eſt feciſſe; the reward of our works is ſufficient, that we have done them, yet the doing of them brings an infinite and unſpeakable content unto the doers; and ſurely this is the higheſt happineſſe that a meere man, with the ſharpeſt ſight of humane underſtanding, can imagine.

Epicurus his unhappineſſe to be miſ-underſtood.

The chiefeſt happineſſe of a meere man.

But if we compare this with true happineſſe, we ſhall find it even as nothing; becauſe it is imperfect, ever mixed with a great deale of griefe, and at the beſt, but very ſhort and momentany, when we are dead, this is gone from them that know none other life.

Therefore the good God, which made man, and made not death, but wiſheth him eternall life, ſeeing that when theſe men had done what they could, they could do no more but a little leſſen our puniſhment in hell, and never bring us to enjoy the happineſſe of heaven; He ſhewed his wayes unto Moſes, and his paths unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, Bleſſed is the man that is undefiled in the way, and walketh in the law of the Lord; Hoc fac & vives, if thou wouldeſt enter into life, keepe the commandements: So we have found the way to eternall bleſſednеſſe, not in Athens among the Philoſophers, which ſought it out by humane reaſon,

God ſheweth the right way to happineſſe.

Pſal. 103. 7.
Pſal. 119. 1.

Matth. 19. 17.

re aſon, but in Hieruſalem among the Prophets, which were ſent from God, and illuminated with divine light; and they will tell you the truth, this is the way, walke in it.

Eſa. 30.21.

But alas, alas, notwithſtanding all this, we are never the nearer unto happineſſe, but the furer of damnation; becauſe our feet are as faſt bound, as the tongue of Cræſus ſonne, that never ſpake from his birth; and we are like the creple at the poole of Bethesda; we behold the ſalvation of God with our eyes, but cannot ſtirre one foot towards the ſame; and therefore, though the way which the Father ſhewed on mount Sinai, and which the Prophets afterwards explaned unto the Iewes, was very good; yet by reaſon of our imbecillitie to walke, and impoſſibility to keepe it. God the Sonne deſcends to mount Sion, to ſhew us another way, a new and a living way, Hebr. 10.20. as the Apoſtle calls it, and which is indeed the onely way, beſides which there is none other; for I am the way, the truth and the life; I am the doore of the ſheepfold, I am the gate of heaven, and no man commeth unto the Father but by me.

How unable we are to walke in the way to happineſſe. Ioh. 5.7.

A new way to happineſſe.

Ioh. 14.6. Ioh. 10.7.

And therefore if you deſire your happineſſe, Come unto me all you that are weary and heavy laden, and I will eaſe you.

Wherein firſt I would wiſh you to obſerve the differences betwixt this way, which Chriſt and his Apoſtles preached, and the other way, which the Father and the Prophets publiſhed; For

The differences betwixt the old and new way.

That was a way of workes, this of faith; that of feare, this of love; that of ſhadowes, this of the ſubſtance; that more remiſſe, this more ſtrict; that was only ſhewed to the Iewes, this both to the Iewes and Gentiles.

The ſame God the author of both wayes.

And this made ſome heretiques to doubt, whether both theſe wayes were ſhewed by the ſame God, when we find ſuch differences and diverſities betwixt them.

Aug. in l. de vera relig. cap. 17.

But to this S. Auguſtine anſwereth, Quiſquis ideo negat utrumq; teſtamentum ab uno Deo eſſe poſſe, &c. Whoſoever therefore doth deny both Teſtaments or both theſe wayes to proceed from one and the ſelfe ſame God; becauſe our people are not tied to uſe the ſame Rites, Ceremonies and Sacraments, as the Iewes were; he may as well ſay, that the ſame juſt and wiſe houſholder cannot command one thing to thoſe ſtubborne ſervants, whom he ſeeth it beſt and judgeth it meeteſt and moſt profitable for them, to be held under by the ſtricteſt lawes and hardeſt ſervice; and another thing to thoſe milder and better natur'd men, whom he pleaſeth to adopt to the ſtate and degree of children; and if the precepts of life do trouble him, quod in veteri Lege minora, in Evangelio majora proponuntur, that the leſſer duties are commanded in the Law, and the greater in the Goſpell, and that under greater puniſhment, as you may ſee by comparing theſe places in the margent together, and therefore is brought hereby to thinke, utrag; ad unum Deum non pertinere, that both theſe wayes, and both theſe precepts do not pertaine to one and the ſelfe ſame God; he may as well be troubled (ſaith this Father) when he ſeeth the ſelfe ſame Phyſitian to cauſe his ſervants to adminiſter one kind of phyſicke to thoſe, whom he judgeth weake and very deſperately ſicke, and doth himſelfe adhibite another kind of phyſicke to thoſe, whom he ſeeth ſtronger, and of abler conſtitutions; for, as the art of phyſicke is ſtill the ſame, and doth no wayes admit of any change or alteration, and yet changeth her precepts and potions, according to the diſpoſitions of the patients; becauſe our ſickneſſes and diſeaſes are mutable: Even ſo the divine providence, though it be the ſame, altogether immutable and unchangeable, yet doth it variouſly help and provide for the helpe of his mutable creature, & pro diverſitate morborum, alijs alia jubet aut vetat, and according to the diverſity of our diſeaſes, he doth command or forbid diverſe things to diverſe kinds of men, that he may reduce us (which tend to nothing, or aime indeed at worſe than nothing, at our owne deſtruction) from that vice which brought in death, and from that death which brings damnation, to eſtabliſh us in our former ſtate, and to make us partakers of his divine nature, and of our own eternall happineſſe.

Mat. 5.22. Deut. 5.17.

Mat 18.8. Deut. 27.& c. 28.

Ut ari medicinæ, cum eadem maneat, nec ullo pacto illa mutetur, mutat tamen præcepta languentibus, quia mutabilis eſt noſtra valetudo; ita divina providentia, cum ſit ipſa omnino incommutabilis, mutabili tamen creaturæ variè ſubvenit, & pro diverſitate morborum alijs alia jubet aut vetat.

Though

Though therefore the ſame God ſhewed both theſe wayes, yet herein we taſte his mercies and his goodneſſe the more, that he ſheweth unto us the eaſier and the ſweeter way, which now, by the aſſiſtance of the ſame good God, I am more particularly to ſhew unto you.

It is no leſſe difficulty to contract the ſumme of theſe three Verſes into one Sermon, than it is facility to compoſe three Sermons upon this one text; yet the ſweet connexion and dependance of each point with the other, ſicut unda ſequitur undam, that as the waves do follow, one in the necke of the other, makes me to connect the choiceſt points of all theſe words, and to draw them all within the compaſſe of one little houre.

To contract as difficult as to inlarge.

The parts hereof are ſpecially three, { 1. A Precept, 2. A Promiſe, 3. A Proofe.

Three eſpeciall parts.

A Precept, that teacheth us what we ſhould do; a Promiſe, that ſheweth us what we ſhall have; and a Proofe, to perſwade us to do the duty, that we may obtaine the benefit.

1. The Precept is threefold, { 1. Come to me, 2. Take my yoke upon you, 3. Learne of me.

1. The precept is threefold.

2. The Promiſe is twofold, { 1. I will eaſe you, 2. You ſhall find reſt for your ſoules.

2. The promiſe is twofold.

3. The Proofe, or reaſon, why we ſhould come and take his yoke upon us, is likewiſe twofold, { 1. Becauſe his yoke is eaſie. And 2. His burden is light.

3. The proofe is twofold.

Theſe are the parts and the parcells of this text. I will handle them, by Gods helpe, as they are ſet downe in order.

The firſt Precept is a ſpeciall invitation of all men to come to Chriſt; where we muſt conſider theſe three points, { 1. The inviter. 2. The invited. 3. To what they are invited.

The firſt precepe containeth three points.

1. There be many that invite us to come unto them, as ſpecially, { 1. The wicked. 2. The Divell. } { 3. The godly. 4. The Son of God. } For

1. Whereof foure ſorts.

1. The wicked ſay, Come, caſt in thy lot with us, and let us have but one purſe, let us lie in wait for blood, Prov. 1. 11.

2. The Divell ſaith, Come, fall downe and worſhip me, and I will give all theſe things to thee, Matth. 4. 9.

3. The godly ſay with the Prophet David, O come let us worſhip and fall downe, and kneele before the Lord our Maker. Pſal. 95. 1. & 6.

4. Chriſt ſaith, Come unto me all you that labour and are heavy laden, and I will eaſe you. So you ſee how every one, clamat undiq; veni.

But though in other caſes, Deliberandum eſt diu, quod ſtatuendum eſt ſemel, we ought to conſider well before we undertake any buſineſſe of great moment; yet in this we may ſoone reſolve whom we ought to follow; becauſe, as S. Bernard ſaith, Mundus deficiet, caro inficiet, Diabolus interficiet, & Chriſtus reficiet; if we liſten to the wicked, the wiſe man tels us, deſtruction and unhappineſſe are in their wayes, and the way of peace they have not knowne: if we follow the Divell, he will entertaine us but with a ſorrie banquet, where two of his beſt diſhes are weeping and gnaſhing of teeth: But if we hearken unto the godly, they will ſend us unto Chriſt, and if we come to him, he will bring us to his Father, where we ſhall have the fulneſſe of all joyes, and the abundance of all pleaſures for evermore.

Whom we ought to follow.

Pſal. 14. 7.

Mat. 8. 12.

Pſal. 16. 11.

2. The invited are, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, where you ſee { 1. The generality of the invitation 2. The quality of the invited } are expreſſed.

2. The invited. Two things obſervable:

1. As he made all, ſo he calleth all, he ſeeketh all, he excepteth none; ſo Luther, Melanchthon and Bullinger; ſo the Apoſtle, he came to bring all to the knowledge

1. The generality of the invitation.

1 Tim. 1. 4. Eccleſiaſt. 40. 1.

knowledge of the truth; and ſo my Text ſaith, all that labour, therefore all that live; for great travell is created for all men, and an heavie yoke upon every child of Adam; and ſo ſaith holy Iob; & omnes laboramus, and we doe all labour, ſaith Saint Auguſtine, quia omnes ſumus mortales lutea vaſa portantes, quæ faciunt invicem anguſtias; becauſe all of us are mortall men, which do beare theſe veſſells of clay, that make troubles and anguiſhes one to another.

Auguſt. de verbis Domini.

That Chriſt calleth not the proud righteous men.

Ob. But you will ſay, he came not to call the righteous, that is, as Marlorat and others of our late interpreters doe expound it, ſuch proud Phariſees as are righteous in their owne conceits, but ſinners, that is, ſuch poore Publicans as do perceive their miſerable eſtate and ſee the weight of their manifold ſinnes, unto repentance; ſo he calleth them that are thirſty, and pronounceth a bleſſing to them that hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſſe, but not to them that are full and feele not the want of the ſpirituall food: So Aquinas ſaith, nullis Chriſtus prodeſt niſi ſitientibus, & qui proprias miſerias cognoſcunt; Chriſt availeth nothing to any man but to ſuch as hunger and thirſt after Chriſt; and ſo ſay all Divines both antient and moderne; therefore Chriſt came not to call all but onely ſuch as are qualified to make anſwer.

How Chriſt calleth all men.

Sol. To which I confeſſe with Aquinas, none receiveth benefit by Chriſt, but ſuch as hunger and thirſt after Chriſt; yet to ſay he calleth none but ſuch as perceive their ſinnes and ſeeke for a Saviour, is a falſe gloſſe that corrupts the Text; for had he never called Adam till Adam had ſought after him, he had beene uncalled to this very day; and ſo of all the ſonnes of Adam; had he not ſought after them till they had ſeene their ſinnes, I am ſure Matthew had never left his receipt of cuſtome, nor Abraham his fathers houſe, nor Saint Paul perſecuting of Gods Church, nor any other man his ſinfull waies, ſo long as he had lived upon the earth: Therefore though he ſaith, I have beene found of them that ſought me not, yet he never ſaid he was found of them which he ſought not; becauſe he ſeeketh all, calleth all, and offereth grace to all; yea as Salomon ſaith, he calleth them that will not anſwer, he ſtretcheth out his hand to a gaine-ſaying people, and hee ſheweth his way to them that moſt obſtinately ſay, we will not walke in it; ſo Saint Chryſoſtome commenteth upon my Text, that he biddeth not this man or that man, ſed omnes qui curis, qui doloribus, qui peccatis laborant, but all men which doe labour with cares, ſorrowes, and ſinnes, to come to him; and Saint Auguſtine ſaith, qui nos tanto pretio redemit, non vult perire quos emit, nec emit quos perdat ſed quos vivificat, he that hath redeemed us with ſo great a price, would not have them to periſh whom he bought, neither hath he bought them whom he would deſtroy, but whom he would rather vivifie and ſave: therefore he came to call, not the righteous, wherein they were righteous, to repent them of their righteouſneſſe, but rather to perſevere in all uprightneſſe, nor effectually to call them that are righteous in their owne conceits, though ſufficiently he calleth them often enough to make them without excuſe, as he ſaith himſelfe, many are called but few are choſen; but he calleth ſinners, that is, either all men, becauſe all men are ſinners, or thoſe ſinners, whom formerly he had called by the law and the Prophets to ſee their ſinnes, and had ſeene them, he now calleth by his grace unto repentance; for we muſt underſtand that there are divers kinds and degrees of calling us unto God, as

Gen. 3. 9. Matth 9. 36 Gen. 12. 1. Acts 9. 4. Eſay 65. 1. Pro. 1. 24. Chryſoſt. to 3. ho. 39 in Matth. p. 241. a. Aug. to. 10. de temp. Ser. 109. p. 838. c.

In what ſence Chriſt calleth not the righteous.

Matth. 22. 14.

That we are called to many things.

1. To ſerve God.
2. To ſee our ſins.
3. To repent us of our ſins.
4. To forſake our ſins.
5. To lead a new life.
6. To beleeve in Chriſt.
7. To attaine unto eternall life.

Called three waies.

And to theſe ends, he calleth us divers waies; as externally

1. By the plaine voice of nature.
2. By the ſhrill ſound of the law.
3. By the ſweet melody of the Goſpell.

For

1. By nature.

1. The creatures tell us, there is a God, whom we ſhould ſerve and praiſe; and and the Philoſophers, natures ſchollers, have often ſhewed to us this God, and called upon all men to come unto him.

2. By the law.

2. Becauſe the viſible creatures did not bring us to the inviſible things of God, that is, to acknowledge his eternall power and God-head, and thereby to ſerve him, and to be thankefull, but became vaine in our imaginations and our fooliſh hearts were blinded; therefore God ſent Moſes to give us that law, which ſhould teach us, what to doe, and ſhew our ſinnes, when we did it not; quia per legem eſt agnitio peccati; and then he ſent his Prophets, which did continually call upon us, to keepe theſe lawes and to obſerve theſe ſtatutes; or if we did not ſo, to ſhew what curſes were due to us for our ſinnes, as you may ſee, Deut. Chap. 27. & Chap. 28. &c.

Rom. 1. 21.

Rom. 3. 20.

Pſal. 105. 44.

3. By the Goſpell.

3. If we will anſwer to theſe callings and begin to ſee our own miſerable caſe, then Chriſt calls us unto him, and promiſeth to eaſe us from all paine, and deliver us from all ſinne, if we will beleeve in him; and ſo the Apoſtles and the preachers of the Goſpell, doe moſt earneſtly call upon us to come to Chriſt, if we do ſee our ſinnes; or els they perſwade us to ſee our ſins, that they may fit us to be perſwaded to come to Chriſt.

No man under heaven but he is called ſome way or other.

And there is no man under heaven but he is called ſome of theſe waies, and by ſome of theſe meanes, to come to Chriſt, to receive ſalvation for his ſoule; not a reprobate man in hell but he was called to come to heaven, and he is damned there, becauſe he would not anſwer here; for doth he not call all men to righteouſneſſe, when their owne conſciences tell them they ſhould not ſinne? and when they ſinne, doth he not call them to repentance, when their hearts accuſe them and condemne them for their evill doings? nay more, did he not warne Iudas not to ſinne, when he ſaid, one of you ſhall betray me? and did he not call him to ſee his ſinnes, when he ſaid Iudas betrayeſt thou the ſonne of man with a kiſſe? So did he not call the Scribes and Phariſees (which all the fathers underſtand by thoſe righteous men, whom he came not to call to repentance) to ſee their ſinnes, when they were piped unto, and they danced not; and when hee cried Woe unto you Scribes, Phariſees, Hypocrites, and they regarded it not.

Matth. 26. 21.

Luk. 22. 48.

Matth. 11. 17. & c 23. 13.

How God proceedeth orderly after the rule of nature.

But, becauſe it is the rule of nature, ad ſummum niſi a principio pervenire non poſſe, not to come unto the top but by degrees; therefore God, which is the God of order, brings none to heaven per ſaltum, as graſhoppers, and ſome Vniverſities that ſo fondly conferre degrees, per cumulationem graduum; but he will have us to tread on every ſtaire and ſtep of Iacobs ladder, that none may thinke to find a readier way to heaven then another: therefore if any man puts a ſtop in his owne way, by his obſtinacy and wickedneſſe in the firſt place, or in any other ſtep of this ladder, he is never called to any further degree of grace, till that ſame obſtacle be firſt taken away; ſo the Apoſtles never perſwaded thoſe Iewes, that crucified Chriſt, to repent them of their ſinnes, till they had pricked their hearts and opened their eyes, to make them acknowledge themſelves to be ſinners; neither did they begin to preach the faith of Chriſt, till they ſaw them ſorry for their ſinnes: ſo Chriſt might truly ſay, and we ſay ſo too, we never call the righteous Phariſees to repentance; becauſe we have ſo often called them to ſee their owne unrighteouſneſſe, which is primus ad fidem aditus, the firſt ſtep to faith, as Saint Auguſtine calls it, and they would not anſwer.

Gen. 28. 12.

Our ſins doe ſtop the progreſſe of grace. Act. 2. 37.

Ob. I but our Saviour thanketh God, he hid his myſteries from the wiſe and prudent, and revealed them unto babes; therefore queſtionleſſe he deſireth not to call all men unto the knowledge of his truth.

Matth 11. 25.

Sol. I anſwer with Saint Chryſoſtome as briefly as it is fully; non quia ſapientes non cognoverunt gaudet, ſed quia parvuli perceperunt lætatur; he doth not rejoyce that the Wiſe men knew not theſe things, but he is glad that the babes and little ones did perceive theſe things; becauſe as Saint Auguſtine ſaith, non inſtituit Deus quod obeſſet, ſi homo ſibi obeſſe noluiſſet, ſed potius inſtituit quod prodeſſet, ſi homo credere voluiſſet; neq; voluit quod non potuit, ſed ut aut homo obediens eſſet,

Chryſoſt. to. 3. hom. 39. in Mat. p. 239. b

Aug. to 6. contra adverſar. leg. & propheta. c. 14. p. 595.

aut inobediens impune non eſſet; God ordained not any thing that ſhould hurt, if man would not hurt himſelfe; but he appointed that which ſhould helpe us, if man would beleeve in him; neither hath he willed what he could not effect, but that either man ſhould be obedient, and ſo happy, or if he would be diſobedient, he ſhould not be unpuniſhed: A moſt excellent ſaying to be continually conſidered. So you ſee whom he inviteth; all; and if all do not come, culpa non eſt vocantis ſed renuentium.

Aretius in hunc loc.

I might uſe many arguments to confirme the ſame, I will onely urge this one; to come to Chriſt, as all interpreters doe expound it, and as preſently I ſhall more fully ſhew unto you, is to beleeve in him; but all men are called to beleeve in him; therefore, all are called to come unto him; the minor is thus proved; if all be not called to beleeve in him, then is it no ſinne, not to beleeve in him; for why ſhould it be a ſinne in men, not to beleeve he calleth them, when he doth not call them? but when the Comforter ſhall come, (ſaith our Saviour) hee will reprove the world of ſinne, of righteouſneſſe, and of judgement; of ſinne, becauſe they beleeve not in me, Ioh. 16.8,9. therefore, either God is unjuſt to reproove the world of ſinne, which is moſt blaſphemous to imagine, or he did moſt graciouſly ſend his Sonne to call all the world unto him.

Ioh. 16. 8.

But here you muſt remember, all this is to be underſtood of outward callings; which though it be done never ſo faithfully by the creatures and the Preachers of Gods Word, yet it can never availe any thing, to bring men unto Chriſt, untill men be inwardly called by Gods ſpirit, which doth open our hearts, as it opened the heart of Lydia, and gives us underſtanding, as he did unto the Apoſtles, that we may underſtand the Scriptures; the other callings can make us without excuſe, as the Apoſtle ſheweth unto the Romanes, but this calling onely is able to bring us unto grace; the former be ſufficient, for thoſe ends to which they are appointed, but this latter muſt be added to make the other effectuall, that we may be ſaved.

Of this internall calling, See more in my Treatiſe of The delights of the Saints.

And this calling of men by Gods ſpirit is not extended unto all men, unleſſe you meane it, remiſſiori gradu non efficaci modo; in a lower degree, and not after an effectuall manner, but onely unto them, to whom God appointed it from the beginning; becauſe, as the Apoſtle ſaith, whom God did predeſtinate, them he alſo called, that is, ſo effectually that they doe yeeld unto their calling, and whom he called, that is, ſo called, them he alſo juſtified; and whom he juſtified, that is, truly juſtified in deed and not in ſhew, them he alſo glorified, that is, here by the progreſſion of grace, and hereafter by the participation of glory. And ſo much for the generality of the invitation.

Rom. 8. 30.

2. The quality of the invited.

2. The qualities of the invited are expreſſed in theſe words, yee that labour and are heavie laden; Touching which, Saint Hilary, expounding both together, ſaith, legis difficultatibus laborantes & peccatis ſeculi oneratos, adſe vocat; he calleth them that laboured in the difficulties of the law and were burthened with the ſinnes and iniquities of this world. Saint Hierom and Euthimius ſay he meaneth them, qui laborant in operibus peccati & eorum pondere onerati ſunt, which doe labour in the workes of ſinne and are burthened with the waight of their tranſgreſſions; becauſe ſometimes labour ſignifieth our paines-taking in ſinne, as where the Pſalmiſt ſaith, tu laborem & irritationem aſpicis; which we tranſlate, thou beholdeſt ungodlineſſe and wrong; and againe, ſingens laborem ſuper ſtatuto; id eſt, impietatem & peccatum immiſcens doctrinæ ſuæ; Theophylact, by them that labour, underſtandeth the Iewes, which laboured and were buſied in the obſervation of the lawes, ſtatutes, and ordinances of God; and by them that are laden, he underſtandeth the Gentiles, that were burthened with the waight of their tranſgreſſions: and Abulenſis ſaith, labor eſt quod agimus, onus quod ſuſtinemus; that is a labour which we doe, and that is a burthen which we beare and ſuſtaine; Saint Chryſoſtome, Ianſen: and others by theſe two words, labour and laden, do underſtand all kinde of griefe, ſorrowes and miſeries whatſoever, as you may ſee in Pſal. 6. & Pſal. 69, &c.

1. Some expound both theſe words of one thing that is, ſin.

Pſal. 10. 14.

2. Others by theſe two words underſtand two things.

3. Others underſtand theſe two words of all miſeries.

But

BVt if we looke into the true ſignification of the words, we ſhall the better underſtand what is the meaning of our Saviour; for though κοπος ſignifieth any labour, exerciſe or travell; yet κοπιαω betokeneth a painefull labour unto wearineſſe, as being the conſequent of labour, which is αἰτιον τῦ κοπε, the cauſe of wearineſſe; as where the Lord ſaith, Remember what Amalek did unto thee, when thou waſt faint and wearie: and ſomtimes, eſt actio cum moleſtia conjuncta, ſaith Ariſtotle, it is uſed to expreſſe the variety of tribulations and calamities, as where the Apoſtle ſaith, Even to this preſent houre we both hunger and thirſt, and are naked and buffeted, & have no certain dwelling place; καὶ κοπιωμεν ἐργαζομενοι ταις ἰδιαις χερσι; and labour working with our hands. So in 1 Tim. 4. 10. & 2 Cor. 11. 27 and πεφορτισμενοι, ſignifieth to be moſt heavily laden, as under an inſupportable burden, from which, without ſome preſent reliefe, nothing but a fearefull diſſolution is to be expected, and it is uſed for all kinds of grievances, difficulties and calamities: ſomtimes for tyrannie and all kind of externall oppreſſion, as where the Lord ſaith, thou haſt broken the yoke of his burthen, and the ſtaffe of his ſhoulder, the rod of his oppreſſor, as in the day of Midian, Eſa. 9. 4. That is, thou haſt delivered thy people from the hard and intolerable ſervitude of the Aſſyrians, ſo where he ſaith, I will bring you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians, and I will rid you out of their bondage, Exod. 6. 6. And ſo our Saviour uſeth it where he ſaith, They bind heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, and lay them on mens ſhoulders, but they themſelves will not move them with one of their fingers, Matth. 23. 4. Sometimes the duty or office of governing, judging and teaching the people, is called a burden; and ſuch a burden, as is not eaſily borne; for ſo Iethro telleth Moſes, The government and the guiding of the people is too heavy for thee, thou art not able to performe it thy ſelfe alone; and ſo Moſes confeſſeth in Deut. 1. 12. ſaying, How can I my ſelfe alone beare your cumbrance, and your burden, and your ſtrife? And ſo all Kings and Magiſtrates can teſtifie what a burden it is to governe a multitude of unruly people; the Prophet David compares it to the appeaſing of the ſeas, which none can do without the ſpeciall aſſiſtance of the allmighty God, when he ſaith, Thou ruleſt the raging of the ſea, and the noiſe of his waves, and the madneſſe of thy people; and the Lord himſelfe calleth the office of the Levites a burden; yea ſuch a burden, as S. Paul cries under it, πρὸς ταῦτα τις ἱκανος; Who is ſufficient to beare it? Angelicis humeris formidandum, it being able to make Angels ſhoulders to ſhrinke under it, as Eraſmus ſaith; Somtimes by a metaphor from the analogie of politicall burdens, it is uſed in ſpirituall things; So, where the Apoſtle biddeth us to beare one anothers burden, S. Auguſtine and S. Ambroſe do expound it of the infirmities of our neighbours; So the Law is called a burden that neither we nor our fathers were able to ſupport, Acts 15. 10. So where the Apoſtle ſaith, every one ſhall beare his owne burden, S Baſil, Origen and S. Hierom do interpret the ſame of our ſinnes: and the Prophet David ſaith, My wickednеſſes are gone over my head, and are like a ſore burden too heavy for me to beare, Pſal. 38. 4. And truly our ſinnes are heavy burdens indeed, ſine pondere habentia pondus, that have a mighty weight, though we perceive not the weight thereof: for iniquity ſitteth upon a talent of lead, Zach. 5. 7. And God ſaith, our ſinnes preſſeth him, as a cart is preſſed that is full of ſheaves; and they lay ſo heavy upon Chriſt his ſhoulders, that they made him ſweat the drops of bloud, and if we caſt them not from us, they will preſſe us downe to hell; and as ſinne, ſo the puniſhment of ſinne, in what manner ſoever it be inflicted upon us, is likewiſe called a burden, as S. Hierom ſheweth; ſo the burden of Babylon ſignifieth the puniſhments, croſſes and calamities wherewith God had plagued Babell; and this burthen of puniſhment, though it be not ſo heavy, yet is it as generall as the burden of ſinne; becauſe great travell is created for all men, and the whole world is but a low waterie ground, wherein all men are like the children of Iſrael, lifting up their voices and weeping; becauſe they are in Bochim; that is, in a place full of weepers, and every one hath his rowle ſpread before him, which is written within and without, lamentations, and mournings.

The word ſignifieth
1. Painfull labour.

Deut. 25. 17, 18.

2 The variety of tribulation.

1 Cor. 4. 11, 12. Iuug 10. 16. Anguſtiata eſt anima mea propter laborem Iſrael. i. ob calamitates & infortunia eius.

πεφορτισμενοι ſignifieth the burden
1. Of externall oppreſſion. Exod 5. 6.

Mat. 23. 4.

2. Of governing and inſtructing the people. Exod. 18. 18.

Deut. 1. 12.

Pſal. 89. 9, 10.

& Pſal. 65. 7.

Num 4. 15. 2 Cor. 2. 16.

3. Of infirmities.
4. Of the law. Aug. 83. q. 1. & de verb. Apoſt. 21, 22. Amb. Hex. 12. & ſup. Pſal. 118. Ser. 15.

Baſil. regul. brevior. 198. & ſup. Pſal. 37. Origen. ſup. Numb. Hom. 3. & ſup. Pſal. 77. Hieron. ſup. Eſa. 14.

5. Of ſinne. Amos 2. 13.

Luke 22. 44.

6. Of puniſhments. Hieron. ſup. Amos 2. 13. Eſa. 13. 1.

mournings, and woes; and therefore every one is clothed, either in blacke mourning weeds for the loſſe of others, the father for the ſon, as David did for Abſolon, I would to God I had died for thee, as if he cared for nothing els, but as the Poet ſaith,

Omnis in Aſcanio chari ſtat cura parentis;

The ſonne for the father, as Ioſeph did for Iacob, the husband for his wife, as Abraham for Sara, the brother for his brother, as S. Bernard for Gerardus, or one friend for another, as Nazianzen for S. Baſill: Or els he is arrayed in crimſon red, for the ſufferings of himſelfe, ſcourges, perſecutions and afflictions; This is the lot of all the ſonnes of Adam.

Ferarius in Philip. Ciceron. p. 2371. Aug. de verb. Apoſt. ſer. 24.

And ſo you ſee the deſcription of them which our Saviour calleth, Qui laborant, non qui otioſi, & qui onerati ſunt, non laudibus, ut ait Livius, non commoditatibus, ut Terentius, non promiſſis, ut Saluſtius, ſed peccatis & miſerijs mundi, ut Auguſtinus; that is;

1. They that painfully labour in the works of their calling.
2. They that are oppreſſed with the waight of the Law, and the burden of their ſinnes.
3. They that are wearied with the miſeries and afflictions of this world.

Deut. 25. 17.

But as Amalek reſiſted the children of Iſrael in their journey towards the land of promiſe, ſo the Divell laves many obſtacles in our way, to hinder us from Foure obſtacles that do hinder us to go to Chriſt.

going to Chriſt, but eſpecially { 1. A ſupine idleneſſe. 2. A phariſaicall uprightneſſe. 3. A delight in wickedneſſe. 4. The ſweetneſſe of all worldly pleaſures. } For

1. Supine idleneſſe

1. God calleth them that labour; and no wonder; for though he reſted from the workes of creation, yet my Father worketh, and laboureth, though without wearineſſe, to this day; and when he made man, he placed him in Paradiſe, not to be idle, but to labour, and to dreſſe the garden wherein he was; and ſince the ejection of man out of this Paradiſe of pleaſure, hoc proprium & peculiare omnium hominum eſt, labores ſuſtinere; this is the proper and peculiar duty of all men to labour, ſaith Euthym: becauſe man is borne to labour, as the bird is brought forth to flie, ſaith the Sonne of Syrach; and the Apoſtle ſaith, He that will not worke and labour, let him not eat: and yet the Prophet ſpeaking of the wicked, ſaith, in labore hominum non ſunt, they ſit all day idle; and as Iob deſcribeth them, they ſpend their whole life in pleaſure: but if we will labour and take paines, God loves the ſame ſo well, that he will bleſſe our labours, that we ſhall reape an infinite benefit thereby, profit, glory, joy: juſtus ac honeſtus labor honoribus, præmijs, ſplendore decoratur, Cicero de Oratore, lib. 1. For as in worldly affaires, the ſlothfull hand bringeth poverty, ſo manus fortium divitias parat, the hand of the diligent maketh rich; therefore Democritus, ſeeing a young man taking paines, ſaid, optimum ſenectuti condis opſonium, thou provideſt good food for thine old age; ſo in arts and liberall ſciences, it is almoſt incredible to relate, what admirable effects dull wits have produced by continuall paines; when the ſharpeſt apprehenſions, being dedicated to idleneſſe, have brought forth nothing but a few flaſhes of delightfull conceits, and no profitable matter of any ſolid ſubſtance: And no wonder; becauſe your quicke wits (muliebre ingenium) are but like Venice-glaſſes, to make a faire ſhew, but would ſoone cracke if they were put to any great diſtreſſe, to compoſe any great worke of any moment; they are like the flame, that will not laſt; or like the ſharpe edge of a little pen-knife, that may ſerve to pare a quill, but not to ſquare ſticks of any ſubſtance; but your laborious heads have left the voluminous works, they onely have with Hannibal paſſed over the Alpes, and pierced through the rocks, and left the monuments of their indefatigable labours to thoſe that followed after; and that dexterity of wit, which nature ſeemed to denie them, they have not only parallel'd, but alſo excelled by their induſtry; for you may read it in the life of Demoſthenes, that being but meanely witted, and unapt by nature,

The benefit of labour. 1. Profit.

Your ſharp wits, what they are like.

yet

nature, yet by great paines and labour he excelled all others, and became one of the rareſt ornaments of all the world for eloquence and underſtanding of thoſe things he vndertooke: and the reaſon is rendred by Vegetius, Omnes artes omniaq; opera quotidiano uſu & jugi exercitatione proficiunt; becauſe all arts and all works are bettered and perfected by daily uſe and exerciſe: and therefore he ſaith, Neq; longitudo ætatis, aut annorum numerus artem bellicam tradit, ſed continua exercitationis meditatio, quæ ſæpenumero ſolet præſtare victoriam; it is not the length of age, or multitude of yeares, that can teach the military art, but a continuall exerciſe, which moſt commonly gaines the victory; ſo in all things, labor omnia vincit; and as Manilius ſaith,

——longa dies acuit mortalia corda,
Et labor ingenium miſeris dedit; ——

Labour will overcome all things, and paines-taking will produce a moſt plentifull harveſt, and bring quick conceits into the dulleſt heads: therefore many of the Heathen did adore labour as a god, becauſe it brought ſuch admirable effects to paſſe, as Cicero ſaith, de divinat. l. 3 p. 339. a.

And as we find profit, ſo we ſhall reape glory and praiſe by our labours, as Cicero ſaith, Epiſt. l. 2 p. 22 a. Herculi duri celebrant labores, the labours of Hercules made him famous; and as Seneca ſaith,

Ultimus cœlum labor in reflexo
Suſtulit collo, pretiumq; rurſus
Ultimi cœlum meruit laboris;

His laſt labour brought him up to heaven: and Saluſtius ſaith, he heard it often ſaid, Munditias mulieribus, laborem viris conveniri; it is commendable in a woman, to be neat and cleanly, but the glory of a man is to be laborious: and therefore Seneca ſaith, generoſos animos labor nutrit; laborem ſi recuſes parum eſſe potes; non eſt viri timere ſudorem; labour nouriſheth generous minds; and if thou refuſeſt labour, thou canſt be little or nothing; therefore it becomes no man to feare ſweat, to ſhun labour.

Neither ſhall the induſtrious onely find praiſe and thanks of others, but he ſhall alſo have joy in himſelfe, and acceptance of God for his labour: becauſe, as Menander ſaith, ἡδὺ τοῖς σοφοῖς μνημονεύειν πόνων: it is a ſweet thing to wiſe men to recall and review their labours; & tanto plus adferunt lætitiæ opera noſtra, quanto majore robore præcedente, ad ea pervenitur; and our works bring us ſo much the more joy, by how much greater induſtry we finiſhed them, ſaith Xenophon: and Cicero brings in that common proverbe, jucundi acti labores, and he cites Euripides to confirme it, ἡδὺ σωθέντα μεμνῆσθαι μόνον; how pleaſant is the memory of labours paſt; and a little after he ſaith, fluit voluptas corporis, & prima quæq; avolat, ſæpiuſq; relinquit cauſas pœnitendi quam recordandi: the carnall pleaſure ſoone flieth away, when the act is done, the pleaſure is preſently gone, and moſt commonly leaves behind it a cauſe of ſorrowing, rather than of remembring it; but the joy of our labours abideth ever: and Seneca hath a ſpeech to the ſame purpoſe; if you ſhall painfully do any good thing, the labour is ſoone gone, and the benefit ſhall remaine with you while you live, yea and when we are dead too; for our works ſhall follow us; but if we do any ill, through the deſire of a little pleaſure, the delight is ſoone gone, and the evill deed ſhall abide with us for ever. And therefore as Ariſtotle laughed at the Epigram of Sardanapalus, who delighted in all pleaſures, and ſaid to his ſoule with Dives,

Ede, bibe, lude, poſt mortem nulla voluptas;

Now ſoule, take thine eaſe, eat, drink, and be merry; ſo he praiſed the ſpeech, and extolled the reſolution of Scipio Africanus, who ſpeaking unto his countrey, ſaith,

——Deſine Roma tuos hoſtes,
Namq; tibi monumenta mei peperere labores:

For certainly this labour and induſtry gets the greateſt glory, and wreathes the faireſt garland that any man can weare while he lives here on earth.

In vita Demoſth. 113.

Veget. de remilit. l. 2. & l. 1. c. 1. & c. 23.

Virgil. Georg. l. 1. Manil. Aſtron. l. 1.

Labour adored for a God.

2. Glory.
Cicero Epiſt. l. 2 p. 22. a.
Seneca in Hercule

Saluſt. de bello Jugurth.

Senec. Epiſt. 31.

3. Joy.

Xenophon de inſtit. Cyri. l. 2.
Cicero de fin. bon. l. 2.

Si quæ per laborem recte feceritis, labor citò recedet, beneficium dum vivitis non abſcedet; ſi quæ per voluptatem parvam nequiter feceritis, voluptas cito obibit, nequiter factum ſemper apud vos manebit. Ep. 31.

Cicero de fin. bon. l. 2

Therefore God delighteth in them that labour, and he calleth them unto him, that he might eaſe them; and therefore the divell laboureth by all meanes to detaine us from labour; for he knoweth that ſloth and idleneſſe are the nurces of all evil and miſchiefe; becauſe they that have buſineſſe have no leaſure to waxe wanton; therfore, ſaith Seneca, the greateſt generalls, when they perceived their ſouldiers to grow mutinous, made them march and undertake ſome ſudden voyage, to confound thoſe vices, by ſome travell, which were engendred by their idleneſſe; becauſe, as Lucan ſaith, variam ſemper dant otia mentem; eaſe and idleneſſe diſtract our mindes, and as ruſt corrupteth the iron, ſo doth ſloth deſtroy all vertues.

Senec. in ep. 56.

The divell hates an idle ſervant, Matth. 26.14. & v. 47.

Nay the divell himſelfe, though he would have us idle in Gods vineyard, yet if we become his ſervants, he cannot endure we ſhould be idle in his Synagogue, but run from one wickedneſſe to another, as he made Judas to goe from Chriſt to the High-Prieſt, from the Prieſt to the band of Souldiers, and with them to the garden backe againe, and all in an inſtant; for they muſt needs goe whom the divell drive, never ſitting ſtill, untill he ſaw his maſter in the hand of ſinners; ſo for the heretiques, they muſt not hide their errors in their owne hearts, but they muſt pen, preach, reaſon, runne, yea and compaſſe ſea and land, though it were to make but one Proſelyte, to get but one ſervant more unto the divell; for he cannot endure his ſervants ſhould be idle; and a painefull ſervant is, or ſhould be, acceptable to any Maſter; but a lazie ſlave to none; neither to God, nor to man, nor to the divell.

Matth. 25.15. A lazie ſervant good for no maſter

But as Hugo Cardinalis doth obſerve, there are divers kinds of labour; for, as Lorinus ſaith, ſudat pauper in opere foris, & nunquid minus anxie dives intus in ipſa ſua cogitatione laborat? the poore man ſweats without, by doing his worke to get his living, and the rich man labours no leſſe within, by his anxious thoughts to preſerve his wealth; & interdum iſte gravius faſtidio, quam ille inedia cruciatur; and ſometimes he is more vexed with his ſacietie, then the other is with his ſcarcity; or as Saint Bernard ſaith, qui in labore hominum non ſunt in labore dæmonum certe ſunt; he that labours not the workes of men, doth moſt certainely doe the workes of the divell, if it were nothing els but, as the Prophet ſaith, to live at eaſe in Sion; a labour great inough, and a worke moſt tedious, though without profit, and with great miſchiefe. And Hugo in Pſal. 72. v. 5.

Lorinus in Pſal. 72. v. p. 353.

Amos 6.1.

Therefore, ſeeing as Sophocles ſaith, πόνου τοι χωρὶς οὐδὲν εὐτυχεῖ; which in Horace phraſe is, nil ſine magno vita labore dedit mortalibus, and the Philoſopher tranſlates it, the gods do ſell all good things for labour; and ſeeing our Saviour calleth them that labour unto him, and the divell ſeekes to hinder our going, by laying theſe blocks of eaſe and idleneſſe in our way, let us follow the Apoſtles counſell, to be never weary of well-doing, but to labour continually unto death, and Chriſt will helpe to eaſe us.

Sine labore quidem nihil bene ſucceſſit

Gal. 6.9. 2 Theſſ. 3.13.

Yet I confeſſe labour is not alwaies rewarded in this life, but as the proverbe is, fidelis ſervus perpetuus aſinus, the more painefull ſervant, the more time he ſhall ſerve; we will keepe him ſo, leaſt with Tiberius he prove not ſo good a maſter, or leaſt indeed we find not ſo fit a ſervant; but this ſhould diſcourage no man, becauſe labour ſhall not want his reward; and though here we have but our ſweate for our paines, yet merces mea apud Deum ſaith the Prophet, our reward is laid up in ſtore with God, and he will keepe it ſafe for us: and therefore though poore Perkins, Raynolds, Whitaker, Willet, Bucer, Zanchie, Calvin, Luther, Beza, Melanction, and many more, whoſe workes are glorious and their labours indefatigable, were but meane men and died poore; yet I may ſee them crowned with as faire a garland of immortality, as it may be, ſome of the greateſt Cardinalls or Popes of Rome.

Sueton in vita Tiber.

Eſay 49 4.

Painefull men unemінent in the world.

Ob. But againſt this it may be objected, that labor exiccat & ſenium inducit, unde multum laborantes ſeneſcunt magis; and by too much aſſiduity of labour, naſcitur animi quædam hebetatio, & corpus ipſum langueſcit; and therefore Plutarch ſaith, that as young plants are nouriſhed with moderate watering, but Ariſt. de longit. & brevit. vitæ.

Plut. in moral.

are

are drowned with too much; so the mind of man is helped by temperate labour, but is dulled and spoyled by immoderate paines.

Sol. To this I answer with the Orator, and confesse, that ille liber non videtur, qui non aliquando nihil agit, he cannot be a free man, which hath not some times void of labour; for when we are wearied with our affaires and the labours of our vocation, then we may, with Scipio, sometimes take some ease; but as they, quibus otium negotij inopia, non requiescendi studio, constitutum est. Cicero de offic. l. 3. p. 515.

2. If we see our sinnes and confesse them, God is mercifull to forgive us our sinnes, and to blot out all our offences; but if we hide our sins, we shall not prosper, and the Lord will not be mercifull to them that offend of malicious wickednesse, neither will Christ call them to repentance, that thinke not themselves to be sinners; therfore as the Faulconer hood-winkes his hawke, that he may sit quiet upon his fist, or the King of Babel plucked out the eyes of Zedechias, that he might never find out the way to Hierusalem; so the divell, that cunning faulconer, that king of hell, plucketh out the eyes of our understanding, that we can neither see our sinnes, nor perceive our owne miserable estate; and if there be any good in us, he sets that alwaies before our eyes, and puts his spectacles upon our noses, to magnifie and to multiply the same unto us, thereby to make us proud of that little vertue, and extremely odious in the sight of God; then the proud Pharisees extoll their owne righteousnesse, and despise the righteousnesse of God, not knowing, as Saint Gregory saith, that our best workes, our righteousnesse brought to the examen of Gods justice, is meere unrighteousnesse; & sordet in districtione judicantis, quod in æstimatione fulget operantis; and doth stinke in the sight of the judge, which doth shine in the judgement of the doer; therefore Saint Augustine saith, audeo dicere superbis, utile esse cadere in aliquod apertum & manifestum peccatum, unde sibi displiceant, qui jam sibi placendo ceciderunt; I dare be bold to say it, it were better for proud Pharisees to fall into some open and manifest sin, whereby they might see their own nakednesse, and be displeased with themselves, then so dangerously to fall by pleasing themselves with their owne righteousnesse; for Saint Peter did more profitably displease himselfe when he wept, then he pleased himselfe when he presumed; & melius est peccatum humilians quam justitia inflans, and the sinne that humbleth us is farre better then that vertue, which puffeth up our hearts with pride, as you may very easily percive it, by the example of the poore Publican and proud Pharisee; for they that thinke themselves whole will not care for the Physitian, nor seeke to Christ to be eased; because they feele not their burthen, they perceive not themselves weary; whereby we may behold the subtill sleights of Satan, which shuts our eyes close, that we may not see our greatest sinnes, and openeth them full wide to make us proud of our least vertues.

2. A Pharisaicall uprightnesse.

2 Reg. 25. 7.

The cunning of the divell.

Gregorius, moral. lib. 5.

Aug. de civit. Dei. lib. 14.

Matth. 26. 75. & v. 33.

Luk. 18. 10.

And therefore, this being but a sleight of Satan to detaine us still from Christ, ô wretched man know thy selfe, and come to Christ that hee may helpe thee.

3. He that hateth his sins shall be loved of God, and he that delighteth in wickednesse doth my soule abhorre, saith the Lord; therefore the divell laboureth to bring every sinner either to delight in sin, or at least to forget his sinnes: quia delectatio conservat operantem in opere suo: because delight still detaineth the agent in his worke, as Aristotle saith; therefore to delight in sin doth wholly hinder our going to Christ; for as it is impossible to kindle fire with water, so it is not possible to stire up faith or repentance in them that take pleasure in wickednesse; because delight and repentance to the same object, are as contrary as the fire and water; therefore Anselmus, seeing a boy playing with a bird that he had, to whose leggs he had tied a thread, and sitting downe did there-with let him go, and plucke him back at his pleasure, took his knife and cut the thred to let the bird flie away; and the boy deprived of this pleasure was contented to be perswaded to a better life; but this boy may signifie any sinner; the bird, sinne, the thred his delight in sin; the sitting downe, his custome in sin, and by An-

3. A delight in wickednesse.

Aristot ethic. l. 10. ut cit. in axiom. Beda p. 75. Quia dilectatio derivatur a delecto, delecto a delicio, quod proprie est attrahere animam in rem dilectam.

Omne conſuetum eſt delectabile. Ariſt. eth. Lt. c. 1. apud Beda ax. p. 390.

ſelmus we may underſtand the grace of God, which cutteth off all the delight in ſin; and then we may the eaſier be perſwaded to come to Chriſt; for till then, Satan holds us faſt, and our delight in evill is like an iron chaine, qua ligat nos diabolus in peccatis, wherewith he bindeth us in ſinne; Therefore if through infirmities wee doe ſinne, yet by all meanes let us take heed wee take no pleaſure in wickedneſſe; becauſe this doth ſo mightily hinder us to come to Chriſt.

See the firſt golden Candleſticke. c. 3.

But if the divell cannot make us to delight in ſin, then will he gather up all our ſins as faſt as we commit them, and caſt them all into lethe, where he burieth them, in the land where all things are forgotten, that, becauſe he cannot perſwade us to delight in them, yet he may hide them, that we ſhould never ſee them to be ſorrie for them; therefore, to avoid this deceit, we ſhould looke into our ſelves, and continually examine our owne conſciences; and if we cannot imitate them that, as Climacus ſaith, did hang a paper booke at their girdle, wherein they daily wrote their chiefeſt cogitations, yet, at leaſt wiſe, let us doe as Saint Baſil adviſeth us, quæ quotidie feceris, veſpere tecum commemora; whatſoever thou doeſt all day, recall the ſame to minde at night, that thou maiſt ſee what offences thou haſt committed to repent thee for them; ſo ſhalt thou reſt in peace: for as Salomon ſaith, I have paſſed by the field of the ſloathfull man, and by the vineyard of the fooliſh, and behold it was filled with nettles and covered over with thornes; ſo the minde and ſoule of man being like a field or a garden, if we doe not continually weed it, will be overgrowne with ſins, and as the Poet ſaith, Neglectis urenda filix innaſcitur hortis; as Adam for his ſin was to till the earth, that brought forth thornes and thiſtles; ſo the Scriptures and Fathers, Caſſianus, Ephrem, Saint Chryſoſtome, Saint Gregory, Saint Bernard and many more, which Drexelius heapes together, doe adviſe every one, eſpecially once a day, at night, to examine their owne conſciences and to roote out theſe bryers out of the garden of their ſoules: the very heathens did the ſame; for Apulejus ſaith, the Indian Gymnoſophiſts ſuffered none of their diſciples to eat, untill he had reckoned what deeds he had done that day till then, & incœnatus ejiciebatur, qui nil præclari a ſe geſtum commeminiſſet; and he that had done no good that day, was caſt out without meat that night; and Seneca, notwithſtanding his great affaires, and manifold imployments in the Emperors court, being ſo great, ſo noble, and ſo wealthy a man, as Suillius reports hee was, yet ſaith this of himſelfe, cum ſublatum è conſpectu lumen eſt, & conticuit uxor, moris mei jam conſcia, totum diem mecum ſcrutor, facta & dicta mea remetior, nihil mihi ipſe abſcondo, nihil tranſeo: when the light is put out and my wife ſilent, I overrunne the actions of the whole day, I hide nothing from my ſelfe, nor conceale any of mine errors; for why ſhould I? when I can ſay; vide ne iſtud amplius facias, nunc tibi ignoſco; ſee thou doeſt that no more, and now I doe forgive it thee; a moſt excellent practiſe of an heathen man, that knew not Chriſt; if we did the like, that beleeve in him, then certainely, as the Apoſtle ſaith, by judging our ſelves wee ſhould eſcape the judgement of the Lord: and Virgil deſcribing the good man, ſaith;

Pro. 24. 30.

Gen. 3.

How we ought to examine our actions.

Apuleius floridor. lib. 1.

Tacitus annal. l. 13.

Seneca de ira. l. 3. c. 36.

Seneca's practice.

1 Cor. 11. 31.

Virgil.

Non prius in dulcem declinat lumina ſomnum,
Omnia quam longi reputaverat acta diei, he never ſleepes before he hath conſidered over all the deeds of that day, and then, offenſus pravis, dat palmam & præmia rectis.

And therefore, leaſt the men of Ninive, the Gentiles that know not God, ſhould riſe in judgement and condemne us, and as the Prophet David ſaith, every night waſh I my bed with my teares, ſo let us every night waſh our conſciences with penitent tears; and let us call our own waies to remembrance, that we may ſee our ſins, and then we ſhall be willing to hearken to our Saviours call, and moſt deſirous of that helpe which he offereth us.

Pſal. 6. 6.

Pſal. 77. 6. & 119. 59.

4. The ſweetneſſe of worldy vanities

4. The ſweetneſſe of the vanities of this world hath hindered many to the kingdome of Chriſt; for this is the divels jewell, which he offereth them that will will forsake God and worship him, and as we find it in our Saviours temptations, it is ultimum refugium, his last and best baite, wherewith he catcheth the most and greatest fishes; it is incredible to conceive how many men the world suffocates, and drownes them in perdition, as the Apostle speaketh; therefore Saint Iohn exhorting us to come to Christ, doth all that ever he can, to dehort us from the world, saying, love not the world nor the things of this world, honours, favours, riches, and the like; for what is the greatest honour but the vaine blast of variable mindes? the Wise man tells us, favour is deceitfull, and beauty is vanity, and so Haman, Sejanus, and many other prove it; we need not doubt it; and there is no safe way, ad culmen honoris sed per scalam virtutis, to the temple of honour but through the chappell of vertue; and for riches, what is the finest gold but red earth, and argentum but argilla, white potters clay? and yet these base drosses doe pierce the owners with three deepe and deadly wounds; the first to the bones, the second to the braines, when our heads are intoxicated, and our understandings distracted with the cares of keeping and disposing them; and the third to the heart, when it is broken with griefe and sorrow for the losse of them: And therefore the Auntients painted Mercury like a covetous Merchant, with a thorny tongue in his mouth, to represent his deceitfull words, with his wings spread, glittering like gold, to signifie his speed and celerity to get wealth, that seemes faire as the fire, whereof a litle is sufficient to warme a man, but too much will consume him; and upon his head a cocke, to shew his carefull vigilancy, to rise up early, so late to take his rest, and to eat the bread of carefullnesse, to gather that which will so soone forsake him, or himselfe ere long must part with it: this is the life of a worldly man, and Iob made his Epitaph when he dieth, Iob 6. ver. 17, 18. And yet how many millions of men have we that will follow after the vanities of this world, as Ahazael followed Abner, to his owne death.

But if we come to Christ, we must not follow them, we must have no society with the wicked; for Iudas Machabeus a most valiant and victorious man, made friend to the Romanes, was slaine by his adversaries; Mercury a benevolent planet, being joyned with a malevolent, is most spitefull; the quills or wings of an Eagle being mixed with the feathers of a hen will consume them, and the strings that are made of the entrailes of Woolves, are destruction unto those that are made of sheepe; so are the wicked unto the godly and the worldlings unto the Saints; Therefore it is good to deale with them, as Physitians doe with contagious diseases, not to be too venterous, least in curing others they should kill themselves, but a farre off; for hee that toucheth pitch shall be defiled, and as the Poet saith,

——grex totus in agris
unius scabie cadit; one scabbed sheep will spoyle a whole flock; how much sooner a great company of foxes will devoure one sillie sheep, if she goeth amongst them? so the wicked will corrupt the godly, or, at least, make us to think them so, if we see them sociable together; for, as Augustus, being present at a publique prize with his two daughters, Livia and Iulia, and perceiving that grave Senators talked with Livia, but riotous and wanton youths with Iulia, did presently discerne their severall inclinations; so the Italians have a proverbe; Dimmi con cui tu vai, e sapro quel che fai; tell me with whom thou goest, and I will tell thee what thou doest; because company and customes are cousen germanes, and it is a true saying, that Simile Simili gaudet, all flesh will resort to their like; Therefore if we would neither be vitious nor be thought to be lascivious; let no grave Lady keepe the company of a shamelesse strumpet, let no man follow this wicked world, if he would come unto our Saviour Christ. So you see, and I have sought my best, to remove those obstacles, that doe chiefly hinder our going to God. And here,

I might insist upon the Reasons that should perswade all men to come to him; as

1. Because

Matth. 4. 9.

1 Tim. 6. 9.

1 Ioh. 2. 15.

Honour what it is. Pro. 31. 30.

Riches what it is

How they doe pierce our bones, our heads, and our hearts.

Mercury how painted and why.

Psal. 127. 2, 3.

1 Sam. 2. 21, 22, 23.

Bonavent. de sanct. in com. ser. 10. p. 310.

The influence of Mercury.

Vvaq; conspecta livorem ducit ab uva. Iuvenal l. 1. Sat. 2.

Augustus his judgement of his two daughters.

The Italian proverbe.

Reasons to perswade us to come to Christ.

1. Reaſon. Matth. 11. 27.

1. Becauſe all things are delivered unto him of his Father, and in him are all things to be found that can make us happie, either in this life or in the life to come; for he can make you truly honourable, and he hath all riches at his diſpoſing; and therefore, if thou wanteſt any thing, goe to him: if thou lackeſt wiſedome, aske of him; and as Saint Auguſtine ſaith, ſi eſuris ipſe eſt panis, ſi ſitis ipſe eſt potus, &c. and if thou goe to him, thou ſhalt want no manner of thing that is good, Pſ. 34. 10.

2. Reaſon.

2. Becauſe hee is the ordinary and the onely meanes appointed from above, from everlaſting, to bring us all to heaven; for I am the way, the truth and the life; and the Father himſelfe teſtifieth as much, ſaying, this is my beloved Sonne, in whom I am well pleaſed, heare him; and therefore goe unto him.

Quint. Curtius. Lib. 8. p. 228.

The curteſie of Alexander.

It is recorded of Alexander, that in an extreame ſtorme and cold, which conſumed above a 1000. ſouldiers, It chanced that a common ſouldier of the Macedons, which had much paine to goe and carry his armour, came at laſt into the campe, where the King was, who notwithſtanding that he was chafing his owne body againſt the fire, yet did riſe out of his chaire, and pulling off the benummed ſouldiers armour, that was allmoſt paſt his remembrance, did ſet him downe therein; and he for a great while knew not where hee ſate, or who had ſo kindly received him; but at length, when his naturall heate came to him, and he perceived it to be his Kings ſeat, and the King to be there ſtanding preſent, he was ſore afraid and ſtarted up againe; but Alexander beheld him in the face and ſaid, perceiveſt thou not, my ſouldier, with how much better condition thou liveſt under me, then they doe that live under the King of Perſia; quia illis in ſella regis conſedisſe capitale foret, tibi ſaluti fuit Q. Curtius, lib. 8. p. 288.

So, if you ſit in the ſeat of the ſcornfull, it is death to you; but if you come to Chriſt & ſit upon his ſeate, and put on his crowne, it will be health & ſalvation unto you.

3. Reaſon.

3. Becauſe there is none other way to get ſalvation but onely by our going unto him; for no man commeth unto the Father but by mee; becauſe no man knoweth the Father but the Sonne and he to whomſoever the Sonne will reveale him; and Saint Peter tells us plainely, there is none other name under heaven, whereby wee can bee ſaved, but the name of Ieſus, Acts 4. 12. and therefore, if we goe not to him, there is nothing remaining for us but a moſt fearefull expectation of vengeance. Beſides, he came to thee, by taking thy fleſh upon him, and therefore why ſhouldeſt not thou come to him, by receiving his ſpirit unto thee? and he came from heaven to earth to thee, therefore why ſhouldeſt not thou come from earth to heaven unto him? eſpecially ſeeing he came to thee, and deſires thee to come to him, for none other end then thine owne good? and many other reaſons might be brought to confirme the ſame thing.

But, as the Poet ſaith, Quid ſatis eſt cui Roma parum, what will ſuffice him, whom Rome cannot ſatisfie? ſo if theſe two reaſons, which Chriſt layeth downe in my Text, and which anon I ſhall more fully handle, I will eaſe you, and you ſhall find reſt for your ſoules, doe not perſwade you to come to Chriſt, I may be moved to pittie you, but I ſhall never be able to remove you from your miſeries: therefore I aſſure my ſelfe, when you underſtand the truth, you will be induced by theſe reaſons to embrace the truth, to come unto Chriſt, as he invites you, come unto me. And ſo much for them that are invited, all you that labour, and are heavie laden.

3. To what end we are invited. Where obſerve two things. 1. The act. Touching which, conſider two things: 1. What it is to come. 1. To know him. Venire ſignificat metam quo iteras pertingere. Illyricus in verbo venire. p. 1872.

3. Theſe labouring and laden men are called and invited, to come to Chriſt, come unto me; touching which we muſt obſerve {1. Actionem. 2. Terminum.} And

1. De actione conſiderandum eſt; touching the action, we muſt conſider

{1. What it is to come unto him. 2. How or by what feet we ſhall go unto him.}

1. The word venire, literally taken, ſignifieth to attaine unto the ſcope or place whereunto we aime and tend; but venire ad Chriſtum, doth metaphorically ſignifie either {1. To know Chriſt, or 2. To beleeve in Chriſt.} For

1. Where

1. Where our Saviour ſaith, no man commeth unto the Father but by me, Iohn 14.16. it ſignifieth, no man knoweth the Father but through my meanes; becauſe no man hath ſeene God at any time, but the Sonne, which is in the boſome of the Father, he hath declared him. Iohn 1.18.

2. Where he ſaith, yee will not come unto me that you might have life; it ſignifieth, you will not beleeve in me and relie upon my favour, that you might be ſaved; for otherwiſe, they came and touched him, and preſſed upon him often inough, and yet it availed them nothing; becauſe they did not beleeve in him. 2. To beleeve in him. Ioh.5.40.

1. Then, we muſt know Chriſt; and this is eternall life, ſaith our Saviour, to know thee to be the onely true God, and whom thou haſt ſent Ieſus Chriſt; for as the Prophet David ſaith, they that know thy name will truſt in thee; and if they had knowne him, they had never crucified the Lord of glory, ſaith the Apoſtle; and this knowledge is ſo excellent, that Saint Paul deſired to know nothing els, but Ieſus Chriſt and him crucified; for though the knowledge of other things be exceeding good, the beſt of all humane things; ſo that Sineſius was of opinion, a Philoſopher excelled any ordinary man, as much as an ordinary man did excell a beaſt; becauſe as Cicero ſaith, ſublata ſcientia, tollitur omnis ratio, where there is no knowledge there is no reaſon, how to doe any thing; and therefore, nemo Philoſophiæ expers, idoneus eſt regno, he that is wholly ignorant of all Philoſophy, is altogether unfit for any kingdome; and he is fit for nothing that knoweth nothing; yet Saint Paul counted not onely the knowledge of all other things, but alſo all other things together with their knowledge, to be but dung and droſſe, in reſpect of the excellent knowledge of Ieſus Chriſt; becauſe the knowledge of him gaineth all things, and without his knowledge, all other knowledge will rather increaſe our miſeries, then conduce us to happineſſe; to know the ſecrets of nature, the motions of the heavens, the alterations of time, the pollicies of ſtate, the deſcription of countreys and the myſteries of all arts and ſciences, may make us more admired in the world, but not one jot ſooner to come to heaven; this is onely by the knowledge of Ieſus Chriſt. 1. That we muſt know Chriſt. Iohn 17.3. Pſal.9.10. 1.Cor.2.2. Sineſius in orat. de Dione. Cicero de finib. bon. l.2. The excellencie of knowledge. Phil.3.8. The beſt knowledge.

But we muſt underſtand, the knowledge of Chriſt conſiſteth, in the underſtanding, 1. Of his Perſon. 2. Of his Will. That wee muſt know.

1. For the Perſon of Chriſt, we muſt know him to be both God and Man, according as we are taught in our three generally received creeds, and that this Chriſt is both King, Prieſt, and Prophet. 1. The Perſon of Chriſt.

2. For the Will of Chriſt, we muſt learne what concerneth us out of the holy Scripture; to which end, the Apoſtle exhorteth us, to let the word of Chriſt dwell in us richly in all wiſedome, that is, in all abundance, as Saint Hierome, Saint Chryſoſtome, Oecumenius and Aquinas doe expound that very place; and therefore miſerable is the condition of thoſe wretches, that are as cloſe priſoners in the dungeon of bruiſh ignorance, or like heathen Niniviites, not knowing the right hand from the left: and ſo Bellarmine himſelfe cryeth out, Quid miſerius fingi poteſt quam ignoratio proprij finis, id eſt, veri & ſummi boni, & mediarum ad finem, id eſt, earum rerum, per quas ad bonam beatamq; vitam perveniri poteſt? What can be imagined more miſerable, then the ignorance of our proper end, that is, or the true and chiefeſt good, or of the meanes unto that end, that is, of thoſe things by which we may attaine unto a happy and bleſſed life? I know not what Calvin, Perkins, Reynalds or Whitaker could ſay herein more then this. And yet divers do object, what Saint Auguſtine ſaith, plurimi fideles ſcientia non pollent, quamvis fide plurimum polleant, many beleevers excell not in knowledge; although they doe excell much in faith. 2. The Will of Chriſt. Coloſſ.3.16. πλουσίως, ἰ'τοιδὲ ἀκριβῶς, in greek plenty Oec. οὐχ ἁπλῶς, ἀλλὰ κατὰ πολλὴν τὴν περιουσίαν. Chryſoſt. Bellar. de amiſſion grat. l.6.c.8. & c.9. Aug. de trinit. l.14.c.1.

But to this Durandus ſhall make anſwer, aliud eſt ſcire tantummodo, quid homo credere debeat propter aliquid aſſcendam vitam beatam, aliud eſt ſcire, quo modo hoc ipſum & pijs opituletur & contra impios defendatur: it is one thing to know what a man ought neceſſarily to beleeve, for the attaining of eternall life; and it is another thing to know how to apply comforts unto the godly, and to defend the truth againſt Durand. in prolog. lib. ſentent. q.1. num.7.

againſt the heretiques; for a man may have ſufficient knowledge, to underſtand the moſt part of poſitive truths faithfully explaned, and yet want abilities to diſcover and confute the ſubtilties of heretiques, that corrupt the truth; and S. Auguſtine ſpake of the latter, not of the former.

And therefore our care ſhould be continually to grow in knowledge, and to get the underſtanding of Chriſt, and his will, which is the firſt ſtep to come to Chriſt.

2. To believe in Chriſt.

2. Becauſe the bare knowledge of the hiſtory of the holy Scripture, either touching Chriſt or his will, is not ſufficient to ſave us; therefore this comming unto Chriſt, ſignifieth to believe in Chriſt; that is, not onely to know thoſe things that are to be believed, but alſo to be aſſured that God is both able and willing, and in good time will make good to every faithfull man in particular, thoſe generall promiſes of his grace and favour; for ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, I am perſwaded that neither death nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things preſent, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, ſhall be able to ſeparate us from the love of God, which is in Chriſt Ieſus: and in another place he ſaith, that in Chriſt we have boldneſſe with confidence by the faith of him; this is the faith that brings us unto Chriſt, and as S. Auguſtine ſaith, Ille apud Deum plus habet loci, qui plus attulit non argenti ſed fidei; he ſhall have the beſt reſpect with God, which brings moſt, not of money, but of his faith; and the reaſon is rendred by S. Gregory, Quia, niſi prius fides teneatur, nullo modo ad ſpiritualem amorem pertingitur: becauſe it is impoſſible to attaine any ſpirituall love, unleſſe this faith be firſt found; quia non charitas fidem ſed fides charitatem præcedit; becauſe faith precedeth charity, and no man can love which doth not believe; ſo you ſee, what it is, to come to Chriſt.

Rom. 8. 38, 39.

Eph. 3. 12.

Aug. l. de ovibus.

2. By what feet we come to Chriſt.

2. We muſt know that we cannot goe to him, greſſibus corporis, ſed profectibus amoris, with the feet of our bodies, but by the affections of our ſoule, not by motion, but devotion, as S. Gregory ſaith: for our walk to heaven is our will and deſire; amando enim Chriſtum, ſtans in terra, in cœlo es; ſin negligis eum, ſtans in eccleſia, deſcendis ad infernum; for if we love Chriſt, we are in heaven, though we ſtand on earth; but if we neglect him, we goe not to him, but run from him, and deſcend downe to hell, though we ſeeme to reſide in the Church of God: And therefore, as our journey and our walk is ſpirituall, ſo the feet whereon we walke muſt needs be ſpirituall; and as Hugo Cardinalis ſaith, theſe feet are intellectus & affectus; or, as others think, the love of God and of our neighbours; for if we love God, it cannot be otherwiſe but we have knowne him, and will believe in him: Hoc eſt ad Deum tendere, & ad ipſum pertingere, ſemper eum per deſiderium quærere, per cogitationem invenire, & per guſtum tangere: and therefore this is to tend to God, and to come unto him by our thoughts, and to touch him by our taſt, when in our ſoules we feele, quam dulcis & ſuavis Dominus; how ſweet and delectable the Lord is.

Greg. ſup. Ezech. Venite non pedibus, ſed moribus, non corpore, ſed fide, ſiſte eſt ſpirituali acceſſu, quo quis Deo appropinquat. Chryſoſt. Greg. Moral. l. 21. c. 4. Aug. Tom. 8. ſup. Pſal. 95. Ludolph. de vita Chriſti. par. 1. c. 58. Hugo de arca Noe l. 1. c. 4. & Vercell. ſup. Cant. Curramus ad Dominum, non paſſibus corporis, ſed affectibus, deſideriis & ſuſpiriis animæ, & veniamus imprimis vera fide; quia accedens ad Deum, oportet credere eum eſſe. Heb. 11. Bern. Ser. 84 ſup. Cant. Col. 745. b. Aug. Tom. 8. de ſpirit. & litera.

But we ought to have, pedes lavatos, calciatos, exercitatos, our feet waſhed, ſhod, exerciſed; for Our feet muſt be 1. Waſhed.

1. God is of pure eyes, therefore no fowle thing ſhall come to God; but the feet that alwaies tread upon the earth, muſt needs be ſometimes defiled with dirt; therefore our Saviour waſhed his Diſciples feet; to ſignifie unto us, Quod impoſſibile eſt hominem verſantem in terra, non habere aliquam inordinationem in ſenſualitate; that it is impoſſible for a man, while he liveth here on earth, to be free from all inordinate affections; and yet they that come to Chriſt need no more but the waſhing of their feet, as our Saviour ſaith, or the putting off of their ſhoes, as the Lord ſaith unto Moſes; that is, the waſhing of all worldly thoughts, and all carnall affections, that are in the ſenſuall part of man; becauſe the head of the ſpirituall man is his underſtanding, which is immediately joyned to God, as S. Auguſtine ſaith, Et opera etiam eorum munda ſunt, propter munditiam capitis, and their works likewiſe are cleane, by reaſon of the cleanneſſe of their head; therefore our hands and heads need not be waſht; but our Idem quod ſupra.

Why no part needs waſhing but our feet.

feet,

feet, that is, our sensuall desires, or the defects and infirmities of our faith and knowledge must be continually washed, in the teares of true repentance; and when we have washed them, we should say with the spouse, I have washed my feet, how shall I defile them againe? Cant. 5. 3.

2. Though we should unshoe our feet, i. pull off the shoes of all carnall desires, yet they should be shod, with the preparation of the Gospell of peace; they should bee shod with good workes, whereof I shall further speake anon. 2. Shod.

3. Because our way to Christ is farre, and our life is short, and there be many stops in this way, to stay and hinder our going to him; therefore we should have our feet well exercised, that we dash not the same against the stones; that is, stumble not at the impediments, which Satan layeth to cast us downe; and they should be agilitate veloces, swift to run the wayes of Gods commandements; because the feet of the faithfull soule do signifie virtutem motivam, acute penetrantem & semper tendentem in divina, saith Dionysius: and therefore Theology figureth the feet of our intellectuall parts to be winged; and the Prophet David saith, that God maketh his feet like Hinds feet, which as Bonaventure saith, juga montium ascendentes, quæq; aspera transgreditur, passing over the clefts and cragged hills, not onely runneth, but also leapeth over all the stops that are in his wayes; to teach us, how we should behave our selves in our going to Christ; not so slowly, with a snailes pace, like those men that walk, as if they were asleep, or cared not much whether they went forward or backward; this is a poore going to Christ, and I feare it will be late, I pray God not too late for them, before they come at him; but we should, with the Apostle, stretch, and strive, and straine our selves, and make hast with the spouse, and with the hinde, leape over all things that hinder us, over our fathers and mothers, if they seek to stop our going to Christ, as S. Hierom saith. 3. Exercised. Axioma Hypocratis, ars longa vita brevis. Bonavent. de 7 itiner. ætern. dist. 4. p. 135. Dionys. de angel. hierar. cap. 15. ante med. Bonaven. quo supra Phil. 3. 13. Cant. 2. 10. Hieron. ad Helio-dor.

I should proceed to the points following, but I am staid by an objection, that some subtill Sophists do compose, from this and the like texts of Scripture; for seeing the Lord saith, Call upon me and I will heare thee, Returne to me, and I will returne to you, Come unto me, and I will ease you; it is apparent there is some power and ability in us to do these things, els it were in vaine to exhort us, if we were altogether impotent, and the promises for obedience were but mockages, if in our selves we had no ability to performe it: As if I proposed a great reward, to him that will speedily run a race, whom I know cannot stand upon his legs, which is but delusion in man, therefore not in God. Trabit vclenus. Maldonat. Psal 50 15. Ier. 31. 18.

An objection often made, and often answered; for S. Hierom saith unto the Pelagians, that seeing no man commeth unto Christ, except the Father draw him, sequitur nos natura aversos esse & reluctantes, and yet Christ doth not accuse the Iewes without cause, when he saith, Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life; quia illa aversio est ex nobis, because this frowardnesse and refusall is from our selves; and therefore they are worthily reprehended, quia oblatam gratiam spontanea malicia rejiciunt, because by a wilfull malice they do reject his offered grace; so we have a power to refuse, though no ability to receive the grace of God; for we are dead in trespasses and sinnes, and all the cogitations of our hearts are onely evill continually; therefore, when the Lord saith, rent your hearts and not your garments, and turne to the Lord your God, the Prophet answereth, Convert thou us and we shall be converted; Quia Dei est, omne quod possumus, inde vivimus, inde pollemus, inde sumpto & concepto vigore, hic adhuc positi, futurorum indicia prænoscimus, because all our ability is to be ascribed to the grace of God, that living here on earth, we are enabled to behold the badges of eternall life; as S. Cyprian saith; but S. Augustine that was inforced, as it were, to duellize with the Pelagians, for this very point, is most sufficient to cleare this truth; for he tels us, that our Saviour saith not, Venite ad me virtute liberi arbitrij, nec dicit Christus, nemo venit ad me, nisi Pater duxerit eum, ac si prædiceret nostram voluntatẽ, sed nisi Pater traxerit eum; come to me by the power of your free will, neither doth he Ioh. 6. 44. Note this well. Wherein our power standeth. Eph 2 5. Gen 6. 5. Ioel 2 13. Ier. 31. 18. Cyprian. l. 2. Ep. 2. Aug. cont. duas Ep. Pelagian. l. 1. c. 3 & 19.

ſay, no man commeth unto me unleſſe the Father leades him, but unleſſe my Father drawes him; and how doth he draw us, if we were willing? Therefore he draweth us, that we may come, that is, believe in him; and faith is not of our ſelves, it is the gift of God, ſaith the Apoſtle; and we are drawne after a wonderfull manner, by him, that knoweth how to work internally in our hearts, non ut homines, quod fieri nequit, nolentes & inviti credant, ſed ex nolentibus volentes fiant, not that unwilling men ſhould believe, which cannot be, but that of unwilling men they ſhould be made moſt willing: and in his 5. b. & 8. c. de prædeſt. Sanct. he ſaith, Iubet Chriſtus ut ad ſe veniamus, iubet Deus ut convertamur, & interim ipſius eſt operari tum converſionem, tum velle venire ad ipſum; Chriſt commandeth us to come unto him, and God biddeth us to turne unto him, and yet it is of him, to work both our converſion and alſo our willingneſſe to come unto him.

Idem de prædeſt. Sanct. l. 5. c. 8.

Ob. But then you will ſay, why doth he bid us do it, if we have no power to do it?

Sol. S. Aug. anſwereth, In præceptione cognoſcas, quid debeas habere, in correptione, te tuo vitio non habere, in oratione, unde accipias quod vis habere; in the commandement thou maiſt know, what thou oughteſt to have, in the puniſhment, thou ſhouldeſt know, that it is thine own fault thou haſt it not, and in thy prayer, thou maiſt underſtand from whence thy defects may be ſupplied; and in another place he ſaith, Iubet Deus quæ non poſſumus, ut noverimus quid ab illo petere debeamus; God commands us to do the things we cannot performe, to ſhew unto us what we could have done, and what we ſhould now ask and ſeek from him; and therefore theſe precepts do rather manifeſt our frailties, than prove our abilities to performe them; ſo another ſaith, Non voluit hic Chriſtus, quid ex ſe poſſit homo, docere; ſed tantum qualiter affectos eſſe oporteat, qui ad ipſum veniunt; Chriſt doth not hereby teach, what man could do of himſelfe, but how men ſhould be affected and qualified, that do come to him; thus and thus they muſt be; but he muſt make them thus, or they cannot be. And ſo much for the act, that we are to do.

Idem de corrept. & grat. c. 3.

Idem de lib. arbit. c. 16.

Marlorat. in h. loc.

2. The termes are twofold.
1. From whence.
2. To whom.

2. The termini are { 1. A quo, 2. Ad quem. } { From whence, To whom. } For

1. We cannot come to any place, but we muſt leave another place; and therfore, as the children of Iſrael were faine to leave Egypt, before they could come into the land of Canaan, ſo muſt we leave the world, and all worldly deſires, before we can come to Chriſt; for we cannot carrie the world upon our backs; or if we could, Chriſt would no more agree with it, than the Arke of God and the idoll Dagon.

2. We are to come, not to Moſes nor the Prophets, for they worke wrath, they worke death; not to S. Peter, nor the Apoſtles, for they are dead; not to Saints, nor to Angels, for they are ignorant of us; nor to any other creature, which cannot helpe us; but to me, that am thy Creatour and Redeemer; nam qui alijs ibunt, aquam hauriunt ex ciſternis fractis; for they that go to any other, do but draw water out of broken ciſternes, ſaith Toſſanus: i. ſeeke help where no helpe can be found; And therefore though God uſeth the Miniſtery of Moſes and the Prophets, and Chriſt ſendeth forth his Apoſtles and Diſciples, to convert the world unto God; yet not any of theſe, that is a faithfull ſervant in Gods houſe, but he will ſend you unto Chriſt, and he will confeſſe with Iohn Baptiſt, I am not he; that is, to whom you ſhould go; and with the Apoſtles, we are but men as you are; and therefore if you come to us, we muſt ſend you back againe to him, who is the onely man that can help you; So Moſes himſelfe ſaith, A Prophet ſhall the Lord your God raiſe unto you, like unto me, heare him; So Chriſt teſtifieth of Moſes; for if ye had believed Moſes, ye had believed me; becauſe Moſes ſent all to him; and ſo did the Prophets, and they that did not ſo, were but theeves and robbers, as our Saviour ſaith: And the reaſon is (as S. Bernard ſaith) quia difficilis res eſt, & ſoli virtuti divinæ poſſibilis, ſuſceptum ſemel ſemel peccati jugum a cervicibus excutere; becauſe it is a very hard and difficult thing, poſſible onely to the divine power, to ſhake off the yoke of ſinne from our necks; or, as Luther ſaith, quia peccatum eſt tyrannus potentiſſimus, qui non poteſt vinci & repelli ulla potentia omnium creaturarum, ſive ſint angelicæ ſive humanæ, ſed ſola infinita & ſuperiori potentia filij Dei; becauſe ſinne is ſuch a powerfull tyrant, that it can never be vanquiſhed and repelled by any power of all creatures, whether angelical or humane, but only by the infinite and ſupremeſt power of the Sonne of God. Luther Tom. 1. c. 3. 544.

Non opus eſt tibi Patronis apud Deum, inquit, multo diſcurſu, ut blandiare alijs; ſed licet ſolus ſis patroneq; carus & per teipſum Deum preceris, omnino tamen voti compos eris; neq; enim Deus tam facile annuit cum alij pro nobis orant, ut cum ipſimet oramus, etiamſi plurimis plenis malis. Chryſtom. ſ. in hom. de profect. Evang. p. 428 d.

Ideo inexplabile facinus eſt deſerere viventem, ut defunctorum monumenta ſervias, ait Lact. Inſtit. div. l. 2. c. 18. p. 146. & non audiendi Viegas & Coſterus alij, docentes Sanctos defunctos, ut oſtiarios cœli eſſe invocandos. Coſterus in Enchi. de Veneral. Sanct. p. 638. Vieg. in Apoc. p. 459.

And therefore we come to the Miniſters of Chriſt, not as to men that can either eaſe us of our labours, or releaſe us from our burdens, but as to ſuch guides and leaders, as he hath appointed, to direct us unto him: For he alone is that heavenly Phyſitian, which can heale our dying ſoules, he alone is that lambe of God, which taketh away the ſinnes of the world: And therefore I beſeech you all to obey this venite ad me, leſt you ſhould ſuffer that abite a me, which is the moſt wofull farewell that ever was heard.

So you have heard, what we muſt doe, and to whom we muſt come, to Ieſus Chriſt.

Ob. But where ſhall we find him, that we may come unto him?

Sol. I anſwer, where his father and his mother found him, not among their friends and acquaintance, but in the Temple among the Doctors, in the Church of God, there you may find him; or you may find him in his Works, in his Word, in his Sacraments. For his workes beare witneſſe of him, and the Scriptures teſtifie of him, and if you will eat his fleſh and drink his blood, he will dwell in you, and you ſhall remaine in him for ever. And therefore if you would find your Saviour, meditate on his workes, ſearch the Scriptures, come often to his table; ſo you ſhall find him, and he will eaſe you. Luke 2.45,46. Iohn 10.25. c.5.39. & c.6.56.

I might here ſet downe the diverſe ſorts of commers unto Chriſt, and their different ends: As ſome came on the feet of their bodies, but that was while he walked here on earth: Others come with their mouthes, when they draw neare to him with their lips, and their hearts are farre from him: And others come with their hearts, when they hunger and thirſt after him, Pſal. 42. And ſome came to him as the lepers, poore ſinners, to be cleanſed; the blind, poore ignorant men, to receive their ſight, and to be inſtructed; the Phariſees, proud hypocrites, to tempt him; the Herodians, to intrap him; the Iudaſſes, falſe traitors, to betray him; the ſouldiers, mercileſſe men, to crucifie him; and many more, that do come unto him, and heare him, and handle him, and eat him, yet ſo unworthily, that they ſhall receive no benefit by him, but the greater condemnation; becauſe they are not, as thoſe gueſts that he inviteth; and eſpecially becauſe they come not to thoſe ends, that he preſcribeth; but they come uncalled, as malicious enemies, to ſhew their ſpite unto him, and not as poore diſtreſſed ſinners to be eaſed and relieved by him.

But, ſeeing the next Precept directs theſe gueſts, how to come, that they may be welcome, or howſoever they come, that they may not be ſent away. Thus much ſhall ſerve for the firſt Precept, whereby all men are invited to come to Chriſt.

The ſecond precept is, take my yoke upon you; this is the method that I ſate downe in the diviſion of my Text, but I find in my Saviours order, of ſetting downe my Text, one of his promiſes inſerted and intervolved betwixt theſe precepts; therefore, leſt I ſhould ſhew my ſelfe too arrogant, if I preferred my owne method before his order, I muſt now handle his firſt promiſe, I will eaſe you: And I think there is great reaſon I ſhould do ſo; quia non caret myſterio; becauſe I find a great myſtery and much comfort, why our Saviour promiſeth eaſe, before he enjoyneth us to do any more; for he called them that were wearied with their labours, and heavy laden under their burdens, and he had given them one commandement already, to ſtep out of their way, and to come to him, which is no ſmall matter to them that are ſo exceedingly burthened: Therefore A myſtery in our Saviours ſetting down theſe words leſt, if he had added precept upon precept, and then burthen upon burthen, they ſhould be wholly diſcouraged and tyred, out of his great pittie and compaſſion, he mingleth his promiſes with his precepts, ſaying, if we come unto him, hee will eaſe us, and if we take his yoke upon us, we ſhall find reſt for our ſoules. So he did with the Iſraelites, when he brought them out of the land of Egypt, he would not preſently lead them among the Cananites, leaſt the finding of ſharp warres, ſo ſuddenly, might cauſe them to returne backe into Egypt; and ſo he uſeth all the meanes that may be, to bring us, and to retaine us with himſelfe; never giving precept to doe any thing, but withall he joynes his promiſe, that he will helpe us, as he doth here, come unto me, and I will eaſe you; Touching which, we muſt obſerve;

Why Chriſt inſerteth this promiſe, before he giveth the next precept.

The firſt promiſe of Chriſt. Two things conſiderable.

1. What he promiſeth,
2. How he performeth it,

} Two points worth the noting.

1. What hee promiſeth.

1. Euthymius ſaith, he promiſeth to free them from ſuch labours; but that is not likely; becauſe the word ſignifieth not a deliverance from their labour, but an aſſiſtance to helpe them forward; Saint Auguſtine ſaith, quomodo reficit peccatis oneratos, niſi indulgentia peccatorum, how doth he eaſe them that are laden with ſinne, but by forgiving all their ſinnes? and ſo Marlorat and divers others: but he promiſeth to eaſe, not onely ſinners from their ſinnes, but alſo thoſe that labour in any other work, and are laden with the weight of any other croſſe or calamity; therefore we muſt know that the word ἀναπαύσω, which the vulgar tranſlateth reficiam, and Beza refocillabo, doth accordingly ſignifie theſe two things,

Aug. de verb. Apoſt. Ser. 34.

1. A refection, quod refertur ad cibum; which is the feeding of them that are ready to faint.

2. A refocillation, quod refertur ad remedium laſſitudinis, which is the cooling of them that do melt with heate. And

3. Others ſay the word ſignifieth eaſe, and tranquillity, as Lucian ſaith, ἐκ χαυμάτε μακρᾶ ἀναπαύομαι; injoying eaſe, after tedious ſickneſſe; and Suidas ſaith, τὶς εἰς ἀναπαύσας ἐκ κακῶν ἢ πραγμάτων; who would not have reſt after a tedious and miſerable imployment? and ſo in holy Writ, this word is uſed by the Septuagint to ſignifie eaſe and reſt, as in Gen. 5.29. 1 Chron. 22.9. and where the Iewes call the day of their deliverance, ἡμέρα ἀναπάυσεως, a day of reſt and tranquillitie. So you ſee what our Saviour promiſeth, not to quit us from our labour, nor to free us from our burthen, for we muſt labour ſtill, and we ſhall not be void of ſin or delivered from the burden of the law, and of the croſſe, while we live here on earth; but to eaſe us, to refreſh us, to aſſiſt us; that is, when we are fainting in our labours, he prepares a table for us and refreſheth us with food, whereby a new we are inabled to worke againe; when we are hot and ſweating, under the waight of our labours and the burthen of our ſinnes, then doth he coole us, and as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, he bloweth with his windes and the waters flow, whereby we may coole our heat and quench our thirſt; and when our mindes are vexed, our hearts troubled, and our ſoules ready to deſpaire, by reaſon of thoſe more then Herculean labours that we muſt doe, and thoſe inſupportable burthens that we muſt beare, then doth he quiet our mindes, pacifie our conſciences, and ſo ſatisfie our hearts, that we doe merrily paſſe throughout all difficulties, and rejoyce, with the Apoſtles, that we are counted worthy to ſuffer theſe things for the name of Chriſt, and for the aſſured hope of everlaſting life. And this is very much; but then ἀναπαυσω What it ſignifieth.

Pſal. 23.5.

Pſal. 147.18.

Act. 5.41.

2. How he performeth it.

2. We muſt conſider, how can theſe things be, or how doth he performe all theſe things?

Matth. 4.4.

1. A man lives not by bread onely, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God; this is that ſpirituall food, which refreſheth every faithfull man, and gives life to them that are at the point of death; for if we be oppreſſed with any troubles; this tells us, that, if we call on God, he will either take them from us, or give us ſtrength to beare them; if we have beene rich and now are poore; this tells us, the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away; therefore we muſt bee

Iob 1.21.

con-

contented becauſe it is the Lords doing; or if we be ſicke, this tells us, it is God that kills and giues life, that brings to the grave and raiſeth up againe; and this is a better refection to any ſicke ſoule, then Iacobs ſauoury meat was to his father Iſaac; and yet this is but the firſt courſe of Gods banquet; for if you come to him, he will give his fleſh to eate, and you ſhall have his blood to drinke; for his fleſh is meat indeed, and his blood is drinke indeed, and whoſoever eateth thereof ſhall never hunger. Gen.27.4.& 25. Ioh.6.55 v.35.& 51.

2. When we pant and ſweat and melt away, with the fervent heate of Gods wrath, that we feele in our ſoules, by reaſon of our ſinnes, then, if we come to Chriſt, the ſpirit of God teſtifieth unto our ſpirits, that Chriſt was made a curſe for us, and thereby hath blotted out the hand-writing of ordinances that was againſt us, and freed us from the curſe of the law; becauſe there ſhall not come from him a double tribulation: and this is the refocillation and cooling of the heat of our afflicted conſciences; but if the heat of carnall luſts and the flames of inordinate deſires, doe make us ſweat out the drops of ſinne, then, if we come to Chriſt, the ſame ſpirit will blow ſuch gracious blaſts into our hearts, that we ſhall feele the force of that ſaying, ſufficit tibi gratia mea, my grace is ſufficient for thee, either to preſerve thee from ſinne, or to forgive thee all thy ſinne; and what greater eaſe or comfort can there be to any afflicted conſcience? Gal.3.13. Coloſſ.2.14. 2 Cor.12.9.

3. We are not onely thus helped and aſſiſted, but we have alſo reſt and tranquillity, quietneſſe and contentedneſſe, in what ſtate ſoever we be; come life, come death, come what will, or what can come, we know all doe, and will co-operate together for the beſt, for them that love God and will come to Ieſus Chriſt; and therefore Saint Paul, finding this tranquillity of minde in his troubled ſtate, could ſay, we are toſſed on every ſide, yet not in diſtreſſe, we are perplexed, yet not in deſpaire, perſecuted, yet not forſaken, caſt downe, yet not caſt away; for though the world thinks us infælices, very unhappy, yet we aſſure our ſelves to be, infæliciter fælices, moſt happy in that unhappineſſe; becauſe that, being juſtified through faith, we have peace with God by Ieſus Chriſt: and being at peace with God, we care not though we have tribulations in the world; for we know he hath overcome, and we ſhall overcome the world; ſo nothing in the world can trouble them, that have left the world, and are come to Chriſt. Rom 8.28. 1 Cor.10.13. Rom.5.1. Ioh.16.33.

And therefore I doe wonder, why they that are wearied with their labours, and are laden under the burden of ſinne and the miſeries of this life, and deſire reſt, will not come to Chriſt, that they may be eaſed. Non fas eſt ut homo qui ſit, mortalemq́, hanc vitam agat, doloris & angoris ſit expers; it cannot be that a man living on earth, and offending God day by day, ſhould be free from vexation and griefe, as Saint Chryſoſtome ſaith: and yet Chriſt ſaith, come unto me and I will eaſe you, ô come, and I will helpe you; and we need not doubt of his promiſe, becauſe he is both able and willing, to helpe them that come unto him; able, becauſe he is the Sonne of God, and all things are delivered into his hands, all power both in heaven and earth; and willing, becauſe he came to ſave that which was loſt, not to judge the world, but that the world through him might have life; and his willingneſſe is ſuch and ſo great, ut plus velit dare quam nos accipere, plus miſereri quam nos a miſeria liberari; he is more ready to give, and to give more then we deſire, and more willing to pittie us, then we are deſirous to be pittied, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith; and Saint Baſil ſaith, humanus eſt, miniſter paratus eſt, & gratia ejus citra invidiam luculenta eſt, promptitudo ſaltem in te ſit & impedimentum nullum erit, he is humane and gentle, he is ready to ſerve thee, and his grace without all envie is ready to embrace thee; ſo that if there were a readineſſe in thee, there could be no impediment to hinder thee; And therefore my deere brethren, moveat nos extrema qua premimur anguſtia, cogat ipſa, cui periculoſe ſubjacemus, neceſſitas; & reſuſcitet nos promptiſſima ſalvatoris in refocillando facilitas; let our extreame miſeries move us, let our neceſſities compell us, and let the exceeding great willingneſſe of our Saviour to receive us, ſtirre us up to go to Chriſt, that we may be eaſed, helped and relievd. Matth.10.26. Ioh 12 47. Chryſoſt. in 2. ep. ad Tim. c. 1. ho. 2. to. 4. p. 283. b. Aug. de verb. dom. to. 10. ſer. 29. p. 114. d. Baſilius in hortat. ad baptiſm. to. 1. conſtone 13 p. 210. Dieteric. in feſta. b. Matth. pa 259. & 260.

And yet for all this, our great wants and necessities, our vexations and troubles, and all the miseries and sorrowes, that we suffer in this wretched life; and the great love and mercy of God, to be so ready and so willing to ease us and relieve us; such is our supine negligence, and our obstinate wilfullnesse, wrought in us, through the subtilties and malice of the divell, that we had rather lie and die in our sinnes, and be destroyed for ever with the divell and his angels; then come to Christ to be delivered, to be eased here, and saved hereafter, by none other meanes, and with no greater paines, then by embracing the love, and beleeving in the mercy of Jesus Christ; which is but a sweet and an easie taske; and therefore we ought continually to pray to God for grace, and the assistance of his holy spirit, that, as he came, to give sight unto the blind, to open the eares of the deafe, and the mouthes of the dumbe, to inable the lame to walke, to loose them that were in prison, and to give liberty unto the captives; so he would be pleased to illuminate the eyes of our understanding, that we might see him that is invisible, that he would perforate the eares of our soules, that we might heare the sweet voice of Gods spirit, that he would open our lipps, that our mouths might set forth his praise, that the feet and ancle-bones of our faith might be strengthened, to support us unto Christ, and that the chaines of sin and Satan, might be unlinked, and broken all to fitters; that we might come to Christ, and serve our God with joy and gladnesse: this should be our daily prayer for ever. And so much for the first promise of Christ, I will ease you.

Luk 4 18.

Esay 61.1,2.

The

The ſecond Part.

2. HAving heard the firſt Precept of Chriſt, to come unto him, and in the necke thereof, a ſpeciall promiſe, that he would eaſe us; we are now to conſider his ſecond Precept; take my yoke upon you; whereupon Saint Auguſtine ſaith, nimis delicatum eſt, quod a nobis requirit Dominus noſter, it is but a ſmall matter that our Lord requireth of us; quia non dicit jejunate plus quam poteſtis, & plus quam vires veſtræ ſufferant vigilate; for he doth not ſay, faſt more then you can, or watch more then you are able, abſtaine from all wine and fleſh, and doe more then your ſtrength will beare; theſe things he requireth not; but he injoyneth this, to take his yoke upon us, quod omnes homines poſſunt, cum ipſius gratia, ſine grandi labore complere; which all men, with the helpe of his grace, may eaſily beare without any great labour;

2. Precept.

How facile is Chriſt his precept

And yet, (ſaith he) this is the miſery of man, quod multi duriſſimum & amariſſimum avaritiæ jugum cum multis laboribus volunt ferre, & dulce jugum Chriſti & onus ejus leve diſſimulant humeris ſuis imponere; that moſt of us had rather beare the moſt hard and bitter yoke of covetouſneſſe, and worldly deſires, with great toyle and many labours, then to take up this ſweet and eaſie yoke of Chriſt; malunt cum multis peccatis ſub ſarcina gravi ſuccumbere, quam jugum Chriſti, quod eos poteſt in cœlum elevare, ſuſcipere; they had rather ſinke under the heavie burden of their ſinnes, then take up the yoke of Chriſt, which onely can lift them up to heaven.

The folly of men.

Aug. de temp. Ser. 111.

But ſeeing, as the ſame Saint Auguſtine ſaith, omnis homo aut Chriſtum portando erigitur, aut jugum ſeculi ſuſtinendo ad inferiora deprimitur; every man, by carrying the yoke of Chriſt, ſhall be exalted to heaven, or by ſuſtaining the yoke of this world, ſhall be preſſed downe to hell; Let us, that have any care of our ſalvation, hearken to theſe words of Chriſt, take my yoke upon you, wherein we muſt obſerve, { 1. What we muſt take, my yoke, 2. On whom we muſt impoſe it, upon you.

Idem de temp. Ser. 110.

Two things obſervable.

1. Take my yoke, { 1. A yoke. 2. My yoke. } For

1 What we muſt take.

1. He doth not call us to idleneſſe, to wantonneſſe, to liberty, but to take a yoke upon our necks; for he came not to deſtroy the law, nor to ſet us free from the obedience of the law, but to deliver us from the curſe thereof, and to helpe us to ſupport our yoke; and therefore, thoſe fooliſh libertines are deceived that thinke Chriſt, being now come, hath ſo broken the yoke of their oppreſſor and the rod of their ſhoulder, that they may now live as they liſt; for though Chriſt be the end of the law, and we are not under the law but under grace, yet we muſt not make an end of all obedience, nor offend the law, becauſe we are under grace; but, though we come to Chriſt and looke for eaſe from Chriſt, yet muſt we take this yoke upon us; or we muſt looke for no eaſe from him; but then

1. A yoke. Matth. 5. 17.

Libertines how miſtaken.

Eſay 9. 4.

Rom. 10. 4.

Rom. 6. 14.

2. We muſt conſider what yoke it is that we muſt take; for we doe reade of divers kinds of yokes, as ſpecially

2. My yoke.

That there are three kindes of yokes.

{ 1. The yoke of ſinne, 2. The yoke of the world, 3. The yoke of Chriſt. } For

1. Yoke of ſin.

1. Saint Auguſtine ſaith, the yoke of Aſſur are the ſinnes and temptations of the divell; and the yoke of Nebuchadnezzar may ſignifie that ſinne, whereby we doe ſerve the divell, ſaith Origen; ſo the firſt yoke, wherein the Galatians were, was their idolatry; and the ſecond yoke was their judaization, which was a ſinne like unto their idolatry, as both Saint Hierom and Ambroſe ſay; and ſo every ſinne is a yoke and a heavie yoke too, upon the necks of ſinners; a yoke, though ſweet in the taking on, and eaſie in the firſt aſſay, yet very hard to be ſhaken off, and very grievous to be borne, galling our hearts and vexing our conſciences while we live; quia juſſiſti Domine, & ita eſt, quod animus inordinatus ſit ſibi ipſi pœna; for the Lord hath decreed it ſo, and ſo it ſhall be, that a ſinfull ſoule ſhall ever carry his puniſhment upon his backe, and the ſinner can no more promiſe true eaſe unto his owne heart, while the yoke of ſinne is upon his necke, then he can preſerve himſelfe from burning, while the fire is in his boſome. And therefore, this is not the yoke our Saviour perſwades us to take upon us; for he came from heaven to take this from us; and becauſe he ſaw it was a yoke too heavie for us to beare, he tooke it upon himſelfe, and though he did no ſinne, yet was he made ſinne for us, that we might be made the righteouſneſſe of God in him.

Aug. q. in Num. 35 Origen ſup. Matth. hom. 4.

Hieron ſup. Eſay 9. & ſup Jer. 29 & ſup Gal 5. & Ambroſ in ep. 20.

2 Cor. 5. 21.

2. There is another yoke, the brood of this, leſſe ſweet, and more rough, yet not ſo dangerous as this; and that is the yoke of the world, which is either minatum or illatum, internum or externum; For

2. Yoke of the world.

1. All the afflictions of this world, ſickneſſe, feare, ſorrow, and other innate paſſions of our diſtempered ſoules, and the manifold paines and pangs of our fraile bodies, are a heavie yoke upon all the ſonnes of Adam, as the ſonne of Syrach ſaith; a yoke that preſſeth us ſore, and which we doe all exceedingly deteſt, and yet continually cheriſh the tree that beares it for us: this our Saviour bids us not to take upon us; that is, to make afflictions to our ſelves, like the fooliſh prieſts of Baal; but, if they be layd upon us, we are injoyned patiently to beare them, untill the ſame hand takes them off, as laid them there; becauſe, as ſinne is the impulſive cauſe of all miſeries, ſo whoſoever be the inſtruments, or howſoever they be impoſed, God is the chiefe author of all afflictions; for as Iob ſaith, Dominus dedit, Dominus abſtulit, the Lord ſends them, and the Lord removes them; and there is no evill, of this nature, in the citie, which the Lord doth not: and therefore while any yoke of this kinde is upon our neck, let us know why and who laid it there, and pray to him to take it from us; and this will teach us patience.

1. Inward afflictions.

Eccleſiaſt. 40. 1.

Afflictions not to be made to our ſelves.

God is the chiefe inflicter of all our afflictions.

Amos 3 6.

2. The rage of tyrants and the tyranny of oppreſſors is another yoke, that grieves us ſore; ſo Cicero calleth the rage and oppreſſion of Dolabella and Marcus Antonius, jugum impiorum; ſo the interlinial gloſſe ſaith, jugum Babilonis in populum Dei, dici poſſunt perſecutiones mundi in bonos; the perſecutions of the world againſt good men, may be ſaid to be the yoke of the King of Babylon; and ſo the manifold traditions of the Scribes and Phariſees, were a yoke and a burden that were not eaſie to be borne.

2. Outward perſecutions.

Broaldus in Philip. 11. Ciceron. p. 2322.

Matth. 23. 4.

And beſides theſe, Saint Gregory ſaith, the proſperity of all worldly confluences is as grievous a yoke as adverſitie, nam ut adverſa premunt dum formidantur, ita quaſi quodam jugo ſervitutis premunt proſpera, dum appetuntur; for as adverſity preſſe us downe, while we feare them; ſo proſperity is as a yoke of bondage upon our backes, while we deſire it; aſperum quippe jugum & duræ ſervitutis pondus eſt ſub-eſſe temporalibus, ambire terrena, retinere labentia, velle ſtare in non ſtantibus appetere tranſeuntia, ſed cum tranſeuntibus nolle tranſire; becauſe this is a grievous yoke, and a mighty burden of a hard bondage, to be ſubject unto temporall things, to labour for terreſtriall goods, to hold faſt ſlippery ware, to ſtrive to ſtand on unſtable ground, and to deſire thoſe things that paſſe away, but in no waies to be willing to paſſe with them.

Proſperity.

Gregor. in Iob l. 30 c. 12. p. 778.

3. Yoke of Chriſt.

3. The yoke of Chriſt is to be taken up and borne away gladly and cheerefully, by every one that will come to Chriſt; for that is moſt true, which Saint Bernard ſaith, onerat nos Deus cum exonerat, God doth load us when he doth unload us: and he doth yoke us when he doth unyoke us; cum exonerat peccato, onerat beneficio, when he doth unloade us from our ſinnes, he loades us with his bleſſings, Bernard Ser. 15. in Pſal. Qui habitat. col. 320. b.

bleſſings, and when he takes away the yoke of worldly ſervitude, he layeth upon us the yoke of ſpirituall obedience; ſo as I ſaid before, here is but a change of yokes and not a freedome from all yokes.

But we muſt obſerve that the yoke of Chriſt is twofold:

Either { 1. Obedientiæ, of obedience; / 2. Tolerantiæ, of ſufferance. }

The yoke of Chriſt is twofold.

The firſt is exerciſed in agendo, in doing the will of God; the other is practiſed in patiendo, in ſuffering for the truth of God; and both theſe yokes, or rather both theſe ends of the yoke of Chriſt, muſt be taken up by every Chriſtian man.

1. The yoke of obedience is in reſpect { 1. Of the Law. / 2. Of the Goſpell. }

1. Of obedience, Twofold.

1. In reſpect of the Law, not ſimply, as it was given to the Iewes, but in ſome reſpects as it pertaines to us Chriſtians; for the Law, as it was given to the Iewes, was rightly termed, jugum ſervitutis, a yoke of bondage, which neither we nor our fathers were able to beare, and that, as Alexander Hales well obſerveth, in ſeven ſpeciall reſpects.

1. In reſpect of the Law. Acts 15.10.

Alexander de Hales to.4. de confeſſ.q.18 p.565. The yoke of the law inſupportable in ſeven reſpects.

1. For the plurality of ceremonies, which are but a yoke and a burden whenſoever they exceed reaſon and mediocritie; and therefore Chriſt, putting us under his yoke, Sacramentis numero pauciſſimis, obſervatione facillimis, ſignificatione præſtantiſſimis, ſocietatem novi populi colligavit; hath knit his people together, with very few Sacraments and moſt eaſie ceremonies. Aug. ep. 118. ad Ianuar.

1. Reſpect. Auguſt. ad Ianuar ep 118.

2. For the ſharpeneſſe and ſeverity of the puniſhment; for whoſoever tranſgreſſed Moſes law, died without mercy, under the teſtimony of two or three witneſſes, Heb. 10.28.

2. Reſpect.

3. For the obſcurity of the figures and types, or the literall underſtanding of the law, which did no waies excite and ſtirre up men, to the obedience and fulfilling of the ſame; whereupon Saint Gregory ſaith, that Aaron and Hur were faine to hold up the heavie hands of Moſes, and by ſuſtaining them to make them lighter; quia Mediator Dei & hominum tum igne ſpiritus Sancti veniens mandata legis gravia, quæ, dum carnaliter tenerentur, portari non poterunt, tolerabiliora nobis per ſpiritualem intelligentiam oſtendit; the Mediator of God and men, comming downe to us with the fire of his holy ſpirit, hath ſhewed how thoſe commandements, that were ſo heavie, as, while they were carnally taken, cold no waies poſſibly be performed, might, by the ſpirituall underſtanding thereof, be made more tollerable and eaſie unto us.

3. Reſpect.

Gregor. in hom. ſuper luc. 7.

4. For the inefficacie of that, which ſhould move us to performe them, that is, feare; quia brevis differentia legis & evangelij, timor & amor, becauſe the difference of the Law and Goſpell is but very ſhort, feare and love; and love, doth moſt effectually move us to any thing, becauſe all things are eaſie to him that loveth, but feare doth coldly compell us and ſlowly carry us, to do what we do not love, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith.

4. Reſpect.

Degeneres animos arguit timor. Virgil. Æneid. l. 3

5. For the ſmaleneſſe of the reward, which, literally underſtood, was but bonum temporale, a temporall good, as if you heare my words, you ſhall eat the good of the land.

5. Reſpect.

Eſay 1.19.

6. For the defect thereof, in yeelding ſtrength to performe the ſame; whereupon the gloſſe ſaith, lex quæ dicitur factorum, imperabat & minabatur, ſed gratiam præſtandi non præſtabat, lex autem fidei opera mandat, & credendo impetrat ut fiant; the law of workes did command and threaten, but gave no power to performe it; the law of faith commands, and by beleeving, yeelds us grace and ability to keepe it; whereupon Saint Iohn ſaith, the law came by Moſes, but grace and truth by Ieſus Chriſt, Iohn 1.17.

6. Reſpect.

7. For the bondage and ſervitude of the law, as the Apoſtle noteth; becauſe theſe are the two Teſtaments, one which begetteth unto bondage, and ſo forth, as you ſee in Gal. 4.25.

7. Reſpect. Gal. 4.25.

And Chriſt doth not bid us take the yoke of the Law upon us, in theſe reſpects, as it was given to the Iewes; but as it is the rule of perfect obedience, contained in the Goſpell,

How the law belongeth to the Chriſtians.

Goſpell, and me aſſiſted by the graces of Gods Spirit to performe the ſame. Thus we are injoyned to aſſume this yoke, and we ſhall find it very eaſie, as hereafter I ſhall ſhew unto you.

Iugum Chriſti lex evangelica eſt, quia continuing it diſcipulos Chriſti suos ſe. Ianſen ſup. h. loc. Mar. 1. 15. Ioh. 6. 29. Mat 28. 20. Tit. 2. 12.

2. In the reſpect of the Goſpell, the evangelicall counſels, and eſpecially faith and repentance, are the ſumme of that obedience, which he requireth of us; and therefore, if you will take the yoke of Chriſt, you muſt obey the doctrine of Chriſt, repent of your ſinnes, believe in the Sonne of God, and do all whatſoever he commanded you to do; and that is, as the Apoſtle ſaith, to live godly, and righteouſly, and ſoberly in this preſent world.

2. The yoke of the croſſe. Mat 16. 24. 1 Pet. 2. 21. Aug. Tom. 8. in Præfat. Pſal. 69. Pag. 742. c.

3. We muſt take up the yoke of ſufferance, that is, as our Saviour ſaith in another place, take up your croſſe and follow him; for Chriſt hath ſuffered for us, and left us an example that we ſhould follow his ſteps; and therefore there is no ſervant of God without perſecution, as S. Auguſtine ſaith; becauſe, as we find it written in the lives of the Fathers, Deus in cœlis reſidens, non niſi ſchedulas crucis exarat, & unicuiq; ſuam ſchedulam cruce ſua ſignatam, in ſinum ſuum immittit; God ſitting in the heavens, writeth certaine ſchedules of his croſſe, and then he ſends into every mans boſome his ſheet, marked with his owne croſſe.

What God doth.

Which teacheth us 4 leſſons.

And this ſhould teach us,

1 Leſſon. To prepare our ſelves for afflictions. Macar. Hom 15. p. 106. Vide Eccl. 2. 1. &c. & Aug. in Enar. Pſ. 39. tom. 8. Pag. 361. c. & Chryſ. Hom. 67. ad Pop. Ant. To. 4. P. 604. c.

1. To prepare our ſelves for tribulations; for if we come to Chriſt, we muſt take his yoke, we muſt beare our croſſe; and therefore, Chriſtiana Religionis via eſt, ut ubi eſt Spiritus Sanctus, ibi ſtatim ſequatur perſecutio & conflictus; the way of Chriſtian Religion is, that whereſoever the Spirit of God is, there preſently perſecutions and conflicts will follow after, ſaith Macarius.

2 Leſſon. To beare it patiently. Aug. in Pſ. 93.

2. To beare it patiently, whatſoever is laid upon us; for though afflictions ſeeme not joyous for the preſent, becauſe the croſſe is as a yoke unto our fleſh, and ſomtimes a hard yoke, an iron yoke, which the Lord himſelfe layeth upon our neckes; yet afterwards it yeeldeth forth the moſt excellent fruits of righteouſneſſe, to them that are exerciſed thereby, Hebr. 12. 11. becauſe as the bullocks are tamed under the yoke, and conſtrained to do their duties, ſo the godly, under the yoke of tribulations, are kept in, and kept cloſe, that they wander not out of the way of piety and honeſty; and therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith, Boni laborant, qui flagellantur ut filij, mali exultant, qui damnantur ut alieni; the good men do labour, and are whipped as Gods children, and the evill men do rejoyce, and are ſuffered, as ſtrangers, to do what they liſt.

3 Leſſon. Not to judge of men according to their outward condition. Amb. Tom. 1 l. 2. Offic. c. 16. p 11. b. Clem. Alex. l. 2. ſtrom p. 121 d. The good reſolution of Pompey. Non me videre ſuperbum proſpera fatarum, nec fracta adverſa debuit. Lucan. Pharſ. Quare neq; hos beatos dixeru ob præſentes delicias, ſed potius deſle ob futura ſupplicia. Chryſ Hom. de Reſur. tom. 5. p. 440. d.

3. Not to judge of men, according to their outward ſtate of proſperity or adverſity; for though the world judgeth them miſerable that are afflicted, yet queſtionleſſe, they that are preſſed under this yoke ſhall be bleſſed; and they that are free from it may rue it; Quia incipit beatitudo judicio divino, ubi arumna æſtimatur humano; becauſe happineſſe doth there begin in the judgement of God, where it is eſteemed miſery in the judgement of men, as S. Ambroſe ſaith: And he is next to God that is full of ſtripes, ſaith Clemens Alexandrinus; And therefore, let not the proſperity of the wicked trouble us, ſaith S. Chryſoſtome; becauſe as theeves and pyrats do for a while enjoy great delights and pleaſures, while they inrich themſelves by the ſpoiles of the poore, and make the good mans miſery to be their felicity; but when they are taken and carried before the Iudge, and beare the ſentence of their condemnation, they ſhall ſeverely ſmart for all their former joyes, and curſe the day wherein they bleſt themſelves in ſinne; even ſo the worldlings and the darlings of delight, that do ſwell with pride, and oppreſſe the poore, ſhall change their minds and ſigh for griefe, that they never bore the yoke of Chriſt, but ran at liberty like wild heyfers, when the Sonne of God ſhall come to judgement, and to caſt all the wicked into flouds of fire; Which ſhewes, that we ſhould rather bewaile them for their future puniſhments, than envy at their preſent delights.

4 Leſſon. Not to make croſſes to our ſelves.

4. Not to make croſſes for our ſelves, which God layeth not upon us; becauſe this is not the fruitfull yoke, but hypocriticall yokes of our owne making; and therefore therefore they are not commanded to be ſupported, nor we are promiſed to be eaſed under them. For Reaſons of this Leſſon.

1. Reaſon.

1. We are no where commanded in the Scripture, either by Chriſt or his Apoſtles, to whip or maſſacre our owne fleſh, or to aſſume any voluntary affliction, as a yoke upon our ſelves; but we are rather forbidden to do the ſame, as, Ye ſhall not cut your owne fleſh; but you ſhall onely do what I bid you; and our Saviour injoynes us, to obſerve all things whatſoever he commanded us, Matth. 28. 20.

Levit. 19. 28. Deut. 14. 1. c. 12. 32.

2. Reaſon.

2, It was unknowne to the Chriſtian Church above a thouſand yeares, and condemned as hereticall, when it began firſt to be practiſed; for as Dietericus hath collected, the firſt whippers of themſelves began in Italie, in Anno 1260. and in the yeare 1349. Or, as Nauclerus ſaith, 1346. they came into Germanie; but their ſect and practice was prohibited by the Pope, under the ſentence of excommunication: And John Gerſon the learned Chancellour of Paris, in the yeare 1415. wrote a ſpeciall tract againſt theſe flagellatours, and therein proveth by many arguments, that this fooliſh ſect is to be whipped out of the Chriſtian world.

Who the firſt whippers of themſelves: Siffrid. Preſb. lib. 2. epiſt. Naucler. vol. 3. Gen. 45. Trithem. in Chron. anno 1349. Gerſon Tract. 2. Oper. Baſil. 1518.

3. Reaſon.

3. It was firſt invented by the heathens; for the Lacedemonians had a feaſt which they called διαμαστιγωσις, the flagellation, wherein the noble youths were beaten and whipped, in the ſight of their parents and other friends of theirs, as Tertullian ſaith; and this they did in the honour of Diana Orthya, as Plutarch ſaith; and the ſame cuſtome was practiſed among other nations, as Polydore Virgill obſerveth, even among the Iewes themſelves, as you may ſee 2 Reg. 18. 28. where the Prieſts of Baal did cut their fleſh and launch themſelves, untill their bloud guſhed forth.

Tertull. l. ad Mart. c. 4. 10. 2. p. 225. b. Plutarch de antiq. Laced. inſtit. p. 1. Moral. p. 414. Polyd. Virg. de inuent. cap. 6 p. 593.

And therefore, it ſhould be farre from Chriſtians, which are forbidden to be companions of them, or to practice thoſe things, wherein God takes no pleaſure; For this is none of Chriſt his yoke, which he commands us to take up, but a ſuperſtitious yoke of the Divels invention, and as voluntarily aſſumed, ſo fooliſhly ſuſtained by our ſelves, and therefore rather to be derided by all, than uſed by any.

2. On whom this yoke muſt be impoſed.

2. Having heard, what is the yoke of Chriſt, which we muſt take upon us, we are now to conſider on whom we muſt impoſe it; Upon you, ſaith our Saviour, not on others, but upon your ſelves; for it was the practice of the Scribes and Phariſees, to bind heavy burdens, and to lay thoſe grievous yokes upon the necks of others, but themſelves touched them not, with the leaſt of their fingers; ſo others injoyned much, performed nothing, laid the labour upon their fellows, and tooke the praiſe unto themſelves; and indeed, the paines doth alwaies lie, not upon the meaneſt in any reſpect, becauſe they are not able to do it, nor upon the greateſt, becauſe they are not willing to undergo it, but upon thoſe of the middle ranke, who ſhall have leave to labour moſt, both in Church and Commonwealth, but muſt leave the profit unto others, who moſt greedily gape after the kernell, when theſe men have broken the ſhell.

Mat 23. 4.

Who commonly take moſt paines. Hos ego verſiculos feci, tulit alter honorem,
Sic vos non vobis vellera fertis oves, &c. Invita Virg.

But our Saviour bids us, not to gather the fruits, but to take the paines, that we may be worthy of the fruits; and I had rather do well, and deſerve what I have not, than to have what I deſerve not; becauſe it is the will of God, that we ſhould do what he requireth, and ſubmit our deſires to what he giveth; and if we faile of our deſerts in this world, yet we may be ſure our reward is with God, Eſa. 49. 4. and we ſhall not miſſe to receive it in the world to come.

Deuce ace non poſſunt, ſixe ſink perſolvere nolunt: Omnibus eſt notum, quater tray muſt ſolvere ictum.

And therefore, as our Saviour adviſeth us, ſo I adviſe all men, to take his yoke upon them, to obey his precepts, and to keep his commandements; or if they refuſe the ſame, let them take heed of that, which S. Gregory ſaith; Iurè hominum jura proponuntur contemnentibus jura Dei, & his qui mitia & ſaluhria divinitatis conſilia ſpreverunt, dura & importabilia humanæ ſervitutis onera prædicantur.

Greg in 1 Reg. l. 4. c. 1. p. 219.

3. Having heard of the firſt and ſecond precept of Chriſt, we are now come

3. Precept.

unto unto the third, which is the height of all perfection, that can be attained here in this life, Learne of me that I am meeke and lowly in heart: Where three things are to be conſidered.

Three things to be conſidered.

1. The injunction, learne.
2. The Maſter, of whom we ſhould learne, of me.
3. The leſſon, what we ſhould learne, to be meeke and lowly in heart.

1. The injunction, to learne.

1. Cicero ſaith, Tantus eſt innatus in omnibus cognitionis amor & ſcientiæ, ut nemo dubitare poſſit, quin ad eas res hominum natura multo emolumento invitata rapiatur; ſuch and ſo great is the inbred love of knowledge in all men, that we need not doubt, but the very nature of man, invited by the great gaine thereof, doth moſt greedily thirſt after the ſame; and to confirme the ſame, he ſheweth how little children, ne verberibus quidem, a contemplandis rebus perquirendisq; deterreantur; can ſcarce with ſtripes be kept back, from prying and inquiring into things; ſo much they do deſire to learne, and ſo greatly they do rejoyce to know what they learne: and for them that dedicate themſelves to the ſtudy of liberall arts and ſciences, we ſee them ſo farre delighted therewith, that they ſuffer much, even to the loſſe of their health, and the neglect of their domeſtique affaires, that they may attaine unto the ſame; therefore Homer brings in the Syrenes, promiſing knowledge unto Vlyſſes, if he came to them, ſaying,

How all men naturally are deſirous to learne.

Et cum maximè curis & laboribus compenſare eam, quam ex diſcendo capiant, voluptatem. Cicero de fin. l. 5. p. 153.

Doctior ad patrias lapſus perveneris oras;

Thou ſhalt returne more learned than thou cameſt; thinking (as Cicero ſaith) that the deſire of learning was dearer unto him, than the love of his countrey; for ſo we read of Archimedes, that while he wrote certaine things more attentively, he perceived not his countrey to be taken by the adverſaries; and to him we may add Ariſtoxenus, Pythagoras, Plato, Democritus, and many more, that for the love of learning, wandered to the furtheſt borders of the earth; and they deemed this to be, not only ſweet and delightſome, to procure a happy life, but they thought it to be levamentum miſeriarum, the greateſt helpe to eaſe all miſeries; and therefore many of them, with Demetrius Phalerius, when they were in the power of their enemies, in the hands of tyrants, or when they were in holds or baniſhments, did eaſe their hearts and allay their griefe, with the ſtudy of learning.

Learning, what an excellent thing it is.

Learning allayes all griefe and miſeries.

Cicero de fin. l. 5. p. 155.

And the reaſon hereof is rendred by Ariſtotle; becauſe man was created to underſtand and doe; and knowledge muſt go before action, as a skilfull guide to direct the ſame; and this cannot be gotten but either by the long law of experience, or the painfull path of learning; and therefore the lazie and ignorant ſay, the ſtudy of learning is too long and tedious, an uneaſie journey to paſſe through it; and they that think to finiſh it, do often ſtick, as the Iſraelites did in the wilderneſſe, in the middle way; and they that come to the end, have many times ſo confounded themſelves, that inſtead of tranquillity of ſoules, they have increaſed the trouble of their ſpirits; and, as Feſtus ſaid falſly to S. Paul, ſo we may truly ſay of many of them, their too much learning makes them mad.

Why men are ſo deſirous of learning.
Knowledge, how gotten.
What lazie men do ſay againſt learning.

Acts 26. 24.

But if we conſider the great and many benefits, that do ſpring from learning, we ſhall find them fooles that ſay ſo; for knowledge differenceth man from beaſts, and no great knowledge can ever be had without learning; I confeſſe nature hath given wit to many men; but as the skilfull wraſtler doth many times overthrow an unskilfull giant, and a weake fencer, if he be expert, may ſoone wound ſtrong Goliah, that hath nothing to defend himſelfe but his ſtrength: So the learned man hath too much advantage, whenſoever he deales with the illiterate: And this learning makes us, not only to excell others, but alſo to helpe others, by making lawes and giving counſels unto them, and eſpecially to make our ſelves moſt happy, by directing us, how to lead our lives here in peace and tranquillity, preſerving us from all feare and terrour of death, and by making us famous hereafter, when we are dead; as the works of many poore Schollers, that walked in oblivion, while they lived, have continued many hundred yeares, to perpetuate their names with glory, and to make them famous for their labours

Saluſt. l. 1. de bello Jug.
Many men witty that are not learned.

The benefits of learning.

S. Auguſtine Biſhop of little Hippo, by his learning, is become farre more famous than Cecilius Biſhop of great Carthage.

to

to poſterities, when many Kings and Princes, and the Potentates of this world, that were terrible to be heard, and perſpicuous to be ſeen, while they lived, yet preſently after death, their memoriall is periſhed with them; as Iuſtin ſaith of all the Monarchs of Syria, from Ninus to Sardanapalus, and, as Herodotus ſaith, from to Candaules; there was a pretty ſeries of them, but their very names are not ſo much as mentioned, as having done nothing worth the mentioning.

The greateſt men that do no good, do moſt juſtly deſerve to be forgotten.

Therefore Zeno, being demanded how a man might become happy, anſwered, if he drew neare and haunted the dead; that is, to read their works, and to learne their inſtructions; for they neither feare you, nor flatter you, whereas the living ſpeaker doth often both; and many times, the more pitie, ſpeed well by either.

Dead men the beſt inſtructors.

And it is a wonder to think, how highly Alexander and Iulius Cæſar, the two greateſt captaines, and two great ſcholers, that flouriſhed in the times of the greateſt learning, among the Greeks and Romans; Ptolomie Philadelphus, that gathered into his library five hundred thouſand bookes, and cauſed the 72 Interpreters to tranſlate the Books of the Old Teſtament out of the Hebrew into Greeke; Xenophon, that conducted ten thouſand Greeks over the foords of fifty rivers, and through the midſt of an hundred thouſand enemies, from Perſia into Greece, which is almoſt incredible to be believed; Archimedes, Socrates, Plato, and many others, Kings, Nobles and Philoſophers, did eſteem of learning and of learned men.

How greatly many famous Kings and Emperours did eſteeme of learning and of learned men.

Clitomachus, above forty yeares old, came to Athens to learne under Carneades, whom he ſucceeded in his ſchoole; Solon was wont to ſay, he waxed old as he learned, for he learned to his dying day; Terentius Varro, and M. Portius Cato did learne the Greek tongue, when they were old men; Alphonſus King of Arragon was fifty yeares old, when he learned the Latine tongue, and Marcus Aurelius diſdained not to learne of Sextus the Philoſopher, when he was gray-headed; for the ſtudy of Philoſophy teacheth us (ſaith Anacharſis to King Cræſus) not to command, before we have learned firſt how to obey; not to ſpeake, but to keepe ſilence, till we underſtand both what and how to ſpeake; not to reſiſt our betters, but to ſubmit our ſelves to our equalls; not to get much, but to content our ſelves with a little; not to revenge wrongs, but to pardon injuries; not to take from others, but to give our owne; not to care to be honoured, but to labour to be vertuous, to deſpiſe that which others love, and to love that which others do contemne.

Old men diſdaining not to learne.

What things Philoſophy teacheth.

Anacharſis in Epiſt. Cræſo.

And if Philoſophie teacheth this, what thinke you of Divinitie? If the Phyſickes bee ſo excellent, O then, how admirable are the Metaphyſickes?

But you muſt know (as one of our owne men very well ſaith) that the thoughts of learning are never taken up with frivolous doubts, as, among the Philoſophers, whether privation be a principle, whether any thing can be made of nothing, whether there can be an empty ſpace within the compaſſe of nature, whether the world ſhall have an end, and the like queſtions of our Schoole-men in Divinity, without end, to no end; for true learning troubles not it ſelfe to know either fruitleſſe etymologies, or verball derivations, or the diverſities of lections of depraved manuſcripts, which may ſpend much time to little purpoſe.

What true learning troubles not it ſelfe about.

And we muſt further underſtand, that learning, for the moſt part, is buſied in the toyleſome ſhop of action, and doth but ſeldome refreſh her ſelfe, when ſhe is weary, in the withdrawing chamber of meditation, onely to make the eaſier paſſage for the other; for ſhe is full of high built purpoſes, and labours not ſo much to word them, as to worke them; therefore Marius never bluſhed to profeſſe before the Senate; ſe nunquam græcas literas didiciſſe, that he never learnt the greeke tongue; becauſe his knowledge was alwaies operative, and his heart was never better at eaſe, then when his hands were at moſt labour: And to Learning buſied about action.

C. Marius unlearned, yet full of operation.

Contemplation what it is.

God would have all men active.

Learning to what it is unlike, and to what it is like. Numb 23.

Matth. 23.4.

Ezek 1.8.

Who is to be accounted the wiſe man.

Suaq; ab alijs benefacta laudari, quam ipſe aliorum narrare cupiebat.

Learning depraved how dangerous.

Corruptio optimorum peſſima.

Learning makes wicked men the more wicked.

Learned hypocriſie preferred before ſimple wiſedome.

Learning and honeſtie how to goe together.

How ſtrictly learned men ought to walke.

Learned men commonly take too much liberty.

ſay the truth, what is contemplation but a glorious title, invented onely by baſe lubberds to ſet a faire gloſſe upon their idle diſpoſitions; for God would never have breathed an intellectuall ſoule into ſuch an organicall body, as hath armes, hands, leggs, feet, and the like inſtruments of actions, unleſſe he had meant the mind ſhould exerciſe the body in the practice of all vertues: and therefore we find that the precepts of true learning, are nothing els but meere examples; becauſe ſhe never gives a principle to obſerve, but ſhe joynes withall a preſident to follow; and it is never like Balaam the ſonne of Beor, ready to ſay what the Moabite ſhall require, nor like the Scribes and Phariſees, that aſpire onely to ſit in Moſes chaire, and, ſo they may have the outward marks of the Prieſt-hood on their breaſts, and their rochets on their backs, they care not what impurity lodgeth in their hearts; and therefore doe lade the necks of other men with inſupportable yokes, but will not touch the ſame with any finger of their owne; but ſhe is like thoſe cherubims of Ezechiel, manus hominum ſubter pennas eorum, who had the hands of a man, under their glorious wings; that is, the hands of action under the wings of contemplation, or the hands of charity under the wings of faith; and ſo wings with hands, and hands not without wings; therefore Æſcilus affirmes, ὁ χρήσιμ' ἰδεῖν ἐ χ' ὁ πολλ' ἰδεῖν, σόφος; he alone is to be accounted wiſe, whoſe knowledge is more for profit then for ſhow; and therefore while Rome flouriſhed, optimus quiſq; facere quam dicere malebat; every good man deemed it better, to have his owne deeds praiſed by others, then to be himſelfe the ſetter forth of other mens praiſe.

But the times were ſoone changed, and then it was ſtrange to ſee, how learning bettered the meanes of men, but not their manners; when they were found ſitting in the wine-ſeller, or piping in a tobacco-ſhop, that ſhould have beene praying in the Church, or pleading at the barre of juſtice: and it is more ſtrange to ſee, that learning ſhould not onely, not correct that which is evill, but alſo deprave that which is good; and this is like a dangerous knife in the hands of a mad man, knowledge accompanied with unjuſtice, or a lewd man, and yet learned; then which, nothing ought to be more hated, or more feared, eſpecially if that learning be armed with any power; becauſe it is impoſſible, without Gods ſpeciall aſſiſtance, for the beſt innocency to eſcape that malice, which learning guides, and wants no ſtrength, to effect her owne deſires.

And yet, alas, we find many times, the more the pittie, that as Marius ſaith, learning doth not alwaies helpe thoſe, that are excellent therein, to the purchaſing of vertue, but doth doth often further wicked mindes, to perpetrate the more odious deeds, when it makes them, ingenioſos ad malum, the more able to be more miſchievous; and that which is yet more lamentable, theſe have beene moſt proſperous in the world; for who ſeeth not learned hypocriſie, with ſome little appearance of formall civility, to be preferred before ſimple wiſedome, that had rather die, then not doe the precepts of learning? I am ſorry to thinke, and aſhamed to ſpeake, how this world deemes of learning and honeſtie; hoyſing up the ſayles of the one, and trampling downe the beauty of the other under feet; I confeſſe, honeſtie without learning is to be loved and pittied; but learning without honeſtie is to be hated and ſhunned; and I had rather have mediocritie of learning with much honeſtie, then all the learning of the world, with no more then a forme of piety.

But you will ſay, may not learned men a little take their liberty; or muſt they be ſo preciſe, as to ſhunne all pleaſures? I anſwer with Saint Bernard; quæ in alijs nugæ, in nobis ſunt blaſphemiæ; what is tollerable in others, may be intollerable in us; therefore I will abſtaine, from what I could lawfully doe, leaſt I ſhould ſeeme to doe, that which is unlawfull; and I am not afraid to ſay, that all teachers of others ſhould doe the ſame; for, qui jacet in terra non habet unde cadat, he that hopes for nothing but heaven, needs not feare any thing on earth; and I never preached for preferment, and never will, and I hope never ſhall; but therefore have ever ſpoken the truth freely, and where my charge is, ever will;

and I know the honeſt will never be offended, becauſe I ſpeake onely againſt the diſhoneſt.

Yet you muſt know that this learning, which wants vertue, is onely gotten in the ſchoole of nature, not of grace; therefore Chriſt went not to the Pallaces of Princes, to the Synagogues of the Iewes, to the Temples of the Rabbins, or to the Accademies of Philoſophers, to chooſe his Diſciples; but as Elizeus demanded emptie veſſells of the widdow, that he might fill them, ſo Chriſt called them that were emptie of riches and void of all worldly wiſedome, that he might fill them with divine learning, ut quicquid magnum eſſent aut facerent, ipſe in ijs eſſet & faceret; that whatſoever great thing they were or did, he himſelfe ſhould be and do the ſame in them, ſaith Saint Auguſtine: And therefore he doth not onely ſay, learne, which alone, might fill them up with pride, or arme them to more ſinne; but he addeth alſo, learne of me, that I am meeke and lowly in heart. And ſo much for the injunction, learne.

Learning mixed with impiety, where gotten.

2 King. 4. 41.

Aug. de civit. Dei l. 18. c. 49.

Vnſanctified learning puffeth up.

2. The Maſter of whom we ſhould learne, is, of me, that is, not of the world, not of the fleſh, not of the divell, but of me, that am the Sonne of God, and the Saviour of all men. For

2. The maſter of of whom wee ſhould learne. Three ill Schoolemaſters.

1. The World is the ſchoole of vanity, and we can learne nothing therein to make us happy.

1. The world.

2. The Fleſh teacheth nothing but carnall concupiſcence, and all other kindes of unlawfull luſts.

2. The fleſh.

3. The Divell is the head-maſter of all wickedneſſe, the firſt inventor of all miſchiefe, the father of all lies, and the teacher of all unrighteouſneſſe.

3. The divell.

And therefore walke not in the counſell of the ungodly, ſtand not in the way of ſinners, ſit not in the ſeat of the ſcornefull, and have nothing to doe with the ſtoole of wickedneſſe; but learne of Chriſt, that he is meeke and lowly in heart, and you ſhall find reſt unto your ſoules.

Pſal. 1. 1.

And why ſhould we not learne of him? for there bee but three things that commend an excellent teacher.

Three things commend an excellent teacher.

1. The profoundneſſe of his underſtanding, that he is apt and able to teach.
2. The mildeneſſe of his converſation, that he is willing to teach with all gentleneſſe, all thoſe that come unto him.
3. The innocencie of the teachers life, that he is worthy to teach; and all theſe properties are moſt eminently perfect in our Saviour Chriſt. For

1. He is the wiſedome of God, and knoweth all things; naturall, morall, theologicall, good, bad, indifferent, paſt, preſent, future, and contingent; things paſt, without forgetfullneſſe; things preſent, without error; things to come, preſentially; and all contingent things moſt certainely: he knoweth the ſecrets of our hearts, and as the Evangeliſt ſaith, hee ſeeth our thoughts: becauſe all things are preſent unto his eyes; and therefore no doubt of his underſtanding, but he is able to teach whatſoever we deſire to learne.

1. Profoundneſſe of underſtanding.

Matth. 9. 4. Heb. 4. 13.

2. For the mildneſſe of his converſation, though he be the Lion of Iuda, to ſubdue his enemies, yet is he the Lambe of God among his friends, meeke and lowly in heart; and therefore the fitteſt teacher in the world; for we are all like children; children in underſtanding, ſaith the Apoſtle; and children are like Iacobs ewes, if you drave them hard but one day, all the flocke would tire, and they would all die, ſaith he; and though Eſau was the better hunter of the two, yet herein we find Iacob was the better ſhepheard; for they muſt not be ſpurd like a horſe, nor beaten like young bullocks, nor poſted and chaſed on like wilde beaſts; but, as Moſes led the children of Iſrael through the wilderneſſe, tanquam oves, like ſheepe, ſo muſt we leade our children by the hand, leni ſpiritu & non duro ore; by all gentle meanes, and no rigid waies, if ever we will bring them to any perfection in any learning; Quia malus interpres rerum metus, becauſe feare is an evill expounder of things; and as Ovid ſaith, —Vires ſubtrahit ipſe timor, it will ſooner diſtract their tender capacities then

2. Mildeneſſe of converſation.

1 Cor. 14. 20.

Too much harſhneſſe very ill in a teacher. Gen. 33. 13.

Claudianus de bello Getico.

Ovid. ep. 3. degenerij animos timor arguit, Virg.

then any waies quicken their apprehenſions; but love, gentleneſſe, and familiarity, (when their weake conceptions cannot reach unto the height of things, and we deſcend to ſpeake in their language) will make them glad to learne, and good to retaine what they have learned; The want of which diſcreet carriage, in the teacher, dulls many a child, and ſpoyles many a ſcholler, to his utter ruine, as you ſee, young plants are ſoone ſpoyl'd by ill handling; Therefore Chriſt comes not, in thunder, as his Father did on mount Sinai, which ſo terrified the Iewes, and ſo amazed their heads, that they knew not what they did, nor know not yet to this very day; but he comes in a ſtill voice to teach the world, that they might be taught by his heavenly Word; and leſt we ſhould feare his Majeſty, he tells us plainely, that he is meeke and lowly in heart; and ſo in all his converſation he behaved himſelfe ſo gently among his Diſciples, ſo lovingly calling them, ſo favourably bearing with their infirmities, ſo gracionſly excuſing them unto their enemies, and ſo familiarly eating with publicans and ſinners, that he ſuffered himſelfe to be moſt unjuſtly traduced, and very baſely ſlandered, rather then the leaſt availeable meanes of our inſtruction ſhould be omitted.

Many maſters ſpoyle their Schollers.

Exod. 19.18.

1 Reg. 19.12.

Marke 1.17.20, & c.2.14. Matth.9.14. Mark.7.5 & c.2. 16.

3. The innocencie of his life. Boetius de diſciplin Scholar. cap.9.

3 Quia nulla res eſt magis nociva Diſcipulo, quam vita contumelioſa magiſtri; becauſe there can be nothing ſo hurtfull to a Scholler, then the looſe and laſcivious life of his teacher, as Boetius ſaith; for as Cato ſaith, turpe eſt doctori cum culpa redarguit ipſum; a man cannot well reprove that fault in his Sholler, which his Scholler ſeeth every day to be in himſelfe; therefore Chriſt is of a moſt immaculate life, of a moſt innocent converſation, and in his mouth was found no guile; therefore he muſt needs be a moſt perfect man; for if any man offend not in word, the ſame is a perfect man, ſaith the Apoſtle; becauſe ſuch a one is able to bridle the whole body; And ſo you ſee there cannot be a better Maſter in the world, a man better qualified under heaven, to teach us, then this good teacher Ieſus Chriſt, who ſaith, learne of me.

1 Pet 2.22.

Iames 3.2.

3. The leſſon that we ſhould learne twofold.

3. For the leſſon which we ſhould learne, it is very large and manifold, even all that he commands us in the holy Scripture; for he fullfilled all righteouſneſſe; and in the waies of godlineſſe, we are to imitate him in all that we can; but that leſſon, which he ſetteth downe in this place, to bring reſt unto our ſoules, is onely twofold, { 1. Meekeneſſe. 2. Lowlineſſe. }

Mititas converſationis, & humilitas mentis.

Whereof the one pertaines properly unto the outward converſation, and the other unto the inward affection, meekeneſſe to our outward carriage, and humility to our inward mind; & hæc duo bene invicem conveniunt; and theſe two agree well together, ſaith Hugo de ſancto Victore; quia ſicut mel concordat in confectionibus medicinæ, cum omnibus diverſitatibus ſpecierum, ſic & humilitatis dulcedine condiuntur omnia genera virtutum; becauſe that, as in the compoſing of a medicine, honey doth accord with any ingredient, and with all kinde of ſimples; ſo all kind of vertues are ſeaſoned with the ſweetneſſe of humilitie.

Hugo de Sto Victor. de el. anim. l. 3

1. Grace and vertue, that we are to learne, is Meekeneſſe.

French Academ. of meekeneſſe, &c. c.30. p.321.

1. Meekeneſſe (as Plato ſaith) is a vertue, that belongeth to the courragious part of the ſoule; whereby we are hardly moved to anger, but doe appeaſe thoſe motions and inſtigations, which choller laboureth to raiſe in us: and the office or duty of this vertue is, to inable us to ſupport and endure patiently thoſe crimes and wrongs that are laid upon us, and not to ſuffer us to be too haſtily tranſported and caried away to revenge, or to be too eaſily ſtirred up to wrath, but to continue milde, gratious and of a ſtayed ſetled mind, whatſoever indignities are done unto us; & manſuetus eſt, qui nullam amaritudinem ſentit; and he is a meeke man that perceaves no bitterneſſe in himſelfe, ſaith the gloſſe upon Saint Matthew; and ſo Ariſtotle defines meekeneſſe to be, virtus animoſæ partis, qua prædita agre moventur adiram; a ſpeciall vertue, which preſerveth us from anger, and will not eaſily ſuffer us to be moved to choller for any thing, or by any meanes; and this meekeneſſe differeth from patience, ſaith Bonaventure, quia patientia

Ariſtot. de virt. & vitij.

Bonavent. in compend. theolog. veritat. to.7.p.767.

patientia eſt, in ſuſtinentia moleſtiarum corporalium, manſuetudo in ſuſtinentia contumeliarum; becauſe patience is exerciſed in bearing corporall grieſes or bodily paines, and meekeneſſe is practiſed, in ſuffering contumelies and reproaches; and Saint Hierom ſaith, mitis eſt, quem nec rancor vel ira afficit, ſed omnia æquanimiter ſuſtinet, non irritat nec irritatur, non nocet, nec nocere cogitat; he is a meeke man, that is neither malicious nor angry, that doth neither provoke nor is provoked, which hurteth no man, nor thinketh to hurt any man; and the Philoſopher ſaith it is a vertue, quæ mediocritatem ſervat circa iram, which doth rightly compoſe the iraſcible appetite, ut in attinentibus ad iram, conſtanter præeligat, quod decet; that in things moving us to anger, or pertaining unto wrath, it makes us conſtant to chooſe what is decent, and to doe what is fitting, ſaith Piccolomineus; and it is ſo excellent a vertue, (ſaith the ſame Author) ut ratione affinitatis cum humana conditione, quatenus homo a feris ſecernitur, manſuetudo ſummopere commendatur, & præ omnibus aliis principatum obtinet; that in regard of our affinity with humane condition, and the ſociety that ought to be among men, as a man is diſcerned and differeth from the irrationall and bruit beaſts, it is commended above all other vertues, and it is moſt chiefly neceſſary for all humane kinde; and therefore Caſſiodorus ſaith, that meeke men are called manſueti, quaſi manu aſſueti; ſuch as are accuſtomed to our hands, and are uſed to beare all things patiently and quietly, without offering the leaſt injury to any one; and the Schooleman tells us, that meekeneſſe hath three ſpeciall benefits,

That is, 1. Peace and ſociety with our neighbour. 2. Grace and familiarity with God. 3. A kingdome and inheritance in heaven. } For

1. The meeke man knoweth how to be peaceable and quiet, even with them that hate peace; for as wooll, or any other like ſoft or mollified ſubſtance, laid upon a ſtone or any other hard matter, will breake the violence of a blow, at leſt ſo much, as that you ſhall heare no ſound thereof; ſo a meeke man aſſwageth the violence of all anger, by oppoſing thereto the ſoftneſſe of a gentle anſwer, quia mollis reſponſio frangit iram, becauſe, as Salomon ſaith, a ſoft anſwer appeaſeth wrath; harſh words breed hatred, and a gentle tongne bri gs peace.

2. Humilium & manſuetorum ſemper tibi placuit deprecatio; as the vulgar hath it; God reſpecteth the prayer of the humble and of the meeke, as Judith ſaith; and the Prophet David ſheweth, what great things the Lord doth for them that are meeke; for he ſaith, the meeke ſhall eat and be ſatisfied; and againe, the meeke will he guide in judgement, and the meeke will hee teach his way; and againe he ſaith, the earth feared and was ſtill, when God aroſe to judgement, to ſave all the meeke of the earth; Sela; as if he ſhould ſay, marke this, and praiſe God for this, that he will ſave all the meeke of the earth; and againe, he ſaith, the Lord lifteth up the meeke; and againe, hee will beautifie the meeke with ſalvation; and the Prophet Eſay ſaith, that Chriſt ſhould come to preach good tidings to the meeke; ſo great an account doth the Lord make of them that are meeke; and therefore it is ſaid of Moſes, in reſpect of his great familiarity with God, that the Lord talked with him face to face, as one friend talketh with another, and the reaſon ſeemes to be, becauſe he was the meekeſt man upon the earth; for, as that is noted for the greateſt honour, that was don him, ſo this is ſet downe for the greateſt elogie of praiſe, that was given him.

3. The Prophet David ſaith, the meeke ſpirited, ſhall inherit the land; and our Saviour confirmeth the ſame; and Saint Auguſtine tells us, we muſt underſtand it of the land of the living, that is, the kingdome of heaven; becauſe they are poſſeſſed of God, and they doe poſſeſſe their owne hearts, by the bridling and ſubduing of their owne affections; when as the unmeeke are poſſeſſed of anger, luſt, hatred and the reſt of their wild and unbridled paſſions. And truly nature it ſelfe teacheth meekeneſſe; quia homo eſt animal natura man-

How meekeneſſe differeth from patience.

Hieron. gloſſ. ſuper Mat. c 5.

Ariſtot. Ethic. l. 4. c. 5.

Piccolom. de virtus moral. grad. 4. p. 327.

The excellencie of meekneſſe.

Licet ſingulæ virtutes aliqua ratione principatum obtinent. Vide Piccol. grad. 4. p. 379.

Caſſiod. in Pſal. 36

Bonavent. de manſuet.

Three ſpeciall benefits of meekneſſe.

1. Benefit.

Ira contentioſa, melius ſolvitur blandis verbis & benignitate, quam repugnando. Cicero. Pro. 15. 1.

2 Benefit. Iudith 9. 11.

How highly the Lord eſteemeth of meeke men. Pſal. 22. 26.

Pſal. 25. 9. Pſal. 76. 9. Pſal. 147. 6.

Pſal. 149. 4.

Eſay 61. 1.

Numb. 12. 3.

Why the Lord was ſo familiar with Moſes.

3. Benefit. Pſal. 37. 11. Matth. 5. 5. Aug. de ſalut. doctum c. 10. 10. 4. Nullius erit Dei poſſeſſio niſi eius, quam ipſe prius poſſideris.

Nature it ſelfe teacheth man meekeneſſe.

manſuetum; becauſe a man is a living creature, that is, or ſhould be, naturally meeke, ſaith the Philoſopher; & ut crudelitas leonem ita mititas hominem decet; and as cruelty is the property of a Lion, or a Wolfe, or a Tyger, ſo meekeneſſe is moſt proper and moſt comely for every man, that would retaine in him the nature and propriety of a man; and therefore he that is not meeke, but hath loſt the habit of this vertue, is indeed rather a beaſt then a man, being but a man in ſhape, that hath the conditions of a beaſt; and thoſe inward beaſtly qualities doe often times, by Gods judgements, ſo metamorphoſe and exchange theſe ill natured men, that in their very ſhapes and formes, they beare ſome reſemblances of thoſe bruit creatures, whoſe brutiſh qualities and conditions they doe imitate; and therefore Bonaventure ſaith, that, in omni animalis ſpecie, figura corporis exterioris, ſignum eſt naturæ interioris, in all kindes of living creatures, the ſhape and figure of the outward body, is a manifeſt ſigne and demonſtration of the inward nature; as you may gueſſe at the qualities of dogs, tygers, lions, and the like, by their faces; ſo a man that hath a comely grace, ſweet countenance, ſoft fleſh, ſmooth haire, amiable eyes, and the like parts, hath the tokens of meekeneſſe, affability and humanity, which attract love from thoſe that ſee him, though they have no cauſe to uſe him; but they that are of dogged lookes, crabbed faces, harſh and haughty carriages, exuerunt humanam formam, & induerunt furiam; they have put off all humane ſhapes, and as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, they may be compared to the beaſts that periſh.

An unmeek man, that hath loſt the habit of meekeneſſe, is rather a beaſt then a man.

How God doth oftentimes moſt juſtly ſhew in our faces the conditions of our ſoules.

Quem vocant alia vultum rigidumq; trucemq;.
Ovid. in epiſt. Phæd. Hypolito.

Pſal. 49. 20.

It is recorded of Philip, King of Macedon, that it was told him, how Nicanor did openly raile againſt his Majeſty, and his Counſellors perſwaded him to put him to death, for ſuch great abuſe; the King anſwered, that he would firſt inquire, and conſider whether the fault came not from himſelfe, and he deſerved to be ſo ill ſpoken of, or not; and when he underſtood, that this Nicanor was but a poore needy fellow, that had done the King good ſervice, and yet was unrequited for his paines, which was the cauſe of his juſt complaints, King Philip ſent him a rich preſent; whereupon Nicanor went up and downe, of purpoſe, to extoll the praiſes and the vertues of this King; and the King hearing of it, ſaid unto his Counſellors, now I ſee that I am a better Phyſitian to heale backebiting then you are, and you may ſee that it is in my power, to cauſe either good or evill to be ſpoken of me.

A rare example of King Philips meekeneſſe.

Cicero, ſpeaking of Pompey the great, ſaith, ita faciles aditus ad eum privatorum, ita liberæ querimoniæ de aliorum injurijs eſſe dicuntur, ut is, qui dignitate Principibus excellit, facilitate par infimis eſſe videatur; he did ſo freely admit all private men to come unto him, and ſo mildly heard the complaints of all that were injured, that he, which excelled the very Princes in dignity, made himſelfe familiar with the meaneſt by his facility; and a little after he ſaith, humanitate jam tanta eſt, ut difficile dictu ſit, utrum hoſtes virtutem ejus pugnantes timuerint, an manſuetudinem victi dilexerint; he was of ſuch great humanity, that it could hardly be determined, whether his enemies fighting, did more feare his man-hood, or vanquiſhed, did love his meekeneſſe; an excellent commendation of a man, ignorant of Chriſtian religion; And yet Cicero requireth ſuch vertues in all great men, quia non verè victor eſt, qui iracundiæ victam flagitanti frænum neſcit imponere; he cannot be truly ſaid to be a conqueror, which knoweth not how to bridle his owne anger.

The great praiſe of Pompey for his humanity.

Cicero in orat. pro L. Manilio p. 345.

But Philip or Pompey is no more than the ſhadow of vertue, and their beſt vertue or meekneſſe is but the ſhadow of meekneſſe; nay Gideon, that by his mildneſſe, did prevaile againſt the Ephraemites; Abigail, that by her ſubmiſſiveneſſe, did allay the fury of David; David, that by the ſame vertue did paciſie the rage of Saul; and Moſes himſelfe, that was the meekeſt man upon earth; were but the ſmoake of this fire, and the ſhadow of the ſhadow of the meekneſſe of Chriſt; for when he was reviled, he reviled not againe, but as a lambe before his ſhearer was dumbe, ſo opened he not his mouth, before the Iewes, before Pilate, when the falſe witneſſes laid to his charge the things that he never knew; ſo when

No meekeneſſe like the meekeneſſe of Chriſt. Iudg. 8. 2.

1 Sam. 25. 33. Num. 12. 3.

1 Pet. 2. 23.

Iohn 8. 48.

when he came to Hieruſalem, he came not, as he was the King of glory, but as the child of humility, without pompe, meekely ſitting upon an aſſe; a faire beaſt for the Sonne of God to ride upon; but the beſt that could be for him to ſhew his meekneſſe and humility. Matth. 26. 33. Luke 23. 29. Zach. 9. 9.

And therefore we are exhorted, to follow his example, and to walke in his ſteps, with all meekneſſe; to follow meekneſſe, 1 Tim. 6. 11. Coloſſ. 3. 12. To ſhew meekneſſe, Titus 3. 2. To be of one mind, indued with brotherly charity, mercifull, gentle, not rendring evill for evill, or railing for railing, but contrariwiſe bleſſing, knowing that we are thereunto called, that we ſhould inherit a bleſſing, 1 Pet. 3. 8, 9. And, as much as lieth in us, to live peaceably with all men, not revenging our ſelves, but to give place unto wrath. 1 Pet. 2. 21. Eph. 4. 2. Rom. 12. 10. 19.

But you muſt obſerve that our meekneſſe ought to be threefold. Geminian. de exemplis, l. 2. c. 31. p. 38. Our meekneſſe ought to bee threefold.

1. In appetitu, in our deſires.
2. In actu, in our actions.
3. In auditu, in our countenance, when we heare any thing that is told us.

1. The firſt tels us, that we ſhould not ſo much as deſire any revenge on them, that have wronged us; and therefore Chriſt did pray for them that did perſecute him, ſaying, Father forgive them, for they know not what they do: And the ſonne of Syrach ſaith, My ſonne, keepe thy ſoule in meekneſſe; and this meekneſſe is like the Moone, which doth temper the heat of the Sun in theſe inferiour things. 1. In deſire. Eccleſ. 10.

2. The ſecond teacheth us, to do all things mildly and gently, and not furiouſly and haſtily, without judgement or diſcretion; and therefore the ſonne of Syrach ſaith, My ſonne, performe thy worke with meekneſſe: and this meekneſſe is like the face of Saturne, whoſe motion is not ſwift, nor impetuous, but moſt even, and ſlow, and plaine. 2. In our actions.

3. The third ſheweth, that we ſhould never waxe angry, when we heare any ill of our ſelves, eſpecially if the ſame be truth; but, as Antigonus hearing certaine of his ſouldiers ſpeaking ill of him, hard by his tent, ſhewed himſelfe unto them, that thought not he was ſo neare, and ſaid no more, but, could you not go further off to traduce me? So ſhould we give place to any wrongs, and eſpecially to all truths; And therefore the ſonne of Syrach ſaith, Eſto manſuetus ad audiendum verbum Dei, we ſhould hearken to the Word of God with all meekneſſe, and not to be teaſty and froward, when we are reproved; and this meekneſſe is like the face of Iupiter, which, as the Aſtrologians ſay, is ever moſt certaine in his ſignifications, and doth ſignifie wiſdome and reaſon, which will never contradict the truth. 3. In the hearing of things told us. Eccl. 5. 13. Secundum vulg. editionem.

So, with our Saviour Chriſt, we ſhould ſhew meekneſſe, in heart, in word, in worke, in all that we do, even then, when we are moſt traduced and injured; or otherwiſe, he cannot be ſaid to be a meeke man, that is quiet, when he is no wayes wronged. For as that tree cannot be ſaid to be immoveable, which is toſſed with no wind, or that wood cannot be ſaid to be incombuſtible, which is touched with no fire; ſo that man cannot be ſaid to be patient or meeke, which is no wayes affected with any injury, as S. Bernard ſpeaketh; but he that is truly meeke, doth neither feare the tongues of ſlanderers, nor the injuries of oppreſſors; and therefore the meeke man is compared unto Mallowes, becauſe that, as the juyce of Mallowes mixed with oyle, is of ſo great vertue, that whoſoever is annointed therewith, is ſaid to be ſafe from the ſtinging of Bees, Spiders and Scorpions, as Plinie reporteth; ſo meekneſſe, which is as facile a vertue, as Mallowes is a ſoft herbe, mingled with the oyle of devotion, doth ſo ſtrengthen that heart, which is indued therewith, as that neither the ſtings of detractors, nor the poyſon of impoſters, nor the malice of the moſt deadly enemies, can terrifie and provoke the ſame to ſinne; for this is the genuine note of charity, that it is kinde, and envieth not, vaunteth not it ſelfe, is not puffed up, doth not behave it ſelfe unſeemely, ſeeketh not her owne, is not eaſily provoked, thinketh no evill; A man, no wayes wronged, cannot be ſaid to be meek or patient. Gemin. de exemp. l. 3. c. 36 p. 172. Meek men, like to what. 1 Cor. 13. 4, 5.

and we may rightly ſay of this vertue, that, eſt fœlix animorum reconciliatrix, eſt beata fœlicitatis comparatrix, it is the reconciler of diſagreeing minds, when a ſoft anſwer appeaſeth wrath; as Iacob by his meeknes did aſſwage the anger of his brother; Gideon, the Ephraimites; Abigall, David; and David, Saul, and it is the procurer of true felicity, becauſe meek men are acceptable unto all men; and therefore Chriſt pronounceth them bleſſed; and Iuvencus, upon his words, ſaith,

Fœlices mites, quos manſuetudo coronat,
Quorum debetur juri pulcherrima tellus.

Prov. 15. 1. Gen 33. 10; Iudg 8. 2. 1 Sam. 25. 33.

But here you muſt further note, that as we ought to retaine mildneſſe, and to expreſſe meekneſſe in our minds, in our words, and in our workes, ſo we muſt have reſpect to many circumſtances about the ſame: as,

Quia nos ferrum ignitum aqua immerſum, non citò calorem amittit, quam ita longanimem mentem incidens iracundia. Chryſ. hom. 19. ad Pop. Antioch. Tom. 4. p. 482. Iuvencus hiſt. Evang. l. 1. in Bibl. patr. Tom. 8. pag. 110. E.

1. The cauſes, that we be not moved about every triſle, de lana caprina, and barke, with the dogs, at the Moone ſhining in the water; Neq; enim iraſcendum eſt propter res leves, quæ nullius ſunt pretij, neq; ob res incertas, quarum alia, ac putamus, conditio eſſe poteſt, neq; ob ea, quæ immutare non poſſumus; for we ſhould not ſhew our ſelves angry for every light thing, of ſmall moment, nor for uncertaine things, which may be otherwiſe than we thinke; nor yet for ſuch things as cannot be otherwiſe than they are, ſaith Seneca: But if the cauſe be juſt, and the matter waighty, as the honour of God, the defence of my countrey, the benefit of the common-wealth, the reputation of my parents, wife, or children, or the like; then, by the example of Chriſt againſt the Prieſts, Matth. 21. 13. Of Elias againſt the Baalites, 1 Reg. 18. 40. and of Moſes, the meekeſt man on earth, excepting Chriſt, againſt the Egyptian, and againſt the worſhippers of the golden Calf; we ſhould not be meek, nor mute herein; but, though without reproach, or railing termes, yet with good diſcretion and great courage, we ought to ſhew our diſpleaſure, and, as Salomon ſaith, to anſwer a foole according to his folly, leſt he ſhould ſeeme wiſe in his owne conceipt.

Circumſtances about meeknesse 1. In reſpect of the cauſes. Seneca de ira, c. 12. & c. 16.

Mat 21. 13. 1 Reg 18. 40. Exod 2. 11. When we ought to be angry.

Pro. 26. 5.

2. The perſons, that great men ſhould not be too harſh and haſty with poore men, and ſuch as are of low condition, and of mean eſtate; for ſo Ariſtotle teacheth Alexander, ſaying, Excandeſcentia & ira non in inferiores aut pares, ſed in ſuperiores & potentiores exiſtere ſolet; men ought not to be offended and angry with their inferiours or equalls, but with their ſuperiours, and thoſe that are more powerfull than themſelves; neither ought men to ſhew themſelves angry with the bruit beaſts, or inanimate things, as Herodotus writes of the King of Perſia; nor with dead men, as Cambiſes did, and Achilles is reported to have done with Hector,

2. In reſpect of the perſons. Great mens faults, to be furious againſt their inferiours. Ælian de var. hiſt. l. 12. c. 54. p. 339. Herodot. l. 4. Idem l. 3. Hic lacer admiſſos terruit Hector equos. Ovid. Epiſt. 1

Ter circum Iliacos raptaverat Hectora muros.

Nor yet with fooles and jeſters, which have the impudency, and do take the liberty, to do, and ſay, and ſweare what they liſt, of whom they liſt; for he that teacheth a foole, is as one that glueth a potſheard together, and as he that awaketh one from a ſound ſleepe; he may take a great deale of paines to ſmall purpoſe; and therefore S. Paul ſaith, ye ſuffer fooles gladly: and he that reaſoneth with an impudent jeſter, or a fowle-mouth'd rayler, ſhall be made to bluſh, when he gets the beſt; and therefore, as no wiſe man will ſtrive with a mad dog, but rather get him out of his way, and let him run foaming where he liſteth; ſo no diſcreet man will deſcend to ſuch a duell, in quo victus victore ſuperior, wherein the conqueror ſhall be the loſer, as Demoſthenes ſpeaketh; but he will rather ſay, with Ariſtippus, to ſuch a libertine, penes te eſt male dicere, penes me eſt bene audire; it is in thy power to ſay all words that may hurt, & it is my part to heare thee, and to ſay nothing; Quia æquo animo audienda impiorum, & imperitorum convitia, & ad honeſta vadenti contemnendus eſt ipſe contemptus; becauſe the reproachfull railing ſpeeches of wicked men, are with ſilence to be paſſed over, and the contempts that ſuch men offer us, are to be contemned of them, that deſire to continue honeſt, ſaith Seneca.

Ecclesiaſtic. 22. 7.

2 Cor. 11. 19.

Maximus Ser. 101 de Calumn. in Append. Bib. ss pat. pag. 1144

Seneca Ep. 76.

3. The time, that we be not ſuddenly moved to anger, ne præcipitanter, & ὀξυπαθῶς, res agatur, that we do not preſently with S. Peter the Apoſtle, and with

3. In reſpect of the time. Not to be ſuddenly angry.

with Claudius the Emperor, haſten unto our ſwords: becauſe, as Hipol: ſaith, criminoſa ſemper eſt celeritas, this haſt is alwaies evill; and therefore Statius ſaith,

——Ne frena animo permitte calenti;
Da ſpatium tenuemq; moram; male cuncta miniſtrat
Impetus —— And Athenedorus the Philoſopher, among other precepts of good note, gave this counſell to Auguſtus Cæſar, that when he perceived himſelfe angry, he ſhould neither ſay nor doe any thing, till he had repeated the 24. letters of the greeke alphabet; becauſe that little ſtay would hinder much the heat and violence of this anger, as Fulgoſus ſaith: ſo we ſhould not be ſuddenly angry; or if we be ſoone moved, that we doe not eaſily looſen the raynes to our paſſions, and give way to our unbridled affections, when we are about ſerious conſultations of weighty affaires, among the wiſeſt men, in publique meetings; or if we be overtaken with any exceſſe of anger, or any other perturbation of the minde, that we doe preſently ſuppreſſe it, and ſuffer it not to be cheriſhed, leaſt it prove a roote of bitterneſſe and produce the fruits of hatred, (Et, licet ad tempus bilem ſibi concoquat atram, Non tamen ira animo excedat, niſi pœna ſequatur:)

as it did in Simeon and Levi, Abſolon, Nicocreon and others, whoſe raſh and ſudden anger could not be quenched, untill it was extinguiſhed in the blood of thoſe they hated; and therefore, the Apoſtle adviſeth us, that we ſhould not ſuffer the ſunne to goe downe upon our wrath, leaſt this worke of darkeneſſe getting once out of the light, ſhould prove the more fierce and cruell, when it hath the clouds to ſhelter it; and the Heathen man could ſay,

Immortalem iram fovere minimè mortales decet;

it was very unfit that mortall men ſhould beare immortall hatred; as the Embaſſadors of Hetruria did well alleadge unto the Romanes.

4. The manner, that we exceed not the juſt meaſure, by ſhewing either too little or too much anger for any thing; for though, in a generous mind, nothing is more laudable then lenitie, nothing more commendable then clemencie, as Cicero ſaith, yet if meekeneſſe in a governour ſwarveth from the rule of juſtice, then Plutarch will tell us, that, Principis erga ſceleratos lenitas, eſt in bonos crudelitas; the mildneſſe of a Prince towards wicked men, is miſery and cruelty to good men; quis enim adverſus improbos, iram cohibere poſſet; for who would not be angry and angry againe againſt prophane and leaud perſons? ſaith Seneca: certainely, he is not a man that cannot be angry; and therefore, when Archidamidas heard Charilaus bragging that he had alwaies carried himſelfe alike meeke and gentle towards all men, he anſwered, that this was, ſceleratos ad maleficia armare, to arme wicked men to evill deeds; ſo the Princes of the people ſinned, *Numb.*25.4. So the Benjamites, Judges 20.13. So the Corinthians, 1 *Cor.*5.1. So old Heli, 1 *Sam.*4.10. and ſo many more do offend, not a little, in this point; to uſe too much lenitie, when they ſhould be angry. And yet as Saint Bernard ſaith, ſicut non iraſci ubi iraſcendum eſt, peccatum eſt; ita plus iraſci quam iraſcendum eſt, peccatum peccato addere eſt; as it is a ſinne, not to be angry, when we ſhould be angry, ſo to be more angry then we ſhould be, is to add ſinne upon ſinne; and therefore Seneca ſaith, crudeles ſunt qui puniendi cauſam habent, modum non habent; they are cruell men, which can find cauſe to puniſh, but can obſerve no meaſure in their puniſhment; and the Philoſopher tells us, that the baſer minds and worſer ſort of men, are moſt revengefull and more cruell in their anger then any other; becauſe, as the Poet ſaith,

Et faciles motus mens generoſa capit;

the generous mind is ſoone appeaſed, as we ſee in David, 1 *Sam.*23.29. and in the Emperour Theodoſius, as Nicephorus witneſſeth, and in many others.

2. The other leſſon, that we ſhould learne from Chriſt is, ταπείνωσις, humility; a vertue not knowne unto the Gentiles, taught onely by Chriſt and his followers; & eſt prima Chriſtianorum virtus, and it is the firſt vertue of Chriſtians, as Saint Suetan l.5.c.34. Hipol. de Marſ.

Statius Thebaid. l.10.p.465.

Lycoſth. in Apoth. ex Plutarch. Fulgoſ.l.7.c.2. p.243.

Our paſſions to be bridled.

Heb.12.15.

Gen.34.13. 2 Sam.13.22. Laertius l.9.

Epheſ.4.26.

Dionyſ. Halycar. antiq Rom.l.5.

4. In reſpect of the manner.

Cicer: de offic.l.1.

Wicked men ought not to be ſpared.

Seneca de ira l.3.

Plutarch in Lacon. morał.p.1.p.385.

Bernard ad Guid. ep.69.pag.819.c.

The women are ever the moſt cruell.

Cicero ad Attic.l.1 ep.14. Ovid.triſt. l.3. Eleg.5. Niceph.hiſt.ecl. l.12.c.43.

2. Leſſon is humility.

Saint Auguſtine ſaith; it is the mother and miſtreſſe of all vertues, as Saint Gregory ſaith; and there is nothing that maketh a man ſo acceptable to God and men, as to be, vitæ merito magnus & humilitate infimus, as Saint Hierom ſaith; great in merit and little by humility; therfore Chriſt himſelfe, as he was of the higheſt merit, ſo he was of the loweſt humility; for he being in the forme of God, and knowing it to be no robbery to be equall with God, yet did he make himſelfe of no reputation and tooke upon him the forme of a ſervant, and was obedient, not onely to his heavenly Father, to whom the Apoſtle tels us, he was obedient unto death, even the death of the Croſſe; chooſing rather to looſe his life, then that he would looſe his obedience; and this he did, not onely to God his Father, but alſo to his putative or reputed Father, as Saint Luke teſtifieth; and afterwards to his owne ſervants, he ſhewed ſuch an example of humility, as never man did the like, when he tooke a baſon of water and waſhed his Diſciples feet, and wiped them with the towell that he was girt withall; and in all his life, in all his actions, in all his words, he ſhewed himſelfe the rareſt patterne of the trueſt humility, that ever was practiſed upon the face of the earth. Whereupon Saint Auguſtine breaketh forth into this exclamation, ſaying, ô homo, vide quid pro te factus eſt Deus, & quid pro te fecit Deus, & doctrinam tantæ humilitatis agnoſce; ô man behold and conſider what God is made for thee, and think alſo what he did for thee, and then for ever acknowledge the doctrine of ſuch great humility.

Aug. epiſt. 56. ad Dioſcor. to. 2. pag. 262. Gregor. expoſ. moral. l. 23. c. 7. tom. 1. pag. 776 e.

Phil. 2. 5.

Ioh. 13. 5.

Aug. de Agone Chriſtiano. c. 11. tom. 3. pag. 767.

And therefore, ſeeing Chriſt commandeth us to learne none other leſſon, than what himſelfe had learned, and ſo perfectly practiſed before us, we ought to be the more willing to learne the ſame.

And that you may the better underſtand the extent and excellencie of this vertue, I will ſet you downe,

Two things to be conſidered.

1. The degrees thereof,
2. The benefits of it, and then I hope, I ſhall the ſooner perſwade all men to the practiſe of it.

1. The degrees of humility.

1. For the degrees of humility, the gloſſe maketh three, Anſelmus ſeven, and Saint Bernard twelve.

Gloſſa ſup. Matth 3. Admonendi ſum ſubditi, ne plus quã expedit ſint ſubiecti, ne cum ſtudeas plus quam neceſſe eſt hominibus ſubijci, compellantur vitia eorum venerari. Gregor. & habetur 2. q. 7. admonendi.

1. The three degrees of humility, which the gloſſe nameth, are theſe.
   1. Sufficient, to ſubmit himſelfe to his ſuperiour, and not to preferre himſelfe above his equall.
   2. Abounding, to ſubmit himſelfe to his equall, and not to preferre himſelfe above his inferiour.
   3. Perfect, to ſubmit himſelfe to his inferiour, Wherein is contained all righteouſneſſe, which our Saviour did, when he was contented to be baptized by Iohn in water, though he was able to baptize him with the Holy Ghoſt and with fire, and when he waſhed his Diſciples feet, which were not worthy to untie the latchet of his ſhooes.

Anſelmus in lib. de ſimilitud.

2. The ſeven degrees of humility, which Anſelmus nameth, are theſe.

1. To acknowledge our ſelves vile and contemptible; } which pertaine } to the opinion
2. Not to grieve at this, that we are ſo. } which pertaine } to the opinion
3. To confeſſe it to be ſo. } which pertaine } to the manifeſtation } of our abaſement
4. To perſwade others to beleeve that we are ſo. } which pertaine } to the manifeſtation } of our abaſement
5. Patiently to ſuffer theſe things, and the like, to be ſaid of us. } which pertaine } to the deſire } of our abaſement
6. To ſuffer our ſelves to be contemptibly handled. } which pertaine } to the deſire } of our abaſement
7. To love to be ſo uſed. } which pertaine } to the deſire } of our abaſement

And truly theſe are great ſignes and undeniable arguments of great humilitie.

3. The 12. degrees of humility, which Saint Bernard, ſetteth downe are theſe, whereof Saint Bernards 12. degrees of humility.

- Some of them doe pertaine
  - To the exterior ſignes; whereof ſome doe conſiſt
    - In outward geſture, as
      1. To manifeſt our humility of heart by the parts of our body, as the caſting of our eyes and lookes unto the ground.
      2. That we be not ready and prone to any uncivill or unſeemely laughter.
    - In our words, as
      3. That we ſpeake few words, and thoſe words diſcreetly, and not with any clamorous noyſe.
      4. That we be ſilent, unleſſe we ſee great cauſe to the contrary, till we be asked the queſtion & requeſted to ſpeak.
    - In our converſation, as
      5. To doe according to the ſtricteſt rules and lawes of that place wherein we live.
  - To our reputation, when we acknowledge our own defect; in which reſpect we ought
    6. To beleeve and profeſſe our ſelves worſe and viler then all other men.
    7. To beleeve and confeſſe our ſelves unworthy of any good, and unprofitable for any thing.
    8. To acknowledge and to confeſſe our ſinnes at all times.
  - To our deſire and appetite, which ought to be bridled, that it ſhould not immoderately aime at high things for our own advancement, but
    9. That in hard and difficult things, we doe imbrace patience for our obedience.
    10. That with our obedience, we doe ſubmit our ſelves to our ſuperiours.
    11. That we neither delight nor deſire to fullfill our owne proper will.
  - To the root and reverence that is due to God
    12. That we ſhould feare God, and bee mindfull of all the things that he commandeth us.

To which 12 degrees of humility, he oppoſeth theſe 12. ſpeciall vices, which are moſt odious both in the ſight of God and all good men.

12. Vices contrary to the 12. degrees of humility.

1. Curioſity, by which a man doth unmannerly looke, and moſt rudely peepe and prie into every place. 1. Curioſity.

2. A kinde of ſimple mirth and fooliſh laughter, whereof the Poet ſaith 2. Simple mirth.

Per multum riſum poteris cognoſcere ſtultum.

3. A levitie or lightneſſe of minde, whereby a man doth carrie himſelfe moſt proudly in his ſpeeches, when as Horace ſaith, 3. Levitie of mind

Proijcit ampullas & ſeſquipedalia verba.

4. A bragging and boaſting of our owne worth, when indeed it is worthleſſe. 4. Boaſting.

5. Singularity, whereby we would be accounted purer and more holy then all others. 5. Singularity.

6. Arrogancie, whereby we would preferre our ſelves before others. 6. Arrogancie.

7. Preſumption, whereby we thinke our ſelves ſufficient, to doe greater matters then we are able to do. 7. Preſumption.

8. A defence and juſtification of our ſelves, in our owne ſins. 8. Defence of our ſins.

9. A

9. Diſſembling confeſſion.

9. A diſſembling and an hypocriticall confeſſion of our ſinnes, whereby we are loath to undergoe any puniſhment or penance for thoſe ſinnes, which we have ſo cunningly and cavertly confeſſed.

10. Rebellion to our ſuperiours.

10. Rebellion againſt our ſuperiours and betters.

11. Liberty of will.

11. Liberty and freedome of will, whereby we deſire to doe whatſoever pleaſeth our owne ſelves.

12. Cuſtome of ſinning.

12. Cuſtome of ſinning, which doth bring with it a contempt of God and all godlineſſe.

So you ſee humility is a very large and beautifull tree, that hath many faire boughes and farre ſpreading branches, which do roote out and exclude many ugly vices, from the ground of that heart, wherein this vertue hath planted it ſelfe.

Two ſpeciall kinds of humility.

But, as the whole man, though conſiſting of many members, yet is divided into two parts, that is, the body and the ſoule, ſo, though this grace of humility may be manifold, in many reſpects, yet my Text intimates no more then theſe two kinds of humility.

{1. Outward of the body, / 2. Inward of the heart.} For

1. Outward humility. Hieron. ad Celantiam. ſ. 14.50 1. p. 112. D. Pſal. 55 22. Outward humility deceives many.

1. There is an outward humility, which indeed is nothing els but hypocriſie, and a ſhadow of humility, as Saint Hierom calls it; and this is ſhewed either, geſtu corporis, by the geſture of the body, as bowing of knees, uncovering of the head, and the like teſtimonies of our humble reſpect and ſubmiſſion to any one; aut fracta voce verborum, or els by a low ſubmiſſive ſpeech, uttering forth words ſmoother then oyle, when many times ſwords are in their hearts; this outward humility deceives the world, and when it is deſtitute of the inward, it is ſo farre from being a commendable vertue, that it is a vice moſt intollerable in the ſight of God; and therefore Saint Hierom adviſeth us to follow that humilitie, quæ puro cordis affectu exprimatur, which can be ſhewed by the pure affection of the heart, and not that, which the world ſheweth, figmentis verbis, & ſimulatis geſtibus, with feigned words and diſſembling geſtures; quia dejectio corporis & exaltatio cordis, abhominatio eſt apud Deum; becauſe the caſting downe of our eyes unto the ground, and the ſpeaking of low termes, when we have haughty hearts, and ſwelling thoughts lifted up to heaven, (as the Phariſee that kneeled downe in humility, but with a proud heart thanked God for his piety, that he was holyer then all other men) this is abhomination unto the Lord.

Idem ibid.

Outward humility without the inward is an abomination to God. Luk. 18 11.

Hieron. in epiſt 27.

Moſt men aime at this humility and why.

And yet, multi humilitatis umbram, pauci veritatem ſectantur; Saint Hierom tells us, that many men, the moſt part of this world, doe follow after this vaine ſhadow of falſe humility, and never looke after that true vertue, which is moſt acceptable in the ſight of God; and the reaſon is, becauſe they would deceive the world, which cannot enter into our hearts, and be accounted courteous among men, by which meanes they gaine profit by the one, and get reputation by the other; but they never looke unto the humility of the heart; and therefore, as deceitfull hypocriſie, and diſſembling courteſie lifts them up in the world; ſo God, for want of the other, and for the ſwelling pride of their elated hearts, doth throw them downe unto the ground, yea many times in the ſight of the ſonnes men; as you may often ſee men, by their flattery and fained humility, raiſed up from the dunghill, to be the companions of Princes, and yet within a while, for their inſolency, and unparaled pride, whoſe property is indeed to forget God that made them, and to deſpiſe thoſe men that raiſed them, to be diveſted from their dignities, and degraded of thoſe honours, which they deſerved not; becauſe God reſiſteth the proud, and giveth grace unto the lowly. And therefore Flattering humility raiſeth many.

Pſal. 106 13. 21.

Proud and inſolent men degraded. Iames 4. 6.

2. Inward humility

2. Chriſt biddeth us to be lowly in heart, which is the onely humility that pleaſeth God; for though I denie not, but a man may have an humble heart under a velvet gowne, and a lowly minde in a rich attyre, if his meanes affoord, and his place requires the ſame, and God diſlikes it not: yet a man may goe in ragges,

Outward greatnes may have inward humility.

or

or be clothed with ſackcloth, and be ſtill of a proud heart and a haughty ſpirit: and this is the worſe pride in the world, and the baſeſt, to have a proud heart and a beggars purſe; but God doth well, to give the curſt cow ſhort hornes; els, what would theſe men doe, or, whether would their pride tranſport them, whether would it metamorphoſe them, if their outward ſtates were anſwerable to their inward thoughts? you ſee, theſe high ſpirits have undonne many great men, and would undoe more, if more of them were great; becauſe their hearts are too big for their bodies, and their thoughts too high for their eſtates; therefore our leſſon is to be lowly in heart, and if that be right, we can eaſily guide all the reſt.

Plus animum deposuisse quam cultum, & difficilius arrogantiâ quam auro caremus. Hieron. ep. 90.

The worſt pride in the world.

And yet, videas hodie, you ſee, ſaith Dietericus, a great ſort of men, not onely in the politique ſociety of civill converſation, but alſo in the Eccleſiaſticall Hierarchie, of the holy Fathers of the Romane Church, which doe walke in the outward humility and ſeeming religion of Angels, faſt often, and are ſad, and doe make cleane the outſide of the platter; ſeeme poore and to contemne the world, goe bare and afflict their bodies; and yet the juſt God, which ſearcheth the hearts and raines, knoweth them to be full of all iniquity and foule hypocriſie, like thoſe whited ſepulchers, which are faire without, but within full of dead mens skulls.

Dietericus in feſto die. Mathiæ Apoſt. p. 376. Coloſ. 2. 18. Matth. 6. 16. Chap. 23. 25. Pſal. 7. 10. Ier. 11. 20. Matth. 23. 27.

But, as we may ſay to theſe with our Saviour Chriſt, thou blind Phariſee, cleanſe firſt that which is within the cup and platter, that the outſide of them may be cleane alſo; ſo we may ſay to thoſe that are great men, and are placed in the higheſt degree of honour and dignity, that they ſhould not forget to be lowly in heart; for, as it is no great matter to be humble in an abject ſtate, ſo it is a rare vertue ſaith Saint Beanard, humilem eſſe in honoribus, to be humble in our honours; and therefore the ſonne of Syrach ſaith, the greater thou art, the more humble thy ſelfe, and thou ſhalt find favour before the Lord; and I would all great men would follow this counſell; and it would bring them more honour then all the honour of their greatneſſe; for, as a certaine man, ſeeing Favonius, a great Romane, when there were no ſervants nigh, to ſerve Pompey in all things, even to the waſhing of his feet, cited that greeke verſe,

Matth 23. 28.

That great men ought to be humble.

Bern hom. 4. ſuper. miſſus eſt. p. 32. c.

Eccleſiaſt. 3. 18. Humility the greateſt honour of the greateſt men.

ὦ πῶς τοῖσι γενναίοισιν ὡς ἄπαν καλόν;

Eraſm. in Apoth. l. 6. ex Plut. p. 523.

ô how well doth any thing become a Nobleman; ſo farre better may I ſay, ô how well doth humility become the greateſt Nobleman in the world! for as the bough, which is moſt laden with fruit, doth moſt bend towards the earth, and ſo the full eare of corne in like manner, but the empty ones hold up their heads on high, ſo the more knowledge or good breeding, and eſpecially the more grace any man hath, the more humble will that man ſhew himſelfe in all his actions; and therefore when Nathan pronounced the bleſſings, which God promiſed unto David, the good King demands the queſtion, quis ego ſum, who am I, ô Lord God, and what is my houſe that thou haſt brought me hitherto? So Saint Paul calleth himſelfe the leaſt of the Apoſtles, and not worthy to bee called an Apoſtle: So Bias, Thales, Socrates, and the other wiſe men of Greece, refuſed to be called wiſe men, and ſent the golden trevet, that was to be given to the wiſeſt man, from one to another, till Socrates ſent it to Apollo, as to the wiſeſt in all Greece; ſo great was the modeſtie of theſe Heathen men, ſo farre beyond the humility of many that profeſſe themſelves Chriſtian men.

Sicut in ſegete ſpicarum vacua attollantur, gravida & feraces inclinant; ita quo quis ſapientior, eo magis ſe demittit & ſuſtinet. Lipſius.

2 Sam 7. 18.

1 Cor. 15. 8, 9.

Laert. de vit. Philoſ. l. 1. p. 57. Doctior eſt qui, quod novit, abſcondit, quam qui quod noſcit patefacit: inquit. Ariſt.

But you muſt obſerve, that this inward humility of the heart conſiſteth principally in in theſe two things.

The inward humility conſiſteth in two things.

1. Acknowledging our owne miſeries.
2. Denying our owne excellencies.

Confeſſing what we are, and not aſſuming to our ſelves to be what we are not. For

1. To acknowledge our owne miſeries.

1. Laudabilior eſt animus, cui nota eſt infirmitas propria, quam qui, ea non reſpecta, mœnia mundi, vias ſyderum, fundamenta terrarum & faſtigia cœlorum ſcrutatur; that man is more to be commended, that knoweth his owne infirmities

Aug. in præmio l. 9 de Trinitat.

Multi multa ſciunt, & ſeipſos neſciunt, cui non ſumma Philoſophia ſit cognitio ſui. Hugo de anima l. 1 and underſtandeth his owne wants and miſeries, then he that knoweth it not, and can ſearch into the ſecrets of nature, the pollicies of States, the influences of planets, the foundations of the earth, the height of heaven, and all other like things whatſoever; and the reaſon is rendred by the Apoſtle, quia ſcientia inflat, becauſe this knowledge puffeth up, and filleth our hearts with pride, but the knowledge of our owne miſeries teacheth us true humility; for if we did conſider what we are, duſt and aſhes; and what we want, ten thouſand times more then we have; we ſhould find nothing in our ſelves, that ſhould or could make us proud; and therefore Caſſiodorus ſaith, that, magnus aſcenſus ad Deum eſt cognitio infirmitatis; it is a great ſtep to God, to know the infirmity of man, and for every one to apply the ſame unto himſelfe; but commonly we never thinke of our beginning, we never dreame of what we want; but we doe alwaies looke upon our owne worth, and we had rather admire our owne goodneſſe, and adore our owne vertues, how little ſo ever they be, then once caſt our thoughts upon our ſinnes: and therefore Si enim cogitas quantum tibi deeſt, ingemiſces: Aug. ſup. Mat. Ser 59.

Caſſiodor. ſuper Pſal.

2. To denie our own excellencies. Matth. 16. 24.

2. We ought to denie our owne excellencies, and to denie our ſelves, as our Saviour ſaith, that is, to denie, not onely, quod per vetuſtatem fuimus, all the evill things, which by nature we have in us, but alſo all the good things, that we love and admire in our ſelves; as our wealth, our wit, our vertues; which, with thoſe Iewes that ſpread their garments in the way, we muſt throw downe at Chriſt his feet; for, as many men are proud of their wealth, their honours, and their greatneſſe, ſo as many are, like Diogenes, proud of their humility; yea Saint Bernard tells us it is, rara avis in terris, aut ſanctitatem non perdere, aut humilitatem ſanctimonia non excludere; a hard matter, either to retaine our holineſſe, or with our holineſſe to retaine humility; becauſe this ſlie ſerpent will ſlip in through every hole, and labour to corrupt every man; and when he ſeeth, we will abſtaine from evill, and are reſolved to follow holineſſe, then will he ſtrive to make us proud of our holineſſe, and to thinke our ſelves with the Phariſee, better then all others; and if he can doe this, to make us proud of our piety, then he cares not how holy we be, the holyer the better, ſo it makes us the prouder: and therefore Saint Bernard ſaith, that, recta facere & inutilem ſe reputare, apud paucos invenitur; few men are found to doe well, and yet to thinke themſelves unprofitable. But faſtus ineſt doctis ſequiturq́, ſuperbia ſanctos: this pride is a very ſawcie fellow, that will intrude himſelfe into all Societies, and he will goe with the Courtier into the Kings Chamber, with the Lady into her cloſet, with the Saint into the Church, and ſometimes with the Preacher into the Pulpit; and therefore if we would be humble, we muſt denie all the good that is in our ſelves: and then, ſicut ſpecies aromaticæ, cum in pulverem rediguntur, vehementer redolent; ita hominis bona, cum per humilitatem fuerint comminuta, Deo ſunt gratiora; as ſweet ſpices pounded to duſt, ſmell the ſweeter; ſo the good workes of any man, leſſened by humility, are the greater, and the more acceptable in the ſight of God.

Not to be proud of our holineſſe, a hard matter.

Luk. 18. 11.

Bernard ep ad Eugenium.

Pride what a ſaucie companion it is, to goe every where and with every one.

Guliel. perald. in ſumma vit. l. 1.

2. Having ſeene the degrees and the kinds of humility, we are now to ſpeake of the excellencie, benefits, or goodneſſe thereof; and to that end I wil as briefly as I can ſet you downe.

2. Of the excellencie of humility.

Foure points handled.

1. What the Scriptures ſay of humility.

1. What the Scripture ſaith of it.
2. What the Fathers write of it.
3. To what things it is aſſimilated.
4. How it is Charactered.

1. The Scripture is moſt plentifull in the praiſe, and expreſſing the commodities of humility; and I can give you but a taſt thereof. The Prophet David ſaith, as the vulgar reads it, reſpicit Dominus in orationem humilium & non ſpernit preces eorum; the Lord reſpecteth the prayer of the humble and deſpiſeth not their deſire; and the ſonne of Syrach ſaith, the prayer of the humble pierceth the clouds, and till it come nigh he will not be comforted, and will not depart till the moſt high high ſhall behold to judge righteouſly; and what greater happineſſe canſt thou deſire, then to have God to heare thy prayers, and to grant thee thy deſires? yet thou ſeeſt the prayer of an humble man will effect all this; againe, the Prophet David ſaith, Who is like unto the Lord our God, qui reſpicit humilia, which regardeth low things, as the vulgar hath it; and the bleſſed Virgin ſaith, hee puſteth downe the mighty from their ſeates, and exalteth the humble and meeke. Saint Iames ſaith, humble your ſelves in the ſight of the Lord, and hee will exalt you; and our Saviour ſaith, hee that humbleth himſelfe ſhall be exalted; and this is that, which every man aimeth at, and laboureth for, to be exalted; and therefore why will you not learne humility, which is the onely way, if you will beleeve truth it ſelfe, to that exaltation? and you may ſee it exemplified in Chriſt, which humbled himſelfe more then any, and therefore God exalted him above all things; and to be briefe, wiſe Salomon ſaith, it is better to bee of an humble ſpirit with the lowly, then to divide the ſpoyle with the proud; and to ſhew you why it is better to be ſo, he ſaith in another place, that a mans pride ſhall bring him low, but honour ſhall uphold the humble in ſpirit; and the Prophet Eſay ſaith, that the high and loftie one, which inhabiteth eternity, whoſe name is holy, dwelleth with him that is of a contrite and humble ſpirit, to revive the ſpirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite one; and what greater benefit would any man deſire then to be upheld in honour, and to have God to be his companion, to dwell with him and to comfort him? and therefore why will we not labour for humility?

Pſal. 101 17.

Eccleſ. 35. 17.

Humility procures us our deſires. Pſal. 113. 5. Luk. 1. 52. Iames 4. 10. Matth. 23. 12. Luk. 14. 11. Humility brings us to honour. Pro. 16. 19. Prov. 29. 23. God dwelleth with the humble. Eſay 57. 15.

2. The Fathers uſe all their art, and ſtrive for words to perſwade all men to humility; Saint Auguſtine breaketh forth to this exclamation, with the admiration of humility, ſaying, ô Sancta venerabilisq́ humilitas! tu Dei filium deſcendere feciſti in uterum Sanctæ Mariæ Virginis, &c. ô holy and reverend humility, thou haſt made the Sonne of God to deſcend into the wombe of the bleſſed Virgin Mary; thou madeſt him to be inwrapped in vile ragges, that we might be cloathed with the ornaments of vertues; thou haſt circumciſed him in our fleſh, that he might circumciſe us in ſpirit; thou haſt whipped and ſcourged him in his body, that he might free us from the whip and ſcourge of ſin; thou haſt crowned him with thornes, that he might crowne us with roſes; thou haſt made him weake and feeble, which is the Phyſitian of all men, and able to heale all things with his onely word, that he might heale us from all our infirmities; Saint Gregory calleth humility, mater & magiſtra omnium virtutum; the mother and miſtreſſe of all vertues; Saint Bernard ſaith, it is a tower and defence for all graces. Saint Ambroſe ſaith, it is as the head, quæ totum velut noſtrorum actuum fovet corpus, which doth cheriſh and give life, as it were, unto the whole body of all our actions; and he demands, an quicquam tam pretioſum quam humilitas, whether any thing can be more pretious then humility? and Saint Hierom ſaith, nihil eſt quod nos ita Deo & hominibus gratos faciat, quam ſi vitæ merito magni, ſed humilitate infimi ſumus; there is nothing in the world, that makes us more gratefull both to God and men, then to be greateſt in merit and leaſt in humility, to deſerve beſt, and yet thinke our ſelves the meaneſt. Saint Bernard ſaith, that, virtutum ſtabile fundamentum eſt humilitas, quæ ſi omittitur, virtutum congregatio non niſi ruina eſt; humility is the firme and ſure foundation of all vertues; and if this be loſt, all the reſt is but as a confuſed heape of fruitleſſe ſtones; and Saint Gregory hath a ſaying to the ſame purpoſe, that he, which gathereth together vertues without humility, is like unto him, qui in ventum pulverem portat, which carrieth duſt againſt the winde. And therefore who would not ſtudie to bee humble, eſpecially, if he would conſider that, tanto erit apud Deum pretioſior quanto fuerit in oculis ſuis deſpectior; he ſhall be ever eſteemed ſo much the more pretious in the ſight of GOD as he is the more humble in his owne eyes, as Iſidorus ſpeaketh? ſo I might fill my papers to a large booke, if I would but a little follow the Fathers, in their ample prayſes of this moſt excellent vertue. But

2. What the Fathers write of humility. What humility made the Sonne of God to do. Aug. in ſerm. de ſuperbia. What humility is. Gregor. l. 23. cap. 7. expoſ. moral. to. 1. pag. 776. c. Bern. ep. 42. p. 799. & Ambroſ ſer. 20. ſer. 118. to. 4 p. 745. Hierom. ep. 14 ad Celantium. to. 1. p. 112. d. Bernard. de conſid. ad Eugen. l. 5. Gregor. in expoſ. Pſal. 3. pœnitent. Iſidor. in Synonym.

3. To what things humility is compared. Genuin. l. 5. c. 61. p. 359.

3. The things to which humility is compared, doe add much unto the luſter of it; For

1. To a Doe, and why. Ideo de Damula, quaſi de manu effugiens Iſidor. l. Etymol.

1. Geminianus compares an humble man unto a wilde Doe, which is a weake and fearefull creature, not knowing how to ſave her ſelfe, but by her flight, and the ſwiftneſſe of her leggs, and chooſeth to live in mountainous and woodie places, and eareth the beſt ſmelling graſſe, and tops of boughs, and when ſhe is wounded, ſhe will eat old crooked branches and dragon wort, and ſo ſhake the weapon out of her body, and the ſerpents cannot abide her, nor endure to come neere her breath; So the humble man is alwaies fearefull of offending God, counts himſelfe weake and unable to doe any good, and knowes not how to defend himſelfe but by the agility of his obedience, by the flight of ſinne, by ſhunning pride, and ſo to eſcape the perſecuting hand of the divels temptation; and this man loves the high mountaines of contemplation, the woods of ſolitude, and to feed upon the ſweeteſt examples of the Saints; and being wounded with ſinne, as with the dart of the divell, he eats dragon woort, that is repentance, and ſo he pulleth out the ſting of ſinne out of his heart; and therefore the infernall ſerpent, that old red dragon, the divell, cannot abide an humble man, he cannot endure his voluntary dejection; that is a kinde of death to him.

The divell dares not come neere an humble man.

Pride & humility. Non bene conveniunt, nec in una ſede morantur. Idem l. 4. c. 37. p. 221.

2. To the Eagles eye, and why. The Eagles eye little and quick ſighted; the Ravens eye big and weake.

2. Humility is compared unto the Eagles eye, which as Avicenna ſaith, is very little, and yet very ſharpe and ſtrong, to looke upon the light and radiant beames of the Sunne; and the eye of the night-raven is very large, but yet very weake, and very unable to behold the weakeſt rayes of the light; ſo the minde of man is the eye of the ſoule, and this, by how much the leſſer it is by humility, by ſo much the ſharper it is to perceive the truth of God; but if it ſwelleth bigg with pride, by ſo much the duller it is, to underſtand the myſteries of our faith; and therefore our Saviour ſaith, thou haſt hidden theſe things from the wiſe and prudent, & revelaſti ea parvulis, and haſt revealed them to little ones; i. not to the great and high-minded men of this world, whoſe mindes and ſpirits are as high as their places; but to the poore, meeke and humble men; men of low degree, and of meane places, poore Prieſts,* and no better; theſe brought the greateſt light unto the Church.

Matth. 11. 25.

To whom God revealeth his myſteries.

* Iudicio mundi.

Idem l. 2. c. 15. p. 130.

3. To the Celidonian ſtone, and why. Two kindes of the Celidonian ſtone, and the properties of either.

3. Humility is likened to the Celidonian ſtone, which is taken out of the belly of a ſwallow, and is but very little in ſubſtance and ill favoured; yet of exceeding rare vertues, farre beyond the vertues of moſt other ſtones; for that ſtone, being of two kinds, either ruddie or blacke; the ruddie ſtone is very effectuall againſt lunacie, madneſſe, and againſt all inveterate diſeaſes; and the blacke ſtone is profitable againſt all hurtfull humours and fevers, and being waſhed in water doth much helpe the eye-ſight; ſo the ruddy ſtone doth repreſent the humility of the wiſe men, whereof Salomon ſaith, where there is humility there is wiſedome; and Ptolomæus was wont to ſay, that among all wiſe men, ille ſapientior eſt qui humilior exiſtit, he is the wiſeſt man that ſheweth himſelfe the humbleſt man; for this humility ſerveth againſt the lunatique paſſion, that is, againſt the mutability of folly; becauſe that, as ſimplicity and follie makes the minde of man variable and unſtable, like the Moone, ſo wiſedome maketh a man firme and conſtant in his courſes, like the Sunne; and this availeth againſt the fury of anger, and the inveterate malice and hatred of malevolent men, when a man doth wiſely anſwer, and with an humble reſpect ſeeme to give place unto their fury: and the blacke ſtone doth ſignifie the humility of repentant ſinners; becauſe this vertue doth purge all hurtfull affections, cooleth the fevers, that is, the heat of fleſh and blood, and expelleth the miſt of pride from the eyes of our underſtanding.

Pro. 16. The humbleſt man is the wiſeſt man.

Wiſedome is conſtant.

Humility is apt for repentance, but pride cannot eaſily repent.

Idem l. 3. c. 29. p. 168.

4. To the aſh tree, and why.

4. Humility is likened to an aſh tree, which groweth in rough places, and is of ſuch vertue, that the ſerpents cannot endure his morning or his evening ſhadow, but if you kindle a fire betwixt them and the ſhadow of the aſh, they will rather runne into the fire then into the ſhadow of it; ſo humility commonly groweth in adverſity and troubles, quia tribulatio via eſt ad humilitatem; becauſe tribulation is the way to humility, as Saint Bernard ſaith; and ſo tribulation and dejection are called humiliation; and the divell that old Serpent doth ſo much hate the morning ſhaddow, that is, humility in proſperity, when the Sunne riſeth upon us, and the evening ſhaddow, that is, humility in adverſity, when the ſunne goeth from us, that he had rather burne in the eternall flames of hell fire, then lay hold upon any humility; and therefore the divell ſaid unto Macharius, that he could not ſurpaſſe him, in any thing in the world ſo much, as in this one virtue of humility, which he could not have by any meanes, he being the Prince or King over all the ſonnes of pride.

in

Ideo ſi lucem appetis humilitatis, viam non refugias humiliationis. Bernard in quad. epiſt.

The ſhaddow of the aſh tree, what vertue it hath.

5. And laſtly, Humility is likened to a valley, and that, as we find, in theſe five ſpeciall reſpects.

Iob 41.34.

5. To a vallie in five reſpects. Peral. l. 1. c. 36. p. 48

1. As the valley is moſt waterie, becauſe it is depreſſed betwixt two mountaines, from whence the waters runne downe into the bottome; ſo the humble ſoule, that declines it ſelfe betwixt the two mountaines of pride, (that is, firſt to be puffed up by reaſon of our naturall gifts, and ſecondly, to be as haughty for our temporall fortunes) ſhall be filled with the waters of grace, which deſcend into the valley of humility; and therefore the Scripture ſaith, that God giveth grace unto the lowly; and as the vallies are full of waters, ſo the humble men are full of teares.

1. Reſpect, waterie. The two mountaines of pride what they are.

Pro. 3. 34. Aſcenſiones in corde ſuo diſpoſuit in valle lachrymarum. Pſal. 83.

2. The vallie is the moſt fruitfull of any place, and by reaſon of the plenty of moiſture, it bringeth foorth herbes, flowers, fruits, and all kind of greene things, more abundantly then any other ground whatſoever; whereupon the Pſalmiſt ſaith, the vallies ſhall ſtand thicke with corne; even ſo, the humble ſoule doth abound in the fruits of Gods ſpirit, and in the flowers of all good workes; the proud heart ſcornes to doe good, but the humble man is full of goodneſſe.

2. Reſpect, fruitfull.

Pſal. 65. 14.

The proud heart is ever barren.

3. The vallies are ſhalowie places, becauſe of the mountaines and hills that are round about them, and doe cauſe theſe ſhaddowes to light upon the lower places; ſo the ſhaddowes of the mountaines, that is, the examples of the Saints, Patriarchs and Prophets, are alwaies to be ſeene imitated and followed in the lives of thoſe that are humble; whoſe chiefeſt care is, not to doe what themſelves like beſt, but what they like beſt in the Saints of God; and therefore the Lord ſaith, that his people ſhould flie to the vallie of his mountaines, that is, to the ſhaddowes of the Saints, not their ſhrines, but their examples, and their virtues, to imitate them in all their lives.

3. Reſpect, ſhaddowie.

The examples of the Saints like the ſhaddowes of the mountaines.

Zach. 14. 5. The examples and not the ſhrines of the Saints to be viſited.

4. The vallies are hotter then the hills; becauſe the meeting of the Sunne-beames, being there multiplied and detained, ſo that they can dilate themſelves no further, do make the heate farre greater then it can be upon the mountaines; whereby it comes to paſſe, that the ſnow is ſooner diſſolved and melted in the vallies, then it is upon the hills and higher places; ſo the Sunne-beames of Gods grace, and divine conſolations, (whereby the minds of men are inflamed with the love of God, and all good things, and the cold of ſloth, malice, hatred, and all other ſinnes, are diſſolved,) are multiplied in the vallies of the humble mindes, farre more then in the high hills of proud hearts, where the heat of grace is the leſſer and the cold of envie the greater.

4. Reſpect, hotter then the hills, and why.

The heat of grace is in the heart of the humble.

5. The vallies and the inhabitants thereof are quieter, and ſafer from all dangers, then thoſe that are placed upon the hills and mountaines; where the winds are moſt robuſtious, and as the Poet ſaith,

Feriuntq; ſummos fulmina montes,

the thunders threaten to batter them downe; ſo the humble men and thoſe of low degree, are in a ſafer ſtate and doe lead a farre more quiet life then thoſe men, that live in honour, and doe ſtand upon the higheſt ſteps of the ladder of promotion; becauſe as the Poet ſaith

Magna repentè ruunt, ſumma cadunt ſubitò.

high things have great falls, and the greateſt things doe fall moſt ſpeedily; but

5. Reſpect, quiet and ſafe.

Horatius Carm.

The higheſt things are in the greateſt danger.

Horatius 3. Carm. 4

Poore men need not feare the frownes of fortune. Ovid. triſt. l. 3. Eleg. 4. To quem formida nimium ſublimia ſemper.

Qui jacet in terrâ non habet unde cadat

he that walkes on the ground need not much feare to fall, his danger cannot be great; and as Ovid ſaith,

Sic cadit, ut tacta ſurgere poſſit humo;

his fall is ſuch, that he can eaſily riſe againe; and therefore he gives this counſell unto his friend, that he ſhould alwaies ſhunne too high places, and thinke himſelfe never a whit the more unfortunate; for qui procul a Iove, procul a fulmine, the further we are from the fire, the leſſe we need feare to be burnt; and as Seneca ſaith, ſo many men have found it very true;

Quo fortuna altius
Evexit, levavit humanas opes,
Hoc ſe ſupprimere magis felicem docet;

the higher we are, the more carefull we ought to looke unto our ſelves.

4. The character of an humble man.

4. The character of an humble man is, that he is none of the beſt friend, a ſweet foe to himſelfe; for, though he hath not wholly renounced himſelfe, yet no man deemes him of leſſe worth, then he eſteemes himſelfe; and that not ignorantly, careleſly, or unwittingly, but with a facile and a voluntary contempt; that which he doth wiſely admire in any other, he doth ingeniouſly contemne the ſame thing, and not without good cauſe, in himſelfe; the onely object of his conſideration is, his owne manifold infirmitie, and the multiplicity of his neighbours vertue; he is alwaies ready to aſcribe and render all honour unto another, but to refuſe the ſame, being offered unto himſelfe; he accepteth praiſe and complements with a certaine naturall ſimplicity of heart; he is farre from maligning thoſe, that doe unworthily ſit in the ſeates of the higheſt honour, or rejoycing, that any man ſhould be dejected, though deſervedly, from his former felicitie; but, leſſoning his owne worth, he doth, with a ſincere minde, caſt himſelfe at their footſtoole, which were deprived from their dignities; and being contented with the ſmale value of his owne great worth, he doth highly extoll the benignity and courteſies of his neighbour; he is the chiefeſt preacher and proclaimer of his owne tennity, he doth alwaies confeſſe his owne demerits; when he is honourably received in any place, he is overwhelmed with baſhfullneſſe, and when he is praiſed of the beſt men, he bluſheth and ſeemes, as if he were wronged; being neglected, he is quiet, and inquires rather into the cauſe of his contempt, that he may amend it and remove it from himſelfe, then any waies to blame the judgement of their good will, that beare him none; his gate, veſture, countenance, and all his actions doe yeeld no ſent of any affected humility; becauſe this externall dejection is nothing els but a ſlender ſhaddow of his internall abaſement; his words are few and ſweet, never imperious, never prophane, never critique: becauſe he never impoſeth the ſtampe of unfaithfullneſſe upon any man but himſelfe. When he comes to the celeſtiall throne of Gods preſence, he is ſo amazed with the moſt admirable brightneſſe of the divine Majeſty, that in his owne eyes, hee ſeemes to himſelfe to bee nothing els but the ſhaddow of the ſhaddow of death; being ſought for to undergoe thoſe publique offices of honour and ſervice, that have more need of his helpe, then hee hath either of their glory or gaine, and from that deere contented ſolitude, which he had choſen unto himſelfe, being drawne foorth into the light, hee deſpiſeth the ſtages of all vulgar aſſemblies, and diſcharging his duty with great ſincerity, hee is never leſſe alone, then when he is alone, never more buſie, then when he is thought to have nothing to doe; and never better imployed, then when all others thinke he hath no imployment, alwaies envying his owne worth, and hating nothing more then applauſe; beſides, hee is moſt mindefull of any good turne received, and aſcribeth all benefits onely to the good will of the giver; and not any thing at all unto his owne deſerts; hee obſerves another mans uprightneſſe, and approoving the ſame with all praiſe, hee doth ſecretly reſolve to imploy his beſt endeavours to imitate the ſame, which which hee dares not hope that hee ſhall ever come neere it; beeing contented with his owne meane condition, and fainting under the burthen of his owne miſeries, hee doth moſt patiently ſubmit himſelfe unto the providence of God, ſeeing farre greater calamities due to his ſinnes, which yet are not impoſed upon him, but lie by, as brands that are unkindled, and himſelfe that deſerved no ſuch favour, to bee exempted from thoſe croſſes, and to be inriched with no ſmall gifts of God; he walketh alwaies, as on thornes, ſlowly, and with a fearefull paſe, and when hee erreth never ſo little, he doth freely ſubmit himſelfe and all his words and workes, to a higher and a juſter cenſure then his owne; Moreover this man may rightly bee compared to a low valley, well ſet with trees, and well watered, a goodly field, which the proud men tread upon, but in which are layne hid ſuch treaſures, as doe farre ſurpaſſe all the goodly things of this world, and to a moſt pretious pearle ſet in a wedge of lead; and to be briefe, this man is called, ἱερουλακεῖον Θεοῦ; the holy houſe or private cloſet of God.

And therefore if you deſire any ſociety with God, you muſt learne to bee meeke and lowly in heart: and ſeeing by the conſideration of the premiſes, wee are given to underſtand the excellencie of this grace of humility, we ought above all things, to pray to God for it heere, that it may bring us to heaven hereafter; for, as Peraldus ſaith, the kingdome of heaven is prepared for the humble in a threefold reſpect;

Peraldus in ſum. tom. 1 par. 3. p. 368.

1. Of capacity, becauſe that, in this life, the humble man is capable of grace, as Saint Iames ſheweth; which the heart, ſwollen with pride, cannot be; therefore in the life to come, he ſhall be capable of glory.

Iames 3.

2. Of fidelity, becauſe they have beene faithfull in a little, quum de multa gloria Domini ſui, etſi non exeunte de illis, tamen tranſeunte per illos, nihil manibus ſuis adherere contigerit; when, of all the goods of their Lord, which paſſed through their hands, yet not one jot did cleave unto their fingers, therefore they ſhall be made rulers over much.

Bernard. ſup. cant.

3. Of viciſſitude, becauſe humility receiveth God into our hearts, therefore we ſhall be received into the kingdome of God.

But heere you muſt obſerve, that, as there is a true humility, which is ſo acceptable unto God, and thus profitable unto man; ſo there is a falſe humility, which is as acceptable unto the divell, as it is pernitious unto the owners; for as the ſonne of Syrach ſaith, there is a wicked man, qui nequiter humiliat ſe, ſaith the vulgar latine, that hangeth downe his head ſadly, but inwardly he is full of deceits; and theſe humble hypocrites doe this, either

Humility twofold

Eccleſ. 19. 26.

False humility twofold.

1. To do evill unto others, or
2. To do good, as they thinke, unto themſelves.

1. Of the firſt ſort of humble men are ſuch, as the Prophet David ſpeaketh of, which fall downe and humble themſelves, that the Congregation of the poore may fall into the hands of their Captaines; this is a fox-like humility; to bee very honeſt and to pay moſt juſtly, at the very day without fraud, the ſmale ſummes, that hee borroweth, or is truſted for; that by this meanes hee may creepe into your good opinion, and perſwade your very thoughts to beleeve him undoubtedly honeſt, and ſo, getting the greater ſums, which hee aimeth at, hee may breake and deceive you, for that which is worth his labour. Thus many dealt honeſtly with the Fathers, till they were made Guardians of their children, and then they have utterly ſpoyled and robbed the poore Orphanes; they ſing with the Syrens, to allure us unto them, and then they deſtroy us, when they have apprehended us.

1. Sort.

Pſal. 10. 10.

How cunningly men lay their plots, that they may deceive, and continue honeſt for a time, that they may be falſe for ever.

2. Of the ſecond ſort of humble men are ſuch, as, with the Frier (which covered his table with a net, till his humility raiſed him to bee an Abbat, thence to be a Cardinall, then unto the Pope-dome, and then hee bad his man take away the net, becauſe now hee had caught the fiſh,) will diſſemble virtue for their owne ends, and practice godlineſſe onely for their

2. Sort.

Hinc dicitur: hanu yw adnabod oddiwrthu, na dyn.

gaine; for wee finde many men humble, and many good, till they come to high places, and attaine unto eminent dignities; and then, Magiſtratus indicat virum; their places ſhew what they are, or rather what they were, meere diſſemblers and hypocrites, till they came to thoſe places; for if you aske the daies of old, they will tell you, how humble was Saul while he ſought his fathers aſſes, and how dutifull was Tiberius untill he came unto the Empire? the like we read of Nero, whoſe nonage was not ſo bad, and his firſt Quinquennium, might well be tolerated; but, as the Beares whelpe groweth worſe and worſe, ſo theſe men, having got their ends, did ſoone put off their vizarads, and they that ſeemed Lambes, did ſhew themſelves Tygers; and as ever, ſo now, we have inough of ſuch brood, that can diſſemble any vertue, that they may get what they deſire; This is no humility, no grace, no goodneſſe; And therefore not the leſſon, which Chriſt teacheth, but the vice and ſinne which the divell practiſeth, and perſwadeth all the ſonnes of pride to imitate the ſame. And ſo much for the third Precept, which is the laſt, that is heere commanded.

The

The third Part.

2. HAaving ſpoken of all the three precepts heere expreſſed, and of the firſt promiſe interſerted after the firſt precept; we are now to ſpeake of the ſecond promiſe of Chriſt, and you ſhall finde reſt for your ſoules: A great bleſſing and the chiefeſt happineſſe that we can deſire; quia omne laborans requie indiget; becauſe every thing that laboureth needeth reſt; ſaith the Philoſopher; & requies neceſſariò eſt delectabilis, quia eſt medicina triſtitiæ, quæ conſiſtit in labore, and this reſt muſt needs be very ſweet and pleaſant, becauſe it is the medicine and the onely remedy of that ſadneſſe and wearineſſe, which we have by labour, ſaith Ariſtotle; and indeed reſt is, finis & perfectio motus, the very end and perfection of all motion, the very ſcope that all things doe aime at; and the reaſon why we labour and take paines, and riſe up early and goe late to bed, and eat the bread of carefullneſſe, and doe all that we can doe, in our youth, and ſtrength, and all our time, dum vires annig; ſinunt, is, that we may at laſt attaine unto that reſt, which is the ſweet fruit of all our labours; for reſt is to be conſidered, as it hath reſpect to motion two waies; {1. Privatively. 2. Relatively.}

2. Promiſe.

Omnia quæ fiunt, anſtinxit in hæc duo, motum atq; quietem, atq; in terra cæiroq; locata eſt ipſa quies; poſſedit cætera motus. Palingen. in aquar. p. 326.

Ariſtot. polit. l. 8. Ipſa quies animum reficit, revocatq; vigorem.

The excellencie of reſt.

Idem quo ſupra Poet. l. 8.

Scaliger exercit. 62.

Pſal. 127. 2.

Reſt is the onely thing that all men aime at.

Reſt conſidered two waies.

1. Reſt is the Privation of the motion of that thing, which hath an aptitude of nature, or a naturall fitneſſe to receive motion; as, while any frigid thing or cold ſubſtance, which is able and fit to be made hot, where and when it may be heated, is not made hot, it is ſaid to reſt, untill it be heated; and ſo reſt is the privation of the ſubſequent motion, as Ariſtotle ſaith; and not the perfection of motion; but

1. Privatively,

Ariſtot phiſic. 5. c. 6. te. 53.

2. Quando mobile formam ſuam acquiſivit, in ea, tanquam in ſtatu ſuo, quieſcit, when the thing moveable, hath attained unto his forme, then it reſteth it ſelfe therein, as in his owne proper ſtate and place; and thus reſt is relatively oppoſed unto motion, & eſt perfectio motus præcedentis, & nobilior eſt motu, and it is farre more noble, and more excellent then motion, as Scaliger ſaith.

2. Relatively.

And therefore our Saviour Chriſt, calling unto himſelfe all thoſe that laboured and were heavie laden and wearied, under the weight and burden of their paines and labours, could not poſſibly promiſe them any better, ſweeter, and more acceptable thing, then reſt.

But here the Queſtion may be demanded how our Saviour doth performe this promiſe; for when we conſider thoſe men, which with a feareleſſe necke, doe undergoe the yoke of Chriſt, and do take theſe fardles of meekeneſſe and humility upon their ſhoulders, to be ſo exerciſed and toſſed, tantis & tam multis difficultatibus hujus ſæculi, with ſuch, ſo many, and ſo great difficulties of this world, that they ſeeme to bee called, not from labour unto reſt, but rather from reſt unto labour; how ſhall wee thinke that hee doth performe his promiſe?

How Chriſt performeth his promiſe

Aug. de tempore Ser. 48. & eadem verba repetit de verbis Dominis. ſer. 10. to. 10.

And to make this more plaine unto you, as he called thoſe that were idle and at eaſe, that they might labour and take paines in his vineyard, ſo it ſeemes, he that ſaith, come ye that labour that ye may reſt, meanes rather, venite qui vacatis ut laboretis, come ye that are at eaſe and do live at reſt, that ye may labour; for to take the yoke of Chriſt upon us is nothing els (as Saint Auguſtine ſaith) then to live godly in Chriſt Ieſus; and you know what the Apoſtle ſaith, they that

Matth. 20. 3.

Aug. quo ſupra.

2 Tim. 3. 12.

2 Cor 6. 4. 5.

The ſufferings of them that came to Chriſt. Auguſt. ibid.

Matth. 16. 24. Luk. 14 26.

Matth. 10. 24. 25.

Matth. 10. 16. 22.

Vide Dion. ric. in feſto S. Stephan. Proto-Mart. p. 92. & 95. 96. 98.
Act 9. 25.
2 Cor. 11. 32. 33.
Act. 16. 39. c. 17. 10 c. 18. 12. c. 22. 22. & 23. 10.
2 Cor. 11. 24.

Egeſip. de excid. Hieroſ. l. 3. c. 2. p. 297.

Act 7. 59.
2 Cor. 11. 25.
Mar. 6. 27.
Act. 12 2.

Epiphan. l. 3. hereſ. 78. n. 2. p. 500.

1. Perſecution. 66. Vide Niceph. l. 3. c. 22. & c. 23. & Corn. Tacit. l. 15. p. 195.
2. Perſecution. 97. Niceph. l. 3 c. 11.
3 Perſecution. Tertul. de præſcript. c. 36. p. 399. n. 1.

4. Perſecution. 120. 139. Vide Centur. Magdeburg l. 2. c. 3. & Euſeb. l. 4. cap. 3.

5. Perſecution. 205. Cent. Magd. l. 3. c. 3 & Tertull. apol. c. 40. p. 82.

6. Perſecution.

that will live godly in Chriſt Ieſus ſhall ſuffer perſecution; and they muſt approove themſelves in much patience, in afflictions, in neceſſities, in diſtreſſes, in ſtripes, in impriſonments, in tumults, in labours, in watchings, in faſtings, & cætera, quæ numerari quidem pericula poſſunt, ſed tolerari, niſi Spiritu Sancto adjuvante, non poſſunt, and the reſt of the like dangers, which may be numbered, but not ſuffered, without an eſpeciall aſſiſtance of the Spirit of God; and our Saviour Chriſt tells us as much, that if we will be his Diſciples, we muſt take up our Croſſe and follow him, we muſt forſake Father and Mother, wife and children, and all, yea, and our owne ſelves and follow him; and what ſhall we have for following him? even as he had before us; for the ſervant hath no reaſon to expect, to ſpeed better then his maſter; and how ſped he for all his paines? mocked, ſcourged, ſlandered, crucified; ſo ſhall we; you ſhall be hated of all men for my names ſake; and if this were all, to undergoe trifles, Amarillidis iras, the height of all hatred, we would not much care: but ſome of you ſhall be perſecuted from citty to citty; ſo was Saint Paul in Damaſcus, where he was faine to be let downe through a window in a basket, to eſcape the hands of Aretas the governour; and afterward, at Philippi, at Theſſalonica, at Corinth, and at Hieruſalem; ſome of you they ſhall ſcourge in their Synagogues, ſo were the Apoſtles, Acts 5. 40. and ſo was Saint Paul, who, of the Iewes five times received forty ſtripes ſave one, and was thrice beaten with rods; ſome of you they ſhall crucifie, ſo was Simon the Apoſtle, as Egeſyppus ſaith, crucified by Attilus preſident of Hieruſalem, upon the falſe accuſation of the Iewes; and ſo they ſay Peter was at Rome crucified with his feet upward; ſome of you they ſhall ſtone; ſo was Saint Steven, the Proto-Martyr, and ſo was Saint Paul, Acts 14. 18. and ſome of you they ſhall kill; ſo was Iohn Baptiſt, ſo was Iames the brother of Iohn, ſo was Iames the leſſe, throwne downe from the pinnacle of the temple, and afterwards, when they ſaw he was not quite killed with his fall, they ſtoned him with ſtones and knockt him on the head with a fullers club; as Epiphanius writeth; and ſo were many more, at all times, eſpecially under the ten firſt great and cruell perſecutions; whereof the

1. Was under Nero, that monſter of men, who was the death of his Mother, of his Maſter, of his Friends, and of the Chriſtians without mercy, and almoſt beyond faith, that any man ſhould or could be ſo ſavage againſt men.

2. Was under Domitian, the twelfth Emperour, who killed Timothy, Oneſimus, and Dionyſius the Areopagite, and made moſt cruell edicts againſt all Chriſtians.

3. Was under Trajane, the fourteenth Emperor, who killed Simeon, the ſon of Cleophas, ſecond Biſhop of Hieruſalem, Ignatius Biſhop of Antioch, Phocas Biſhop of Pontus, and many more, whom hee cauſeleſly crowned with Martyrdome.

4. Was under Ælius Hadrianus, Marcus Antoninus pius, Marcus Antonius verus, the fifteenth, ſixteenth, and ſeventeenth Emperors, who killed Alexander Biſhop of Rome, and Hermes, and his wife and children, and all his family, and in all 1250. which he burned in a fiery furnace; Zeno, with 10203. others, Euſtochius, Eleutherius, Fauſtina, Iobita, Sophia, Sabina, Photinus Biſhop of Lions, with 49. more; Ptolomeus, Lycius, & Felicitas with his ſeven ſonnes; Polycarpus, Iuſtin Martyr, Irenæus, Attalus, Publius Biſhop of Athens, Maturus, Sanctus, Alexander, Blandina, and many more.

5. Was under Septimius Severus, the three and twentieth Emperour, which was a ſharpe and a cruell man, and put to death, Leonides the Father of Origen, Alexander Biſhop of Hieruſalem, Narciſſus, Iulius, Euſebius, Tiburtius, Valerianus, Perpetua, Felicitas, and many more.

6. Was under Maximinus, the one and thirty Emperor, which was a moſt barbarous wretch, in body, minde and manners, and he, beſides Pamphilus and Maximus, multa millia Chriſtianorum miſerè trucidavit, did moſt miſerably kill many thouſands more.

7. Was

7. Was under Decius the thirty ninth Emperour, who though he raigned but one yeere, yet was he the death of Fubianus Biſhop of Rome, Laurentius, Babilus Biſhop of Antioch, Macarius, Alexander, Epimachus, Cornelius Biſhop of Rome, Apollonia, Theodora, Anatholia and Ruffina; and what if he had raigned many yeeres, what Maſſacres would this wretch have made, what Chriſtian blood would he have ſpilt?

7. Perſecution.

Euſebius eccleſ. hiſt. l. 6. c. 38. & 40.

8. Was under Valerianus the fortieth Emperour, who killed Cornelius Biſhop of Rome, and Cyprian Biſhop of Carthage, and commanded many Chriſtians to be flead alive, ſo that many men for feare thereof, did flie and hide themſelves in deſart places, as Saint Hierom teſtifieth.

8. Perſecution.

Hieron. in vita Pauli eremitæ ep. 5. p. 237. to. 1.

9. Was under Diocleſian and Maximianus the fifty ſeven and fifty eighth Emperour, of whom Severus Sulpitius ſaith, that in their times, a moſt grievous bitter perſecution was raiſed up for ten whole yeeres together, in which time, the people of God were ſo deſtroyed, that omnis ferè ſacro martyrum cruore orbis infectus eſt, all the world well-nigh was infected and defiled with the ſacred blood of the holy Martyrs; and Cedrenus ſetteth downe the cauſe of this perſecution to be, that an Oracle had ſpoken it, that if all the Chriſtians were rooted out of this world, the Romane Empire ſhould then flouriſh with all happineſſe; whereupon they did ſo promiſcuouſly rage againſt all ſorts of Chriſtians, that within the ſpace of one moneth, there were above ſeventeene thouſand crowned with martyrdome; the holy Bible was forbidden to be uſed, and commanded to be burned in the open ſtreets of Nicomedia; and the temples of the Chriſtians were throwne downe, and ſubverted quite from the foundations.

9. Perſecution.

Sulpit. hiſt. Sacr. l. 2. in Biblioth. patr. to. 2. p. 288.

Philip. Melanch. Chron. l. 3.
A falſe Oracle.

Euſeb. eccleſ. hiſt. l. 8. c. 3. & 9.

The Bible forbidden to be uſed.

10. Was under Julian the Apoſtata, the ſeventy third Emperour, which among other his baſe and cruell practiſes, compelled certaine holy Virgins to be diſrobed of their ſacred veſtures, and to ſtand naked in the midſt of the people, as a ſpectacle to be gazed upon, and to yeeld themſelves unto the luſt of every one that would abuſe them; pro cujuſq; libidine, contumelia ſic affectas, ab inferioribus partibus tonderi, ac diſcindi juſſit, ſuperficiemq; vulneris, porcorum alimento conſueto, hordeo vel ſimili conſperſam, ſuibus, horrendum dictu, devorandas objecit; and beſides all this, he martyred Gregory, Alexandrinus, Euſebius, Nectarius, Zeno, Baſilius, and Anciranus, he delivered Macedius, Theodoretus and Tatianus to be burned, and he ſuffered the Iewes to erect their Temple and to build them Synagogues, onely for a contempt and ſcorne unto the Chriſtians.

10 Perſecution.

Virgins moſt barbarouſly handled.

Niceph. l. 10. c. 9. p. 479.
A moſt inhumane dealing, unfit to be ſpoken of.
Tripart hiſt. l. 6. c. 43.

And to theſe I might add, the perſecution of Valens, the Arrian Emperour, and the Arrian Biſhops, that were no leſſe cruell, no leſſe bloody, but more crafty, then the heathen Tyrants; and the perſecution of the Vandales, under Genſericus and Honorius; and of Mahomet, that began under Heraclius, and doth continue to this very day; and above all, I might inlarge my ſelfe with the perſecution of Antichriſt, which began under Boniface the third Biſhop of Rome, and ever ſince, hath made that Babylonian Harlot drunken with the innocent blood of the holy Saints, which are condemned to the ſword, to the fire, to the gallowes, becauſe they are Lutherans, Calviniſts, Hugonites, Proteſtants; even as Attalus was led about Lyons, with the cauſe of his condemnation inſcribed upon a tablet, hic eſt Attalus Chriſtianus, becauſe he was a Chriſtian; and I might produce France, Spayne, Italy, Germany, Belgia, and our owne Iſland, England, for witneſſes of theſe bloody tragedies; for Meteranus tells us, that during the life of Charles the fift, there were no leſſe then fifty thouſand men put to death in Belgia, for the onely fault of Hereſie, falſly imputed unto them; and while Duke Albane was preſident of the low countries, which was but ſix yeeres, there were about eighteene thouſand men and women, privately and publiquely put to death; In France, within the ſpace of two and twenty yeeres, beginning at the yeere 1564. the ſtories of thoſe times doe relate a hundred and forty thouſand Chriſtians to be conſumed, with the whirwinds of warre and other puniſhments; above ten thouſand thereof were moſt mi-

Vide concionem meam, ſuper Luk. 12. 49.

Victor de perſec. Vandalica l. 2.

Tripartit. hiſt. l. 3. c. 2.

Niceph. l. 14. c. 39. p. 192.

Meteranus deſcrip. belli Belgici. l. 2. fol. 28.

Idem l. 4.

The great ſlaughter of Chriſtians.

miſerably maſſacred in Paris and other places of France, upon the 24. of Auguſt in Anno 1572. at the time of the ſolemnization of the royall wedding: and, that which is moſt admirable, Antonius Ciccarella in the life of Gregory the thirteenth doth report, that the Embaſſador of the French King ſhould ſay unto the Pope, that in foureteene yeeres, after the death of the Admirall, ſeventy thouſand Heretiques were put to death, in gratiam Pontificis, for the Popes ſake; a ſtrange thing, ſo ſtrange, that we may ſay the prediction of Iſidorus Hiſpalenſis is now fulfilled to a haire, that in the time of Antichriſt, the divell ſhall rage and perſecute the Saints of Chriſt more then ever he did before; quia, ſi ligatus tanta facere potuit, quanta ſolutus faciet? becauſe heretofore he was bound, as the Scripture teſtifieth; and if he was able to doe ſo much miſchiefe, as we read of in Eccleſiaſticall ſtories, while he was bound, how much (thinke you) is he able to doe now being looſe? So you ſee, to come to Chriſt is, to come to ſhame, loſſe, death.

Simon Stenius in Apolog. Iacobi Greiſeri de vita Ign. Loiol. l. 2. c. 6.

Chriſtoph. Beſold. in ſig. temp. c. diſſert. 1. p. 2.

Iſidor. de ſummo bono l. 1. c. 28. p. 334.

And beſides all this, which perhaps you will ſay happened to ſome, but not to all, ſeeing reſt is contrary to motion, therefore there muſt needs be ſo many kinds of the one as of the other; and therefore, as motion, ſo reſt muſt be in Reſt in a foure-fold reſpect.

reſpect { 1. Of the ſubſtance { 3. Of the quality } As
2. Of the quantity { 4. Of the place. }

1. That there be neither an intire generation nor corruption of the ſubſtance.

1. Reſpect.

2. That it be made neither greater nor leſſer in quantity.

2. Reſpect.

3. That it receive none other accidentall forme then what it hath, as for cold water not to be made hot, white not to be died blacke, and that which is ſoft, not to be made hard, and the like.

3. Reſpect.

4. That it be not remooved and transferred to any other place, then that wherein it was.

4. Reſpect.

The Chriſtians enjoy no kind of reſt. Iob 14.

And in all theſe reſpects, we find our comming to Chriſt brings no reſt unto us; for you ſee how the Chriſtian, of all men, is a man of ſhort time and is full of miſery, never continuing in one ſtate, never remaining in one place; but he is toſſed and tumbled from poſt to piller, now rich, to morrow poore, now in credit, anon in ſhame, to day alive, and the ſame day, perhaps, moſt cruelly put to a ſhamefull death; And therefore where is the reſt that our Saviour promiſeth to all thoſe that come unto him, when we ſee not any of thoſe to enjoy it?

Soluſio obiect.

To this I anſwer, firſt, with Saint Auguſtine, that to all them which come to Chriſt, the ſpirit of Chriſt is given, qui in exterioris hominis corruptione, interiorem renovat de die in diem, which in the corruption of the outward man, doth renue the inward man from day to day; & guſtata requie ſpirituali, in affluentia deliciarum Dei, in ſpe beatitudinis futuræ, omnia præſentia aſpera delinit, & omnia gravia relevat; and this ſpirit, having given us a taſte of the ſpirituall reſt, in the abundance of thoſe delights, which we have in God, and in the hope which we conceive of everlaſting happineſſe, doth ſweeten all the ſower and ſharpe things of this world, and lighteneth all thoſe things that are heavie; and therefore the Saints of God, doe count all things ſweet, all things light, when they conſider and ſee, quanto pretio temporalium emenda ſit futura vita; non pati æternos labores impiorum, & ſine ulla ſolicitudine perfrui æterna felicitate juſtorum; with how little price and ſmall worth of temporall things, they may purchaſe eternall life, whereby they ſhall eſcape to ſuffer the eternall paines and puniſhments of the wicked, and without any great care or labour, they ſhall enjoy the everlaſting felicity of the Saints; and we ſee ſicke men will ſuffer themſelves to be lanced and ſeared, to avoid the little paine of a ſhort and miſerable life; Souldiers will endure a long and deſperate warfare, he will hazard his life and limbes, for a little wealth and a little honour of leſſe worth; the Merchant will ſaile over ſeas and travell all lands, to find and fetch home his commodities, to get a little gaine, and the Hunters care not what paines they take to catch a poore hare, whoſe taking is farre ſweeter unto them, then the taſte thereof is to the Aug. de verb. Dom. ſer. 10. 10. 10.

Idem ibid.

What ſtrange labours men will undergo, & what great things they will ſuffer, for what they love.

the palate of the eater; for whatſoever men love to doe, they never thinke much to doe it; ſed quæ dura ſunt nolentibus mitèſcunt amantibus, but thoſe things that are hard, to them that are unwilling, are ſweet and eaſie to thoſe that love them; and ſo whatſoever the Saints doe ſuffer, they count it no paine, and what labour ſo ever they take, they count it reſt.

2. I ſay that there is { 1. A phiſicall / 3. A metaphiſicall } reſt; or that I may anſwer with a diſtinction of Bonaventure, I ſay that there is a fourefold reſt.

{ 1. A diabolicall reſt. / 2. An angelicall reſt. } { 3. A divine reſt. / 4. A humane reſt. }

2 Solutio. That there is a fourefold reſt. Bonavent. in Sabbatho Sanctio ſer. 1 & 2.

1. The Prophet Eſay, ſpeaking of the flie of Egypt, and the bee of the Aſſyrians, ſaith, they ſhall reſt in deſolate valleys, and in the hollow places * of the rocks, & in omnibus frutetis, ſaith the vulgar; upon all thornes, ſaith our engliſh; & univerſis foraminibus, and upon all buſhes; or all holes, as the vulgar hath it; to ſhew unto us, where and in what places the divell principally hath his reſt; that is;

1. A diabolicall reſt.

* In torrentibus vallium. In cavernis petrarum.

Eſay 7.19. In whom the divell ſets up his reſt.

1. In torrentibus vallium; in the floods of the vallies; that is, in voluptuous and carnall men; becauſe all pleaſure is like a torrent or land-flood, qui citò creſcit & citò tranſit, which is ſoone up and ſoone downe, quickly come and quickly gone, ſo is all the pleaſure of ſinne; momentaneum quod delectat, æternum quod cruciat; a momentary delight and an eternall ſting; the pleaſure is gone aſſoone as ever the ſinne is done, but the ſting of ſinne will remaine for ever.

1. In carnall men.

Why pleaſure is like a torrent.

2. In cavernis petrarum, in the hollow places of the rockes; that is, in the ſecret corners of hard and obſtinate hearts, that will neither feare nor yeeld at the thunders of Gods judgements.

2. In obſtinate men.

3. In frutetis, in thornes and briers; that is, in ſuch places as ſeeme pleaſant and fruitfull, but indeed have nothing beſides the ſhew of vertues, and the outward face of painted holineſſe.

3. In hypocrites.

4. In foraminibus, in holes; that is, in all lurking and ſecret places, where ſinne may be unſeene, and the ſinner may offend without feare; becauſe he that doth evill hateth the light, as our Saviour ſaith; leſt his deeds ſhould be reproved; And

4. In all ſly and ſecret ſinners. Ioh. 3.20.

Theſe are the places that the divell loves, and in theſe places hee doth take his reſt; and whereſoever he is not reſiſted, there he reſteth; and as it is ſaid of Moab, requievit in fecibus ſuis, that he reſted upon his dregs; ſo will the divell reſt upon the dregs of ſinne, in what heart ſoever he finds them ſetled; this is his reſt, here will he dwell: and therefore if we would not have the divell to reſt in our ſoules, let not ſin raigne in our bodies.

The divell will reſt in every one that will not reſiſt him. Ier. 48, 11.

2. The angelicall reſt is that ſweet content and acquieſſencie, which they take in the glory of God, and their owne happineſſe, by the fruition of the eternall beatitude, and viſion of the God-head, and the further multiplication or more apparent manifeſtation of the ſame glory, by the converſion of poore wretched ſinners, and the reunition of thoſe ſoules to God, which had relapſed and diſunited themſelves from him by their ſinnes and tranſgreſſions.

2. Angelicall reſt

3. For the divine reſt, that is, the reſt of God, we find the ſame to bee threefold.

3. The divine reſt, threefold.

{ 1. In complacentia operum, I will not ſay in the good liking, but in the finiſhing of his workes. / 2. In perſona Chriſti, in our Saviour Chriſt. / 3. In obedientia Sanctorum, in the obedience of his Saints. }

1. It is ſaid that God reſted the ſeventh day, and hallowed it; whereupon Saint Auguſtine ſaith, that ipſe nec cum creavit defeſſus, nec cum ceſſavit refectus eſt, he was neither wearied when he created, nor was refreſhed when hee ceaſed, and in no day, nor worke, is it ſaid, that he ſanctified it, but onely that day, in which he is ſaid to reſt; to ſhew unto us, that with him, qui nihil in ope-

1. In the accompliſhment of his workes.

Aug. de Geneſ. ad lit. l. 4. c. 12.

The reſt of God, and the ſanctifying of the day of his reſt, expounded by Saint Auguſtine.

re ſuo laborat, which takes no paines in his labour and hath no labour in his works, plus quies quam operatio valet, his reſt is more availeable and more acceptable with him then his worke; quia vitium eſt noſtris operibus delectari, becauſe it is a fault to be delighted with our own works, therefore I would not ſay, the reſt of God was in the good liking, but in the full finiſhing of his workes; quia Deus non in operibus, ſed poſt facta opera, in ſeipſo dicitur requieſcere; becauſe God is not ſaid to reſt, or to take his eaſe and content in his workes, but after he had done his workes, he is ſaid to reſt in himſelfe, that is, to enjoy that reſt, a qua nunquam receſſit; which he never miſt, and which could not be loſt, no not for a moment, from him; therefore he ſanctified, non diem operis, ſed quietis, not the day of his worke, which began in time, and was finiſhed in time, but the day of his reſt, which was from eternall, and will bee to all eternity.

Idem quo ſupra. What the former doctrine ſhould teach us. Quia non ei opera ſua, ſed ipſe ſibi bonus eſt, quo beatus eſt. Idem ibid.

And this ſhould teach us, ſaith Saint Auguſtine, that if we would be like to God, to doe as he doth, we ſhould reſt from our owne workes in our ſelves, and ceaſing to follow our owne deſires, or to take delight in any thing that we doe, we ſhould place our reſt, in bono incommutabili, in the unchangeable good, which he onely is to us that made us; & hac erit ſumma minimeq; ſuperba ſed verè pia requies noſtra; and this our reſt will be a moſt happy, a moſt glorious and a moſt truly pious reſt; when, as he reſted from all his workes, becauſe his works doe no good unto him, but he is good unto himſelfe, whereby he is alſo bleſſed; ſo we doe hope to reſt, not onely from our owne workes, but alſo from his workes, to have our whole reſt in nothing but in him alone; and we doe deſire this very thing; that, after we have done his workes, which we acknowledge rather to be his workes in us, then ours, he would reſt in us and prepare a reſt for us in him; becauſe that although it is much for us to have our being from him, yet this is farre greater to have our reſt in him.

Not to delight in our own works. Quæ agnoſcimus potius illius eſſe, quam noſtra.

Magnum eſt ab illo extitiſſe, ſed manus eſt in illo requieviſſe. Idem ibid.

2. In our Saviour Chriſt.

2. God is ſaid to reſt in the perſon of Chriſt, and that three waies,

1. Reſpect. Iohn 1:14. Eccleſ. 24. 8.

1. In ventre virginali, in the wombe of the bleſſed Virgin, When the Word was made fleſh, whereof Wiſedome ſpeaketh, qui creavit me requievit in tabernaculo meo, as the vulgar reads it, he that hath created me, that is, in reſpect of his Man-hood, reſted in my tabernacle, and ſaid, let thy dwelling be in Iacob, and thine inheritance in Iſrael; even as Saint Iohn ſaith, hee dwelt among us and we ſaw his glory, as the glory of the onely begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth.

Iohn 1. 14.

2. Reſpect. Eſay 11. 2. & c. 61. 1.

2. In virtute ſpirituali, in reſpect of the fullneſſe of ſpirituall graces, wherewith he was indued, whereof the Prophet ſaith, that the ſpirit of the Lord ſhall reſt upon him; the ſpirit of wiſedome and underſtanding, the ſpirit of counſell and might, the ſpirit of knowledge and of the feare of the Lord.

3. Reſpect. Pſal. 4. 8.

3. In morte triumphali, in his triumphant death, whereof the Pſalmiſt ſaith, I will lay me downe in peace and take my reſt; and Iacob propheſying of his death, ſaith that, requieſcens, accubuiſti ut Leo; reſting himſelfe, he couched as a Lyon, and as an old Lyon, who ſhall rouze him up? and the Philoſophers ſay, that the Lyons whelpe, when it comes firſt into the light, ſleepes three daies and three nights, and then he is rouzed up by the roaring of the old Lyon; ſo was Chriſt raiſed from the dead, by the power and the vertue of his Father.

Gen 49 9. The Lyons whelp how long he ſleepeth, and how rouzed.

And as God reſted in Chriſt, chiefly in reſpect of his Incarnation, Sanctification, and Paſſion, ſo in all other reſpects, and at all other times, from the firſt moment of his conception, to remaine with him hypoſtatically, in the unity of his perſon, unto all eternity, he doth reſt in him for ever and ever; for this is my beloved Sonne, ſaith the Father, in quo acquieſco, in whom I doe reſt, and in that reſt, am well pleaſed for ever.

Mat 3 17.

3. In the obedience of his ſervants. Pſal. 132. 14, 15.

3. God reſteth in the obedience of his ſervants, whereof the Pſalmiſt ſaith, the Lord hath choſen Sion, that is, the Congregation of the faithfull, to be an habitation for himſelfe, he hath longed for her, and ſaid, this ſhall be my reſt for ever, here will I dwell, for I have a delight therein; ſo God reſteth in a devout ſoule, and and an upright man is a temple for the Holy Ghost to dwell in; and as Saint Augustine saith, Spiritus Sancti requies in nobis est, & requies nostra in ipso, he takes up his rest in us, and our rest is in him; even as the divell resteth in the heart of a wicked man, so doth God rest, in the heart of the godly.

4. For the humane rest we find the same to be threefold.

1. Corporalis, of the body, in our beds.
2. Mentalis, of the soule, in our bodies.
3. Æternalis, of body and soule in heaven.

For

4 Humane rest threefold.

1. Nocturna quies recreat sensus; the night rest doth recreate not onely our bodies, but also our senses, saith Saint Bernard; & hic quietis gustus suavis, and this rest is very sweet; and for the recreation of our wearied bodies, requies & ludus videntur esse necessaria; rest and play seeme necessary, as Aristotle saith; and the reason is, as the Philosopher speaketh, quia nemo laborem continenter subit, because no man is able to undergoe labour and paines continually; for this doth exceed all humane strength, to indure an everlasting labour; and therefore our Saviour, considering the necessity of this rest, and the insufficiency of his Disciples to withstand the same, when they were wearied with watchings and overcharged with sorrowes, he saith, dormite jam & requiescite, sleepe on now and take your rest; & Cn: Aufidius, as Cicero sets it downe, was wont to say, that we should thinke sleepe to be given unto us against nature, if it did not bring rest and helpe, as a certaine medicine of our labour, unto our bodies; because it deprives us of our sences and takes away all action from us; and therefore if nature did not require rest, or if it could obtaine the same by any other way, we might very well be suffered to want the same; for we see how nature sheweth this in all men, that the minde desireth alwaies to be in action, to doe something, and cannot, by any meanes, abide everlasting rest, or indure a perpetuall cessation of all exercise; and so children and infants, cannot sit still and be idle, but they must be medling and doing some toy or other; and this desire of doing something, doth still wax stronger and stronger, together with their age and strength; and therefore, we would not desire Endymions sleepe, if wee might injoy it never so sweetely; or if such a thing did happen unto us, we should thinke it to be no otherwise then death it selfe; and so it appeareth that we are borne to doe, and are brought into the world to be in action; and this sleepe or rest is given unto us, for the strengthening of our wearied bodies, and the recovering of that decayed strength, which our bodies loose by the continuance of labour; and to this end, that wise Romane saith,

1. Corporall.

Bernard super Cant. ser. 19.

Arist. Eth. l. 4. c. 15

Idem Eth. l. 10. c. 4. Omnia necesse est, vel vi, vel natura quiescere. Aristot. de cælo. l. 3. c. 2. Somnium nobis, quis requietem corporibus, & medicinam quandam laboris afferret, contra naturam pusaremus datum. &c.

Sleepe what it doth to us.

Children how they desire to be alwaies in action.

Cicero de finibus bonorum. l. 3. p. 154.

Sleepe why given to us.

Interpone tuis interdum gaudia curis;
Ut quemvis animus possit tolerare laborem;

Cato dist.

because labour and paines-taking doth tyre and weary both the body and minde; and therfore they must have certaine kindes of refreshings, that they may be able to continue; and to that end, God hath given us the night to rest, as he hath appointed the day for us to labour in; and they doe exceedingly offend against the order of divine institution, that use to sit up all or most part of the night, and sleepe all or the major part of the day, in which respect the Prophet denounceth a woe to them, that make day night and night day; which point I might prosecute more at large, but I will proceed.

The night is for our sleepe, and the day to labour.

2. The rest of the soule is, when our consciences are quieted from the sting of sinne, and our hearts satisfied with the love of God; and of this rest the Scripture saith, revertetur Iacob, & requiescet, & cunctis affluet bonis, & non erit quem formidet; Iacob shall returne and rest, and shall abound in all good things, and he shall be in feare of none; wherein we finde three speciall conditions of this rest.

2. The rest of the soule.

Three conditions of this internall rest.

1. Repentance in the conversion, for he shall returne and rest; so no rest without returning; because, a wicked man can have no rest; and There is no peace unto the wicked saith my God; but their consciences are like Scorpions that doe bite them, sting them, and torment them night and day; and therefore Saint

1. Repentance for sin.

Esay 48. 22.

A ſinner continuing ſinne can have no reſt.

Nightingale how it ſleepeth.

Pſal. 116. 7.

2. Conſolation in God.
Love is our life.
Aug. de ſubſtantia dilectionis. c. 6. p. 237.
Quies anima eſt mera quadam & ſuavis tranquillitas, per infuſam nobis ex frequentia orationis dulcedinem, concreata: ſolis valde ſpiritualibus experientia hujus quietis conceditur; quibus & datur etiam ipſas ſuperceleſtias ſubſtantias contemplando tranſcendere; ſuper ignota enim bonitas, ipſis familiaria, ſeipſam eis immittit, & ipſi tota virtute dilato ſinu Sancti deſiderij, potentur ſuſcipiunt beatas immiſſiones, animalibus præſumptuoſis omnino incognitas; ſic igitur puris Sanctorum contemplativorum animabus tam inſueto nutrimento ditiſſimè adimplet, ſplendeſcit ipſarum ratio, dulceſcit conſupiſcentia, hilareſcit iraſcibilis, ex dilectione quorum non ambigimus deificam illam quietem emanare. Bonavent. de ſep. grad. contemplat. c. 7. p. 97.

3. Conſtancie in temptation.
Revel. 2. 10.

Rom. 8. 38, 39.
Habet & in hac vita requiem ſuam anima, qua de morte infidelitatis exempta eſt, & non ab operibus juſtitiæ, ſed ab iniquitatis ſe abſtinet actione ut vivens Deo & mortua mundo, in humilitate & manſuetudinis placita tranquillitate requieſcat. Aug. in ſent. 10. 3. p. 235. b.

Auguſtine ſaith, juſſiſti Domine, & ita eſt, quod animus inordinatus ſit ſibi ipſi pœna; thou haſt appointed it, Lord, and it is ſo, that every wicked mind or inordinate ſoule ſhould be a plague and a puniſhment unto himſelfe; and this ſting of conſcience makes every wicked man to ſleep like the Nightingale, which, they ſay, ſleepeth alwaies with a pricke or thorne before her breaſt; and therefore the Prophet David knowing this, that an evill conſcience ſhould have no reſt, and could have no peace, ſo long as it continued evill; he ſaith, returne unto thy reſt ô my ſoule; returne from ſin, and then thou ſhalt finde reſt.

2. Abundance of conſolation; for he ſhall abound in all good; in the love of God, and of all godlineſſe, which is the true reſt, and the greateſt contentment in the world; quia vita cordis amor eſt; becauſe love is the very life of the heart; and therefore it is impoſſible that the heart ſhould be without love, if the ſame deſire to live; therefore of neceſſity, it muſt either love it ſelfe, or ſome other thing from it ſelfe; but becauſe it cannot find a perfect good in it ſelfe, the love thereof could not be happie, if it ſhould love it ſelfe; therefore, if our heart deſireth to love happily, it muſt of neceſſity enquire for ſome other thing, that it may love beſides it ſelfe; and if it ſhall begin to love any imperfect thing without it ſelfe, then truly it doth nothing els but irritate and provoke its love, but not exclude its owne miſery, which by this meanes it augmenteth and not diminiſheth; and therefore it is impoſſible that our heart ſhould ever love happily, untill it ſhould convert it ſelfe, by the deſire of its love, unto the one onely chiefeſt good; and becauſe God alone is the one onely chiefeſt good, therefore he doth onely love happily, which doth onely love God, & tanto felicius amat, quanto amplius, and by how much the more he loveth him, by ſo much the happier is his love, and he the happier by his love; and therefore this is the true reſt of our heart, when by the deſire thereof, it doth faſten it ſelfe, and cleave in the love of God, deſiring nothing els beſides, but delighting it ſelfe wholly, with a certaine kinde of happy ſecurity, in that thing, which it holdeth; for the faire beauty of all viſible things doth betray our ſences and deceive our ſoules, which are filled with deluſions, and are made thereby unquiet and full of griefe, when they doe moſt vainely deſire, to hold thoſe things, of which indeed themſelves are held; but that is the true light, which ſheweth all theſe things not to be true; and by that light, the ſoule of man is called to reſt, that is, by not loving thoſe things, which, without great labour, cannot be loved; becauſe thus, he ſhall rule over all theſe things, he ſhall hold them, and not be held of them, he ſhall poſſeſſe them and not be poſſeſſed of them, and, being ſubject to this yoke, he ſhall have all other things ſubject unto him; but moſt miſerable are the friends of this world; becauſe they refuſe to be the Lords of it, which they might be, if they deſired to be the ſonnes of God, and are ſo afraid to be ſeparated from the embracements of this world, ut nihil eis ſit laborioſius quam non laborare, that nothing is more laborious unto them, then not to labour; Aug. de vera religione, cap. 35.

3. Conſtancie in temptation; for there ſhall bee none that hee ſhould feare; when we repoſe our truſt in God, and looke for helpe from God, we need not feare what man can doe unto us, nor what the gates of hell can doe againſt us, but, as the Scripture ſaith, feare none of thoſe things that thou ſhalt ſuffer; ſo they that are come to Chriſt, and doe beleeve in Chriſt, doe feare nothing; neither life nor death, nor Angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things preſent, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature ſhall be able to ſeparate them, from the love of God, which is in Chriſt Ieſus.

And this is the reſt of the ſoule in this life; when our conſciences are cleanſed from all ſinnes, through the death and paſſion of Ieſus Chriſt, according to that ſaying of the Apoſtle, Being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God, Rom. 5. 1. and when our hearts have abandoned all the vanities of this world, and doe reſt our ſelves wholly ſatisfied with the love, and delight that we take, in God

God alone; and then we feare no dangers, but are moſt readily willing to undergoe any thing, that ſhall betyde us, for the teſtimony of Chriſt and the profeſſion of our faith.

And this is the reſt, that our Saviour promiſeth to them that take his yoke upon them; not a reſt from labour; for we are all borne unto it, nor a diſcharge from our duties; for it becommeth us to fulfill all righteouſneſſe, nor an exemption from the Croſſe; for we muſt be ready to denie our ſelves, and to lay downe our lives for the truth; but a reſt unto our ſoules through Ieſus Chriſt, even as he ſaith himſelfe, in the world you ſhall have tribulation, but in me you ſhall have peace, and you may be of good cheere, becauſe I have overcome the world.

Mat.3.15.

Luk.9.23. Mat.16.24. Mar.8.34. Ioh.16.33.

And this is the greateſt happineſſe of Gods Saints, that whatſoever ſtorme falls upon their outward man, ſhame, loſſe, baniſhment, perſecution or death it ſelfe, yet ſtill their inward man, their heart, their ſoule, their conſcience is quiet and calme, and full of all tranquillity, ſleeping with Chriſt in the ſterne of the ſhip, when the ſame is toſſed with the moſt tempeſtuous waves; and I had rather have, if it pleaſed God, a quiet ſoule in a troubled and tormented body, then a diſtracted and a wounded minde in the ſoundeſt body; for the ſpirit of man will beare his infirmities, but a wounded ſpirit who can beare? and therefore ô ſweet Chriſt, doe what thou wilt unto my body, ſo thou wilt give reſt unto my ſoule.

The reſt of the ſoule how farre more excellent then the reſt of the body.

Pro.18.14.

3. The eternall reſt is, when both body and ſoule ſhall be delivered from all miſeries, and ſhall reſt in peace with God for evermore; of which the Prophet Eſay ſpeaketh, And my people ſhall dwell in a peaceable habitation and in ſure dwellings, and in quiet reſting places; and this is the chiefeſt of all reſts, a reſt that paſſeth all underſtanding, and a reſt that doth onely make us happy. And ſo much for the promiſe of our Saviour Chriſt.

3. The eternall reſt.

Eſay 32.18. & c.58 v.11.

Iam animus pleno convivio non ſatiatus, ſed parvo interim guſtu refectus, donec veneri quod perfectum eſt. Rupert. in Mat. c.11.p.111.

3. The laſt thing in this part of Scripture is, the proofe of the reaſon, that proveth, why we ſhould come to Chriſt, and both take his yoke upon us, and alſo learne of him to be meeke and lowly in heart; or the reaſon, proving why we ſhall finde reſt unto our ſoules, is, becauſe his yoke is eaſie, and his burthen light: and by theſe two words {1. Yoke. 2. Burthen.} I doe underſtand two things: {1. Faith. 2. Obedience.} For

3. The reaſon of the precept or of the promiſe, or both.

Two things required of us.

1. As the yoke tyeth and coupleth the oxen together, ſo faith uniteth us to Chriſt; and this yoke is eaſie, ſaith Chriſt, onely believe and thou ſhalt be ſaved, and if you compare the yoke of the Iewes, which tyed them to God, and this yoke of Chriſtians, which uniteth us to Chriſt, then will it appeare more plainely to be a very ſweet and an eaſie yoke; for the yoke of the Iewes was, their threefold law, {1. Morall. 2. Iudiciall. 3. Ceremoniall.} A yoke indeed, which neither our fathers nor we were able to beare, as Saint Peter teſtifieth; and therefore as the people through their diſobedience, did altogether breake thai yoke and burſt theſe bonds, as the Prophet Ieremy complaineth of them; ſo Chriſt, in mercy, did breake this yoke of their burthen, and the ſtaffe of their ſhoulder, and the rod of their oppreſſor, as in the day of Midian; but the yoke that Chriſt gave us in ſtead of this other, is the ſingle and the ſimple law of faith, to believe that through the grace of the Lord Ieſus Chriſt, we ſhall be ſaved even as they; and therefore a moſt ſweet and an eaſie yoke; to receive, without labour, the fruits that others laboured for, even as the children of Iſrael inherited the lands of the heathen, and tooke the labours of the people in poſſeſſion, houſes that they builded not, and gardens, orchards, and vineyards that they planted not, ſo ſhall we reape all the fruits of Chriſt his paines, and of all his merits, if we will but lay hold upon the ſame by faith.

1. To take his yoke; and what is meant by his yoke.

The yoke of the Iewes what it was.

Act.15.10.

Ieremy 5.5.

The yoke that Chriſt brake. Eſay 9.4. vide c.10.27.

Act.15.11. The yoke that Chriſt layeth upon us.

Pſal.105.43.

2. As his yoke is eaſie, ſo his burden is light; where firſt of all, before I ſhew the lightneſſe of his burthen, you muſt obſerve, that as hee did not unlooſe us from the former yoke, to let us runne free, and runne away from him, like a wilde aſſe to the wilderneſſe, without any tie, but he would lay another yoke, though farre eaſier, upon our necks, to tie us ſtill unto himſelfe; ſo heere he doth not exempt us from all obedience; but as he doth moſt mercifully take away our heavie burthens, under which we were even ready to ſinke downe to hell; ſo he doth moſt juſtly impoſe upon us light and eaſie burdens, with which we may freely flie up to heaven; and therefore in his laſt farewell, he chargeth his Apoſtles to teach us, to obſerve all things whatſoever he commanded us: and you ſhall find that he commanded little leſſe then his Father, and his Father, at firſt ſight, did not ſeeme to command them, ſo ſtrict as he doth; and yet his burthen is but light, if we compare the ſame with all other burthens of the world.

2 To take his burthen upon us: and what is meant by his burthen.

Onus & in bonam & in malam partem accipi poteſt, hoc eſt, & in his qui peccatis gravibus opprimuntur, ut Pſal. 37. & in illis qui virtutum levia onera ſuſtentant, ut hic Mat. 11. 29. Hieron.

Matth. 28. 20.

I will diſtinguiſh them into theſe foure heads.

All ſorts of burthens diſtinguiſhed into foure heads.

1. The burthen of the ſonnes of Adam.
2. The burthen of the ſinnes of Adam.
3. The burthen of the law of God.
4. The burthen of the puniſhment of God.

} Foure heavie burthens.

1. The burthen of the ſonnes of Adam, that lieth ſo heavie upon every ſhoulder, is the inſupportable griefe, and the unexpreſſible miſeries of every man, even from our cradles unto our grave; Saint Auguſtine ſaith, Quis non exhorreat & mori eligat, ſi ei proponatur, aut mors perpetienda, aut infantia? who would not tremble, and chooſe rather to die, if it were propoſed unto him, whether he would undergoe death, or paſſe over infancie againe? and therefore the Poet ſaith,

1. The burthen of the ſonnes of Adam.

Aug. de civit. Dei. l. 22. c. 24.

Quæ lucis miſeris tam dira cupido?

Optimum eſt non naſci, & proximè eſt quam citò mori.

he knoweth not, why men ſhould deſire to live, or what pleaſure they have to enjoy this light; for we reade of none, but onely one, that is Zoroaſtres, that was ſaid to laugh when he was borne, nec ei boni aliquid monſtroſus ille riſus portendit, and that monſtrous laughter did foreſhew no good unto him, it was no preſage of any happineſſe; for he is ſaid to be the inventor of the Magique arts, a great Aſtronomer and a great Magitian, and yet all his Magique could not profit him, to preſerve him to injoy the vaine felicity of this ſhort life againſt his foes: and therefore Tullie ſaith, that nature, rather like a ſtep-dame then a mother, brought man into this life, with a naked, fraile and feeble body, and with a minde, anxio ad moleſtias, humili ad timores, molli ad labores, & prono ad libidines, troubled with griefes, trembling with feares, unapt to labour, prone to luſt, and blinde to underſtand the cauſe, almoſt of any thing, that he ſeeth: and Saint Auguſtine ſaith, behold, how the miſeries of humane kinde doe incompaſſe the ſences round about, thou art a man, thinke nothing that belongs to man ſtrange from thy ſelfe, and in thoſe things which thou doſt not ſuffer, partake in the ſufferings of others; and although thou doſt abound with never ſo great earthly felicities, yet there is no day, that paſſeth over thy head, without inteſtine warres, eſpecially if thou doſt indeavour to accompliſh that, which thou doſt profeſſe; and becauſe there be ſome things, which now perhaps thou canſt not ſo well remember in thy ſelfe, therefore thou maiſt do well to obſerve the ſame in little children, how many dangers and how great evills they doe ſuffer? in what, and with what vanities, vexations, errors, and feares they doe grow and are bred to mens eſtate; and when they are growne great, able to ſerve God, then looke how, tentat error ut decipiat, tentat labor aut dolor ut frangat, tentat libido ut accendat, tentat meror ut ſternat, tentat typhus ut extollat; error tempteth us, that it may deceive us; labour and griefe tempteth us, that they may breake us, luſt tempteth us, that it may inflame us, ſadneſſe and diſcontent tempteth us, that it may deject our mindes and caſt us downe, pride and ambition tempteth us, that it may lift us up to breake our necks; becauſe, as the Poet ſaith,

In quo tamen ineſſet tanquam obrutus quidam divinus ignis ingenij & mentis; rem vidit cauſam neſcivit. Aug. cont. Pelag. l. 4. c. 13 p. 266.

The great miſeries of mankinde.

No day without miſeries.

The many evills that children ſuffer.

Manifold temptations.

Sequitur

Sequitur ſuperbos ultor a tergo Deus;

And this palpable evidence of theſe inſufferable miſeries, hath compelled many of the heathen Philoſophers, which neither knew nor believed any thing of the ſinne of the firſt Adam, to ſay, that for ſome hainous evils, committed and received in former time, in the firſt ages of this world, we are borne liable to ſo many puniſhments, which for thoſe evils, they knew not what, we do and muſt ſuffer, and have our ſoules tyed to corruptible bodies, to be plagued with that puniſhment, wherewith the Hetrurians uſed to afflict and impoſe upon thoſe robbers, that they tooke, to couple them alive with dead bodies till they died.

Senec. Here fur. Act. 3.

What ſome Philoſophers thought of our miſeries.

Aug. com. in Gen. l. 4. c. 10.

An Hetrurian puniſhment.

This is a miſerable caſe, a heavy yoke, and a lamentable life, to be neceſſitated to undergo ſuch inevitable miſeries; and yet Cicero is deceived, becauſe nature cannot be blamed, and we can faſten, not the leaſt fault, on God, but upon our ſelves, and that firſt root, our firſt parent, in whom we were all included, and have all ſinned, and from whom we derive thoſe corruptions both of body and ſoule, which do moſt juſtly deſerve all thoſe miſeries to be impoſed upon us.

Neither God nor nature to be blamed for our miſeries.

2. Onera quæ vnusquiſq; ſua portat peccata ſunt, the burdens which every one doth beare, are his owne ſinnes, ſaith S. Auguſtine. With theſe we are burdened and laden, and that which is more miſerable, we do tie theſe pernicious burdens upon our ſhoulders; yea, and that which is yet more miſerable, and moſt lamentable, we deſire more burdens to be added, and never ſeeke to have thoſe, that preſſe us, to be taken from us; whereupon it happeneth, in a ſhort ſpace, not one of us is able to expreſſe the multiplicity and variety of theſe burdens, as the ſame S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh; S. Bernard in cœna Domini in fine de unlecim oneribus, out of the Prophet Eſay, collecteth eleven ſpeciall burdens; that is,

2. The burden of the ſins of Adam.

Onera addi primus, non deponi.

Quis brevi tempore poteſt multiplicitatem & varietatem harum diſſerere ſarcinarum? Aug. de verb. Apoſt.

11. Speciall burdens.

1. The burden of Babylon, Eſa. 13. 1. that is, of the luſts and deſires of this world; Sic cor Iudæ oneraverunt avaritiæ, Phariſæorum invidia, Pilati ſtultitia; ſo covetouſneſſe burdened the heart of Iudas; envy, the Phariſees; and folly, Pilate; to feare man more than God, to preferre Cæſar before his Saviour: and of covetouſneſſe S. Auguſtine demaunds the queſtion; nonne gravis eſt avaritia? Whether it be not a very heavy burden, when it ſtirreth us up from ſleep, and ſomtimes ſuffereth us not to ſleep at all; and perhaps (ſaith he) thou haſt the burden of ſloth and idleneſſe with this of covetouſneſſe; and if ſo, then theſe two moſt wicked diſagreeing burdens do preſſe thee, and teare thee all to pieces; becauſe they give contrary commands, when ſloth bids thee ſleepe, and covetouſneſſe cals upon thee to riſe; ſloth bids thee not to indure the cold and wet, and covetouſneſſe chargeth thee to undergo the dangers both of ſeas and tempeſts; and truly envy is as heavy a burden as any; it vexeth the very heart of man, and makes him ſweat the drops of bitter words, and deviſe the plots of malicious revenge, and it ſuffereth the owner to reſt neither day nor night.

1. Of Babylon. that is, the world.

Aug. de verb. Apoſt. Ser. 24.

The burden of covetouſneſſe.

The burden of envy.

2. Is the burden of the Philiſtines, that is, of them that fall downe under the weight of pride; Philiſtim ſignifying falling, and Satan by his pride fell downe from heaven; becauſe pride is of ſuch a weight, as is able to preſſe downe any ſoule to hell; the pride of a feather, or ſuch another toy, that ſeemes ſo light, being oftentimes heavier than a talent of lead; therefore this muſt needs be a heavy burden.

2. Of the Philiſtins.

The heavineſſe of the pride of a feather.

3. Is the burden of Moab, Eſa. 15. 1. that is, of too much care for our children, and for the neceſſities of this world; quia Moab de patre dicitur, becauſe Moab ſignifieth of the father, to ſhew, that the care of fathers, eſpecially when it exceedeth reaſon and religion, is a mighty burden, that preſſeth downe many a loving father into hell, to raiſe up his wicked ſonne on earth.

3. Of Moab. Not to be too carefull for our children.

4. Is the burden of Damaſcus, Eſa. 17. 1. that is, of thoſe that follow the ſteps of their predeceſſours; becauſe Damaſcus ſignifieth fundens ſanguinem, the ſpreading of our corruption, which, like ſowre grapes, will ſet thoſe childrens

4. Of Damaſcus.

That we ought not to imitate the corruptions of our anceſtours.

teeth on edge, that will imitate and follow thoſe innate vices, which they have traduced from their parents; and therefore, ille verè Damaſcenus, proprium fundens ſanguinem, qui innatæ corruptioni conſentit, he is truly of Damaſcus, powring out his owne bloud, which doth follow his owne naturall corruption, and thereby give an ill example unto all his children, unto all his family; and yet this naturall corruption, this inbred bloud, is no ſmall burden, nor eaſily removed from our ſhoulders.

5 Of the deſart of the ſea. Not to follow the multitude.

5. Is the burden of the deſart of the ſea, which S. Bernard interpreteth to be multitudinem reproborum, the multitude of wicked men, that are a heavy burden unto us, both in corrupting us by their evill examples, and oppreſſing us, by the cruelty of their converſations.

6. Of Egypt. The burden of ignorance.

6. Is the burden of Egypt, that is, of ignorance, which is a very heavy and a very troubleſome burden, not onely to thoſe that are ignorant themſelves, but alſo to all them that are in their company; becauſe nothing is more tedious to a wiſe man, than the company of a foole, and no burthen heavier to a knowing man, than an ignorant fellow, who himſelfe will ſoone perceive the heavineſſe of his burden, when he begins to underſtand his owne ignorance.

7. Of Duma. The burden of ſilence.

7. Is the burden of Duma, that is, of ſilence, which proceedeth from ſhame, when we ſhould confeſſe our ſinnes; or from unthankefulneſſe, when we ſhould praiſe our God; and in both reſpects, it is a heavy burden upon the ſonnes of men.

8. Of Arabia. The burden of the feare of death.

8. Is the burden of Arabia, which is interpreted to ſignifie veſperum, or finem diei, the end of the day; and that is, the feare of death, which in the end of our life, ſeemes very terrible to many men, eſpecially unto thoſe that have led a diſſolute life.

9. Of the valley of the viſion. The burden of deſperation.

9. Is the burden of the valley of the viſion, that is, of an abject deſperation, and a deſperate contemplation of our ſinnes; when as now, upon our death-beds, we do as much feare the juſt and terrible judgements of the great God, as before we did preſume upon the goodneſſe of his mercy, which being abuſed by our corruption, doth bring us into the depth of deadly deſperation.

10. Of Tyrus. The burden of the bitterneſſe of a dying ſinner.

10. Is the burden of Tyrus, that is, anguſtiæ, of the griefe and anguiſh that now falls upon the wretched ſoule, in amaritudine pœnitentiæ, who in the bitterneſſe of his repentance, for the many evils that he committed, will begin to curſe the day of his birth, and all the time of his life, for the feare that he conceiveth of this terrible death.

11. Of the beaſts of the South The burden of the temptations of Satan.

11. Is the burden of the beaſts of the South, which I can expound no better, than the temptations of the Divels, which will now magnifie all our ſinnes, and ſet before our face the things that we have done; and he that before allured us to commit all ſinnes with greedineſſe, and perſwaded us to drinke up iniquity like water, will now prove unto us, that we have ſo many burdens upon our backes, as we have ſinnes, and that every ſinne is of that weight, as it is able to preſſe downe the ſtrongeſt ſoule to hell.

1. The burden of the law of God.

Alexander Hales To. 4. de Conſeſſ. q. 18 p. 565.

Gal. 4. 24.

Obſervationi ſarcina gravis jugum, ſed duræ cervici convenienter impoſitum. Aug. de ver. Domini Ser. 9.

Pſal. 51. 6.

3. The burden of the Law of God, eſpecially if you conſider not onely the Morall Law, but alſo the Iudiciall and Ceremoniall Law, muſt needs be a very weighty burden; and that, as I ſhewed you before, out of Alexander Hales, for the plurality of the ceremonies, for the ſharpneſſe of the puniſhment, for the obſcurity of the figures, for the inefficacie of the motive, for the ſmall profit of the reward, for the defect of ability to performe it, and for the ſervitude of the ſame, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, Gal. 4. 24.

And though we ſhould be freed from the Ceremoniall and the Iudiciall Lawes, and had no more burden laid upon us, than the ten Commandements of the Morall Law; yet if we conſider how God expecteth not onely a literall obſervation of the ſame, but alſo as the Prophet David ſaith, he requireth truth in the inward parts; we ſhall find this a very heavy burden, and that in many things we ſinne all, and many of us in all things.

4. The burden of the puniſhment of ſinne.

4. As every ſinne is a burthen, ſo every puniſhment of ſinne is a burthen likewiſe; wiſe; Caine knew it well, and he felt the waight of it; when, after the denouncing of his puniſhment, he cried out, that it was heavier then he could beare; and therefore deſired rather to die, yea to be killed, then to live under the waight of ſuch a burthen; and though every puniſhment is not ſo heavie as his, yet the leaſt cannot be ſaid to be little; poverty, ſickneſſe, ſhame, diſcontent, impriſonment, baniſhment, and a 1000. more, infirmities and afflictions that God moſt juſtly impoſeth on man for ſinne, doe make our beauty to conſume away, as it were a moth fretting a garment, and will ſuddenly bring the beſt of us unto the duſt of death; this point is ſo cleere, that I need not ſay any more of it; for, howſoever the rich man doth not feele the burthen of his riches, nor the proud man of his pride, nor many other ſinners doe perceive the waight of their ſinnes, becauſe they ſeeme ſo pleaſant unto them, and as yet they perceive not the ſting thereof; yet there is no man that ſuffereth any croſſe or calamity, but he will ſoone feele the waight thereof, and will be readier to proclaime it, then you can be to prove it, how heavie this his burthen lyeth upon his ſhoulders.

Gen. 4. 13.

Heavie puniſhments.

Pſal. 39. 12. Pſal. 22. 15.

Many perceive not their burthens, and why.

So you ſee, all theſe burthens are moſt heavie burthens, and moſt grievous to bee borne; & cum jugo peccati atq; onere mortalitatis, Regum vel Dominorum dura imperia ſuſtinuiſtis, quales feræ potius quam homines merentur dici; and together with the former burthens, the yoke of ſinne and the waight * of our mortality, we have oftentimes ſuſtained the hard rule of tyrannicall Kings and cruell Lords, which deſerve rather to be termed beaſts then men, in which reſpect the Prophet Daniel, Chap. 7. deſcribes them by the faces of foure beaſts, and they no milde ones neither, but a Lyon, a Beare, a Leopard, and the fourth worſe then theſe, that ſtamped theſe all to peeces.

The burthen of hard Lords.

* Quia onus in Prophetis gravedinem ſignificat. Hieron. habac. 1. & p. 247. a.

Rupertus in Matth. c. 11. f. 111.

But the burthen of Chriſt is a moſt facile, light and eaſie burthen; It is not to be underſtood of taxes and impoſitions, ſuch as temporall Lords doe impoſe upon their ſervants, as Salomon and Rehoboam did upon his ſubjects, where in ſeeking perhaps the tenth part of their goods, the ill adviſed King loſt, we are ſure of it, ten parts of his kingdome; but it ſignifieth the doctrine and the precepts of Chriſt, as Saint Hierom teſtifieth, and his doctrine is ſweet and his precepts eaſie; for Saint John ſpeaking of them, ſaith plainely, that his commandements are not grievous, 1 John 5. 3. and if Moſes might juſtly ſay of the law, the commandement, which I command thee this day, is not hidden from thee, neither is it farre off; it is not in heaven, that thou ſhouldſt ſay, who ſhall goe up for us to heaven, and bring it unto us, that we may heare it and doe it, neither is it beyond the ſea; but the Word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth and in thy heart, that thou maiſt doe it, then much more truly may we ſay this, of the doctrine of Chriſt and the precepts of the Goſpell, as Saint Paul manifeſtly ſheweth unto us, where he applieth theſe words of Moſes, unto the Word of faith, which wee preach unto you.

The burthen of Chriſt what it ſignifieth.

Quod doctrina pro onere accipiatur, perſpicuum ſit, in evangelio, ut alligans phariſæi onera gravia. Hieron. in ep. ad galat. c. 5. p. 114.

Gods Word how nigh unto us.

Deut. 30. 11, 12, 13 14.

Rom. 10. 6. &c.

And therefore Saint Auguſtine, conſidering the light burthen of the Chriſtians, in compariſon of the heavie and almoſt inſupportable burthen of the Iewes, in reſpect of Rites, Ceremonies and Sacraments, ſaith; that, becauſe piety or true religion was to be planted through feare, and perfected through love and charity, Ideo populus timore conſtrictus, tempore ſervitutis in veteri lege, multis ſacramentis onerabatur, therefore the people, kept under with feare, in the time of ſervitude, under the old law, was laden and burthened with many Sacraments; becauſe this was profitable unto them, to make them deſirous of the grace of God, which was foretold by the Prophets, that it ſhould come, and be given unto us; but when grace was come, tum ab ipſa Dei ſapientia, homine aſſumpto, a quo in libertatem vocati ſumus, pauca Sacramenta ſaluberrima conſtituta ſunt, quæ ſocietatem Chriſtiani populi continerent, then the wiſedome of God, being made man, to call us into liberty, did ordaine a few, and thoſe moſt wholeſome Sacraments; touching which, the ſame Saint Auguſtine writing to Ianuarius, ſaith, primò hoc tenere te volo, Chriſtum levi jugo ſuo nos ſubdidiſſe; first

The burthen of the Chriſtians how light in compariſon of the burthen of the Iewes.

Pietas timore inchoatur atque charitate perficitur. Aug. de vera Rel. c. 17.

Iewes laden with rites and ceremonies, and why.

Aug. in l. de vera religione. c. 17.

Aug. in ep. 11. ad Ian.

How Chriſt hath eaſed us from the multiplicity of rites and ceremonies.

Sacraments but two in Saint Auguſtines time.

What things not written were obſerved.

Aug ep. 118. ad Ian.

Saint Auguſtines complaint againſt the multiplying of rites and ceremonies.

I would all Popiſh Biſhops would weigh this.

* Pauciſſimis & manifeſtiſſimis Sacramentis.
The Iewes, burthened with fewer Ceremonies then ſome Chriſtians.

Mat. 15^6.
The obſervings of humane rites, cauſe us oftentimes to neglect the precepts of God.

Ier. 10 23.

Bonavent. l. 3. diſt. 28 art. 1 q. 3.
The Commandements fullfilled two waies.
1. In reſpect of the outward precept.
2. In reſpect of the intention of the giver.

Bonavent. Ibid.

Why we want grace.

firſt of all I would have thee to obſerve this, that Chriſt hath ſubjected us to his light and eaſie yoke, unde Sacramentis numero pauciſſimis, obſervatione facillimis, ſignificatione præſtantiſſimis ſocietatem novi populi colligavit; whereupon he tyed together the ſocietie of his new people, that is, of Chriſtians, with Sacraments, in number as few as may be, (for we have but two,) for obſervation moſt eaſie, and for ſignification moſt excellent; as are, Baptiſme in the name of the bleſſed Trinity, and the Communion of the body and blood of Chriſt, and if there bee any other thing commended in the Canonicall Scriptures; as for other things, which we obſerve, though they be not written, you muſt know, they be ſuch as are obſerved in all the world, and are commended and appointed to be kept, either by the Apoſtles themſelves, or by plenary counſells, whoſe authority is moſt wholeſome in the Church of God; as are the anniverſary celebration of of the Paſſion, Reſurrection, Aſcention, and ſending downe of the Holy Ghoſt, and the like. This was the will of Chriſt, that his Church ſhould be eaſed from all heavie burthens, and charged onely with theſe few, light, and moſt excellent things.

And yet this holy Father in that very ſame Epiſtle, ſaith, hoc nimis doleo, quia multa, quæ in divinis libris ſaluberrima præcepta ſunt, minus curantur; & tam multis præſumptionibus plena ſunt omnia; I doe much, or too much grieve, and bewaile at this, that many things, which are commanded in the divine Scriptures, are too ſlightly regarded, and all things are filled with ſo many preſumptions; ſo he calleth the ceremonies, traditions and inventions of men, reſecanda exiſtimo; I thinke (ſaith he) they ſhould be cut off; becauſe that although this cannot be found, how they are againſt the faith, ipſam tamen religionem, quam pauciſſimis & manifeſtiſſimis celebrationum Sacramentis, miſericordia Dei eſſe liberam voluit, ſervilibus oneribus premunt; yet they doe overpreſſe our religion (which the mercy of our God * would have to be free) with too many ſervile burthens; ſo that the condition of the Iewes, which knew not the time of this liberty, but were ſubject to the legall burthens, not to theſe humane preſumptions, was a great deale more eaſie and more tolerable then ours; and I would to God the Church of Rome, and all Churches, whoſe Palinures and governors are ſo apt to introduce new toyes, and unbidden rites and ceremonies among their people, would well remember this complaint of Saint Auguſtine, and take heed, leſt the obſervation of theſe will worſhips ſhall exclude, or at leſt wiſe cauſe to be neglected, the true worſhip of God from our hearts, which is our Saviours note unto the Phariſees; you have made void the commandement of God by your traditions.

And ſo you ſee, that both the ſubſtance and the ſhaddow, the precepts and the Sacraments, the internall and the externall burthen of us Chriſtians, is but a light and an eaſie burthen; a moſt eaſie thing, to obey the commandements of Chriſt.

Ob. But againſt this it may be objected that the Prophet Ieremy ſaith, ô Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himſelfe; it is not in man that walketh to direct his ſteps.

Sol. To this Bonaventure anſwereth, that the commandements of God may be ſaid to be fullfilled two waies.

1. Quantum ad genus operis, in reſpect of the worke commanded, or the outward precept; and ſo ſome men have performed the ſame, according to the letter of the law, as it may be, that young man in the Goſpell did, which ſaid, all theſe things have I done from my youth, Mat. 19.20.

2. Quantum ad intentionem mandantis, in reſpect of the intention of the Lawgiver, which requireth that our wills and deſires ſhould be, in all things, conformable to his will; and thus no man can performe the ſame in any meaſure, without ſome ſpeciall meaſure of the grace of Chriſt.

And in this reſpect ſpecially, the commandements of Chriſt are ſaid to be nigh unto us, not that we can doe any of them without Gods grace, ſed quia gratia Dei preſto eſt unicuiq;, nec aliquis caret gratia, quia gratia deſit ſibi, ſed quia ipſe deeſt gratiæ; but becauſe the grace of Chriſt is preſent and at hand, to every one that that will imbrace it, when as no man doth want grace, becauſe grace is wanting to him, but becauſe he is wanting unto grace.

Ob. Yet againe it may be objected, that Chriſt himſelfe calleth the ſame a burthen, and therefore how can it be light?

Sol. Firſt, I anſwer that Cicero doubteth, utrum onus id appellandum eſt, quod cum latitia fertur & voluptate, whether that can be called a burthen which is borne with pleaſure and delight; and we know that no man taketh greater pleaſure, more content, or ſweeter delight in any thing in the world, then the Chriſtians doe in fullfilling the precepts of Chriſt, yea ſuffering all kindes of afflictions and tribulations with Chriſt; looke what the Prophet ſaith of the law of God, My delight ſhall bee in thy ſtatutes, yea I have had as great delight in the way of thy teſtimonies, as in all manner of riches; and againe, My delight ſhall bee in thy commandements, which I have loved; and againe, The law of thy mouth is deerer unto me, then thouſands of gold and ſilver; and againe, ô how ſweet are thy words unto my throat, yea ſweeter then honey to my mouth, for they are the very joy of my heart; ſo every true Chriſtian will ſay the ſame of the law of Chriſt; it is our delight, and the very joy of our hearts; and therefore how can it be ſaid to be a burthen to any of us, when we take ſo much pleaſure and delight therein? the worldling is not ſo well ſatisfied with the enjoying of all his treaſures, as Saint Peter was to forſake all to follow Chriſt; and the children of the Muſes, that are filled with the melodies of the Lute, Organs and Harpe, are not ſo much delighted herewith, as the poore Chriſtians are with the reproaches and perſecutions that they ſuffer for the name of Chriſt.

Cicero orat. in Ver. l.3.10.2 p.164.

How the Saints delight in Gods law.

Pſal.119.14.

Pſalme 119. Almoſt every where.

The Saints reioyce in all their ſufferings.

But let us yeeld that it is a burthen, as our Saviour calleth it, yet you muſt underſtand, that onus duplex eſt, there is a twofold burthen.

Burthen twofold. 1. Loading us

1. Onus onerans; a burthen loading us, as is ſinne and all weight that preſſeth downe.

Vt eſt ſarcina peccatorũ, cruciatuum, atq; pœnarum. Hieron. in Eſayam. l.9.c.10 p.153.a.

2. Onus allevians, a burthen that doth lighten us, as the wings of a bird, the wheeles of a cart, and the ſayles of a ſhip, which though they be burthens of themſelves, yet doe they no waies burthen them that beare them; ſo are the commandements of Chriſt, non pondera onerati ſed alæ volaturi, not weights to preſſe us downe, but wheeles to make us runne the waies of godlineſſe, and wings to helpe us to flie up to heaven; and therefore Saint Bernard ſaith, mirum opus naturæ, quantum creſcit in maſſa, tantum decreſcit in pondere; you ſee the wonderfull worke of nature, by how much the wings of any fowle doe grow in quantity the greater, by ſo much they make that fowle the lighter to flie; and ſo in the wheeles of a charret, onus oneri additur & minus onerat, there is weight added unto the weight of it, and yet it makes it runne the lighter; ſo the wheeles of the Goſpell added to the heavie burthen of the law, doe both increaſe the perfection and leſſon the difficulty of the ſame; for now, as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, Thy Word runneth very ſwiftly, Pſal. 147.15. that is, the Word which before was onely knowne in Iewry, and for the weight thereof was able to proceed no further, the hands of Moſes being preſſed downe with the burthen of it, being now lightned by grace, and ſupported by the wheeles of the Goſpell, it runneth ſwiftly into all lands, and ſoundeth ſuddenly in all the borders of the earth.

Aug de verb. Apoſt. ſer.28. Weights helping us forward.

Ob. But ſtill it may be objected, that it is not a burthen lightening, but a burthen preſſing and weighing us downe; yea and a great deale more heavie then the burthen of the law; for in the law, ſaith Alexander Hales, they needed not to confeſſe their ſinnes but onely unto God, and now (ſaith he) we muſt confeſſe them both to God and men; and our Saviour ſaith, You have heard it was ſaid by them of old time, thou ſhalt not kill, and whoſoever ſhall kill, ſhall bee in danger of the judgement; but I ſay unto you, whoſoever is angry with his brother without a cauſe, ſhall be in danger of the judgement; and whoſoever ſhall ſay to his brother Racha, ſhall be in danger of the counſell; but whoſoever ſhall ſay, thou Nonne vere leve eſt quod portantem non gravat, ſed levat; & non ſolum non onerat, ſed & portat omnem cui portandum imponitur. Bernard ep.72. p.1432.

The Goſpell ſtricter then the law.

Mat.5.21,22.

thou foole, ſhall be in danger of hell fire; againe, Ye have heard that it was ſaid by them of old time, thou ſhalt not commit adultery; but I ſay unto you, that whoſoever looketh on a woman to luſt after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart: againe, Ye have heard that it hath been ſaid by them of old time, thou ſhalt not forſweare thy ſelfe, but I ſay unto you, ſweare not at all; againe, Ye have heard that it hath beene ſaid, an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth; but I ſay unto you that ye reſiſt not evill; but whoſoever ſhall ſmite thee on thy right cheeke, turne to him the other alſo; againe, Ye have heard that it hath beene ſaid, thou ſhalt love thy neighbour and hate thine enemy; but I ſay unto you love your enemies, bleſſe them that curſe you, doe good to them that hate you, and pray for them which deſpightfully uſe you and perſecute you; and therefore certainely the burthen of Chriſt is a great deale heavier, then the burthen of the law, and the duty of Chriſtians is farre ſtricter, then the duty of the Iewes; for except your righteouſneſſe doth exceed the righteouſneſſe of the Scribes and Phariſees, ye cannot enter into the kingdome of heaven.

Ver. 27. & 28. Vide ver. 31, 32. Ver 33. & 34. &c.

Ver. 38, 39.

Ver. 43. & 44.

Matth. 5. 20.

Sol. To this Alexander Hales anſwereth, that although the Lord hath taken away from us the yoke of the law, yet it doth not therefore follow, that there is nothing difficult or uneaſie to be performed in the law of the Goſpell, and the burthen of Chriſt, though not ſimply but in ſome reſpects, is heavier then the burthen of Moſes law; becauſe the morall perfection of the Evangelicall law, conſidered in it ſelfe, and not compared with thoſe things, that do ſweeten it, and helpe us to performe the ſame, is a great deale harder and more difficult then the perfection of the Morall and Moſaicall law; but if we take it together, with thoſe things that doe accompany it, and doe further us to diſcharge it, then it is a great deale eaſier and lighter then the other; for there be foure ſpeciall things that doe alleviate or lighten the burthen of Chriſt, which did not helpe thoſe that laboured under the law, and they be Alexander Hales. 20. 4. de confeſſ. q. 18. p. 5. 65.

The burthen of Chriſt in ſome reſpect heavier then the burden of the law.

Foure things that do lighten the burthen of Chriſt.

1. Love of God.
2. The helpe of grace.
3. The aſſiſtance of Gods Spirit.
4. The conſideration
   1. Of the ſhortneſſe of our life.
   2. Of the ſufferings of Chriſt.
   3. Of the evills we ſhall eſcape hereby.
   4. Of the reward we ſhall attaine unto.

1. The love of God.

1. Omnia ſunt facilia habenti charitatem, ſed valde difficilia imo impoſſibilia non habenti; all things are not onely poſſible, but alſo eaſie to him that hath the love of Chriſt in him; but, to doe any thing for Chriſt, is not onely hard but alſo impoſſible for him that loveth not Chriſt; for this love is like the wings of a bird, which is very light to flie, when it is full of feathers, but cannot flie at all, when it wanteth his wings, ſaith Bonaventure; and therefore Chriſt, deſiring Saint Peter to feed his ſheepe, ſaith, Peter loueſt thou me? For if thou loveſt me, I know thou wilt feed my ſheepe; becauſe we thinke nothing that we doe, nothing that we can doe, to be too much, to be inough for them we love; I would goe through fire and water, and hazard my life and living, and that with deſire and delight, to doe any ſervice to them that I deerely loved; therefore as the love of Chriſt to mankinde made all his ſufferings light unto him, ſo the love of man to Chriſt, makes all the commandements of Chriſt light unto us: And Saint Gregory ſaith, qui in hoc appetit mundo proſperari, he that would proſper in this world, and exceed all others in wealth, honours and preferment, huic nimirum cura ſeculariis in delectatione eſt, & quies in labore, & valde fatigatur, ſi deſit cura ſeculi qua fatigetur, all worldly care and all ſollicitous thoughts for theſe things, are pleaſant and delightſome to this man; and his reſt and recreation is in his labour, his contentment is in his paine, and he is greatly troubled and moleſted, if he hath no trouble nor imployment to moleſt him, and to beſtow his time about the ſame; even ſo he that deſires to attaine unto everlaſting life, thinks his life tedious unto him, if he hath nothing to doe, or nothing to ſuffer, whereby he may attaine unto his Love like wings.

Bonavent. l. 2. diſt. 28. art. 1. q. 3. Omnia ſunt facilia charitati, ouè ſarcina Chriſti levis eſt. Aug. l. de nat. & gra. cap. 69. to. 7. p. 766.

The power of love.

Gregor. l. 16. in cap. 29. p. 430.

All labours pleaſant to a worldling.

So to a Chriſtian.

his desired end; quia per operationem quam facimus, & per tribulationem quam patimur, ad regnum Dei pervenimus; because the workes that we doe, and the troubles that we suffer for Christ and through Christ, are the onely meanes that bring us to eternall life; and therefore, the desire and love of these things do make all these things light and easie to Gods Saints.

The two things that bring us to rest.
1. Doing.
2. Suffering.

2. The helpe of grace makes the burden of Christ to be light unto us; for Moses gave the Law, but he gave no power to performe it, but Christ, as he bade the sicke man to take up his bed, and withall gave him strength to take it up; so he bids us believe in him, and obey his will, and then he openeth our hearts, that we may believe, and he inclineth our wills to keepe his precepts; and therefore his precepts are not hard, they are not heavy, when he maketh us able to discharge all that he requireth of us; and this made S. Augustine to say, Da Domine quod jubes, & jube quod vis, give me thy grace, O Lord, to do what thou commandest, and then command what thou wilt.

2. The helpe of grace.
Non animæ collo reprimit, ne ultra pariter cum prioribus possimus aspicere, sed habena pacis & gratiæ vinculo magis copulatos erigit quam deprimit. Amb. in Luc. l. 3.

3. S. Gregory tels us that, Cum a carnalibus subjectio quæritur, profectò quicquid præcipitur eis grave est, etsi non sit difficile; when any subjection or any duty is required of any carnall men, then certainely whatsoever is commanded them, the same seemeth grievous and difficult unto them, though in it selfe it hath neither weight nor difficulty at all; quia, cum ex superbiæ tumore habeant, ut propriæ voluntatis arbitrium sequantur, quicquid eorum deliberationi obviat, gravissimum pensant, for, seeing their swelling pride swayeth their hearts, and carieth them headlong after their owne carnall desires, they think every thing most heavy, that is any wayes contrary, or doth seeme to crosse their fraile and fleshly lusts; and this greedinesse to follow our owne desires, makes the commandements of Christ so grievous unto the wicked; but in the Saints and godly men, the Spirit of God helpeth our infirmities, and strengtheneth our weaknesse, to inable us to do those things, which, of our selves, we should be never able to doe; quippe Spiritu sancto accenditur renatorum voluntas, ut ideo possint, quia sic velint, & ideo sic velint, quia Deus operatur ut velint; because the will of the regenerate is inflamed by the Holy Ghost, that they should be able to do the commandements of God, because they are willing to do them; and they are therefore willing to do them, because God worketh this grace in them, that they should be willing; and, as the Apostle saith, he never suffereth us to be tempted above our ability, but, as the judges and directers of the wrastlers and combatants at the Olympian games, did not suffer any one that came thither, to enter into the list, to contend, at a venture, with any one: but having diligently weighed the age, strength and abilities of every man, they appointed with what Antagonist every one should play his part; and thus they ordered boyes with boyes, men with men, young with young; and so of all other sorts, they matched them, as equally as they could, that none might be discouraged, to see himselfe overmatched; even so saith Origen, the divine providence, dealeth with all those Saints and servants of Christ, that descend into these combats of this spirituall warfare; justissima moderatione dispensat, secundum rationem uniuscujusq; virtutis; he doth most justly order every man, to strive, and fight, and suffer, according to the strength and power, which he knoweth to be in him; and he knoweth our strength and abilities better than we know it our selves; so he appointeth one man, to resist the temptations of his owne flesh, and perhaps, that is all that he is able to do; another he sets, like an Atlas, to sustaine the weight of all worldly persecutions; a third he placeth in the gap, to stay the current of the enemies, and, it may be, there to be troden under foot, or to leese his head, with John Baptist, for speaking the truth against Herodias; some he disposeth for such a time, others for longer; and some, perhaps, all their life; each one, according to the ability that he gives him; and I had as lieve beare the greater weight, if I have the greater strength, as the lesser burden with the lesser strength.

3. The assistance of Gods Spirit.

Greg in 1 Reg. l. 4. c. 1. p. 290.
Carnall desires make the commandements of God heavy to the wicked.

Aug. de corrept. & gratia. c. 12. tom. 7. p. 1345.

1 Cor. 10. 13.

How the Iudges ordered the wrastlers at the Olympian games.

How God dealeth with his servants. Origen. περὶ ἀρχῶν. l. 3.

God knoweth our abilities better than we our selves

The wise dispensation of God.

And as he doth moderate our burdens, according to our strength; so he doth temperate and abbreviate the time that we are to beare it; for, as the Harper or Luteniſt ſtretcheth not his ſtrings too much, leaſt they ſhould breake, nor ſuffereth them to be too looſe, leaſt that ſhould marre the concent of his harmony, and quite ſpoile his muſicke; ſo God (ſaith S. Chryſoſtome) deales with us; neq; in remiſſione continua, neq; in tribulatione longiſſima noſtram conſtituit animam; he hath not ſet our ſoules, either in continuall eaſe, leſt this ſhould make us ſluggiſh and unapt for any ſervice, or els in perpetuall paine and tribulation, leſt this ſhould bring us to deſpaire, and make us unable to proceed in his ſervice; but as it is not alwaies winter, nor alwaies ſummer, not alwaies ſtorme, nor alwaies calme, but, as the Poet ſaith, Chryſ. ad Pop. Antioch. hom. 4. tom. 4. p. 353.

How mercifully God tempereth the afflictions of his ſervants.

Alternis vicibus, amant alterna Camenæ;

Virg. in Eglog.

So God afflicteth us, that we might not be ſetled upon our lees; and when we are afflicted, he thinketh upon his mercy, to releaſe us from our afflictions, leſt we ſhould be broken with too much griefe. Zeph. 1. 12.

And therefore, though our burden ſhould lie heavy upon our ſhoulders, yet we ſhould not faint; becauſe, if heavineſſe doth endure for a night, yet joy commeth in the morning; and if God will afflict us in his anger, yet is it but for a moment, as the Prophet ſpeaketh; for God will not ſuffer us to be tempted above our abilities, he will not lay more upon us than we can beare, nor ſuffer it any longer to continue upon us, than he knoweth us able to indure it: and if he hath laid a heavy burden, and a great waight of affliction upon our ſoules, it is a great argument of his love, that he hath given us a great deale of ſtrength, to inable us to undergo theſe great miſeries. Pſal. 30. 5. Noctes pluit tota, redeunt ſpectacula manè.

Foure things extenuating the burden of Chriſt.

4. There is yet a foure-fold conſideration that doth exceedingly extenuate, and ſweeten the burden of Chriſt upon the backe of every Chriſtian; as

1. The ſhortneſſe of this life worketh three effects.

1. The ſhortneſſe of this preſent life, which is, but a ſpan long, an inch long, a dreame, a thought, a nothing; for this meditation is ſufficient for all wiſe men.

1. Effect.

1. To induce them ad bonum operandum, to do good with all diligence; becauſe the time of their labour is but ſhort.

2. Effect.

2. To reduce them, a malo perpetrando, from the doing of any evill; becauſe the pleaſure thereof is ſo tranſient, not worth the hazard of a ſoule, for ſuch a momentany delight.

3. Effect. Omne dolor, aut brevis eſt ſi magnus, aut levis eſt, ſi longus.

3. To perſwade them, ad malum perpetiendum, to indure with patience what evill ſoever ſhall be impoſed upon them: becauſe all their ſufferings are either levia or brevia; light, if they be long; or ſhort, if they be not light; and the longeſt are but ſhort, how long ſoever we think them for to be.

The meditation of death, what it doth.

And this conſideration made S. Auguſtine to ſay, that, nihil ſic revocat a peccato, ſicut frequens mortis meditatio, there is nothing in the world that is ſo availeable, and ſo powerfull to reclaime us from ſinne, as is the frequent meditation of death; for if thou thoughteſt thou ſhouldſt preſently die, it would not much trouble thee, that thou wert infortunate; it would not grieve thee that thou wert poore; becauſe death would make an end of all thy miſeries; and as death or the ſight thereof, taketh away from us the ſenſe of thoſe ſorrowes, that we do ſuffer; ſo it cooleth the delights, and abateth the exceſſes of thoſe pleaſures, that we do enjoy; and therefore Eſau ſaid, loe I die, or I am at the point of death, and what good will my birth-right do unto me? That is, what benefit will honours, or titles, or the like ſhadowes of worldly dignities do, to a man that is ready to die, and to leave all the world? Gen. 25 32.

2. The paſſion of Chriſt.

2. The conſideration of Chriſt his paſſion, what he hath ſuffered for us here on earth, is a ſpeciall motive to ſweeten every affliction, and to lighten every waight or burden, that we do beare for Chriſt his ſake; for if a King would carie a great beame for me, ſhould not I be willing to carie a little ſticke for him? And therefore S. Bernard ſaith, Quid eſt, homo, quod tibi ſuave non videtur, ſi memineris omnes amaritudines Chriſti? What is it, O man, that doth not ſeem ſweet to thee, if thou doſt thinke and conſider all the bitterneſſe, that Chriſt ſuſtained for thee?

The example of Chriſt teacheth us to do the like.

thee? Ille enim ostendit tibi manus, ut facias quæ fecit; latus, ut sentias quæ sensit; pedes, ut ambules quo porrexit: for he doth shew his hands to thee, that thou shouldst do as he did; he sheweth his side to thee, that thou shouldst perceive what he suffered, and he sheweth his feet to thee, that thou shouldst walk the same way as he went before thee.

3. The remembrance of that great labour and intolerable sufferings, which we shall escape by this little labour and light burden, which we suffer in this world, is another maine reason to sweeten all the miseries of this present life; quia dum labore transitorio atterimur, labore perpetuo liberamur; for, as the Physitian gives us a bitter potion for a little while, that we may enjoy our health a great while; so God layeth on us a momentany labour, that we may escape eternall paine; and therefore, sicut justè Deus hic quibusdam parcit, ut eos in perpetuum feriat; as God, out of his justice, doth spare some men here, that he may perpetually punish them hereafter, (and I beseech God that he may never so spare me) ita quibusdam misericorditer adhibet temporalem severitatem, ne æternam inferat ultionem; so out of his mercy, he sheweth himselfe temporally severe, and layeth punishment upon our loynes here, for a time, that he may take away that eternall torment, which we have deserved, saith S. Gregory; and so I pray God he may still punish me here, that I may escape that endlesse punishment hereafter.

3. The sufferings we shall escape in the next world.

How God dealeth with us like a wise Physitian.

Why God spareth some men here.

Why God punisheth some men here.

4. The consideration of that great weight of glory, which we gaine by this light suffering, is another great reason to prove the lightnesse or levity of all the labours, and all sufferings, that we sustaine here for Christ his sake; for if the greatest tempest, and most violent storme seeme nothing unto the Mariner, and Merchant, for the love of a little gaine; if wounds, and losse of members seem nothing unto the souldier, for the gaine of a little honour; and if the winds, raine and colds seeme nothing unto the husbandman, for the desire of a little temporall harvest, and a small reward; quanto magis debent esse levia omnia, propter præmium æternum? O then, how much lighter should all burdens be, and how much sweeter should all bitternesse prove to us, that doe hereby looke and hope for an everlasting reward of an invaluable worth, of an incomprehensible beatitude? Quia tanta est pulchritudo justitiæ, tanta est jucunditas lucis æternæ, ut, si non liceret in ea amplius manere, quam unius diei hora, propter hoc solum, innumerabiles anni hujus vitæ pleni delicijs, & etiam confluentia temporalium bonorum rectè meritoq; contemnerentur; because the beauty of that justice is so great, and the pleasure of that eternall light is so sweet, that, if we should enjoy the same no more but one little howre, yet for this one houres happinesse, we ought, and that worthily, to despise all the delights and pleasures, that the whole ages of this world could heape upon us, as S. Augustine speaketh; and the reason is rendred by the same Author, Quia revera illud est verum & solum gaudium, &c. Because indeed that onely is the right and true joy, which we conceive of the Creator, and not of the creature; this being but the shadow, that the substance, cui comparata omnis aliunde jucunditas, mœror est; omnis suavitas, dolor est; omne dulce, amarum; omne decus, fœdum; & omne aliud quod delectari posset, molestum. To which joy, if we compare all other pleasure, we shall find it sadnesse; all sweetnesse, sowre; all faire, filthy; and all the things that are wont most of all to delight us, to become most lothsome unto us. And therefore S. Hierom saith, Nullus labor durus, nullum tempus videri longum debet, quo gloria æternitatis acquiritur: No labour ought to seeme hard, no time long, no paines great, to get the glory of eternity. And another Father saith, Quam facile toleratur quælibet adversitas temporalis, ut æterna pœna vitetur, & æterna requies comparetur? How easily and how willingly should we suffer any temporall adversity, that we might escape eternall punishment, and attaine unto everlasting happines? because all the sufferings of this life (if we could suffer as much as all men have suffered, from the beginning of the world to the end thereof) are not worthy of the glory that shall be revealed, saith the Apostle,

4. The glory we shall gaine.

What great labours men will sustaine for small benefits.

The excellency of the joyes and happinesse of heaven.

Aug. in lib. de libero arbit.

No true joy but in God.

What all worldly things be.

Hieron. in quadam Epistola.

What ought we not to suffer to gaine rest?

Rom. 8. 18.

And to theſe fore-named conſiderations, we might adde many more; that are very pertinent and powerfull to ſtrengthen our hearts, and to revive our ſoules, to ſupport the burden of Chriſt, with joy, without murmuring; I will onely inſiſt, and but a little, upon theſe three.

1. The example of Gods Saints.

1. The example of all Gods Saints, the holy Prophets, and the glorious Martyrs, who tooke delight in nothing more, then in doing the commands, and ſuffering for the truth of Ieſus Chriſt; for man by nature is moſt apt to imitate, and we ſee how preſidents, are farre more prevalent than precepts; when the rule of the Law ſhall be neglected, and old preſidents ſhall be obſerved; and therefore if we will follow any, let us imitate the beſt, and it will much availe us to proceed in the way of vertue, to conſider how many millions of Saints have moſt readily and merrily run the way of Gods commandements, and have been ſo farre from thinking the yoke of Chriſt to be hard, and his burden heavy, that they profeſſed the ſame to be ſweeter unto their ſoules than the honey unto their taſts; we are the children of the Prophets and of the Saints of God; and if the Proſelytes of the Romane Church be ſo ready to imitate, and ſo ſtiffe to be withdrawne from the errours and corruptions, ſuperſtitions and idolatries of that wandering guide, that they had rather die than decline the ſame; then how much rather ought we to follow them, that will undoubtedly lead us to everlaſting happineſſe? For this will be both our praiſe and our glory to imitate them, that have ſo truly imitated Chriſt.

2. A reſolved mind to do the will of Chriſt.

2. Magnanimity, and a Chriſtian reſolution to do whatſoever is commanded us, and to ſuſtaine, with all patience, whatſoever ſhall be impoſed upon us, is a moſt excellent helpe to further us to undergoe the yoke, and to beare the burden of Chriſt; Quia magnanimitas eſt virtus tendens ad maxima, ſecundum rectam rationem; becauſe magnanimity is a vertue, that doth alwaies tend to great things, according to right reaſon and undiſturbed judgement, and doth beare up the intention of our ſoules, vel ad magna abſolutè, either to thoſe things that are abſolutely great, or, at leaſt wiſe, according to proportion, great; ſaith Aquinas; And through this ſole vertue, the mind of man is able to beare either felicity or infelicity, glory or ſhame, good or evill; and to doe what is juſt and honeſt, without regard either to praiſe or diſpraiſe, profit or diſprofit, life or death; becauſe it is the property of a juſt, reſolute, and reſolved Chriſtian, honeſtè ſuſtinere qua ad gloriam ferant omnia, to beare all things fairely, whatſoever make for true glory, which is the glory of God, and not to be ſtaggered at the deeds of others, nor to be tranſported with the abundance of worldly wealth, honours, and the like, nor yet to feare death for well doing, nor to deſire life with the loſſe of the leaſt vertue; and therefore the Primitive Chriſtians, having caſt away all puſillanimity of mind, and arming themſelves with ſuch an undaunted reſolution, as hell it ſelfe, with all the power of the Divell, could no wayes ſtirre, they did faithfully performe, what they were commanded, without feare, and they would never do what they were forbidden, for any gaine; they did ſet God alwaies before their eyes, and they aimed at that which was right, and they ſtretched themſelves forward towards the ſame, and without declining either to the right hand or to the left, they paſſed through fire and water, and trampled all difficulties under feet, untill they had finiſhed their courſe with joy: and it is almoſt a wonder to ſee, what great things the mind of man, armed with reſolution, hath been able both to do and ſuffer, beyond the apprehenſion of thoſe timerous minds and lazie lubberds, that ſeeme to have nothing in them but a liveleſſe heart; and therefore, if you would beare Chriſt his burden, ſay not, it is heavy, and we are weake, we are not able to do it; but rouze up your ſelves, and raiſe up your ſpirits, put your ſhoulders unto the yoke, and doubt not of your abilities, and then God, ſeeing your ready mind, to do his will; you cannot be ſo deſirous of helpe, as he will be willing with his grace, to aſſiſt you to do, what he commandeth to be done.

Magnanimity, what it is.

Thomas Aquinas 22. q. 129. art. 1.

The fruits or effects of magnanimity.

The magnanimity of the primitive Chriſtians.

What great things the mind of one man can do more than another.

3 Prayer, to deſire helpe from God.

3. If you ſee this magnanimity of ſpirit is not ſufficient to beare away this burden,

burden, but that the waight thereof bendeth your backes, and boweth your soules under it, then be contented to fall downe upon your knees, and there lift up your eyes to heaven, lift up your voice to God, and pray to him for helpe, and you shall be heard; for he hath promised it, and he will performe it; and we have the examples of all Gods Saints to confirme it; for I called upon the Lord in my trouble, and he heard me at large, saith the Prophet. Moses cried unto him in his distresse, and rather than his prayer should be denied, God divided the red sea, to let him passe through the same, as on dry ground; and truly, I never heard of any, that did earnestly desire any thing of God, and was denied; and therefore, if you desire to serve God, and to keepe his commandements, do but heartily and constantly pray to him for grace to serve him, and you shall have it, you may be sure of it.

Psal. 118. 5.

Never any man prayed as he ought, and was denied.

And so you see the most principall things, that do make the yoke of Christ easie, and his burden light.

Ob. But yet still, it may be objected, that the Prophet David, who did exceedingly love God, and was mightily assisted with the Spirit of God, and indued with no meane measure of grace, doth say, Propter verba labiorum tuorum, ego custodivi vias duras; And the sonne of David, which knew these things better than any man, saith, that the gate is strait, and the way is narrow, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it: And therefore this burden cannot be so light.

Quomodo lata porta, si angusta? aut quomodo jugum suave & onus leve, si in praeceptis Dei viae durae sunt quae custodiantur? Gregor. Psal 16. 4. Mat. 7. 14.

Sol. To this I answer, first, that the words of the Prophet are, I have kept me from the wayes of the destroyer, that is, from every evill way; and that he might the better doe it, he prayeth to God, saying, O hold thou up my goings in thy paths, that my foot-steps slip not.

Psal. 16. 5.

Secondly, I say with S. Gregory, that, inchoantibus angusta est via, progredientibus autem & perfectè viventibus lata est; the wayes of God seeme difficult and strait to them, that do begin to walk therein; but the further we go, and the longer we continue in Gods service, the sweeter it is, and the easier to do it; for custome and practice makes them perfect, like a man that hath beene long at his trade; he finds it now sweet and easie, which before was harsh and bitter unto him.

Greg. in Ezek. l. 2. hom. 17. p. 1174.

Custome makes any labour easie.

And therefore, if the wayes of God seeme hard to any man, let him assure himselfe, they be not so in themselves, nor indeed to any one that is acquainted with them, but to such as are strangers to them, and desire not to walke therein; for the Prophet David can tell us, Mandatum Dei latum nimis, the commandement of God is exceeding broad, & statuit in loco spatioso pedes meos, and God hath set his feet in a large roome; and therefore he can run the way of Gods commandements; and he finds it a great deale easier, than the worldlings find the wayes of sinne; quia plus ponderis habet avaritia, quam justitia; for a just man finds more ease to deale justly, than the covetous unrighteous man doth, by oppressing and grinding the faces of the poore; the sober man finds more health and sweetnesse in his sobriety, than the gluttonous and drunkard doth in his chambering and wantonnesse; and the peaceable quiet man finds more rest and content in suffering wrongs, than the litigious and contentious man doth, in all the masteries that he hath gained; because indeed there are no wayes so pleasant as the paths of righteousnesse, no paths so easie as the paths of vertue, and no wayes so hard, and so ragged, as the wayes of sin; and so the sinners will confesse it at the last, when with griefe and sorrow they shall cry out and say, We have wearied our selves in the wayes of wickednesse and destruction, yea we have gone through desarts, where there lay no way, but as for the way of the Lord, we have not knowne it.

To whom Gods commandements are hard.

Psal. 119. 66. Psal 31. 9. Psal 119. 32. Hac sarcina gravis non est; quod si habet pondus, multò plus habet avaritia, minus justitia. Aug. de verb. Apost. Ser. 24.

The wayes of vertue and godlinesse farre easier and sweeter than the wayes of sinne.

Sap. 5. 7.

And for the words of Christ, that the gate of heaven is strait; I answer briefly, that a gate wide enough for a man to enter in, may be too narrow for a horse and cart, or for a porter with a pack or a burden of straw upon his shoulders, to enter in; so is the gate of heaven wide enough, for any man, that will bestrip himselfe of all fleshly lusts and worldly vanities, to enter in; but if we think to go to

How the gate of heaven is strait.

How the gate is wide enough.

What we muſt do to enter into heaven gate.

heaven with our wealth upon our backes, or with pride, malice, and the like carnall tumours and ſwellings upon our ſhoulders, we ſhall be ſure then to find this gate indeed to be too narrow; And therefore, if you deſire to go in at this gate, do but ſtoope and beſtrip your ſelves of all unneceſſary fardels, and you may eaſily enter in; for now Chriſt hath opened the doore, and he cals us all to come unto him; and we ſhall find eternall reſt for our wearied ſoules; we ſhall be delivered from the miſeries of this world, and ſhall enter into our maſters joy, through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord, to whom with the Father and the bleſſed Spirit, three perſons coequall and one only eternall God, be aſcribed and given, as is moſt due, all honour and glory, and thankes, and praiſe, and all that we can poſſibly thinke worthy to bee given to him, both now, and for ever and ever.

Amen.

THE FRVITFVLL KNOCKING.

REVEL. 3. 20.

Ἰδοὺ, ἕστηκα ἐπὶ τὴν θύραν, καὶ κρούω; ἐὰν τὶς ἀκούσῃ τῆς φωνῆς μου, καὶ ἀνοίξῃ τὴν θύραν, εἰσελεύσομαι πρὸς αὐτὸν, καὶ δειπνήσω μετ' αὐτοῦ, καὶ αὐτὸς μετ' ἐμοῦ.

Behold, I ſtand at the doore and knocke: if any man heare my voice, and open the doore, I will come in to him, and will ſup with him, and be with me.

IF I ſhould ſtand upon a preamble, I might ſeeme to wrong him that ſtands at the doore and knockes; I will therefore preſently enter upon my matter, that he may not ſtay long, before he enter into our hearts; for that is his deſire in my Text, and that is my deſire in my Sermon. The words devide themſelves into two parts.

The ſumme of the whole verſe.

1. Part.

1. A demonſtrative propoſition, Behold, I ſtand at the doore and knocke.
2. A conditional obligation, if any man heare my voice, and open the doore, &c.

The diviſion of the Text.

In the firſt part, we may conſider theſe two things.

1. A note of preparation, in the word, Behold.
2. A plaine intimation; in the other words, I ſtand at the doore and knocke.

1 Behold, hath a treble uſe in Scripture.

1. The word Behold, hath a treble uſe in Scripture.

1. Of demonſtration, for the greater certainty of any thing: becauſe we are ſure of what we ſee: ſo the Diſciples ſaid unto Thomas, we have ſeene the Lord, therefore they were ſure that he was riſen: ſo here, if you open the eyes of your faith, you may ſee Chriſt ſtanding at the doore, knocking and ſeeking to enter in.

1. Of demonſtration. Ioh. 20. 25.

2. Of attention, to make us the more obſervant of the thing, which followeth: and ſo this word is compared to Iohn Baptiſt, that was ſent a fore-runner to prepare the way of the Lord, ſo is this word prefixed, to move us to attention unto the ſucceeding diſcourſe: becauſe, as an opticke perſpective glaſſe repreſenteth the forme of things more largely and fully, to the eyes of the beholder, then otherwiſe they would ſeeme to be; ſo the attentive hearkening to any diſcourſe, or

2. Of attention.

The praiſe of attention.

the diligent obſerving of any thing, makes it ſeeme farre more glorious unto us, then otherwiſe in a negligent eare it ſeemes to be; whereas on the other ſide, we ſee many heavenly Sermons leeſe their worth; becauſe they paſſe our eares without attention: and therefore we alwaies crie unto our hearers, Behold, ô behold, and conſider what we ſay unto you.

So here, Chriſt to ſtirre up our hearts, to conſider what he doth, ſaith, Behold, I ſtand at the doore; as if he ſhould ſay, heare ô ye deafe, and you blind regard, that you may ſee, how long ſhall I ſtand knocking at your doores, before you will heare and let me in? I have ſaid, ſeeke and you ſhall find, knocke and it ſhall bee opened unto you; but I ſaw you regarded it not; and therefore, Behold, I come to ſeeke unto you, that ſhould ſeeke to me, and I knocke to enter into your hearts, that ſhould knocke to enter into my reſt. Behold it then, and conſider what I doe for you, leaſt if you ſtill provoke me, and neglect me, I ſhould ſweare in my wrath, that you ſhall not enter into my kingdome; becauſe you would not ſuffer me to enter into your hearts.

Mat. 7. 7.

Pſal. 95. 11.

3. Of application.

3. Of application, to make uſe unto our ſelves of what we have obſerved; and ſo, this word brings us manifold matters. As

1. Of deriſion. Gen 3. 22.

1. Sometimes a matter of deriſion, as, Behold, the man is become like one of us; and againe, Behold the man, that tooke not God for his ſtrength.

2. Of admiration. Iſa 7. 14. Luk. 7. 37.

2. Sometimes a matter of admiration, as Behold, a Virgin ſhall conceive and beare a Sonne: and againe, Behold, a woman in the citty, that was a ſinner, came to Chriſt.

3. Of exultation. Zach. 9. 9. Luk. 2. 10.

3. Sometimes a matter of exultation, as Goe tell the daughter of Sion, Behold, thy King commeth unto thee, meeke and ſitting upon an aſſe; and therefore rejoyce greatly and ſhout for joy: and againe, Behold, I bring you tidings of great joy, which ſhall be to all people.

The Text a matter of joy and wonder.

And ſo here, this word Behold, bringeth us matter, both of joy and wonder: of joy, that we have ſuch a gueſſe to come unto us; and of wonder, that not a ſervant, not an Angell, but Chriſt himſelfe, the Sonne of God, God himſelfe, ſhould not onely come, but alſo ſtand, and ſtand at our doore, and ſtand all day long, all our life long, knocking that he may enter in.

Three ſorts of beholders.

And ſo you ſee the treble acceptation of the word, Behold; and from thence, we may obſerve three ſorts of beholders.

1. Some behold, and underſtand not: and this is ignorance.
2. Some behold, and regard not: and this is negligence.
3. Some behold, and conſider it, and lay it up in their hearts, to bring forth fruits with patience; and this is perfect obedience.

1. Ignorant beholders.

Of the firſt ſort, we have a cloud of examples, both of Iewes and Gentiles; For

1. The Iewes.

1. The Iewes had eares to heare and did not underſtand; they had eyes and ſaw, and did not perceive; ſed quem preſentèr audiverunt, negligentèr contempſerunt; but whom they heard and ſaw preſent with them, they neglected and rejected from them; becauſe, as the Prophet ſaith, The heart of that people was waxed groſſe, and their eares were dull of hearing, and their eyes they had cloſed, leaſt they ſhould ſee with their eyes, and heare with their eares, and underſtand with their hearts, and be converted, and God ſhould heale them: A propheſie often repeated and reiterated againſt them: as Matth. 13. 14. Mar. 4. 12. Luk. 8. 10. Iohn 12. 40. Acts 28. 27. Rom. 11. 8.

Eſay 6. 9.

2. The Gentiles. Act. 14. 17.

2. The Gentiles, except a very few, to whom it pleaſed God, more particularly, to reveale the knowledge of his ſaving health, did behold the goodneſſe of God, ſhowring downe upon them raine and fruitfull ſeaſons, and filling their hearts with food and gladneſſe; and yet, as the Egyptians found out the ſtreames of the river Nilus, but knew not the ſprings from whence they iſſued; or, as the ſwine doe gather up the acornes, that fall downe from the trees, but never looke up to the tree from whence they fall; ſo did they receive theſe bleſſings, as effects of Gods love, but they knew not the fountaine from whence they ſprang, nor perceived ceived the Author from whom they deſcended: Whereby it came to paſſe, that although they beare the name of God, written in their hearts, by the pen of nature; yet were they without God in the world; becauſe they were like the Athenian altar, whereupon was ingraven ἀγνώστῳ θεῷ, to the unknowne God, profeſſing a God but they knew not whom.

The Egyptians ignorant of the head of Nilus.

Ephes. 2.12. Act. 17.23.

And in theſe very dayes, we have very many men, even the greateſt part of this world, that having not heard ſo much as the name of the Goſpell of Chriſt, doe behold and taſte of the goodneſſe of God in a plentifull manner; and yet know not God himſelfe, in whom they live and move and have their being: and we our ſelves might have beene numbred in this ranke, had not the grace of God moſt mercifully prevented us, and ſhined in our hearts, to illuminate our underſtanding, with the knowledge of God, in the face of Ieſus Chriſt.

Many do plentifully taſte of Gods goodneſſe, and yet know not God. Act. 17.28.

Of the ſecond ſort, we have likewiſe very many in all the Chriſtian world: ſuch as behold and underſtand the goodneſſe of God, and yet regard it not; ſuch as have their eyes open, and ſee Chriſt ſtanding at the doore, and heare him knocking to enter in, but their hearts are ſhut; having, as a wanton woman, the world for another lover, to imbrace; and ſo they are loth to let in their true husband, Ieſus Chriſt; for who can denie the many multitudes of ſuch profeſſors, which can truly ſay, with old Simeon, that their eyes did ſee the ſalvation of the Lord, but can no way ſay, with the bleſſed Virgin, that their ſpirit rejoyced in God their Saviour? and therefore, as Demodocus ſaid of the Mileſians, they were no fooles, but they did the ſame things that fooles did; ſo I may truly ſay of them, they are not blind, they are not ignorant of Gods goodneſſe, for they ſee him ſtanding, they heare him calling, and they behold him knocking at their doores; and yet they doe, in every reſpect, like blind men, like men that know not God; for the more he ſpares them, the leſſe they care to offend him; and the more bleſſings he heapeth upon them, the more will they, with the Iſraelites, moſt unthankfully ſpurne at him with their heeles; but they may aſſure themſelves, that, if they will not, the ſooner, open unto Chriſt, the patience of God towards them is but a prolonging of ſentence againſt them.

2. Negligent beholders.

The world hinders us to let in Chriſt.

Luk. 2.30.

Luk. 2.47.

What Demodocus ſaid of the Mileſians.

Deut. 32.15.

Of the third ſort are thoſe, whoſe obedience is not like the eye, which liveth laſt, and dieth firſt; but rather like the heart, which, as the Philoſopher ſaith, is primum vivens & ultimum moriens, the firſt part that liveth, and the laſt which dieth; they behold the goodneſſe of God, and regard it, they heare the voice of Chriſt, and they follow him; and when Chriſt commeth unto them, they joy before him, according to the joy in harveſt, and as men rejoyce, when they divide the ſpoyle. Such a one was Mary, who no ſooner heard that Chriſt was come, and called for her, but ſhe aroſe quickly and went to meete him; ſuch was Zacheus the Publican; for he no ſooner heard the Lord ſay, to day I muſt abide with thee, but he preſently deſcended and moſt willingly entertained him with all joy; and ſuch a one was Saint Peter; for, though, through his infirmity, he fell and denied his Maſter; yet no ſooner did he behold his Maſter looking backe upon him, but, remembring his fault, he went forth and wept bitterly: and I doubt not but we have ſuch in theſe daies amongſt our ſelves; fearing God and working righteouſneſſe.

3. The beſt beholders.

Obedience like the heart.

Eſay 9.3.

Iohn 11.8.

Luke 19.5.

Matth. 26.ult.

But, though God onely knoweth who are his; yet ſeeing every tree may bee knowne unto us by his fruit, I feare we have not many, that doe behold the goodneſſe of God and regard it, as they ought to doe; becauſe it is not inough for us, to behold it with the outward action of the body; but we muſt alſo imbrace it with the inward affection of the minde; it is not inough to ſay, mine eyes did ſee my Saviour, and mine eares did heare his words, but we muſt alſo ſay with David, paratum eſt cor meum, paratum eſt cor meum, ô Lord my heart is ready, my heart is ready to receive thee, and to imbrace thee into my ſoule, and to give thee that heart, which thou requireſt; for otherwiſe, we ſee the Hypocrites doe hold up their hands, and lift up their eyes, and heare and ſee and ſay, as well as the beſt, yea rather then the beſt; yet, becauſe they make cleane but the outſide of the cup

2 Tim. 2.19. Matth. 12.33.

Luk. 2.30.

Pſal. 108.1.

How we ought to receive Gods graces.

What the Hypocrites doe.

cup and draw neere unto God, but with their mouthes, and honour him but with their lips, their hearts being farre from him, being full of envie, malice and all unrighteouſneſſe, it will availe them nothing at the latter day; when, notwithſtanding all their allegation, to have done many great workes in his name, our Saviour Chriſt ſhall ſay unto them, I know you not, depart from me, ye workers of iniquity; And therefore to perſwade us the rather, not onely, to behold with our eyes, but alſo to imbrace our Saviour Chriſt with our hearts, I will proceed from this word of preparation unto the ſubſtance of the intimation, I ſtand at the doore and knocke. And here I finde foure ſpeciall parts.

Eſay 29.13.

Matth.7.22.

2. The intimation containeth foure parts.

1. The perſon. 3. The place.
2. The geſture. 4. The action.

1. The perſon.

1. If a King ſtood at our doores knocking to come in, would we not open? yet behold here is the King of Kings: ô then beloved, let us take heed what we doe, and denie him not entrance upon idle excuſes, ſaying with the Church, I have put off my coate how ſhall I put it on, I have waſhed my feet how ſhall I defile them? Our Saviour tells the Iewes, that he came in his Fathers name, and they would not receive him; but if another ſhould come in his owne name, they would receive him: I pray God it be not ſo with us; that we let not in the pride and vanity of the world, the luſts and concupiſcence of the fleſh, or the ſuggeſtions and temptations of Satan, at the firſt knocking, and yet never regard to open our doores to let in this King of glory.

Cant.5.3.

Ioh 5.43.

What men moſt commonly let into their hearts.

2. His geſture: implieth two things.

2. We are to note the geſture of this gueſt, that ſeekes to enter in, which is ſtanding; for Behold I ſtand: and this implieth two things:

1. His preſence.
2. His patience.

1. His preſence, and that noteth two things.

1. His preſence at our doores, ſheweth likewiſe two things.

1. His willingneſſe to enter.
2. Our ſlackneſſe to open.

2. His deſire to enter.

For the firſt, Saint Ambroſe ſaith, non ſedet quietus, nec jacet ignauus, ſed omnino ſtat operi intentus; he ſitteth not a looſe, he lyeth not along, he walketh not in paths under the windowes, as reſpectleſſe of his entrance, but he ſtandeth at the doore, as moſt ready, at the firſt opening, to enter in: ſo the Scripture ſheweth us, how God is ever deſirous and willing to doe us good; ô that there were ſuch an heart in them, to feare me and to keepe my commandements, that it might goe well with them, and with their children for ever, ſaith the Lord, by his ſervant Moſes: ô that my people would have hearkned unto me, and that Iſrael would have walked in my waies; I ſhould ſoone have put downe their enemies, and turned my hand againſt their adverſaries; and I ſhould have fed them with the fineſt wheat-flower, and with honey out of the ſtony rocke, would I have ſatisfied them: So Chriſt himſelfe, ſeeing the citty of Ieruſalem, wept over it, and ſaid, ô that thou hadſt knowne, even in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace: ſo willing and ſo deſirous is the Lord to helpe us, and to doe us good, were we but willing to accept his goodneſſe: I will inſtance but in one example of the Prodigall Sonne; for he, but reſolving to goe to his Father, his Father prevented him, and ſeeing him a farre off, had compaſſion on him, and ran to meet him, and as Saint Auguſtine well obſerveth, nondum uno verbo audito, ſqualidum & deformem amplectitur, before he had ſpoken one word unto his Father, the Father falleth on his neck, and kiſſeth this ragged, defiled, and deformed Sonne.

Deut.5.29.

Pſal.81.14,15,17.

Luk.19.42.

The greatneſſe of readineſſe of God to helpe us.

Luke 15.20.

For the ſecond, As Gods ſtanding at the doore, ſheweth his readineſſe and willingneſſe to enter in, ſo it ſheweth our unkindneſſe, that we are ſo ſlacke and ſo backward in opening the doores, as to ſuffer him ſtill to ſtand without, yea ſo long, that his head is filled with dew, and his lockes with the drops of the night.

2. Our ſlackneſſe to open.

Cant.5.2.

What preſence of Chriſt is here underſtood.

But here, touching the preſence of Chriſt at our doores, we muſt not underſtand it of his bodily preſence, which the heavens muſt containe, untill the reſtitu-

Act 3.21.

tion

tion of all things; but it must be understood of the power of his God-head, whereby, (as the Apostle speaketh) he is above all, and through all, and in us all: for that is the true meaning of this phrase, as where God, reasoning with Caine about his unjust discontent, saith, if thou doe well, shalt thou not be accepted, and if thou dost not well, sinne lyeth at the doore; that is, the guilty conscience of thine owne wickednesse, shall be ever present with thee, and still ready to torment thee: and so, where Saint Peter, foretelling Saphira, of the sudden manner of her death, saith, the feet of them, which have buried thy husband, are at the doore, that is, hard by, neere at hand: and therfore, by telling us that he standeth at the doore, he giveth us to understand that he is not farre from every one of us; but, as the Psalmist saith, he is very neere unto us, about our beds and about our paths, and at the very doore of every man: for as Moses said of the law, so may we say more truly of the Lord; he is not hid from us, (if we would but open the eyes of our understanding, to behold him) neither is he a farre off; but he is very nigh unto us, if not in our hearts, yet at our doores. For Behold I stand at the doore.

Ephes. 4. 6.

Gen. 4. 7.

Act. 5. 8.

How neere is God to every man.

Psal. 139. 8.

Deut. 30. 11, 12.

And this doctrine of Gods presence may justly serve for a treble end,

1. A confutation of our seduced brethren.
2. A reprehention of all leaud livers.
3. A consolation unto all true Christians.

} For

The neerenesse of Gods presence with us, teacheth us three things.

1. Seeing Christ is alwaies present with us, it should teach us, never to implore the intercession of them, whose absence is certaine, and whose knowledge is uncertaine to us: but to divert our prayers unto him, whose presence we are assured of, and of whose favour we should be perswaded, that he will denie us nothing, that we shall aske in the name of Iesus Christ. But I know this point may be well spared in this assembly; because we acknowledge no more Mediators, but he that is the onely true Mediator betwixt God and man, even the man Christ Iesus; nor any other Advocate, but that holy and just one, who is the propitiation for our sinnes.

1. Not to implore the helpe of any, but of Christ.

1 Tim. 2. 5.

1 Ioh. 2. 1, 2.

2. Seeing Christ is alwaies present with us, ô what a terror is this to wicked men, to thinke, that whatsoever they shall say or doe, they doe it in the sight and hearing of him, who doth now write them all in his bookes, and sealeth them up among his treasures, and who shall come to be their judge, and will call them to a most strict account, for every idle thought, which they have but imagined against his divine Majesty? ô consider this, you that forget God, you that neglect God, you that abuse the most holy name of God, least he teare you in peeces while there is none to helpe you: and remember that when you swimme in pleasures, and surfet with delights, boyle with malice, and burne with lust, offend your God, and wrong your neighbour, you doe it all within the circle of his eye, who is alwaies present and never absent from you; but is ever standing at the doore, and seeing you, when you see not him.

2. To be afraid to sin.

Psal. 50. 22.

3. Seeing Christ is alwaies present with us, ô quam magna spes nobis pœnitentibus, what a comfort will this be to afflicted soules? to thinke that, what miseries or wrongs soever they shall indure, the Lord seeth the same, as he saw the afflictions of his people which were in Egypt; and, though they should be shut up with Daniel in the Lyons den, or inclosed with Ionas in the whales belly, or cast with the three children into the fiery furnace, or watched with S. Peter betwixt foure quaternions of souldiers; yet are they, in sinu divinitatis, in the bosome of Gods divine presence, and are upheld by the hand of his providence, untill he seeth his time, to worke their deliverance; and so what a joy is it unto them, to be assured, that when they make their prayers, and crie, and sigh, and shed their teares, to expresse their griefe to God, they doe it not to a breathlesse wall, but to an omnipresent God, which is by them, and with them, and heareth, and seeth every word they say, and every groane they give: ô then, quam cautè ambulandum, & quam castè exultandum, how warily should we walke, and how holily should we rejoyce in the presence of God? because we may assure our selves, that if we walke

3. To be comforted in all our afflictions.

Exod. 3. 7. Dan. 6. 16. Ionah 1. 17. Act. 12. 6.

How warily we should walke in the presence of God.

walke uprightly in the preſence of God, we ſhall not miſcarrie.

2. Gods patience in waiting for our converſion. Tuſtin. in Cant.

2. His ſtanding at our doores ſheweth his patience and long-ſufferance, & indefeſſa perſeverantia pulſatione ſignificatur, and his knocking ſheweth his unwearied perſeverance; for he, finding the doores ſhut, gives not a rap or a call and away, as a poſt that haſteth by, but he ſtandeth at it, and he ſtayeth to it, and, as the Prophet ſaith, he waiteth that he may be mercifull unto us, if we will at any time open unto him; for he made a law in Iſrael, that if they went to beſiege any City, they ſhould firſt offer it conditions of peace, and if they would not accept them, then warre, and ſpare not; and therefore God, that gave this law unto them, will keepe this law with all, never to worke our deſtruction, before he calleth for our converſion: ſo he ſtood long at the doore of the old world, and knocked loud at the ſame by Noahs preaching; ſo he did to Sodom and Gomorrah, ſo to the Ninivites, ſo to the Iſraelites, and ſo he doth to us: Nam debellaturus mundum, for going about to make warre againſt the world, he bade his Diſciples to offer peace to every houſe, ſaying, Into whatſoever houſe ye enter, ſay, peace be unto this houſe: For he will bend his bow, before he ſhoots his arrowes, and he will threaten hell againſt us, before he ſends us unto hell; ſo great is his patience towards the children of men, that the worſt ſervant in his houſe doth confeſſe it, ſaying, My maſter is gone into a farre countrey, and doth deferre his comming, and will not returne in haſt.

Exa. 30. 18.

Deut 20 10.

Gen. 6. 3. Gen. 18 21. Iona. 3. 4. Didacus. Stella in Luc. 10. Luke 10. 5.

Gods patience confeſſed by the worſt men. Mat. 24. 48.

God takes notice of all the meanes that he uſeth to work our converſion. Pſal. 95. 10.

O then beloved brethren, let us take heed that we abuſe not the patience and long ſufferance of God, to our greater condemnation: for, as he noted all the time, that he ſtood at the doores of the Iſraelites, and expected entrance in, ſaying, Forty yeares haſt thou contended with me, and grieved me in the wilderneſſe; ſo he obſerveth all the time, that he ſtandeth at our doores, and he numbreth all the meanes that he hath uſed, Sermons, warnings, bleſſings, to work our converſion; and all the dayes, moneths, yeares, that he hath ſpent, in expecting, when we would open unto him: And when he ſeeth, that nothing will prevaile, he will recompence the neglecting of his long tarrying at our doores, with ſeverity of vengeance upon our ſoules; for ſo we find he did unto the old world, that would not be warned; the floud came and drowned them all; ſo he did to Sodom and Gomorrha, that would not be reclaimed, the fire came and conſumed them all; ſo he did unto Pharaoh and all the Princes of Egypt, that would not heare his voice, the red ſea came, and over-whelmed them all: and our Saviour tels us, under the parable of the fig-tree that bare no fruit, how every man, that is barren, and remaineth fruitleſſe, ſhall be hewen downe and caſt into the fire; quia κακοὺς κακῶς ἀπολέσει αὐτοὺς, malos malè perdet: becauſe God will deſtroy them that worke evill: and eſpecially ſuch a one as goeth on ſtill in his wickedneſſe.

Gen. 7. 11. Gen. 19. 24. Exod 14. 28.

Mat. 7. 19.

And therefore, I would to God that I knew, what words to uſe, or what perſwaſions to make, or councels to give, to move you all, that heare me this day, to be wonne to open unto Chriſt, and not to neglect ſo great ſalvation: not that I doubt that any one hath not, but that every one might be ſure he hath done it, and not to deceive his owne ſoule, which is the greateſt deceit in the world; and yet too common amongſt the ſonnes of men.

3. The place where he ſtandeth

3. We are to conſider the place where he ſtandeth, at the doore; that is, at the heart of man; quia oſtij nomine cor hominis intelligitur; becauſe the heart of man is here underſtood by the name of a doore, ſaith a Father: and the reaſon why the heart is compared to a doore, is threefold.

Why the heart is compared to a doore

1. Reaſon.

1. Becauſe the doore is the onely way, whereby egreſſe and regreſſe is made into any houſe, or any other dwelling place.

2. Reaſon.

2. Becauſe the doore or gate of any houſe or city is the chiefeſt place, where any aſſault is made for entrance, and which ſhould therefore be moſt carefully watched, above all other places whatſoever.

3. Reaſon.

3. Becauſe, in former times, all controverſies were uſed to be decided, at the doores or gates of the city: and ſo is the heart of man.

1. All

1. All good or evill do first enter into the heart; so the Apostle saith, of the joyes of heaven, that it hath not entered into the heart of man; because the doore thereof is too narrow, to comprehend, what the Lord hath prepared for them that love him: and so Satan is said to have entred into the heart of Iudas, as by the doore, whereby he had way to passe into his soule; and so, from the heart, as through a doore, do all things, good or evill, proceed and passe forth; for, out of the heart (saith our Saviour) proceed evill thoughts, adulteries, thefts, and such like: and therefore in respect of ingresse and regresse, the heart is fitly compared unto a doore.

1. All things, good or evill, do first enter into the heart.

Mat. 15. 19. Mar. 7. 21.

2. The heart is the chiefest place, that either God or Satan laboureth chiefly to attaine unto; for God saith, My sonne, give me thy heart; and Satan saith, If riches increase, set your hearts upon them; because they know, that, as the gate of a city being once wonne, the enemies will soone command the whole towne; so the heart of man, being once subdued, the whole body must needs yeeld; ἡ γὰρ καρδία, &c. Because (as Macarius saith) the heart, as an absolute King and captaine, commandeth all the other parts of the body; as if the heart be corrupt, it causeth the mouth to talke profanely, the hand to doe wickedly, and the feet to run after vanity: whereas if our hearts be upright, it causeth our mouth to talke religiously, our hands to do the works of righteousnesse, and our feet to walke in the paths of godlinesse.

2. The heart is the chiefest thing, that either God or the Divell laboureth to obtaine.

Prov. 23. 26.

The heart commandeth all the body.

3. The heart of man judgeth all things, and according to our hearts, will the Lord judge us; because he looketh not unto the face, but into the heart: and therefore, the heart of man being as the seat of judgement, it is fitly compared unto a doore, or gate, whereat all judgement was wont to be executed.

3. The heart judgeth all things.

And therefore, it is not enough for us to open the doores of our houses, to entertaine the Word of God, and to read the Gospell of Christ; nor to open the doores of our lips, to talk of God and to preach the Gospell. but we must open the doores of our hearts; to love Christ, and to believe the Gospell; for this is certaine, that in all the religious actions, which we performe to God, God accepteth none of them, which do not first spring and proceed from the heart of man: Indeed when we passe our judgement upon any religious act, we judge of the internall perfection and sincerity of it, by the externall performance thereof: and this is a good rule, we know no better; because it is the judgement of charity; but when God, which is καρδιογνώστης, the searcher of the heart, commeth to make inquisition after our workes; he beginneth his search at our hearts, and from the straitnesse and sincerity of the same, he judgeth of the perfection of the externall act: and this is the judgement of certainty: As for example, if we see a man give liberally to the poore, with his hands, we conclude that there is charity in his heart; and good reason we should do so; because we know nothing to the contrary; but when God commeth to passe his censure upon this action, he looketh, whether the heart be the first giver of it, or not: for otherwise, let thy hand be never so open, if thy heart be close, God will tell thee by his Apostle, that God loveth a chearefull giver, that is, a hearty giver; and that, although thou shouldst give all thy goods unto the poore, yet if thou doest not the same from thy heart, it will availe thee nothing; so if we see a man pray unto God earnestly with his lips, we judge him to be a fervent petitioner; and good reason we should do so; because we know not the thoughts of any man; but God looketh into his heart, to see whether that be speaking unto him or not; for if the heart doth not first speake unto God, God will tell thee by his Prophet, that thou art but in the number of those, that draw neare unto him with their lips, and honour him with their mouthes, but their hearts are far from him: So when we see a man to have his eares attentive unto the Preacher of Gods Word, we perswade our selves, that he is a dutifull hearer; and good reason we should do so; because we can no wayes disprove it; but when God commeth to judge of his hearing, he looketh first into his heart, to see whether that be an attentive hearer or not; for otherwise, fixe thine eyes and thine eares never so fast upon the Preacher; yet if

What doore we are to open unto God.

We judge inward things by the outward.

God judgeth the outward actions by the sincerity of our hearts.

2 Cor. 9. 7. 1 Cor. 13.

Esa. 29. 13.

thy heart be thinking of other matters, and not attentive to what is ſaid; God will call unto thee by his Prophet, ſaying, To day if you will heare his voice, harden not your hearts; and let not your thoughts wander in the world, nor your mindes thinke of any other thing, when I ſpeake unto you by my ſervants: ſo when we ſee a man in his prayers ſhed teares, and beate his breſt, we judge ſuch a one to be contrite and broken hearted; and good reaſon we ſhould doe ſo; becauſe our eyes can behold no further then outward acts; but when God commeth to judge of this contrition; he looketh firſt into the heart, to ſee whether the ſame be bruiſed and melted for her ſinnes or not; as David ſaith, my heart is melted within me; for otherwiſe, though thou ſheddeſt never ſo many teares, and knocke thy breaſt never ſo much, and ſhew all other ſignes of contrition, as renting thy garments, wearing of ſack-cloth, and eating aſhes as it were bread; which the Iewes were wont to doe, in the expreſſion of their griefes; yet if thy heart be not firſt melted and broken, for thy ſinnes, God will call unto thee by his Prophet, ſaying, Rent your hearts and not your garments, and turne to the Lord your God; and ſo of all other actions; God looketh firſt into the heart, to ſee whether the ſame be upright or not; becauſe otherwiſe, if the doore of our heart be not opened unto Chriſt, the opening of other doores, (as of our Churches to heare his Word, of our houſes to entertaine his ſervants, of our eyes to looke up towards heaven, and to behold his works, of our eares to heare his voice, of our hands to receive his bleſſings, or beſtow our almes upon his diſtreſſed members, and of all other doores whatſoever,) will availe us nothing at all; becauſe the heart onely is legitima ſedes Chriſti, the chiefeſt delight of God, and the onely doore, whereby he entreth into our ſoules: and therefore Saint Paul bowed his knees to God and earneſtly begged of him, that he would give his grace unto the Epheſians, to open the doores of their hearts, that Chriſt might dwell in them by faith: and ſo I deſire of God for us all.

Pſal. 95. 8.

Pſal. 22. 14.

Pſal. 102. 9.

Ioel 2. 13.

The opening of al other doores, without the heart, will availe us nothing.

Epheſ. 3. 17.

Queſt. But is it poſſible, may ſome men ſay, that there ſhould be ſuch outward devotion, reading, hearing, praying, conferring about nothing, almoſt, but the Word of God, reproving of ſinne, and doing ſo many workes of God, giving of almes, defending the poore, and many more ſuch workes of piety and charity; and yet that the hearts of ſuch men ſhould be ſtill ſhut againſt Chriſt? how can theſe things be?

Whether outward good workes can proceed from an inward corrupt heart.

Reſp. I anſwer, that it were neither ſafe for me to name, nor yet pietie to imagine, who are ſuch; for God forbid that I ſhould enter into Gods throne, and judge any man, leaſt I my ſelfe ſhould be judged; yet thus much I dare boldly ſay, that, although ſuch outward workes are moſt excellent ſignes, and moſt probable arguments of inward piety; yet are they not alwaies infallible markes of truth; becauſe the heart of man is deceitfull above all things: and deceiveth, not onely the world, but alſo our owne ſoules, when it perſwadeth us, that Chriſt is ſure enough in our hearts, and will ſave us, whereas, God knoweth, Chriſt ſtandeth ſtill without their doores, and is knocking, that he might have entrance in; for ſo the eſtate of this people of Laodicea, to whom theſe things were ſpoken, doth make it plaine; becauſe they profeſſed Chriſt, and knew his will, and had all the viſible ſignes and ſeales of his covenant, and the outward markes of grace, as prayers, preaching, and the adminiſtration of the bleſſed Sacraments; and therefore they thought themſelves to be rich, and increaſed with goods, and to have need of nothing; and yet the Lord himſelfe profeſſeth, that they were wretched, and miſerable, and blind, and poore, and naked: and therefore how eaſie is it for an hypocriticall heart to deceive the world, when it deceiveth, and thereby deſtroyeth her owne ſoule?

Good externall workes the beſt ſignes of a good heart.

Ieremy 17. 9. The heart very deceitfull.

Revel. 3. 17.

I aſſure my ſelfe we have too many Laodiceans, whoſe names, of λαος and δικαιος ſignified a righteous people; that doe ſeeme glorious for their profeſſion in the ſight of men, and if their hearts might be ſeene with the eyes of fleſh, we ſhould find Belſhazzars embleme written upon them; mene, mene, tekel uphar-ſin; numeravit, appendit, diviſit; thou haſt beene weighed in the ballance and Laodiceans why ſo called.

Dan. 5. 25.

art

art found too light: of these I say no more, but (what Christ himselfe saith unto them,) I councell them to buy of him gold tried, that they may be rich; and white raiment, that they may be clothed; and that their filthy nakednesse doe not appeare; and to annoint their eyes with eye-salve, that they may see their owne wretched state within, and Christ without, standing at the doore, as yet not quite parted from them, but expecting when he shall enter in; for Behold I stand at the doore and knocke. Revel. 3.18.

4. We are to consider the action of Christ standing at the doore, which is a knocking; Behold, I stand at the doore and knocke. 4. The act, what he doth.

Touching which we must observe, that the patience of God may be considered under a double forme { 1. Passively. 2. Actively. } The patience of God two waies considered.

In the first sence, it betokens onely a cessation and a stay of his judgements, whereby he suspendeth the punishmen's, that are due to the sonnes of men for their transgressions, and giveth them time and space to repent, and so to divert their just deserved punishments: And although the examples of this kind are rare in Scriptures, (God choosing rather to report unto us, the sundry waies which he useth to recall men unto repentance, then his sole mercy, in sparing them, without any further regard had unto them;) yet the Apostle proposeth the Gentiles to us, for a confirmation of this point; because he saith, that God suffered them, many thousand yeeres together, to runne on in their idolatry, and yet regarded not the time of this ignorance; that is, (as the Apostle sheweth his meaning by the contrary, in the words following) he admonished them not, in like manner as now he doth all men every where, to repentance; nor used the same meanes, to draw them out of the darkenesse of their ignorance, as now he doth, to bring us to the knowledge of his saving truth; nor yet did he presently punish them, though they were such sinners; but did most patiently suffer them to goe on: and we see, that, although he suffers, with much patience, all men to goe on in sinne, (the vessels of wrath themselves not excepted) and forbeareth to punish them, as often as they offend him; yet he offereth not the meanes of his saving health unto all, as our Saviour Christ himselfe witnesseth, in the case of Tyrus and Sydon, who, if the great workes had beene done in them, which were done in Corazin and Bethsaida, would have repented in sack-cloth and ashes; and, as many men, yea Kingdomes and Nations, which doe scarce know the Gospell of Christ so much as by name, can most wofully testifie unto us. 1. Passively. Act. 17.30. Rom 9.22. God offereth not the meanes of saving grace unto all Matth. 11.21.

In the second sence, the patience of God signifieth and implieth an action of God, not onely sparing our transgressions, but also labouring and seeking our conversion; by giving us as well the meanes, as the times to repent, and to returne unto him: and so the Lord dealeth here with us; he doth not onely suspend his judgements, which we have most justly deserved, and stand at the doore, to expect our comming to seeke after him; but his love is active, and knocketh, and seeketh, and useth all meanes, to winne us to open our doores, and to let him in. For (behold saith he) I stand at the doore and knocke. 2. Actively. How lovingly God dealeth with us.

Indeed, as long as our first Parents stood fast fixed and rooted, in that ground of obedience, wherein they were planted in the day of their creation, God needed not to knocke at our hearts, they were alwaies open to receive him, and prepared to fulfill his will; but when Satan had supplanted them, and stolne away their allegiance, from God, so that they shut the doore, and bolt it fast against their God; God was faine, either to suffer us to perish in our sinnes, or els to seeke a new way to enter into our hearts; and that is, not freely and readily, as before, but with much adoe, and forcibly as it were, with a certaine kinde of constraint, by calling and knocking, to make us open unto him; for so the originall word signifieth, a knocking with great power, as an oxe, or some other strong headed beast, doth use to runne against any thing with his hornes. Adam before his fall had his heart alwaies open to receive God. κρουω tauribus ferio derivatur a κερας Cornu.

I might here ſtand to wonder at the great love of him, which ſtandeth at the doore, and uſeth ſuch meanes, to winne us unto him, whom by our ſinnes wee had utterly ſold, by offering mercy to them that refuſe it, that ſo he might bee found of them, that never ſought him; but I haſten to diſtinguiſh the ſound of his knocking; for I find that he knocketh three manner of waies.

Eſay 65.1. God knocketh three ſpeciall waies.

1. By his Word.

2. By his Workes.

3. By his Spirit.

1. By his Word, when it is preached, and delivered unto us, to that end, that wee ſhould repent and amend our lives, and returne unto him, that hee may heale us.

2. By his Workes, that is, by whatſoever he doth to men in this life, either in plaguing them juſtly, for their ſinnes; or ſparing them mercifully, for their amendment; or the beſtowing of his bleſſings upon them, to allure them unto his ſervice.

3. By his Spirit, when he ſuggeſteth thoſe good motions unto our hearts, whereby we ſhould be induced to open our doores, to give entrance unto our God.

2. God knocketh at your hearts, when the Word is preached unto you. Eſay 55.6. Ier. 7.23.

For the firſt, God ordained his Prophets in times paſt, and now the Miniſters of the Goſpell, to be the faithfull interpreters, and loud proclaimers of his will, unto his people: and therefore, when we cry unto you, with the Prophet Eſay, to ſeeke the Lord while he may be found, and to call upon him while he is neere, and with Ieremy, to hearken unto the voice of the Lord, that it may goe well with you, and your children, and that your ſoules may live; when we exhort you with Saint Paul, to flie from fornication, uncleanneſſe, drunkenneſſe, laſciviouſneſſe, and ſuch like; and with Saint Peter, to abſtaine from fleſhly luſts, which fight againſt our ſoules; and, to be ſhort, when we call upon you, with the whole fellowſhip of the Apoſtles and Prophets, to awake from ſinne and to ſtand up from the dead, to beleeve in God and to ſerve him; it is Chriſt himſelfe that crieth, that exhorteth, that calleth and that knocketh at the doores of your hearts, that you might heare his voice, and let him in; for ſo we find, that he knocked at the gate of Davids heart, when he ſent Nathan and Gad to reprove him for his ſinnes, that he might open the doore of repentance; ſo he knocked at the gates of Ninive, when he ſent Ionas to preach unto them ſudden deſtruction, even within forty daies, if they did not ſpeedily repent, and ſo, as one ſaith, by rightly uſing the meſſage of their overthrow, to overthrow the meſſage of the Prophet; and ſo he knocketh earely and late, in ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon, that is, volentibus & nolentibus, at the doores of all our hearts, as often as his Word is preached unto us.

1 Cor. 6.18. 1 Pet. 2.11. Rom. 13.11. 2 Sam. 12.7. Ionah 3.4.

The power of Gods Word. Rom. 1.16. 2 Cor. 10.5.

And this is a very loud and a powerfull knocking, if we truly conſider the nature of Gods Word; for the Apoſtle tells us, that it is a Word of power, even the power of God unto ſalvation; and a Word of life, a Word mighty in operation, able to caſt downe holds, that is, the ſtrong holds, which Satan hath in our hearts, as our haughty & proud imaginations, that exalt themſelves againſt the knowledge of God, and to bring into captivity every thought, to the obedience of Chriſt: and ſo we find, that what the Monarches and Conquerors of the world could never doe, (for they may ſooner pull their hearts out of their bellies, then cauſe them, by any outward ſtrength to open the doores of their hearts to God,) the Preachers of the Word of God, have done; for Saint Peter preaching the Word of Chriſt, did ſo mightily knocke at the hearts of his hearers, that they came running and crying unto him, and the other Apoſtles, ſaying, men and brethren, what ſhall wee doe? and ſo Saint Paul, preaching and diſcourſing of righteouſneſſe, temperance, and judgement, did ſo mightily knocke at the doore of Felix his conſcience, that he cauſed his very heart to tremble; and therefore if when the Word of God is preached unto us, we neither open our doores, nor heare the ſound of this knocking, unleſſe it be at the outward eares, as a man that dreameth of ſounds, and yet is ſound aſleepe; we are in a fearefull caſe; and we have need to pray to God for grace, to awaken us, that we may heare this voice, which is a mighty voice; and I pray God he heare us, to grant our requeſt unto us.

What the Monarchs could not doe with their ſword, the Preachers do with the Word of God. Act. 2.37. Act. 24.25.

For

For the second way, whereby God knocketh at our doores, that is, by his workes, we must note that they are of two sorts.

{1. Of his mercies. 2. Of his judgements.} For both these we find to be reall admonitions of Gods patience, and long sufferance towards us; whereby he doth continually, without ceasing, beate and knocke at the doores of our consciences, that, by true and hearty repentance, we might open our doores for Christ to enter in.

2. The workes of God that call us to repentance are of two sorts, 1. Of mercy. 2. Of judgement.

For the first, we must note that the mercy of God is principally seene in three things, {1. Giving of graces. 2. Preserving us from evill. 3. Sparing us from punishment.} For

1. Works of mercy of three kinds.

1. Giving of graces. Deut. 6. 11.

1. God telleth the Israelites, that he led them with the cords of a man, even with the bands of love, that is, beneficijs & muneribus quibus delinivit eos, with manifold blessings and benefits, which he had bestowed upon them; great and goodly cities, which they builded not; houses, stored with all manner of goods, which they filled not; wells, which they digged not; vineyards, and olives, which they planted not; and all the labours of the people in possession; and all to allure them, to open the doore unto God, and to make them to love him with all their hearts.

Psal. 105. 43.

2. Preserving from evills.

2. The Prophet David telleth us, how God brought forth his people with joy, and his chosen with gladnesse; that is, out of the hands of Pharaoh, King of Egypt, and out of the hands of all their enemies; for he suffered no man to do them wrong, but reproved even Kings for their sakes: and caused the starres in their order to fight against Sicera; & conjurati veniunt ad classica venti, and overthrew the horse and his rider in the mids of the sea: and all this was done, that they might keepe his statutes and observe his lawes.

Psal. 105. 14. Claud.

Psal. 105. 44.

3. Sparing our sinnes.

3. The same Prophet David tells us, how hainously and how grievously this unthankfull people, had continually behaved themselves towards God, worshipping the idolls of Canaan, and shedding innocent blood, even the blood of their sonnes, and of their daughters, whom they offered unto divells; and yet God was so mercifull, that he destroyed them not, nor suffered his whole displeasure to arise, but still spared them, and expected, if at any time, they would open the doore and let him in.

Psal. 106 36, 37.

And thus God dealeth with all people, and above all, he hath dealt thus with us, of this Kingdome of great Brittaine. For

1. How God hath blessed us. Deut. 32. 10.

1. As he saith of Israel, that he caused him to sucke honey out of the stone, and oyle out of the hard rocke, and fed them with the finest wheate flower, and with butter of kine and milke of sheepe, and with the fat of lambes and rammes fed in Bashan: and as he saith of Tyrus, thy Merchants are Princes, and thy Chapmen the Nobles of the world; so may he truely say of us, that he hath blessed us above measure, and annointed us with the oyle of gladnesse above our fellowes, above all the rest of our neighbour nations, and hath delighted to doe us good, even so much good, that we are even wearie of it, and doe as the Israelites did unto the Manna, begin to lothe our owne happinesse: Pindarus saith, βρέχει θεὸν βασιλεὺς ὑμέτερος χρυσαῖς νιφάδεσσι πολύν; it was an opinion of the people that the gods rained gold upon the Rhodians; and I thinke, if ever people received showers of gold from God, it is we of this Kingdome of England: ô that we knew it, and wherefore God doth it, even to knocke and call at our hearts, that we might heare his voice and let him in.

Esay 23. 8.

What the people thought of the Rhodians.

2. How many times hath God preserved this kingdome, from the hands of our enemies, and hath delivered us from all the evills that we feared; as specially in 88. from the power of our enemies, which thought to finish the yeares of our liberty, and to bring us all into bondage; and in 1602. from the feare of our own hearts, when, at the death of our Mayden Queene, occubuit sol, our joy began to faint; and yet, nox nulla secuta est; our sorrow was suddenly turned into joy; and then in Anno 1605. from the treachery of home-bred enemies, that had decreed us all as sheepe unto the slaughter; and since in Anno 1625. from that Pestilence, which walketh in darkenesse, and the arrow that flieth at noone day, that great and grievous Plague, which laid into their graves within this one Citty of London and Westminster, no lesse then 35417. persons. And to these remarkeable, memorable deliverances, of the whole Church, and Common-wealth, every particular man may add those manifold preservations of his owne, from losses, from enemies, from dangers, death and destruction: and all, to this end, that wee might praise the Lord for his goodnesse, and open the doore of our hearts, that hee might enter into our soules.

2. How God hath preserved us.

3. How God spareth us.

3. How often hath God, as it were, winked at our sinnes, that he might winne us unto himselfe, and hath spared to punish us, that he might provoke us to repentance, we need not looke farre for examples, but every man may be the best example to himselfe; for if he be not too too partiall, in his owne cause, or too shamelesse in his owne sinnes, he must needs ingeniously confesse, that it is Gods goodnesse, and not his desert, that he is not presently fearefully consumed, and brought to nothing; for, let who ever enter into the closet of his owne heart, and cast up those privie reckonings, which have often passed betwixt God and him; and I dare assure him, that he shall find it there indelibly written; that God hath often called him to repentance, but that he hath not hearkened unto his voice; that God hath often knocked at his doore, but that he hath not opened unto him; and that God hath often spared him, and suspended his judgements from time to time, but that he hath not ceased, more and more, to provoke him unto anger; and there he may read, that God dealeth none otherwise with him, then a kinde, and loving tender-hearted Father doth with his deerest child, sometimes threatning him, to let him know how highly he hath offended him; sometimes shewing him the rod, to let him see how easily hee could correct him, and seldome chastening him, except he grow so stubborne, that nothing but stripes will reclaime him: And thus doth God knocke at our doores, by the workes of mercy, bestowing his blessings, preserving us from mischiefes, and suspending his just judgements, and our just deserved punishments from us; and all this to move us to open the doore of our hearts, and to let him in: But let no man take boldnesse or incouragement from hence, to heape sinne upon sinne, and so to treasure up unto himselfe wrath against the day of wrath: for the higher God lifteth up his hands to strike, the longer it is indeed before the blow lights, but the heavier it falls at the last, & quos diu, ut convertantur, tolerat; non conversos durius damnat; and whom he long suffereth, that they might repent, he will most severely punish, if they be not converted.

What our consciences can testifie.

God deales with us as the kindest father deales with his deerest sonne.

Rom. 2. 5.

For the second manner of knocking by his workes, that is, the workes of his judgements, we observe that he doth this either

2. The workes of Gods judgements are shewed;

1. Upon others for our examples.
2. Upon our selves for our owne sinnes; } For

1. Upon others, to frighten us.

1. As a noble or a great man, doth oftentimes, when his sonne committeth a fault, chide his servants or whip his pages; thereby to affright his childe and to retaine him within the bounds of his duties; so God, many times, suffereth his judgements to fall upon the wicked; yea, upon some of his owne deerest servants, for some just offence that they have committed, to see, if this may be a warning for others, by their chastisements to take heed of the like offences; or if they have offended, by a speedy repentance to prevent his imminent vengeance; because, as the Poet saith,

Hodie tibi; cras mihi.
Virgilius Æneid.

Iam tua res agitur, paries cum proximus ardet
Vicinus

Remember the Galileans.

Other mens harmes should teach us to beware, and to looke well unto our owne houses, when we see our neighbours house on fire; we see Germany burning with the flames of warres, with many mischiefes; we see the Low Countreyes, all in armes; we see France, infected with many troubles, secret discontents,

and

and open miseries; the sword hath devoured round about us, the slaine have fallen downe on either side of us; thousands have perished, and ten thousands have beene spoyled, and we sit still under the wings of a peacefull, pious King; we are ignorant, unlesse it be by the eare, of the deepe sighs, and many groanes of our neighbour-nations: and we consider not of the afflictions of Ioseph.

But, it may be, this may concerne us more than we think off, this may be done on them, not without respect to us; that we might amend our faults, by seeing the punishment of their sinnes; we may see our owne faces in other mens eyes, and by the examples shewed upon others, we may behold a patterne of that justice which belongs unto us, and threatneth vengeance for our sinnes: you know the old rule;

Fœlix quem faciunt aliena pericula cautum.

And if other mens stripes will not amend our faults; then will the Lord lay the blowes upon our owne backs, and we shall feele that, which we did but heare, and our selves shall be the subjects of his judgements.

2. The judgements that God executeth upon our selves, are of three sorts, 1. The fatherly chastisements of his love. 2. The greater punishments of his anger. 3. The greatest judgements of his fury. For as Tamberlaine, the Scythian Captaine, whensoever he besieged a city, would the first day display a white flag, in token of mercy, if they would open their gates, and yeeld themselves unto his mercy; and the second day would display a red flag, to threaten blood; because they had not submitted themselves in time of mercy; and the third day would display a blacke flag, to menace utter ruine and desolation unto that city; because they had resisted him to the last houre; even so the Captaine of all the world useth these three dayes, or threefold manner of judgements, mildly, severely, intolerably.

2. Vpon our selves, three ways.

Tamberlaines practice. Stephan. Ep. in Herod.

For the first, we find it to be the property of ill-natured men, pro beneficijs pejores fieri, to render alwaies evill for good, and to grow worse and worse, towards them, to whom they are most bounden: and so it fareth many times betwixt God and us: the better he useth us, the worse we are towards him; our fulnesse is the mother of forgetfulnesse; and our wealth and prosperity are nurces unto wantonnesse: for so Moses saith of the Israelites, dilectus meus impinguatus, dilatatus, incrassatus, recalcitravit; that when they were fed, fatted, and inlarged with Gods blessings, they spurned with their heeles, and, as the Prophet David saith, they forgat and forsooke God that made them, and provoked him to anger with their inventions: and so we find it with many men; the more mercifull God is unto them in sparing them, and blessing them from time to time, the more unthankefull and undutifull they are unto him, and the more incouraged to provoke him unto anger: And therefore God seeing his word contemned, and his mercies abused, he turneth another leafe, and taketh another course with these men, that will not be allured by his mercies, to turne to him; for I will draw them unto me (saith he) in the ropes of Adam, that is, by those meanes whereby I drew Adam to know himselfe, that is, by afflictions and tribulations, and I will seeme unto them, as though I raised a yoke upon their jawes: and we find that, although these ropes of Adam be unpleasant and distastfull unto all the sonnes of Adam, very grievous unto flesh and bloud; yet do these knockings (many times) awake the drowsie sinner, and sometimes cause him to open unto his God; for when Pharaoh was afflicted, he could then confesse, I have sinned, and the Lord is righteous; I and my people are wicked; so when Nebuchadnezzar, the proudest among men, was made the vilest amongst beasts, to eat grasse with the oxen, and his body to be wet with the deaw of heaven, untill his haires were growne as Eagles feathers, and his nailes like birds clawes, then he could praise and magnifie the King of heaven, and confesse his works to be all truth; his wayes, judgements; and his omnipotency, able to abase all those that walk

1. God punisheth us mildly.

Deut 32.15.

Psal. 106.39.

Hos. 11.4.

What are the ropes of Adam.

How afflictions drive men unto God. Exod. 9.27.

Dan. 4.34.

in pride; and David, though before he was afflicted he went wrong, yet after he was corrected, he learned to keepe the commandements, and to compoſe his ſweeteſt Pſalmes in his greateſt troubles: and ſo Ionas, Vigilabat in ceto, qui ſtertebat in navi; & orabat in mari, qui fugiebat in terra; he awaked in the fiſh, which ſnorted in the ſhip, and prayed moſt heartily in the deepe ſea, which fled moſt contemptuouſly upon the dry land: and therefore the Prophet David wiſhing the converſion of ſome people, ſaith, Fill their faces, O Lord, with ſhame and confuſion; for then they will ſeeke unto thy name. And here Chriſt himſelfe ſaith, ἐγὼ ὅσους ἐὰν φιλῶ, ἐλέγχω: all that I love, I rebuke, that is, with words, καὶ παιδεύω, and I chaſtiſe, that is, with the rod of correction: that ſo they may be awaked, and compelled to open the doores, and let him in. But Zeno. Eſnic. veron. l. 2 Serm. 38.

Arnius in h. loc.

2. God ſeverely puniſheth them, that will not amend by leſſer puniſhments

For the ſecond, ſeeing the rod of affliction is like the red ſea, which was a wall of defence unto the Iſraelites on every ſide, but a grievous gulfe to devoure Pharaoh and all his hoſt, or like the pillar of cloud, that was a burning fire to direct the Iſraelites, but a miſt of darkneſſe to confound the Egyptians; even ſo, though the godly by their afflictions are humbled; yet in the wicked, theſe ropes draw not, theſe yokes helpe not, neither do theſe chaines of love win them unto God; therefore Gods anger is not turned away, but his wrath is kindled more and more, and his hand is ſtretched out ſtill, and he will puniſh them ſeven times more for their rebellions. And

Eſa 5.25. & c 9.12

3. God will deſtroy us when no puniſhments will amend us.

For the third, if he ſeeth that nothing will availe, to reclaime us from our ſins; then, as the husbandman ſaid to his ſervant, cut downe that unprofitable tree, which beareth no fruit, and caſt it into the fire; ſo will he utterly deſtroy theſe wicked ſinners, and caſt them into utter darkneſſe, where there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth.

3. God knocketh by his Spirit.

3. For the third way, whereby God knocketh at our doores, that is, by his Spirit, we muſt know, this is by thoſe manifold thoughts, motions and cogitations of eſchewing evill and doing good, of ſerving God, and diſclaiming this vaine and wicked world, which every man ſhall ſometimes find in his owne heart, and would be ſufficient to draw him forward towards godlineſſe, if he did not quench the ſame, by the luſts and concupiſcence of the fleſh.

1 Theſſ. 5.19.

Thus he knocked at the doore of Pharoahs heart, when he mooved him to confeſſe, that the Lord was righteous and hee and his people ſinners; thus hee knocked at the doore of Sauls heart, when he ſaid unto David, thou art more righteous then I; and at Agrippa's heart, when he confeſſed unto Saint Paul, that hee had almoſt perſwaded him to be a Chriſtian; and thus he knocketh at the doores of our hearts, whenſoever he putteth any good motions into the ſame. Let us take heed of letting ſlip ſo faire an opportunity; we are not ſure, that the like motions ſhall ever come into our hearts againe; For all motions, if they be good, come from God, and if we ſmoother them, we are murderers of them.

.9.

1 am. 4.17.

Acts 26.28.

That we ſhould not ſmoother good motions.

2. The conditionall obligation containeth two parts.

2 Part, containing two things.

1. The conditions to be performed by us.
2. The obligation to be obſerved by God.

1. Touching the conditions on our part, we are to note theſe two things.

1. The conditions on our part, two things obſerved:

1. The generality of the ſpeech.
2. The particularity of the duties.

For

1. Though the inviſible Church, and the number of Gods elect, knowne unto God himſelfe, hath beene alwayes catholique, and extended to all places, times and perſons; yet the viſible Church, which is diſcerned by the profeſſion of the Word and Sacraments, was for a long time, hedged and hemmed in within the tents of Shem, and among the poſterity of Abraham; for in Iewrie is God knowne, his name is great in Iſrael. He dealt not ſo with other nations, neither have the heathen the knowledge of his lawes.

1. The univerſality of Gods love. Chryſ in 4. ad Eph. Auguſtinus confeſſio. art. 7.

Pſal. 76.1. Pſal. 147.20.

But now, the partition wall of commandements, rites and ceremonies is broken downe, and the poore gentiles, which ſate in darkneſſe and in the ſhadow of death, have and do ſee great light, and are called unto the Goſpell of Ieſus Chriſt,

Eph. 2.13.

Christ, who hath inlarged the commission of his Apostles and their successors, and hath sent them to be his witnesses, both in Iudea, and Ierusalem, and in Samaria, and to the ends of the world. And therefore now, we make proclamation generally, without restriction, exception, or limitation either of time, place, or person; but indifferently and indefinitely, we say to all and every one, if any man is hungry, let him come to this Feast, if any man is thirsty, let him come to this Water, if any man is sicke, let him come to this Physitian, and if any man open the doore of his heart unto him, hee will come in and sup with him.

Acts 1.8.

Esay 55.1.

Iohn 7.37.

Mat. 9.12.

2. The conditions or duties, here required, are specially these two:

§1. To heare his voice; If any man heare my voice.
§2. To open the doore, and open the doore.

2. The particular duties are two.

Which conditions, as they belong to any one, Iew or Grecian, bond or free, male or female, without any difference of nation, sexe, or condition; so doubtlesse, it bindeth every one, so that whosoever will not heare his voice, shall never be partaker of his promise, nor injoy the benefit of his presence. But

1. To heare his voice.

The voice of God taken two waies.

1. For our better direction in the paths of this truth, we must remember that his voice may be taken, either

1. In a large extent, for those severall waies of callings and knockings before mentioned, whereby he seemes to speake, though not to the eares of our sence, yet to the eares of our understanding, to our hearts and consciences, the undeniable witnesses of Gods goodnesse, and the faithfull interpreters of his mercies towards us. Or

1. Largely.

2. In a stricter sence and a lesser circuit, for the voice of his Word, which he hath ordained, as the onely ordinary meanes, to plant Religion, and to produce in us that true devotion, whereby, both our soules and bodies may be made fit mansions for his heavenly dwelling.

2. Strictly.

Gods Word the ordinary meanes to plant Religion.

And, although both these voices have a necessity laid upon us to heare them, and both pertaine to this duty; yet, for the present, I finde more use to bee made of the latter; and I thinke it is principally meant in this place, to heare the voice of his Word, whereby we may be informed, in the knowledge of that faith, and all other things, which, without it, we shall never be able to attaine unto. And therefore we find names of great honour, and titles of great excellencie ascribed unto the Scriptures, as the Word of truth, the Word of life, and the Word, that is able to save our soules; being the power of God unto salvation, and of such force and efficacie, that it is said to be sharper then any two edged sword, that pierceth the soule, and the spirit, and divideth the joynts and marrowe, and discerneth the thoughts and intentions of the heart; these are the wonderfull effects of the sacred truth; and therefore there is scarce no one duty oftener commanded, throughout all the whole Booke of God, then this, of hearing Gods Word, as you may see in Deut. 4.1. & 5.1. & 6.34. & 23. Psalme 78.1. Esay 55.3. and here, in this booke often, the spirit saith, he that hath eares to heare, let him heare; and on the other side, there is nothing in the world, that Satan laboureth more to hinder, then the preaching and the hearing of Gods Word; as Saint Paul sheweth.

What voice is here principally meant.

The honorable titles that are given to the holy Scriptures.

Iames 1.18. Philip. 2.16. Rom. 1.16. Heb. 4.12.

The wonderfull effects of Gods Word.

Revel. 2.11. 3.6. & v. 13. &c.

Satan a great enemy to preaching.

1 Thess. 2.18.

But you must understand, that the hidden eloquence and the great force of this Word, consisteth not in the inticing words of humane wisedome, but in the demonstration of the spirit and of the power of God; whose peculiar working, proper onely unto it selfe, seemes to require a peculiar manner, both of preaching and hearing of it, by it selfe, free from all false mixture and sophistication of our owne fancies and devices, which can no more sort with it, then drosse can agree with silver, or the basest mettall with the purest gold; And therefore, whether we preach it, or you heare it, we must both so thinke and esteeme of it, not as the words of men (though it be delivered by their ministery) but as it is indeed the Word of God; for though our preaching bee never

The eloquence of the Scripture wherein it consisteth.

We ought not to preach our ſelves.

never ſo glorious and ſo gorgeous in outward ſhew, though it be never ſo full of quaint termes and curious conceits, of neat diviſions and nice diſtinctions, and though it ſhould abound with all wit and all kinde of learning, ſo that nothing could be wanting, which either art or induſtry might add unto it; yet if it beare our inſcription, and paſſe as the fruit of our braine, it looſeth all the grace and divine reverence, that is due unto it; and it moves me no more then any other eloquent Oration, that ſhould perſwade to vertue and honeſtie.

What preachers we like beſt of, in theſe times.

And I preſſe this point the rather, becauſe I ſee wee are fallen upon thoſe times, when men have itching eares, and doe heape unto themſelves heapes of teachers; not ſuch as will ſtrongly beate downe ſinne, and boldly maintaine the cauſe of God, defend the truth, and reprove error, Mauger all the pride and malice of men; but teachers after their owne luſts, men-pleaſers, time-ſervers, delicate Phyſitians, but yet dangerous to their ſoules health, for miniſtering to their ſicke and diſeaſed patients, not the ſubſtance but the ſhadowes of Religion, not thoſe bitter pills, that will cure their maladies, but thoſe ſweet bits, that will pleaſe their palates; for feare of diſturbing their conſciences overmuch, or making them Sermon-ſick for a fit.

What they are that preach themſelves.

But if I may freely ſpeake, what I thinke of theſe men, that preach themſelves and not Chriſt, and ſeeke more their owne praiſe and popular applauſe, then Gods glory or the good of his people; I ſay they would ſeeme wittie, but they are not wiſe, I had almoſt ſaid, they are moſt vaine and fooliſh, and while they feare to become too divine, I feare they will prove too prophane; I hope, and I will pray, that no ſuch may appeare before you; or if they ſhould, that they ſhould find no favour; becauſe theſe are not the men, which you muſt heare, if you will heare his voice, that ſtands at the doore and knockes; but they are ſuch, as will ſmite you friendly, not to hurt you; that are jealous over you, not amiſſe; and that threaten, yea and reprove you too, yet not in their owne names, but in the name of him that ſent them; not that they, for their owne power, but that God, through their preaching, might be feared. So in hearing them, you heare, not onely them, but you heare the voice of Chriſt through them. And that you may the better heare his voice, there are three things moſt requiſite to be performed.

What preachers we ought to heare

Three things further us to benefit by Gods Word.

1. Preparation, before we come to the Church.
2. Attention, while we heare the Word.
3. Meditation, after we have heard the ſame.

} For

1. Preparation. Exod. 3.5.

1. If Moſes was commanded to put off his ſhooes from his feet, before he might approach unto the burning buſh, and the Iſraelites were commanded to ſanctifie themſelves, and to waſh their clothes, before they came to the preſence of God, in mount Sinai; then ſurely muſt wee prepare our ſelves much more, when we come to heare the voice of Chriſt, as the Apoſtle ſheweth; and therefore Salomon ſaith, take heed to thy foot when thou entereſt into the houſe of God.

Exod. 19.10,11.

Heb. 12.25.

Eccleſ. 4.17.

2. Attention.

2. When we come to heare the voice of Chriſt, non debemus garrire, ambulare, negotiari; our mindes ought not to be abroad about our buſineſſes, nor our tongues talking with our neighbours; but as the people of Samaria gave heed unto thoſe things, which Philip ſpake; ſo muſt we give all heed and uſe all diligence, to marke and obſerve what is ſaid unto us; becauſe this is opus animi potius quam auris, rather, an office of the mind, then an act of the eare; as a Father ſpeaketh.

Chryſoſt. hom. in Heb. 1.5.

Act. 8.6.

3. Meditation.

3. As they were deemed for cleane beaſts, that did chew the cud; ſo they are accounted the beſt hearers, that doe muſe and meditate upon that which they have heard, as the bleſſed man doth, day and night; and as Iſaac, Mary, and many more, are, to their endleſſe praiſe, recorded to have done; and therefore I would not have men thinke, that when they have heard Gods Word, they have done inough, though they never thinke on it more, but let them thinke, and Levit. 11.3.

Pſal. 1.2.

Gen. 24.63.

Luk. 2.19.

and talke, and talke againe of it; and that will bring much fruit unto them.

2. Because that (as the Apostle saith) not the hearers, but the doers of the Law shall be justified; *Rom.*2.13. therefore it is not enough for us to heare his voice, but we must also open the doore; which words, in sense, are very plaine, being spiritually understood, that is, the removing of all lets and obstacles, that do hinder grace and goodnesse to enter into our soules; or, if you will, the cleansing of our hearts from sinne, which is the onely bolt and barre, that keepeth out our Saviour Christ; but the way, which we must take, to open this doore, and to purge away this sinne, and to prepare our selves for the worthy receiving of our Lord, is very hard and difficult for us to find; to this the Patrons of free-will, and the magnifiers of mans pure naturals, do boldly replie, that we must strive to open our doores, per conatum liberi arbitrij, by the endeavours of our free-will, and they will seeme to have no small advantage for their tenent, from the authority of this text; because otherwise God might be thought to deale without reason, to knocke there, and to call to them for entrance, whom he knowes full well are no wayes able to let him in.

2. Duty that is required. The meaning of the words.

The way to open.

*Rhemist. annot. in Luc.*10.§.6. *Rom.*9 §.4. *Thom. de vi. Caprol. Bellarm. de grat. l.*3.c.10.&c.

I answer, that we may not sit in the seat of God, as Gods, to hold his will subject to our wils, and to make him wait our leisure and our pleasures too, before he can bring his owne purposes to passe; for this is to usurpe that power and authority, which is onely proper to the almighty; to do things when, where, and how he list; and if we can do so, then are we Gods; and for his calling to them to open, which he knowes can not open; to bid them cleanse their hearts from all filthinesse, whom he knoweth have neither meanes nor ability to do it; and to charge them, to be holy as he is holy, which, he knoweth, have not the least graine of holinesse in them, as the Prophet sheweth; I say, that if he should knocke for entrance there, where no entrance is due unto him; or if he should command them, to open the doore, to come unto him, or to do any other thing, to whom he had never given power to fulfill his commandements; then might these men the better speake their pleasure herein; but if he requires nothing at our hands, but that which is due to him, and which he made us able to performe, and we, through our owne wilfulnesse, have lost this ability, and brought upon our selves an inevitable necessity, of continuall misery, and inability to discharge our duties; then certainly here, the very law of humane reason will justifie God against all the world, non habere excusationem, and that he hath no excuse for himselfe, which is the cause of his owne impediment; as you see it every day, bankerupts called upon for moneyes, and punished for not paying their debts, though they have not one farthing to discharge them.

We must not usurpe the power of God.

Why God may justly command the things we cannot do.

Homo malè utens libero suo arbitrio, perdidit se & arbitrium. Bern.

Debters bound to pay, though they have nothing to pay.

Or if this answer will not satisfie these men, I demaund of them, if God, meaning to give grace unto his servants, whereby they might be inabled to do what he commanded them, would first prepare them by the same commandements, by causing them hereby to understand their owne miseries, and to seeke unto him for helpe, to become the fitter and the worthier vessels for his grace; what can the tongue of malice carpe at, in so faire a project of heavenly wisdome?

Why God doth command things that we cannot do

Or, for what purpose soever, God commandeth those things, which now we cannot do, we may be sure his purpose is not hereby, to extoll and magnifie the power of our will, which he himselfe hath testified to be worse than naught; when all the imaginations of our thoughts are onely evill continually, and we are starke dead in trespasses and sinnes, so that, without Christ, we can do nothing, no not so much, as to thinke a good thought; nisi sit donatum, non habet bonum velle, saith S. Ambrose, and so S. Augustine, S. Bernard, and many orthodoxe confessions of renowned Churches are so plaine and peremptory in this point, that if there were not a veile laid over our hearts, when we read the Scriptures, we could not choose but confesse, that we are not able, of our selves, to performe the least parcell of that duty, which is required of us; for, as there be some locks, that we may shut without a key, but we can never open them without a key;

Our ability to do good wholly lost. Gen.6.5. Eph.2.1. Ioh.15.5. 2 Cor.3.5. *Amb de vocat. Gent. l.*1.c.9. Aug. de cor. & gratia.c 8. Eodem momento nobis datur recipere & velle recipere. Beza quæst p. 47. *Vide etiam Calvin. instit. l.*2.c.5.§ 19.

key; ſo it fareth now with us; we can, nay we have already ſhut the doores of our hearts againſt our Lord; but we cannot open them againe, with all the ſtrength and skill we have: And therefore, when the Lord biddeth us to repent, let us pray to God for repentance; when he commandeth us to believe, let us deſire him to give us faith; and when he knocketh at our doores to open unto him, let us call and cry to him, that hath the key of David, which openeth, and no man ſhutteth, that he would give us ſtrength and power to open, and to let him in; and ſo in all things els, let us ſay with S. Auguſtine, Da Domine quod jubes, & jube quod vis; Give me, O Lord, ability to do what thou commandeſt, and then command me to do what thou wilt. And if we will do this; then, no doubt, but he, which came unto his Diſciples, when they had ſhut their doores, will likewiſe open our doores, and performe his promiſe, which is, I will come in unto him and I will ſup with him, and he with me; Wherein I obſerve, Mar.1.15. Ioh.16.29. 2 Tim 2.25. Rev.3.7. Act.16.14.

To pray for grace to do what God commandeth us.

Ioh.20.19.

{1. His habitation in us. 2. His communion with us.} For

2. The promiſe on Gods part two-fold. 1. His habitation in us.

1. This text being an allegory or alluſion of ſpeech, not unfrequent in the Scriptures, it muſt be taken, not as it ſoundeth, but as it ſignifieth in this place; and I muſt expound it as it is expreſſed, and ſhew you

{1. How he commeth. 2. What is meant by his comming.} For Two things to be obſerved 1. How Chriſt commeth to us. 1. Lawfully.

1. He will come lawfully, by the doore, and not by the window, by the way, which himſelfe hath choſen, and not thoſe by-paths which we have aſſigned for him; and therefore this doth utterly condemne all unlawfull entrances into any offices, and eſpecially all will-worſhips and voluntary religions, which are nothing els but idols of our owne inventions, and ſhall be rejected, with a quis requiſivit? Who hath ever required theſe things at your hands? In vacuum me colitis, Ye worſhip me in vaine, teaching for doctrines the commandements of men; and as he commeth lawfully, ſo he commeth freely; and therefore we muſt freely open unto him; that is, not open it by halfes, the one leafe to let him in, the other leafe to let in ſinne and Satan; for his glory will admit no communion, his jealouſie no diviſion with any other; but, as he is King alone, ſo he will raigne and rule alone;

All will-worſhip rejected. Eſa.1.12.&c.29.13 Mat.15.9.

2. Freely. V. A duplici corde.

——partiri non potes orbem,
Solus habere potes——

Lucan.Pharſ.l.1.

2. This comming to us meaneth nothing els, but what he promiſeth els where, to dwell and abide with us, as our Saviour ſheweth, if any man love me, he will keepe my word, and my father will love him, and we will come unto him, and dwell with him; that is, to inrich us with his bleſſings, to inlighten us with his graces, to comfort us by his promiſes, and to confirme us by his preſence; for if he be with us, we need not feare who can be againſt us; but for the manner of his dwelling in us, the Apoſtle telleth us, that it is by faith; not that his comming and communion with us, were meerely in conceit and imagination, but that the ſame is a ſpirituall and not a corporall inhabitation; and therefore the Apoſtle doth not onely ſay, that we are fleſh of his fleſh, and bone of his bones, (which is a very neare conjunction, and is termed by the Apoſtle, a great myſtery) but he goeth on further, and ſaith alſo, that we are one mind, and one ſpirit, and one ſoule with him, and that our life is not our owne, but his, from whom, as from the head, all the body, by joynts and bands, having nouriſhment miniſtred, and knit together, increaſeth with the increaſe of God; and our Saviour likewiſe compareth himſelfe unto a vine, and us unto the branches; to ſhew that our growth, and ſtrength, and ſpirituall being is wholly borrowed and derived from him; and therefore he is ſtiled by ſome, the ſoule of our ſoule; becauſe he worketh the ſame affections in the ſoule, as our ſoules do in our bodies; that is, quickning and raiſing them from death to life, and from darkneſſe to light, then ruling and guiding all the powers and faculties thereof, as ſeemeth good unto himſelfe, and ſo transforming our wils into his will, ſubjecting our deſires to his deſire, and renewing

2. What is meant by Chriſt his comming Ioh 14.23.

Qu'a non venit vacuu manibus. Ferus in Iohan.fol. 401.

The manner how Chriſt dwelleth in us Eph.3.17. Eph.5 30. v.32. Phil.1.27.

Col.2.19.

Ioh.15.15.

Chriſt is the ſoule of our ſoules.

renewing our whole man after the image of Christ, that is according to the innocency and holineſſe of Christ; whereupon Origen hath this divine meditation; To every part or faculty of the ſoule of man, Christ becommeth every thing; therefore he is called the true light, that the eyes of our ſoules might have wherewith to be inlightned, he is called the Word of truth, that the eares of our ſoules might have what to heare, and he is called the bread of life; that the taſt of our ſoules might have what to reliſh.

Image of Christ in us what it is.

How Christ becommeth all things unto our ſoules.

And for the performance of theſe offices, wee need not his bodily preſence here amongſt us, we need no literall eating of his fleſh, no gutturall drinking of his blood, no changing of elements, no chopping of accidents, to blinde our ſence, to cozen our faith, and ſo to deceive our ſoules; becauſe our union with him, and his habitation in us, is not corporall but ſpirituall; for as man and wife are not two but one fleſh, though they be never ſo farre diſtant in place, the one from the other; and all Chriſtians are ſaid to be members one of another, though ſome of them be in England, others in Poland, and others in Perſia; ſo Christ and we are ſaid to be but one body, though he be in heaven and we on earth: and therefore this inhabitation of Chriſt in his Saints is ſaid to be by faith, not to exclude the truth of it, in ſuch ſort, as God in his unſearchable wiſedome found it to bee moſt expedient for us; but becauſe faith onely hath the power to beleeve it, when neither ſence nor reaſon can conceive it.

That we need not the bodily preſence of Christ.

Man and wife one fleſh, though never ſo farre diſtant.

Diſtance of place disjoynes not a ſpirituall union. Epheſ. 3.17.

The force and uſe of this doctrine is moſt largely deſcribed in the Scriptures; namely, that, as the benefits and prerogatives of Chriſt his comming to us are very great; becauſe that hereby we are made members of his body, temples of his ſpirit, veſſels of honour, and lively ſtones to make up his ſpirituall houſe; ſo our care muſt be, that we take not the members of Chriſt, and make them the members of an harlot; that we defile not this temple of the Holy Ghoſt, that we deface not this building nor diſhonour him, that hath ſo highly honoured us; but rather that we ſhould offer up our bodies and our ſoules a living ſacrifice unto him, that we ſhould poſſeſſe our veſſels in holineſſe and honour, and give our members, not as inſtruments of unrighteouſneſſe unto ſinne, but as inſtruments of righteouſneſſe unto God; and ſo practice all other Chriſtian duties, which I muſt leave unto your private meditations.

The benefits of our union with Chriſt. 1 Cor. 6.15. 1 Cor. 3.16. Rom. 9.21. 1 Pet. 2.5.

The care that we ought to have.

Rom. 12.1.

1 Theſſ. 4.4. Rom. 6.13.

2. For his communion with us, ſet downe in theſe words, I will ſup with him, and he ſhall ſup with mee, you muſt obſerve

2. His communion with us.

Two things to be conſidered.

1. The order } of theſe words.
2. The matter }

1. The order ſheweth, where this communion, which is betwixt Christ and us doth begin; for he doth not ſay, if hee will ſup with me, I will ſup with him, but, I will ſup with him, and hee with mee; becauſe he is the fountaine and we the rivers; and therefore if we abound with waters it is from him; he is the roote and we the branches; and therefore if we bring forth fruit it is in him; and he is the beginning, the continuance and the ending of our faith, the firſt borne, and the head of his Church, that in all things hee might have the preheminence.

1. The order.

Christ the fountaine and the roote of all goodneſſe.

Coloſſ. 1.18.

And therefore that, which Christ ſpake unto his Diſciples concerning their outward vocation, you have not choſen me, but I have choſen you; may be fitly applied to our inward election, whereby he choſe us, I ſay, not onely before we choſe him, but alſo before wee were borne, and, as the Lord ſaith of Iacob and Eſau, before we had done either good or evill; that the purpoſe of God according to election, might ſtand, and ſtand firme for ever.

Ioh. 15.16.

Gen. 25.23. Rom. 9.11.

Beſides, wee may note in this order, that wee muſt firſt entertaine Chriſt, and feed him, that is, in his members here on earth; becauſe, as Saint Gregory ſaith, quicquid jacenti in terra porrigitis, ſedenti in cœlo datis; whatſoever yee beſtow upon the poore ſervants of Christ here lying on earth, you give it unto him that ſitteth upon his throne in heaven: and then hee will feed us with everlaſting joyes and felicities, in the kingdome of God.

That wee muſt feed Christ in his members.

Gregor. in hom.

2. For the matter, I will ſup with him, and hee with mee, it is a mutuall intertainement, and a moſt friendly giving and receiving of courteſies one from another; and therefore you muſt conſider,

§1. What he receiveth from us; for I muſt keepe the method that he ſets downe.

§2. What he beſtoweth upon us.

1. When he comes to ſup with us, we need not feare that he will prove chargeable unto us; for he will bring his proviſion with him; and when our proviſions faile us, he can multiplie our oyle in the cruſe, and change our water into wine, and in all things ſupply our wants; and by ſupping with us, he makes us richer, and not poorer; we need not doubt it; becauſe his food is ſpirituall and not temporall; and therefore, when Martha was much troubled how to entertaine him, he was then feaſting with Mary, and Mary with him, he feeding on her faith, and ſhe filled with his ſpirit; for it was meat and drinke to him to doe his Fathers will, and the converſion of a ſinner was the chiefeſt feaſt that ever he deſired.

And therefore, if you would welcome Chriſt into your feaſts, bring

1. True and hearty ſorrow for your ſins, and as the Poet ſaith,

In fontem frontem, atq; in flumina lumina verte.

Let the ſound of the Violl be turned into mourning, and thy laughter into ſorrow for thy ſinnes, and this will prove the beſt muſicke unto his eares, and the daintieſt diſh unto his taſt.

Neither are we onely bound to weepe and lament for our owne ſinnes, but alſo for the ſinnes of others; ſo Chriſt did, when he wept over Hieruſalem, non propter ruinam lapidum, ſed propter impietatem hominum; not for the ruine of the cittie, but for the impiety of his people, which grieved his ſoule more then the nailes and ſpeares did offend his body; for theſe our ſinnes preſſed him ſo ſore, as a cart is preſſed that is full of ſheaves; becauſe we are as full of ſinnes, as the Iſraelites were, of Idolatry, ſwearing and forſwearing, prophaning of the Lords Sabbaths, falſe teachers, contempt of Gods Word, covetouſneſſe, ſloth and drunkenneſſe, pride, deceit, whoredome, unthankfullneſſe, and waxing worſe and worſe; and therefore, as Chriſt wept, not for his owne ſinnes, which were none, but for the ſinnes of his people, which were full of them, ſo ought wee, to weepe and lament, not onely for our owne ſinnes, but alſo for the tranſgreſſions of our neighbours; and if wee ſee a murdering Caine, a theeviſh Achan, a lying Gehezi, an inceſtuous Ammon, a churliſh Nabal, a reſiſting Chora, a filthy Sodomite, a murmuring Iſraelite, a rebellious Abſolon, an Idolatrous Ieroboam, an oppreſſing Pharaoh, a painted Ieſabell, a blaſpheming Sennacherib, a railing Rabſhekah, a ſcoffing Michall, a ſpending Prodigall, a curſing Shemei, a proud Herod, a gluttonous Dives, a traiterous Iudas, an hypocriticall Phariſee, a wanton Mary Magdalen, a tyrannicall Nero, an Apoſtate Iulian, an hereticall Arrius, a graceleſſe Pelagius, an Antichriſtian Boniface, a bloody Bonner, or any other like ſinner whatſoever, that is wedded to his wickedneſſe, then ought we preſently, not to excuſe them, with the common phraſe, humanum eſt errare, alas, it is but humane frailty, and for a young man to ſinne, is but a tricke of youth, for an old man, but the weakeneſſe of his age, for great men, they muſt not bee curbed, it is no good manners to reprove them; for Miniſters, wee muſt not bring their coate into contempt, and it is a ſinne beyond meaſure, to diſcover our fathers nakedneſſe; for Iudges, wee muſt not ſpeake evill of the Rulers of the people, be they never ſo evill; for Women, they are the weaker veſſells, and being faire, they are much ſollicited, and therefore, poore ſoules, they are to bee pitied rather then to bee blamed, if they be not able to withſtand, ſuch ſtrong temptations of their owne fleſh, and ſuch ſubtill ſollicitations of faire ſpoken men; but leaving all ſuch, I will not ſay, vaine, but vile and moſt wicked excuſes, of ſinnefull men, for leud ſinners, we ought to bee grieved at the heart, to ſee any man poyſoned with

1. The matter.

Two things obſervable.

1. What he receiveth from us.

1 King. 17, 16. Iohn 2 9.

Luk. 10. 39.

Iohn 4. 34.

2. Courſe. Lachryma nobis deterunt cæteqnam cauſa dolendi, Seneca de brevit. vitæ.

What cheere Chriſt looketh for.

Ioel 2. 12. Iames 4. 9.

That we are to ſorrow for the ſinnes of others, as Chriſt wept for our ſinnes.

The ſins of the Iſraelites.

Zeph. 1. 4. Ier. 5. 7. Chap. 17. 21. Chap. 6. 14. Chap. 5. 31. Chap. 6. 13. Amos 6. 6. Eſay 3. 16. Ier 9. 5. Ezek. 6. 9. Eſay 5. Ier. 19. 25.

Gen 4. Ioſh. 7. 2 Reg. 5. 2 Sam. 18. 1 Sam. 25. Num. 16. Gen. 19. 2 Sam. 15. 1 Reg. 12. 28. Exod 9. 1 Reg. 21. Eſay 37. 2 Sam 6. Luk. 15. 2 Sam 19. Act 12. Luk 16. Chap 12. 48. Mat 23. 25. Luk. 7. 37.

How we excuſe all ſorts of ſinners Acts 28. 5.

How odious are all the excuſers of ſin.

with sinne; quia pia est illa tristitia alienis vitijs ingemiscere, non adhærere, contristari, non implicari, dolore contrahi non attrahi; because, as Saint Augustine saith, it is a godly sorrow, to pittie and bewaile mens sinnes and not to be defiled by the sinners, to sorrow for the men, but not to sinke into their sinnes, to bee drawne away with griefe for their offences, but not to be drowned with the delight of their wickednesse; and therefore, as Cato, the wisest in his time among the Romane Senators, laughed, and they say he was never seene to laugh but then, when he espyed, out of his window, an asse eating of thistles; because the foolish beast would take pleasure in pricks, that were like spurres to grate and gall her, or as Democritus laughed at the folly of his countreymen; so let us, with Heraclitus, lament their faults; for I dare assure you, that to rejoyce, and jeere, and scoffe at the failings of Gods Saints, at any good religious man, that either through infirmity, or blindnesse, or any other violent temptation hath failed and fallen into some snare, and hath committed some sinne, or to laugh at the sinnes of wicked sinners, as the Israelites rejoyced at the fall of Goliah, to make a sport at their faults, and a pastime of their wickednesse, is a great signe of a reprobate minde, and a strong argument to prove such men, to be the children of their father the divell, who rejoyceth in nothing more then in the dishonour of God, and the greater sinnes of graceless men; but to hate sinne in our selves, and to be sorrie for the same in any other, is a thing most pleasing unto God, and as a banquet of sweet meats, to feast and solace our Saviour Christ.

Why Cato laughed

The practice of Democritus and Heraclitus.

Great signes of a reprobate minde.

1 Sam. 17. 32.

2. True thankefullnesse to him for his comming, and unfaigned faithfullnesse to beleve his promises, is a most excellent dish of meat, to feast thy Saviour Christ; for who so offereth me thankes and praise he honoureth me, saith the Lord, and we find that God requireth nothing at our hands, for all that ever he hath done unto us, but onely love and thankes; and therefore, if thou setteſt before Christ a loving soule, and a thankefull heart, then hast thou fully supped and sufficiently feasted thy Lord and Master Iesus Christ.

Things most pleasing to God.

2. Course.

2. When we have thus entertained Christ, then will he satisfie us, and we shall sup with him; and in stead of the rags of our sinnes hee will clothe us with the garment of righteousnesse, and with the robes of true holinesse; hee will turne our sorrow into joy; and as the Psalmist saith, hee will take away our sackcloth and gird us about with gladnesse, yea he will fill our hearts with food and gladnesse, such gladnesse, quam nec reticere nec recitare possumus, as can neither be suppressed nor expressed by any one; for though the wicked judge the godly to be of all men most miserable, because of their outward state; their scorne in the world and their sorrow for their sinnes; yet are they indeed of all men most happy; in respect of their spirituall condition; the peace of conscience and their joy in the Holy Ghost; which is, that manna absconditum, unspeakeable comfort, which the world knowes not of; and yet all this is nothing, but a taste and but scarce a taste of that supper, which the Lord hath provided for them that love him; for the eye hath not seene, the eare hath not heard, the tongue cannot expresse, neither hath it entred into the heart of man; the doore of our thoughts is too narrow to conceive the greatnesse of that feast, and the abundance of that joy, which, because it cannot enter into them, they shall enter into it, and bathe themselves therein, as the little fishes doe take the pastime in the wide ocean sea; and therefore the Holy Ghost saith, Blessed are they that are called to the supper of the Lambe; These are the true sayings of God. But, to descend a little more particularly, you may observe, that all the blessings of eternall life may be drawne unto these two heads.

2. What Christ bestoweth upon us.

1 Cor. 1. 30.

Psal. 30. 11.

Act. 14. 17.

The godly are the happiest men in the world.

Revel. 2. 17.

1 Cor. 2. 9.

Quia non intrabit gaudium in gaudentes; ideo gaudentes intrabunt in gaudium Domini sui. Aug. Manuale. c. 36.

Revel. 19. 9.

Our felicity twofold.

1. The beatitudes of the body.

2. To those that appertaine unto the soule.

1. The beatitudes of the body shall be 1. Privative. 2. Positive. For

1. The very same numericall bodies, that now we have, shall be then free from all defects, diseases, distempers and deformities, maimednesse, monstrous shapes, infancie, or decrepidnesse of age and stature; Quia suam recipiet quisq; mensuram, quam vel habuit in inventute, etiamsi senex est mortuus, vel fuerat habiturus, si ante est defunctus.

2. They shall have all the good, that bodies can be capable of, as

1. Immortality, not impotentia moriendi absoluta; for so God alone hath immortality; nor impotentia moriendi ex gratia creationis; for so the Angels and the soules of men onely are immortall; nor potentia non moriendi ex aliqua hypothesi; for so Adam in Paradise was immortall; but impotentia moriendi ex gratia doni; but immortall by the grace and gift of God.

2. Potencie, to doe things incredibly beyond all that now we can conceive, tam potens erit justus ut, si velit, etiam terram commovere possit.

3. Spirituality, not that our bodies shall be made spirits, but

1. Because they shall be fully possessed with the spirit of God, which, in steed of our animall faculties, of nourishing, increasing and multiplying, shall give life and continuance unto the same.

2. Because they shall, in all things, become subject unto the spirit of God.

3. Because of their activity and nimblenesse, which, though it be impossible for them to move in an instant, as Aquinas doth unanswerably prove, yet shall they be indued with incredible swiftnesse, to come from place to place.

4. Glory, which shall principally consist, in these three things.

1. In a comely proportion of all the parts of the body.

2. In a pleasing mixture of all the best colours.

3. In a cheerefull aspect and most gracefull countenance, which is better then either feature or colour, and is indeed the chiefest part of beauty.

2. The felicity of the soule shall consist specially

1. In the fullnesse of sanctity and freedome from the slavery of sin, when the flesh shall no more croe over it, and presse it downe to sin.

2. In the perfection of the love of God, whom we shall so intirely love, according to the exigencie of his royall law.

3. In the absolute knowledge of all knowable things, as, of all arts and sciences, of all cavills and curious questions, of all doubtfull Scriptures, of all our friends and acquaintance, and all other Saints of God, and of those heavenly mysteries of the Trinity, of the incarnation and the passion of the Sonne of God, and abundance of things els, that now we are no waies able to dive into, we shall then know to the uttermost extent of all possible comfortable knowledge.

4. In the perpetuall and everlasting sight and fruition of the divine beatitude, of God himselfe, which is all in all, and cannot be expressed, cannot be conceived, what a superexcellent excellent thing it is; and therefore I had rather leave it for you to beleeve it, then go about to explaine it: if you would have riches, riches and plenteousnesse are in his house; if you would have pleasure, in his presence is the fullnesse of joy, and at his right hand, there is pleasure for evermore; if thou wouldst have life, he giveth thee a long life even for ever and ever, through Iesus Christ our Lord, to whom, for all his love and mercy towards us, be ascribed all possible thankes and praise, and glory, and dominion both now and for evermore; Amen, Amen.

Iehovæ Liberatori.

.Privative.
Revel.21.4,5. c.22.1,2,3,&c.
Aug. de civit. Dei. l.22.c.15.

2. Positive.

1. Immortality.
1 Tim.6.16.

Foure sorts of immortality.

2. Potencie.
Anselm. de simil. c.32.
3. Spirituality, in what respects.
1. Respect.
Non potestas sed egestas edendi auferetur.
2. Respect.
3. Respect.
Thom. Supl. 3 p.84. art.3.
Quam citò nunc animus ab Oriente in Occidentē cogitatione pervenit, tam citò tunc corpus illuc pervenire poterit. August. Thom & Anselm. de similit. c.51.
4. Glory or clarity
2. The felicity of the soule.
1. Respect.

2. Respect.

3. Respect.

1 Cor.11.10. & 1 Cor.15.29. &c.

4. Respect.

1 Cor.13.12.

Psal.16.11.
Psal.20.6.

THE CELESTIALL FIRE.

LUKE 12. 49.

Πυρ ἐλθὸν βαλεῖν εἰς τὴν γῆν.

I came to ſend fire on the earth.

THE Kingly Prophet ſaith, Quam mirabilis Deus in operibus ſuis! O how wonderfull is God in all his workes! ſo wonderfull, ſaith S. Gregory, Ut ſemper debet conſiderari per ſtudium, ſed nunquam diſcuti per intellectum; that he ought alwaies to be conſidered and admired in our thoughts, but never pried into by our underſtandings; for as S. Ambroſe, ſpeaking of the Seraphims, which Eſayas ſaw both ſtanding and flying, ſaith, Si volabant Seraphim, quomodo ſtabant; ſi ſtabant, quomodo volabant? If they did flie, how could they ſtand; and if they ſtood, how did they flie? Surely this muſt paſſe our beſt capacities: and therefore, Si hoc comprehendere non poſſumus quod videmus, quomodo Deum comprehendere valemus, quem non videmus? If we cannot apprehend that which we do ſee, how can we comprehend him whom we cannot ſee? Et ſi non creditis oraculis, credite oculis; and if you will not believe this, believe your eyes; and looke into his works, for they ſhall teſtifie of him.

How incomprehenſible is our God. Greg. in quadam homilia.

Eſay 6. Ambroſ. de Spirit. Sanct. l. 3. c. 22.

1. That he is wonderfull in creating them, ſpecially, in creating them of nothing; becauſe, excepting him, which can do all things, the axiome is moſt true; of nothing, nothing can be done.

1. In creating all things of nothing.

2. That he is more wonderfull in being able to reduce all created things into nothing; quia ut difficilius eſt dediſcere quam diſcere, ita mirabilius eſt omnia in nihilum redigere, quam ea ex nihilo efficere; becauſe this is harder than the former, as we ſee one man can do that in a moment, which a thouſand cannot undoe for ever: and all things have an aptitude to be made, but a reluctancy to be undone: and yet, ſicut non fuit Deo impoſſibile, quas valuit naturas inſtituere; ita nec eſt impoſſibile in quicquid voluerit, quas inſtituit naturas, redigere; as nothing was impoſſible to God, to do what he would, ſo it is not impoſſible for God

2. In being able to reduce all things into nothing. Ariſt. Ethic. l. 4. c. 4.

Aug. de Civit. Dei. lib. 12.

to reduce, whatsoever he made, into what he will, saith Saint Augustine.

3. In preserving them that they turne not to nothing.

3. That he is most wonderfull in ordering, disposing and guiding all the things which he made, and so preserving them, that they turne not to nothing; Non fundavit Deus mundum super nihilum, ut fundaret se mundus super Deum, ne mundus iterum rediret in nihilum, God founded the world upon nothing, that the world might ground it selfe upon God, lest all the things in the world should turne to nothing: and therefore the Apostle saith, Christ beareth up all things with his mighty Word; and the Prophet saith, he doth save both man and beast; and againe, O Lord our Governour, how excellent is thy name in all the world, thou that hast set thy glory above the heavens; which is all one, as if he said, herein thou art most excellent, and herein most glorified, that thou art our governour, and thereby intendest to bring us above the heavens.

Heb. 1. 3.

Psal. 36. 6.

Psal. 8. 1.

How God hath done all his wonderfull things.

So God is most wonderfull in all his waies; and that which is a note above ela, a degree above all degrees of comparison, he is more then most wonderfull, that he did and doth all this

1. Most easily.
2. Most wisely.
3. Most graciously.

} For

1. Easily.

1. Whatsoever pleased the Lord that did he in heaven and in earth, and in the sea, and in all deepe places; and how did he it? dixit, & facta sunt; he spake the word and they were done; and as the Centurion said, he needed no more but speake the word: quia omnia, priusquam fierent, in notitia facientis erant, because all things, before they were done, were existent in the mind of the doer; and therefore, when he thought good,

Psal. 135. 6.

Aug. super genes. l. 5.

Instit. l. 2. c. 5.

Iussit, & extendit campos, subsidere valles,
Fronde tegi sylvas, lapidosos surgere montes: as Lactantius saith.

2. Wisely.

2. Whatsoever things are done, the Prophet saith, In wisedome hee hath made them all; because they had beene better unmade, then unwisely made; and as he made them, so he disposeth them, omnia suaviter, all things sweetly, and so wisely, that although there be many and great disorders in the world, in respect of man, yet there is no attaxie or disorder at all in the governement of God; but, as Saint Gregory saith, Quae ab iniquis facta sunt, ne inordinatè veniant, ipse ordinatè disponit; those things are most excellently disposed of by the wise God, which are most foolishly committed by wicked men.

Psal. 104. 24.

Gregor. in moralib. l. 18.

3. Graciously.

3. Because, as Menander saith, μισῶ σοφιστὴν ὅστις ἑαυτῷ σοφός: that wise man is hatefull, which is onely wise for himselfe, and aimeth at nothing but onely for his owne good; therefore God did all, whatsoever hee did, most graciously, for the good of his creatures; els all had beene as well undone as done; for to what purpose is that power, which doth no good, or to what end is that wisedome which bettereth not any thing? Ista enim est rectissima gubernatio, quae fit gratia gubernati non gubernatoris; because that is the best government, which is done for the governed and not the governours good, saith Marcilius Ficinus; but Saint Augustine tells us, that three things are to be considered touching the creature, who, by what, and why it was made; and if we inquire, who made it, God; by what; he said, let it be, and it was done; and the reason, why he did it, is, because he is good; nec author est excellentior Deo, nec ars efficacior Dei verbo, nec causa melior quam ut bonus crearetur a Deo bono; and there cannot be a more excellent worker then God, a more effectuall art then the Word of God, or a better cause then that a good creature should be made by the good God, who did both create all things and doth governe all things, ad Creatoris gloriam & creaturae beatitudinem, ut Deum celebret & cum ipso in aternum vivat; onely for the glory of the Creator and the blessednesse of the creature, that hee should magnifie God, and so live with God for ever, saith Gregory Nyssene: and therefore the Prophet David saith, O how good a God is the God of Israel! the earth is full of the goodnesse of the Lord, and so is the great and wide sea, wherein are things creeping innumerable both of small and great beasts.

M. Ficinus in plat. de regno.

Aug. de civit. Dei l. 11. c. 21.

Why God made all things.

Gr. Nyssen de homine. l. 2. c. 5.

Psal. 72. 1. Quam bonus Israel Deus. vulgat. edit.

And

And this is the very height of Gods excellencie, not that he is powerfull, (for so are many, able to doe us good, and we never the better) nor that he is wise (because there is a terrene, sensuall, and divellish wisedome, whereby is done the greater mischiefe) but that he is good, and so doth good to all: and therefore the Gentiles stiled him, Deus optimus maximus, the best and the greatest God; first best, then greatest; because it were better he were not greatest, if he were not best, that the best might be the greatest; contrary to the practice of the world, wherein many times the greatest are the worst, and doe least good unto others.

The height of Gods excellency is in his goodnes. Iames 3.15.

But God, as he is greatest, so he is best; and herein he is the best of all bests, that all these three doe all meet in him, and all meet for our good; for power without goodnesse is but a roote of bitternesse, that produceth the poysoned fruites of tyranny and villanies; wisedome without power is but a fruitlesse theorie, without goodnesse, but an armed subtiltie; and a good will, without the meanes to doe good, is but, as Horace saith of vertue without profit, vilior alga, good without goodnesse: and therefore in God, all three, power, wisedome and goodnesse are inseperably united, and doe indissolubly worke all, and in all, for our good. And so, if it please you to observe, you may easily find it in these words which I have read unto you: I came to send fire upon the earth; for, as Alexander Aphr. saith, here are two disagreeing elements; fire and earth; quæ quidem terra igni contraria est, & propter motum, & propter locum naturalem & crassum, saith the Philosopher; and in a word, they are in all things almost dissentaneous; for they be the highest and the lowest, the subtlest and the grossest, the best and the worst, the most mooving and the most unmoveable of all the elements: and yet Christ came to bring both these together, which requireth power, by an excellent way, which proveth his wisedome, and to a most admirable end, which sheweth his goodnesse, whereupon I doe intend to insist most of all; and that two speciall waies;

Wherein the greatnesse of Gods goodnesse doth appeare.

Horatius de arte Poet.

Alexand. Aphr. de anima l.2.c.39.

How contrary the fire is to the earth

The Text handled two waies.

1. By a literall interpretation of the Text.
2. By a mysticall explication of the same.

1. The earth is the basest and the vilest of all created substances: ultima subsedit glomerato pondere tellus, it hath inherited the worst place, and of it selfe it is good for nothing, but to breed corruption; because it is indued with such qualities, cold and drie; nam terra & aqua frigida amba sunt; for the earth and the water are both cold, saith Aristotle; & terra per se ficca existit, licet propter imbres, multam habet humiditatem; and the earth of it selfe is drie, though it bee moist by reason of the manifold showres that fall upon it: and therefore it brings forth such execrable fruits, thornes and thistles; and indeed, of it selfe, not so good, not any thing at all; for though the Poet saith,

1. Literally. Manil. l.1.

The basenesse of the earth. Aristotelis Meteor. l.4.c.2. to 30. Idem Met. l.2.c.2

Laurel. l.2.

——Alma liquentes
Humorum guttas mater cum terra recepit
Fœta, parit nitidas fruges, arbustaq; læta,
Humanumq; genus——

When the faire earth receives the dewes and drops of raine, it bringeth forth fruits, and trees, and humane kinde; yet till the Lord rained upon the earth, the Prophet saith, terra erat inanis & vacua; the earth was void and brought forth nothing at all.

Gen. 1.2.

And on the other side, the fire is the best and the noblest of all elementary things; it is inriched with the best qualities, hot and drie; it is the cause of generation, and it is the onely naturall meanes of the preservation of all things, as we see, when the vitall heat decayeth, all terrene things doe tend unto corruption; no fruit groweth, no grasse springeth, no creature liveth, where this heat faileth; And therefore divers of the Gentiles, considering the manifold uses, and the most excellent properties of the fire, were so superstitious, that when they went to any house, the first thing they desired was to have, focum lucidentum in ædibus, a bright fire in their chimnies, wherein Homer brings in Vlysses saying, πῦρ τοῦ μοι πρόπαν

The excellency of the fire.

Homerus. Num ante omnia mihi lucesset in ædibus ignis? Odyss. 7.

πρώτην ἐν μεγάροισι μανέσθω; I wiſh the fire might ſhine bright in my houſe; and they thought it a hainous thing to ſuffer the ſame to goe out by night; and the veſtall virgins did never ſuffer the ſacred fire to be extinct; others were ſo erroneous that they adored the ſame for a god; and indeed God himſelfe, diſdained not to appeare in fire, and in regard of ſome reſemblances, he is contented to be called fire, for God is a conſuming fire, ſaith the Apoſtle.

Heb. 12. 29.

And therfore Chriſt, to ſhew his power, wiſedome and goodneſſe, doth bring this good fire unto the barren earth; and then he doth inſeperably conglutinate and as it were impriſon the ſame, within the cavernes and ſtrong holds thereof, that as the Philoſopher ſaith, ſicut terra in ſe continet aquæ ſic & ſpiritus & ignis ſcaturigines; quædam oculis humanis ſubducta ſunt, ut Lypara, Ætna & Æoliæ inſulæ, aliæ juxta fontes, ut aquas effervefactas emittunt; the earth containes in it ſelfe certaine ſtreames as well of fire as of water, whereof ſome are apparent to our eyes, as in Lypara, Ætna and the Æolian Ilands, and others neere the fountaines doe ſend forth hot waters, as we ſee in many baths: and in another place he ſaith, terra in Lypara reperitur, in qua, ſi quis ollam occultarit, quodcunq; fuerit, dummodo in ea imponatur, decoquitur; there is found a certaine earth in Lypara, wherein if you hide a pot of meat or any other thing, you ſhall finde it well boyled, within a very fit and convenient time; And this internall fire, which our Saviour chayned in the earth, together with the adventitious heat, which is cauſed by the motion of the ſunne, and is brought by Chriſt unto the other, doth cauſe the earth to produce all living things, and to be therefore called γῆ, our mother; as Iunius Brutus underſtood the voice of the Oracle, when as the Poet ſaith, matri dedit oſcula terra, and Iob calleth it the mother of all things.

Ariſtot. de mundo c. 2.

Idem de mirab. mundi n 32.

γαῖαν παμμήτειραν ἀεσσομαι εὐθμεθλον, πρεσβίστην, ἣ φράζει ἐπ' ἀπείρονα πάντ' ἔπος ἐστίν Homer. Jo. Iguin. interram matrem omnium. p. 832. poſt Odiſſ.

And ſo you ſee, how the goodneſſe of Chriſt maketh the earth, which of it ſelfe is good for nothing, to be, with the helpe of this fire, the mother and the nurce of all men, and of all things requiſite for the uſe of men: and therefore ô Lord our Governour, ô Ieſus Chriſt, how excellent art thou in all the world, thou that doſt all this, and more then this, for us? ô that men would therefore praiſe the Lord for his goodneſſe, and for theſe wonders, that he doth for the children of men. And yet

Pſal. 8. 1.

2. Myſtically.

2. If we looke a little more narrowly into the myſticall obſervation and hidden veines of my Text, we ſhall find many more wonders, and farre more goodneſſe towards man, then is the conjunction and concatenation of theſe diſſenting elements; for you have ſeene but the ſhell, and we handled but the barke; the kernell is yet to be exhauſted and the ſubſtance remaineth undiſcuſſed; and therfore, that you may the more fully underſtand the goodneſſe of Chriſt, expreſſed in this Text, I beſeech you obſerve theſe three particulars.

Three parts of the Text.

1. A commer, I.
2. A comming, I came.
3. The end of his comming, to ſend fire into the earth.

1. The commer.

1. We have many commers into this world, as ſpecially theſe foure ſorts.

That there bee foure ſorts of commers.

For { 1. Divells. 2. Angels. } { 3. Men. 4. Chriſt. }

1. The Divell.

1. The Divell, we know, came into Paradiſe, though we know not how hee came; and he comes into the Church, and ſits on the right hand, at the very elbow, of every negligent hearer; yea he will preſume to thruſt himſelfe into heaven, into the preſence of God, and there to ſtand amongſt the ſonnes of God; and therefore no wonder that he comes into the earth, to compaſſe about and to walke through the ſame, as he pleaſeth.

Iob 1. 6, 7.

2. The Angels. Heb. 1. 14.

2. The Angels are miniſtring ſpirits, and are ſent forth into the earth for their ſakes, that ſhall be heyres of ſalvation; and ſo they have divers times appeared unto the Saints, and they doe alwaies attend upon their ſoules; Iacob ſaw them, and we know they ſee us, when we ſee not them.

3. Men.

3. We our ſelves that are now here, have heretofore come unto the earth; ſo they that went before us, and they that are to come after us, ſhall in their due time come come into the world; and in reſpect of their comming, and the manner of their comming, the peaſant may ſay unto the Prince, hoc mihi tecum commune eſt; for naked came we all into the world, and naked we ſhall returne out of the world; and therefore, in our comming and going, there is no difference; all came, and all ſhall go, whatſoever they be. Iob 1.21.

4. Here is another commer, I came; and he came not as the Divels, nor as the Angels, nor as Men; for the Divels came from hell, the Angels from heaven, men from the earth into the earth; but Chriſt came from heaven, from hell, from the ſea, from the earth, and from all places; for the Prophet David, ſpeaking of him, ſaith, Whither ſhall I go from thy preſence, if I climbe up to heaven, thou art there, if I go downe to hell, thou art there alſo, &c. And therefore, in the firſt word of my text, I find a wonder of great moment, that he, which is in every place, and doth fill all places, ſhould be ſaid to come to any place; and ſurely it is ſuch a wonder, that we can never underſtand it, untill we underſtand what is meant by his comming. And therefore ſo much ſhall ſerve for the commer. 4. Ieſus Chriſt. Pſal.139.7,8. 1. Wonder.

2. The comming of Chriſt can ſignifie nothing els, but the inabling or fitting of Chriſt to come and go: and that was, to tell you all in a word, when the word was made fleſh, made man, that he might move and remove as he pleaſed; and ſo the comming of Chriſt ſignifieth nothing els, but the incarnation of the Sonne of God: And this is a greater wonder than the former; Quia ſalva proprietate utriuſq; ſubſtantiæ & in unam coeunte perſonam, ſuſcipitur a majeſtate humilitas, a virtute infirmitas, ab æternitate mortalitas, & ad rependendum conditionis noſtræ debitum; becauſe herein majeſty tooke humility; power, infirmity; and eternity, mortality; into the unity of the ſame perſon, with the preſervation of the properties of each nature; and that, for the payment of our debt, and the repairing of the ruines of our humane frailties; a work indeed, as of great love, for the matter; ſo, of as great a wonder, for the manner; and therefore S. Bernard ſaith, that doing this one worke, God did three workes, ſo wonderfully ſingular, and ſo ſingularly wonderfull, Ut nec talia facta, nec facienda ſint amplius ſuper terram; as the like never was, nor ever ſhall be done upon the earth; and they are the conjunction of God and man in one perſon; a mother and a virgin in one woman; faith and a humane heart in one man; Qua licet inferior, non minus tamen forſitan fortis, quomodo credi potuit, quod Deus homo eſſet, & quod virgo manſerit, quæ peperiſſet; which, though it may ſeeme leſſer than the other, yet perhaps not much leſſe powerfull to bring a faithleſſe man to believe, that the eternall God ſhould be made a mortall man, and that ſhe ſhould remaine a virgin, which had brought forth a ſonne. 2. The comming of Chriſt, and what is meant thereby. Ioh.1.14. 2. Wonder. Leo Papa in quod. Sermone.

But S. Bernard tels us, we ſhould conſider, touching the comming of Chriſt, theſe ſix particulars. { 1. Quis. 2. Unde. 3. Quo. } { 4. Cur. 5. Qua. 6. Ad quid. } Bern in vigil.nativit.Serm.3. Six things to be conſidered touching the comming of Chriſt.

{ 1. Who came. 2. Whence he came. 3. Whither he came. } { 4. Why he came. 5. Which way he came. 6. To what end he came. }

1. The commer was the Sonne of God, the Sonne of the moſt higheſt; and therefore he that was the moſt higheſt; becauſe it is not lawfull, to imagine the Sonne of God, to degenerate from his Father, Sed æqualis fateri neceſſe eſt altitudinis, & ejuſdem penitus dignitatis; but we muſt confeſſe him to be of the ſame majeſty, and of equall dignity with his Father. 1. Who came. Bern.de advent. Dom.Serm.1.

2. The place whence he came was heaven, the place of all happineſſe, and he came from the boſome of his Father, the happieſt place of all heaven. 2. Whence he came. Ioh.1.18.

3. The place where he came, was, in uterum matris virginis, in inferiores partes terræ, into the wombe of the virgin his mother, and into the loweſt parts of the earth, that as he could not be higher than he was, ſo he could not come lower than he did. 3. Whither hee came. Eph.4.9.

4. The

4. The cauſe of this, Ut majeſtas tanta, de tam longinquo, in locum tam indignum deſcendere dignaretur, that ſuch a Majeſty ſhould vouchſafe to come ſo farre, and to deſcend ſo low, into a place ſo vile, muſt needs be very great; and ſo it was, a great cauſe indeed; Quia miſericordia magna, quia miſeratio multa, quia charitas copioſa; becauſe his mercy was great, his pitie much, and his love plentifull: So God loved the world, that he gave his Sonne for us; and ſo Chriſt loved us, that he gave himſelfe and his life for our ſinnes;

Huc me ſydereo deſcendere fecit olympo,
Hic me crudeli vulnere fixit amor.

O therefore that we would love him what we can, when he loved us ſo much as we cannot expreſſe it.

4. Why he came. Bern. ibid.

Ioh 3 16.

5. The way through which he came.

5. The way that he came was through the paths of humility, ſtill deſcending lower and lower, untill he came to the loweſt of all; and therefore S. Paul perſwading us to humility, ſaith, Let the ſame mind be in you which was in Chriſt Ieſus, who being in the forme of God, thought it no robbery to be equall with God, yet did he make himſelfe of no reputation, and tooke upon him the forme of a ſervant; and I would to God we would follow the Apoſtles counſell; becauſe of all morall vertues humility is the moſt beautifull; and as the pureſt gold is moſt ductible, and that commonly is the beſt blade which bends well, ſo he is the beſt man that is moſt humble; and beſides all this, there is no way to heaven, but that, through which Chriſt came from heaven, that is, humility; and he that walketh not therein, can never come there; for the Lord profeſſeth, that he will reſiſt the proud, and give his grace unto the lowly; and the wiſe man ſaith, humilem ſpiritu ſuſcipiet gloria; and S. Gregory ſaith, Qui ſine humilitate virtutes congregat, quaſi in ventum pulverem portat, He that heapeth up vertues without humility, is like him, that driveth duſt againſt the wind, and ſo laboureth to no purpoſe; and therefore we ſhould ſtrive for humility; and if thou haſt riches in thy cheſt, if thou haſt learning and underſtanding in thy head, favour from thy Prince, and a power by thy place, to doe or undoe whom thou wilt; yet deſpiſe not thy fellow-ſervant, be not proud of thy ſelfe, and thinke not too well of thine owne abilities; becauſe God can raiſe the poore out of the dunghill, and throw downe the proud (with Lucifer) into hell.

The way that he came.

Phil. 2. 5, 6, 7.

The praiſe of humility.

Prov. 29.

Greg. in expl. 3 Pſ. pœnitm.

Not to be proud of any thing.

6. We ſhould conſider ad quid venit, to what end he came, and we ſhall find the ſame to be manifold, and yet all for our good, and for the ſaving of our ſoules, as to ſeeke that which was loſt, to heale that which was wounded, and to doe the worke of him that ſent him, while it was day; among which, here is one ſpeciall worke in my text, to ſend fire upon the earth: And ſo this point brings me to the third part of my propoſition, which is the end of his comming; and therefore

6. The end why Chriſt came.

Ioh. 9. 4.

3. Having ſpoken of the commer and his comming, we are now to looke a little more narrowly into this end of his comming, to ſend fire upon the earth; touching which you muſt obſerve theſe three things.

3. Things to be obſerved.

1. The ſending of it.
2. The thing ſent.
3. The place where.

1. He doth not herein imitate thoſe lazy ſervants, that, when they are ſent by their maſters, will ſend others to doe that buſineſſe, which they ſhould doe themſelves; but he came himſelfe to ſend this fire, to doe that office which doth properly belong unto the fire, as he ſheweth in the next words, and what is my deſire, if it be already kindled?

1. The ſending of this fire ſheweth two things.

And this teacheth us two ſpeciall things.

1. The ſoveraigne authority of Chriſt over all creatures.
2. The ready obedience of all creatures unto Chriſt.

1. The earth is his, for he made it; and, to be briefe, the whole world is his, for all things were made by him, and without him was not any thing made that was made; and as he made all things, ſo he preſerveth all things, and he guideth all things, and therefore, no wonder though he ſhould have a ſoveraigne command over all things.

1. The authority of Chriſt. Ioh. 1. 3. Heb. 1. 3.

2. It

2. It was propheſied, that, when Chriſt ſhould come into the world, all the angels ſhould doe him ſervice; and ſo they did, from his birth unto his grave, nay from his conception to his aſcention; you ſhall find them alwaies miniſtring unto him; as to Mary, that ſhe ſhould conceive; to Ioſeph, that he ſhould not forſake his wife; againe, that he ſhould flie into Egypt; and againe, that he ſhould returne to the land of Iſrael; to the Shepheards; to Chriſt himſelfe, when he was tempted of the Divell, when he was afflicted in the garden, when he was to ariſe out of his grave, and to the ſervants of Chriſt, at his reſurrection and aſcenſion into heaven; and if the heavenly Angels, that are ſo excellent, are ſo ready at his command, then how much more all other things, that are under the celeſtiall globe, ſhould be willing to do him ſervice? So they doe; for the earth gave way to him to deſcend to hell, and to aſcend from thence backe againe; the ſea was made a firme path for him to walke thereon, the winds did hearken, and the waves did yeeld unto his voice, the ayre made way for him to aſcend, and here the fire is ready to be ſent at his command; and as the good Centurions ſervants were ſo dutifull, that he needed no more, but to ſay to the one, goe, and he goeth, to another, come, and he commeth, and to the third, do this, and he doth it; or, as the good ſonne ſaid in Plautus, Pater adſum, impera quid vis, neq; tibi ero in mora, neq; latebroſè me abs tuo conſpectu occultabo: O father, here I am, bid what thou wilt, I will obey thee readily, and never hide my ſelfe out of thy ſight; ſo every creature, except onely man, and the infernall Divell, ſaith to Chriſt, tibi æquum eſt parere, we will obey thee whatſoever thou ſaiſt.

2. The obedience of all creatures to Chriſt. Heb. 1. 6. Luke 1. 27. Mat. 1. 20. c. 2. 13. & v. 19. Luke 2. 9. Mat 4. 11. Luke 22. 43. Mat. 28. 3. v. 5. Act. 1 10.

Mat. 8. 9.

Plaut. Trin.

And therefore, to plead the caſe with man, why ſhould not we be much more obedient unto Chriſt, than theſe ſenſleſſe things, when as Chriſt hath done much more for us, than he did for all other creatures? And yet (as Lipſius ſaith) Sol, Luna, Sydera, Elementa, & omnia hæc ſæcula animantium, parent non invita, & obaudiunt ſupremo illi Deo, nobiliſſimum rerum, homo ſolus, in Conditorem ſuum calces jactat & reſiſtit; the Moone, the Sun, the Starres, the Elements, and all the kinds of living creatures, do moſt readily hearken and obey the voice of their ſupreme God, but the nobleſt of all things, onely man, doth kicke and ſpurne againſt his maker; and therefore God, conſidering the towardneſſe of theſe irrationall creatures, doth the more vehemently complaine againſt unthankfull and undutifull man, ſaying, The oxe knoweth his owner, and the aſſe his maſters crib, but Iſrael hath not knowne, my people hath not underſtood: A moſt miſerable thing, that, when we ſhould be like that good Father, which ſaid, Semper magis volo quod Deus vult, quam quod ego volo, I do alwaies will that which God willeth, rather than what I will my ſelfe, Vult me febricitare, & ego volo; aliquid aggredi, volo; potiri, volo; non potiri, nolo; vivere, volo; mori, volo; if he will have me ſicke, I will ſo too; if to doe any thing, I will doe it; if to obtaine any thing, I will rejoyce in it; if not to obtaine it, I will moſt willingly be without it; if to live, I am contented; if to die, I am as ready; uſe me where he will, and as he will, I will ſhun nothing which ſhall ſeeme good to him; & ego non aſſentior tantum, ſed in his omnibus te defendam & tuebor; and in all theſe things I will not onely aſſent to thee, but I will alſo defend and juſtifie thee, before all others, which is the duty of every man to do; yet moſt commonly we are all like that ungratefull lion, whereof Martiall ſaith, Iuſſus Lipſius: Man the moſt diſobedient of all creatures.

Eſa. 1 3.

A moſt obedient ſaying of a good Father.

Lipſius ex l. 2. manud. c. 16. ex Epiſt. & l. 3. diſſert. 12. ex Epiſt. 7.

Læſerat ingrato Leo perfidus ore magiſtrum,
Auſus tam notas contaminare manus.

Martial. Epiſt. l. 1.

Or like thoſe gyants that in old time attempted, to make warre againſt the gods.

But as Salomon bids us to go unto the emmet, to learne her wayes, and to be wiſe, ſo if you will goe to theſe ſenſleſſe creatures, the ſea, the ayre, the fire and the reſt, they will teach you the moſt excellent leſſon of obedience; another wonder yet, Et ſi quidem inferius, non minus tamen forſitan credibile quam cætera, and if it ſeemes inferiour to the reſt, yet perhaps not much more incredible than the reſt; becauſe Chriſt, being all wiſdome and omnipotent, might eaſily do whatſoever he would; but this creature being ſenſleſſe, it muſt needs be no ſmall wonder, that Prov. 6. 6.

3. Wonder.

it

it underſtands the will of Chriſt, and ſo readily yeelds obedience unto the ſame; but to let you ſee this wonder yet more wonderfully, we are to conſider

4. Wonder.

2. The thing ſent, and that is fire; for I came to ſend fire; a ſtrange thing, and a wonder of wonders; for had he nothing els to ſend but fire? Alas, this is able to burne up the earth, and to conſume the whole world; and we have enow beſides him that came, and do come, to ſend fire into the earth, as ſpecially,

How many come to ſend fire into the earth.

1. Tyrants.
2. Hereticks.
3. Flatterers.
4. Slanderers.
5. Traytors.
6. All lewd livers.

Which are all brands of hell, and are ſent here by the Divell for to fire both Church and common-wealth.

1. Tyrants ſent to fire the world. Ariſt. Æthic. l. 1. What a tyrant is.

1. Tyrannus eſt, qui, quod ſibi conferens eſt, intendit, rex vero, quod eſt utile ſubditorum; a tyrant is he, which intendeth that, which is availeable for himſelfe, and a king that which is profitable for his ſubjects. Or as Demoſthenes, cited by Phavorinus, ſaith, Rex malus & tyrannus, res eſt inimica bonis civibus, & legibus contraria; an evill king and a tyrant is an enemy to good citizens, and a thing contrary to the lawes: and as Moſes ſets downe the duties of good kings, what they ſhould do, ſo Samuel layeth downe the practices of evill kings, that degenerate and turne tyrants, what they would do; and truly, the Poet is not much differing from the Propher, in the decyphering of their tyrannies, ſaying,

Deut. 17. 16 uſq; ad finem. 1 Sam 8 10, 11. &c Claudian de bello Gildico. Nec mortem horremus, nec divum parcimus ulli. Virg. Æneid. l. 10.

Inſtat terribilis vivis, morientibus hæres,
Virginibus raptor, thalamis obſcœnus adulter;
Nulla quies, oritur præda ceſſante libido,
Divitibus q́; dies, & non metuenda maritis;
Quiſquis vel locuples, pulchra vel conjuge notus,
Crimine pulſatur falſo, ſi crimina deſunt;

He is terrible to the living, an heire to the dead, a raviſher of virgins, an abuſer of wives, a robber of the rich, and a death unto the innocent; and therefore they may well be called fire, and the perſecutions of theſe men, the fiery triall; Nimrod, as we read, was the firſt of them; and ſince, no age, no kingdome, no not the Church of God hath beene free, but that ſome time or other, they have felt the burning flames of their tyranny; therefore the Monke that ambitiouſly deſired martyrdome, and went to the Souldans Court to ſeeke death for preaching the truth, was there anſwered not untruly, that he needed not to travell ſo farre, to meet that among the heathens abroad, which he might ſo eaſily find among his owne Princes at home; Suetonius, Tacitus, Juſtin, and other Roman Hiſtorians do ſufficiently ſhew, what firebrands many of them have been to many a common-wealth; and Euſebius, Sozomen, Ruffine, and other Eccleſiaſticall Writers have as faithfully ſet downe, how many bodies of the Saints have beene burned by this fire; but ſanguis martyrum ſemen Eccleſiæ; and therefore every tyrant hath beene compelled to confeſſe, with that cruell Queene, Ego proſum ſola nocendo, I only profit by doing miſchief; when the wiſe God draweth good out of evill: but thanks be unto God, that this, which I have ſaid of tyrants, ſheweth, that we know not what a tyrant is, but onely by heare-ſay, by reports afarre off; and therefore I may paſſe from this fire, and you not feare to be ſinged by this flame.

The monke that went to ſeek for death. Del. Rio. Adag. ſacr.

The inforc'd confeſſion of cruell tyrants.

2. An hereticke is another fellow, that ſends fire into the earth, Nam Arrius in Alexandria una ſcintilla fuit, & quia non ſtatim oppreſſus, totum orbem ejus flamma populata eſt; for Arrius was none other than a ſparke of fire in Alexandria, (ſaith S. Hierom) and becauſe he was not preſently ſuppreſſed, his flame had almoſt burnt the whole world; and ſurely this fire is very dangerous; for if the hereticks hand be ſomewhat weaker, yet his heart is farre more ſpitefull than the former; or if his temporall and externall power and credit with Kings and Princes, be anſwerable to his internall and immortall ſpite, then is he ſuch a fire, as the world cannot yeeld the like; becauſe the cruelty of tyrants may be vanquiſhed by the patience of the Saints, but the ſubtilty of hereticks can never

2. The heretick is a moſt dangerous fire.

The unſpeakable miſchiefe that an hereticke in favour with his Prince may do unto the Church.

be

be eſcaped without the hazard of many ſoules: And therefore, if you ſee an hereticke, eſpecially a Biſhop, and more ſpecially ſuch a Biſhop, as is powerfull with his Prince, (as they ſay the Cardinall of Richelieu is with the now King of France) to be infected with this poyſon; you may feare a greater miſchiefe then at firſt ſight can be imagined; for it was not Arrius that arch-hereticke, which could have ſpread that damnable error, ſo ſuddenly to invade the whole world; for, alas, he was but a poore prieſt of Alexandria, and of himſelfe could doe but little; but it was Maris Biſhop of Chalcedon, Theognis Biſhop of Nicæa, and Euſebius Biſhop of Nicomedia, the very Towne where the Emperour reſided, that did ſo mightily blow theſe flames over all the earth; for at that time (ſaith Socrates) Euſebius was able to doe much, becauſe the Emperour then made his abode at Nicomedia, in reſpect whereof (ſaith mine Author) many Biſhops favoured the opinion of Euſebius; ſo miſerably are men addicted to ſuch, as are in favour with their Prince, as can further or hinder their preferment. I would to God it were not ſo now in any place; and I do heartily rejoyce that it is not ſo with us, when our moſt Gracious King favoureth none, but ſuch, as he aſſures himſelfe, to be both Religious and Orthodoxall men; of a good life and a ſound faith.

Socrat. Eccleſiaſt. Hiſtor. l. 1. c. 4. p. 217.

3. A flatterer is another fire-carrier, and a very dangerous one too; for if the tongue be a fire, able to inflame the whole world, as Saint Iames ſaith, then ſurely the tongue of a flatterer is ſuch a fire, as is able to conſume many worlds; quia plus nocet lingua adulatoris quam gladius perſecutoris; becauſe the tongue of the flatterer hath don much more miſchiefe then the ſword of the perſecutor; and I am perſwaded more Kings, Princes, and great perſonages have beene deluded and deſtroyed by flatterers, then by any kinde of men whatſoever; their very enemies have never don ſo much miſchiefe unto them, as their flattering Paraſites; the Poet ſaith, Principis eſt virtus maxima noſſe ſuos.

It is a ſpeciall vertue in a great man to know men; and I would to God all Kings and Princes could rightly judge of the fitneſſe and fidelity of their agents; but this hath beene ever ſeene, that flattery creeepes into favour with greatneſſe, while plaine dealing is thought the enemie of ſtate and honour.

3. The flatterer is another fire.

Whom the flatterers doe chiefely hurt.

4. The ſlanderer is another fire-bearer, and he ſends out fire with a witneſſe, a fire as bad and worſe for our eſtates and bodies here, as the fire of hell, in regard of inevitableneſſe, will be to their bodies and ſoules hereafter; becauſe repentance may preſerve them from their juſt deſerved puniſhments, but nothing in the world, ſave God alone, can keepe us from their no waies deſerved malice; and as Curio, nil habuit in cenſu præter diſcordiam Principum, had no other revenues but the contentions of prime perſonages; and he could well enough picke his crumbes out of their quarrells; ſo theſe detractors, if they ſee men at odds, they will kindle that flame a little further, and detract both parties for their owne ends; we ſee many able well-deſerving men, both in Church and State, are ſuppreſſed and excluded from all preferment, from all imployment, from all favour, and quite buried in obſcurity, by the malicious meanes of theſe whiſpering ſlanderers; we ſee others of great worth, and high places, are caſt downe from all grace, by the virulent force of the ſame fiery tongues, and we finde others utterly undone by the ſame meanes; and we know not how to eſcape them; ſo incurably, ſo inevitably they doe wound us: and therefore ô God, if thou art angry with me, and ſo angry, that thou wilt plague me, then I pray thee, give me any head ſave the head of a ſerpent, any plague ſave the plague of a ſlanderous tongue; and I joyne theſe together, becauſe I am perſwaded the Poet meant them, for detractors, which ſprang of the teeth of Cadmus poyſoned ſerpents.

4. The ſlanderer is another fire.

The ſlanderer maintaines himſelfe by ſowing diſcord.

What miſchiefe they doe.

The Authors prayer againſt ſlanderers.

5. The traytor and the rebell doe ſend fire into the world too; and had not God from heaven ſent water to quench their flames, we had all beene burnt to aſhes, as on this day; but I ſhall ſpeake more hereof anon.

5. The traitor and rebell is another fire.

6. The lewd liver, of what kinde ſoever, is another brand to fire the earth;

6. The lewd ſinner is another fire.

and theſe for number doe exceed the reſt; for the adulterer ſendes forth the fire of luſt and concupiſcence; therefore Hecuba, being with child of Paris, dreamt ſhe brought forth a firebrand, that ſhould burne the cittie of Troy; the pettie lawyer kindleth the fire of ſtrife and debate amongſt neighbours; the furious man, with the Apoſtles, muſt preſently call for fire out of heaven, to deſtroy every one that hee diſliketh, and ſo, the whole brood of ſinnefull wicked men, that doe imbrace the faith, and denie obedience unto Chriſt, living in his Church, as if they were trained up in Epicurus Schoole, are but flames of hell to conſume the earth. The wiſe man, thought to be Philo Iudæus, who was a wiſe man indeed, relates the ſayings and practiſes of theſe men, when, calling to one another, they ſay, come, let us fill our ſelves with coſtly wine and ointments; there is their ebriety, and gluttony; let us crowne our ſelves with roſe-buds; there is their pride and arrogancie; let us all be partakers of our wantonneſſe; there is their luxurie and laſciviouſneſſe; let us leave ſome token of our pleaſure in every place; there is their atheiſme and infidelity; and let us oppreſſe the righteous; there is the fullneſſe of their iniquity and cruelty. A ſtrange thing; that it was not inough for them to taſte the wine, or to drinke inough thereof, but they muſt fill themſelves therewith; it was not inough for them to beſtow all their care and coſt upon their backe, belly and luſt, but they muſt alſo leave ſome ſignes to the world, of their pride, vainity and iniquity, in every place, whereſoever they come; and it was not inough for them to deceive themſelves and to deſtroy their owne ſoules, but they muſt alſo perſecute all ſorts of men, eſpecially the righteous man, becauſe hee would not runne into the ſame exceſſe of riot with them.

Hecubas dreame. Ovid. ep. Paridis Helenæ.

Luk. 9. 54.

Buchol. Chronolog. Anno. 3931. pag. 465.

Sap. 2. 6.

Blanda vide quæ ſunt perverſi gaudia mundi; bella movet pij impia turba viri. Holcot. in cap. 2. 1 ſap.

1 Pet. 4. 4.

Therefore, if there were none other fire, ſent to none other end, then theſe be; it might be a wonder beyond all wonders, that Chriſt ſhould come to ſend fire into the earth; becauſe they come to do all evill, and he can do nothing but good.

But to take away this wonder, you muſt underſtand that (beſides the elementary fire, whereof I ſpake in the literall explication of my Text) there is another myſticall fire, which I find alſo to be twofold.

2 Kinds of myſticall fire.

1. Celeſtiall, Good.
2. Infernall, Bad.

And Chriſt came to ſend the one, the divell by his inſtruments ſends the other; I will ſhew you both, that you may know the beſt to imbrace it, and the worſt to deteſt it.

1. The ceeleſtiall fire ſignifieth five ſpeciall things.

1. By the fire which our Saviour ſendeth, divers men do underſtand divers things, as ſpecially

1. The love of God.
2. The zeale of piety.
3. The word of truth.
4. The ſpirit of Chriſt.
5. The afflictions of the Saints.

For

1. The love of God. Ambroſ. in lib. de Iſaac & anima. c. 8. Aug. cont. Fauſt. Manich. l. 22. c. 39. Cant. 8. 7. Didacus Stella in hunc verſ.

1. Saint Ambroſe and Saint Auguſtine, by this fire, do underſtand faith, devotion and charity; and indeed the Scripture ſaith, fortis eſt ut mors dilectio, lampades ignis lampades ejus; love is as ſtrong as death, the coales thereof are coales of fire; and therefore Didacus Stella, amplifying this point, ſaith, if thou askeſt what brought Chriſt into this world, he will anſwer, love; what he brought with him, love; what he ſeeketh, love; what he preached, love; and good reaſon for all this; becauſe he came to ſave his people; & poteſt Apoſtolus eſſe, Evangeliſta eſſe, Propheta eſſe, & damnari poteſt, habere autem charitatem, & damnari non poteſt; and a man may be an Apoſtle, an Evangeliſt, a Prophet, and yet for all this, he may be damned; but to have true charity and to be damned, that cannot be: and therefore curſed is that man, which by malicious practices, laboureth to quench this fire of love; for this is the end of the law, the beginning of the Goſpell, the fullneſſe of perfection, and where this love is, there is God, for God is love.

1 Ioh. 4. 8.

2. The zeale of godlineſſe.

2. Others, by this fire, do underſtand the zeale of godlineſſe; and zeale, derived of ζεω, is a word framed from the very ſound and hiſſing noiſe, that hot burning coales do make, when they meet with their contraries, in any moyſtened ſubſtance; and ſo zeale expreſſeth heat, and zealous men are ſaid to be, ζεοντες πνευματι; πνευμαπ; ſuch as burne, or ſuch as were fervent in ſpirit; ſo, as the Propher ſaith, the fire kindled, and at the laſt, I ſpake with my tongue; and zeale is the higheſt degree of affection, good or bad: therefore he that doth any thing moderately, though he may be called φιλημων, a lover of that thing, yet he cannot be called ζηλοπης, becauſe a zelot is ſo intenſive, ut quicquid vult, valde vult, as that, to all the objects of his affections, he is exceſſively diſpoſed and moſt earneſtly ſtretching himſelfe to the very height of his abilities; his love is fervent, his deſire eager, his delights raviſhing, his hopes longing, his hatred deadly, his anger fierce, his griefe deepe, his feare terrible; and ſo of all the reſt of his paſſions, he hath them all in the higheſt pitch; ſo that ſuch a man, of all the men in the world, had moſt need to have his bias right; becauſe we may ſay of ſuch, as of Origen, ubi bene nemo melius, ubi malè nemo pejus, where he doth well, none better, where ill, none worſe.

Act. 18. 25.

Pſal. 39. 3.

Omnis animi impetus aut ratione vel recta vel perverſa proveniens ad deſtruendum vel adſtruendum aliquid, ſub hoc verbo, zelus, ſignificatur. Polyanth. in titulo zelus.

And this zeale of goodneſſe, this ardent affection of all piety is that, which Chriſt came to ſend into the earth; becauſe he could never indure a luke-warme profeſſor, but in the time of the law of Moſes, he ſaith unto the Iewes, how long halt you betwixt two religions, or two opinions? if the Lord bee God, cleave unto him, and if Baal be god, follow him; and in the time of the Goſpell, he would have the Church of Laodicea, to be either hot or cold, with him, or againſt him: And therefore, as the Lord ſaid unto Iudas, what thou doeſt doe quickly; ſo I may ſay to every one, what thou intendeſt to be, reſolve quickly, Atheiſt, Papiſt, Proteſtant, or what thou wilt; be not alwaies hovering and doubting what religion to profeſſe, or what courſe thou wilt take; and when thou haſt once concluded what to doe, doe it earneſtly, doe it with all thy might, and be zealous in thy profeſſion, that thou maiſt be faithfull in thy ſervice, whomſoever thou ſerveſt; but take heed what thou doſt, uſe all thy diligence, to be zealous in good things.

1 Reg. 18. 21.

Revel. 3. 15.

3. Saint Auguſtine, Theophylact, and Saint Cyrill, doe expound this fire of the Word of God, who telleth us, what is good and what is evill, what we ſhould doe, and what we ſhould eſchew: and indeed the Prophet ſaith, ignitum eloquium tuum, thy Word is like fire, and the two Diſciples, that went to Emaus, ſaid one to another, Did not our hearts burne in the way, as he ſpake with us? and the Lord himſelfe ſaith, Are not my words like burning fire? whereupon Saint Ambroſe ſaith, ignis eſt verbum Dei quem miſit, the fire that the Lord ſent is the Word of God, which ſhould inflame the ſecret affections of our mindes with the heat of divine knowledge, which ſhould ſacrifice and offer up the heat of our faith and devotion, and which ſhould kindle in us the deſires of vertue; & bonus eſt ignis, qui calefacere novit, exurere neſcit, niſi ſola peccata, and it is a good fire, which knoweth how to heate, but not to burne, unleſſe it be ſin alone; by this fire the Apoſtolicall gold of our faith is tried, the ſilver of a good converſation is examined, the pretious ſtones and pearles of Gods graces are illuſtrated, the hay and ſtubble of errors are conſumed, and to be briefe, with this fire the buſh did burne and not conſume; quia urit ſermo Dei, ut corrigat conſcientiam peccatoris, non ut perdat peccatorem; becauſe the Word of God burneth, to correct the conſcience of ſin, but not to deſtroy the ſinner.

3. The Word of God.

Aug. cont. Adamant. l. 13. Theophil. in hunc loc. Cyril. in catena. Pſal. 119. Luk. 24 32.

Hoc ignis, ſuper bonum fundamentum poſito, apoſtolicum illud aurum fidei probatur, illud morum argentum examinatur, illi lapides pretioſi illuminantur, ſenſum autem errorum & ſtipula conſumuntur. Ambroſ. ſer. 18.

And therefore, they that labour to hinder the penning or the preaching of Gods Word, which are the chiefeſt meanes to divulge the ſame, or, to kindle this fire, as our Saviour ſaith, they doe what they can to quench it; becauſe that, as the materiall fire goeth out, if there be not a continuall ſupply of ſome combuſtible ſubſtance, ſo the ſpirituall fire of Gods Word will decay, if it be not alwaies preached, and penned, that it may be preached unto the people. And yet thoſe dumbe doggs that cannot barke, thoſe lazie hands that will not write, and thoſe heavie heads that love no paines, to excuſe their owne negligence, are alwaies accuſing and diſparaging the moſt painefull ſervants of Ieſus Chriſt: but,

The miſchiefe that they doe, which carpe at the preaching of Gods Word.

Qui ducis vultus, & non legis iſta libenter,
Omnibus invidias, livide, nemo tibi;

Martial. in Zoilum.

Let them goe on in their folly, and let them proceed in their malice; Chriſt came to ſend this fire, this Word, into the earth, and he deſires it ſhould be kindled, it ſhould be ſpread farre and neere, and there is no better way to ſpread it, then by preaching it; and though, as one ſaith truly, that a lame hand is better then a leand pen, a fooliſh ſentence dropt upon paper, ſets folly on a hill, and is a monument to make infamy eternall, and all idle bookes are but vanities ſent abroad with a licence; yet can there be no better meanes to preſerve, further, and aſſiſt the preaching of Gods Word, then is the carefull and painefull penning of it; and therefore reſpecting the glory of God, and not fearing the contempts of men, let every honeſt heart doe what lieth in it, to fullfill the deſire of Chriſt, notwithſtanding all the taunts of theſe ſpitefull doggs, that will neither eate hay themſelves, nor ſuffer the oxe to feed; for their tongues are their owne, as they ſay: and therefore, let them ſay what they will, and let us do what we ought; for the penning of Gods Word is an excellent furtherance to the preaching thereof: and if there had not beene ſo many bookes printed, you could not have had ſo many Sermons preached, as you have.

Setting out of bookes, an excellent meanes, to kindle this fire.

4. Saint Hierom, Ruffinus, Athanaſius, Saint Cyrill, Gregory, Bede, Origen, and others, doe interpret this fire to ſignifie the Holy Ghoſt, which was ſent unto the Apoſtles in fiery tongues; for thoſe ends, which I have ſhewed in my ſixth golden Candleſticke. vide etiam Geminian. de exemp. l. 1. c. 73. p. 89.

4. The Holy Ghoſt
Hieron. in Apol. adverſus. Ruff. 2. Athanaſ. in l. de Com. eſſem. pat. & f. & S. 8. Cyrillus in Lev. l. 5 Gregor. in Ezech. hom. 5. Maldonat. in hunc verſ.

5. Tertullian, in his fourth booke againſt Marcion, doth underſtand by this fire, the croſſes of Gods Saints, and the hatred, enmities and malice of the wicked againſt the faithfull; and ſo Maldonate, and divers others, doe expound this fire, of the afflictions and perſecutions of Gods ſervants; which the Scripture termeth fire, as where the Pſalmiſt ſaith, wee have paſſed through fire and waters, Pſal. 65. 12. and the Prophet ſaith, cum ambulaveris in igne non combureris, & flamma non ardebit te; when thou walkeſt in the fire, it ſhall not burne thee, and the flame thereof ſhall not heat thee; ſo Saint Peter calleth the afflictions of the Saints, the fiery tryall, and ſo the Martyrdome of the Primitive Chriſtians was a fiery Martyrdome.

5. The afflictions of the Saints.
Iſa. 43. 2.

1 Pet. 4. 12.

And in very deed, if we doe compare what goeth before, with that which followeth after, I thinke it will appeare moſt cleerely, that our Saviour, by this fire, doth underſtand the ſufferings of the Saints. For Afflictions and perſecutions principally underſtood by this fire, in this place.

1. He would prepare them to ſome great matters, when he ſaith, let your loynes be girt, ver. 35. and the mind needs no preparation for good things; becauſe we are all ready enough to receive good.

2. He addeth, but I muſt be baptized with a baptiſme, which is to be underſtood of his Paſſion, as if he ſhould ſay, I came to bring perſecutions and afflictions unto you all, but I muſt firſt taſt thereof my ſelfe; and to make this more plaine, he ſaith, thinke you that I am come to ſend peace into the earth, I tell you nay, but the ſword, &c.

Mat. 10. 34.

And therefore, Chriſt came to ſend croſſes and tribulations into the earth; another wonder yet, which may ſeeme to fleſh and bloud beyond all wonders; for is it poſſible, that ſweet ſhould produce ſower, light darkneſſe, and he, that is ſummum bonum, ſhould bring ſuch evills, even the height of evills, hatreds, baniſhments, impriſonments, deaths, and all ſorts of cruell and unheard of torments unto men, yea to ſuch men as he loves beſt, and doe love him beſt and ſerve him moſt?

5. Wonder.

Sol. I anſwer, if afflictions and miſeries were now ſimply evill, and in all reſpects to be condemned, this point ſhould be to me incredible; therfore you muſt underſtand, that, although afflictions to the wicked be like puddle water, the more you ſtirre it, the more it ſtinketh; yet to the godly, croſſes are like pretious ointments, the more you handle it, the more fragrant it ſmelleth; and God ſends not afflictions, as they are evill, and doe tend to the deſtruction of his creatures, but to produce the moſt excellent fruits of piety, patience, repentance, and the like; for proſperities are ſtrong pleaders for ſin, and troubles be the ſureſt tutors

Why God ſends afflictions.

to

to goodnesse, and many men, now happy, had died miserably, if they had lived merrily.

So you see what Christ came to send, fire, and what is here meant by this fire, the afflictions of the Saints.

2. There is another fire, which the Divell sends into the earth; and because he is Gods ape, that, inverso ordine, would imitate Christ in all his wayes, his fire may be likewise said to signifie five speciall things.

2. The infernall fire signifieth five speciall things.

1. An inordinate love.
2. A preposterous zeale.
3. An erroneous word.
4. A Spirit of uncleannesse,
5. A destroying affliction.

1. The inordinate love divides it selfe into many branches, but especially, like the three rivers of hell, Styx, Acharon, Phlegeton, into

1. Selfe-love.
2. Carnall lusts.
3. Worldly pleasures.

1. Inordinate love

1. For this φιλαυτία, selfe-love, the Philosopher saith, sui ipsius causa cuncta peragit, it doth all things for its owne sake; and the Apostle saith, in the latter times, men should be lovers of themselves, that is, more than makes for the glory of God; but the Poet tels us, Stultus & improbus hic amor est, dignusq; notari; And our Saviour saith, He that loveth his owne soule shall lose it; not that it is unlawfull for a man to love himselfe, els the Lord would never have bid us to love our neighbours as our selves, sed quia dum seipsos amare videantur, non verè amant, sed seipsos decipiunt; but because, in pretending to love themselves, they deceive themselves, which is the fowlest deceit in the world, for a man to deceive himselfe, as Plato saith; and yet it is the easiest thing in the world for a man to deceive himselfe, saith Demosthenes; because selfe-love is blinde, and as the Poet saith, tardè quæ credita lædunt, credimus; Ovid. Epist. So what we earnestly desire, we do easily believe; Et familiare est hominibus omnia sibi ignoscere, and it is most common with all men, to remit all things unto themselves, saith Velleius Paterculus: because we cannot see, and will not know our owne faults: ἑαυτὸν δ' οὐδεὶς ὁμολογεῖ κακὸν εἶναι; no man will confesse himselfe to be evill, saith Menander; or if we do a little perceive our owne errours, yet we are very prone to lessen them, and more ready to forgive the greatest faults to our selves, than the smallest infirmities unto others; and whatsoever we do, we are easily induced to believe it is very well done: so by this selfe-love we deceive our selves, and thereby destroy our owne soules; and, as the Poet saith of Narcissus, Aristot. mag. moral. l. 2. c. 13.

2 Tim. 3. 2.

Horat. Ser. 3.

Joh. 12. 25.

Euseb. apud Stobæum Serm. 23.

Plato in Cratylo.

Iulius Cæsar de bello civil. l. 2.

Vell. Pat. l. 2.

The mischiefe of selfe-love.

Quod nimium tua forma tibi Narcisse placebat,
In florem & noti est versa stuporis olus.

Alcias. Emb. 69.

So I may say of every φιλαυτος, though he seemes like the peacocke unto himselfe, yet shall he be like the ugliest fowle, in the sight of God and all good men; and therefore we should take heed that we be not scorched with this fire.

2. The venereall love, or, if you call it rightly, carnall lust, is another fire, as the Poet testifieth, ——est mollis flamma medullis, a gentle flame in the marrow, whereby Uritur infœlix Dido——unhappy Dido was quite burnt; and Seneca saith, Compesce amoris impij flammas, precor, I pray thee quench these flames of wicked love. And this fire, though it may be, and is, many times, without hurt, when it is guided in the right way, and directed to the lawfull end; yet oftentimes, when Phaeton-like, we let loose the reines unto our lusts, more than reason should require, it proves an infernall fire, that consumes our bodies, goods and good name, as it did to some of the greatest Heroicks; who, after many glorious victories, were most poorly and dishonourably stained and subjected, by the love of infamous strumpets: And therefore the Poet saith very well,

2. Carnall lust.

Virg. Æneid. l. 2.

Senec. in hypol.

Dum licet & modici tangunt præcordia motus,
Utile propositum est, sævas extinguere flammas;

Virgo Cynthia pervigil, igni carpitur indomito, furiosaq; vota retractat. Metam. l. 10.

De rem. d. amor. l. 1

It is a good rule, to quench theſe flames betimes, Et in primo limine ſiſte pedem, ſtay thy foot before thou entreſt into the houſe of any laſcivious Lady.

Aug. ſup. Pſal. 64.

3. The love of this world is as bad a fire as any of theſe; for S. Auguſtine ſaith, that, as amor Dei facit Hieruſalem, ita amor ſeculi Babilonem; as the love of God builds up Hieruſalem, the City of God; ſo the love of the world builds up Babylon, the Synagogue of Satan: and the Apoſtle tels us, the love of this world is enmity to God; and what do you thinke will become of Gods enemies? S. Bernard tels you, Hic caro eorum vermibus, illic anima ignibus devorabitur, here their fleſh ſhall be devoured with wormes, and in hell their ſoules ſhall be tormented with fire; & ſi ſocij fuerimus in vitijs, ſocij erimus in pœnis, & una pœna illos cum dæmone implicat, quos unus amor in crimine ligat; and if we will be their fellowes in the ſinne, we ſhall be partakers of the puniſhment; and the ſame damnation ſhall chaine us with the Divell, when the ſame love hath tied us in the fault: And therefore if you love your ſelves, love not the world.

Iames 4.4.

Bern. in l. medit. Ea acumen ſapientum mundi, qui cum arrogantia patent, fetumen tasere, & in tuto eſſe arbitrantur. Calv.

2. A prepoſterous zeale is another fire, of the Divels ſending; and this is ſpecially threefold.

2. The prepoſterous zeale which is threefold.

1. πυφλος ζηλος, a blind zeale.
2. πυρρος ζηλος, a turbulent zeale. } and
3. ὑποκρισις, a fained zeale.

1. Blind zeale.

1. The blind zeale hath a good affection, but no great knowledge, like S. Paul, before he was converted, who thought he did God good ſervice, when he perſecuted his ſervants; and therefore the more furiouſly it runs, the more dangerouſly it falls.

2. Turbulent zeale

2. The turbulent zeale diſturbes the whole world, it ſtirres commotions both in Church and Common-wealth; and when theſe fire-brands of State can ſhew no cauſe of their doings, it is their zeale that makes them do it.

3. Faigned zeale.

Compare 2 King. 10.16. with 2 King. 10.31.

3. The fained zeale is juſt like a waterman, that lookes one way, and goes another way; for this man pretends one thing, and intends another thing: as Iehu pretended the zeale of Gods glory, but his aime was at his maſters kingdome, and his zeale to Gods ſervice, was but to bring him to the Scepter of the kingdome; ſo Dimetrius profeſſed great love unto Diana, but his drift was, to maintaine the honour of his profeſſion; and ſo we have too too many, that make great ſhew of holineſſe, and yet their hearts aime at other ends; but they may be ſure, though they can deceive the world, and deſtroy themſelves, yet not God, who knoweth the ſecrets of all hearts.

Act. 19.24.

3. Wicked words.

3. The word of falſhood, lies, ſlanders and hereſies is another fire, that the Divell ſends, and a fire that conſumes many ſoules.

4. The ſpirit of uncleanneſſe.

4. The ſpirit of uncleanneſſe, the ſpirit of pride, the ſpirit of contention, and ſo every other evill ſpirit, is another moſt violent fire, able to deſtroy the whole world, if it were not quenched by the heavenly water of Gods Spirit.

5. Afflictions.

5. Afflictions, warres, plagues, famines, ſickneſſes, perſecutions, and all other croſſes whatſoever, are fiery flames of the Divels kindling: Indeed, as the death of Chriſt is aſcribed to God, to the Divell, to Iudas, to the Iewes: To God, as giving him for our ſinnes; to the Divell, as maligning his moſt innocent life; to Iudas, as the betrayer; and to the Iewes, as the inſtruments of his death: So the perſecutions of the Saints, is a fire of Gods ſending, as it aimes at the triall of his ſervants; but of the Divels kindling, as it tends to the deſtruction of their ſoules: And ſuch was that horrible miſchiefe, the gun-powder-treaſon, that was intended, as on this day.

Death of Chriſt aſcribed to many, and how.

So perſecutions.

The application to the powder-treaſon.

The Poet ſaith, Nullum caruit exemplo nefas, no villany wants a patterne; but I am ſure, this hath no parallell; and ſo you will ſay, if you will conſider

4 Things conſiderable in that treaſon.

1. The Agents.
2. The Patients.
3. The Manner.
4. The End.

1. The agents.

1. The Agents were many; & multitudo peccantium multiplicat peccatum; and as the conſpirators againſt Cæſar, were chiefly thoſe, whom he had obliged by benefits, and no wayes exaſperated with injuries; ſo were theſe traytors digni- fied

fied and honoured by his Majesty; but, improbus a nullo flectitur obsequio; nothing can win a froward person; and therefore, like Sejanus, they were as wayward when they were pleased, as when opposed, and there is no dealing with such men.

2. The patients were more, his sacred Majestie, who was multis è millibus unus, such a one as was not to be found among many thousands; his royall Queene, the noble Prince, and, as the Poet saith, πρεμιὸς πρεμιοῖς πῶλος; the whole regall Stemme, then flos delibatus populi, suadeq́ medulla; the chiefest of all the Nobility, Clergy, and Gentry of this land; Utinam populus Romanus unam haberet cervicem, O that the people of Rome had but one neck, was Caligulas wish, that he might cut it off at one blow: So these men would blow up all in one day, disperdamus eos de gente, had been the burden of their song. 2. The patients. Sueton. in vita Caligulæ. Psal. 83. 4.

3. The manner was most of all to be considered; for to die, is a debt to nature, but such a death was the most unnaturall, and most detestable that ever was heard of; most odious was the fact of Nero in burning Rome; of Heliogabalus, in sending serpents among the people; and most bloudy was Lucius Sylla, who strove to be called Fœlix, for his cruelty; and Maximinus was as barbarous, when he avouched, Christianorum sanguinem dijs victimam esse gratissimam, the bloud of Christians was the best sacrifice unto the gods, that is, the divels; yet all these come too short of our powder-traytors. And so 3. The manner. Sabellicus. Tertull. in Apolog.

4. The end of their intentions will make all this plaine; for their purpose was, not onely to be the death of these men, but also, so much as in them lay, to send all their soules, as an holocaust, unto the Divell, when they thought to blow them up, as most odious heretickes and malefactors, and yet would not give them the least moment of time for repentance; and then they thought to quench the light of Christ, and to send many thousands of soules to hell; Vox faucibus hæret, this stupifieth me, that I can say no more, but aske the dayes of old, and they shall tell you, Nunquam res talis facta est in Israel, the like thing was never heard to have been done in Israel, no nor in all the world; and therefore hoc caruit exemplo nefas, this example wants all patterne. 4. The end.

But the God of heaven, who is Θεὸς παρὰ μικρον, as Simplicius cals him, that is, God in the needfull time of trouble, as the Prophet speaketh, saw the bow bent, and the arrow upon the string, the fire ready to be kindled, and all instantly to be executed for the destruction of us all; Tum Jupiter arrisit lætus, then the Lord smiled at their folly, he discovered their designes, and delivered us out of the fiery flames. And this is the day wherein these things were done. Simplic. in Ariff. Phys. l. 1. Psal. 46. 1.

And therefore, as among the Grecians this day, the fift day of November, was kept with sad solemnities for the losse of noble Aratus, the often preserver of his Countrey, and among the Iewes, it was, carbone notabilis atro, branded for the slaughter of Zacharias, that was slaine betweene the porch and the altar; so among us of great Britaine, let this day be, candore notabilis ipso, a day never to be forgotten; and seeing God hath taken from us the cup of death, let us take the cup of salvation, and ascribe unto the Lord the honour due unto his name; and because he turned our funerall into a festivall, and as Cæsar said of Phraates, he was, prius victus quam visus, vanquished before he appeared, so God quenched this fire before it was kindled; let the fire of our devotion be alwaies burning with love to him, that hath so loved us, so done his marvellous workes, that they ought to be had in remembrance. Plutarch. in vita Arati. Manlij Calendar. Psal. 56. 8. Psal. 111. 4.

So you see the fires, which the Divell sendeth, like the fire of Nadab and Abihu, strange fires upon Gods altar, consuming, and not cherishing all those that kindle them: therefore love not the world, embrace no blind zeale, believe not every spirit, and looke you be not swallowed up of afflictions, that so you may quench, and not kindle these false and furious fires. And so much for the thing sent, fire.

3. The place where this fire is to be sent, is the earth, the last wonder, and perhaps not the least in my text, for the earth is the most passible, as the fire is the most 3. The place where Christ sends fire.

active of all the elements; the ayre hath ſome affinity with the fire, and the water might make ſome reſiſtance, but the earth neither; and therefore this muſt look for nothing, but an abſolute and perfect conſumption; and indeed that is our Saviours deſire; for by the earth, we muſt (as S. Chryſoſtome, and all interpreters ſay) underſtand man, both becauſe he is made of earth, remaines on earth, feeds on earth; and till he be purified by this fire, he doth onely mind earthly things. Nancelius in his Microcoſme, ſheweth the manifold analogie and ſimilitudes betwixt man and this earth, as you may ſee it more at large in his third Booke and fourth Chapter, and ſo forth unto the end of that Booke. And Lucretius ſaith,

Quare magna Deûm mater, materq; ferarum,
Et noſtri genetrix hæc dicta eſt corporis una.

And to ſet you downe ſome further demonſtration of this point,

6. Wonder.

What is to be underſtood by the earth.

Lucret. l. 2.

The analogy betwixt the earth and man.

1. In reſpect of greatneſſe.

Eſa 40.12.

Ariſt. de cœlo & mundo. l. 2.

Vide Nancel. microcoſm. l. 3. p. 322.

1. The earth is very great, ſo large, that the greatneſſe of it cannot be defined; and therefore the Prophet Eſay ſaith, Quis menſus eſt terram? Who hath meaſured the earth? And yet the Mathematicians have adventured to expreſſe the length and bredth thereof to a haire: Ariſtotle ſaith, the Mathematicians of his time affirmed the ſame to be forty myriads of Stadiums, which make fifty thouſand miles in compaſſe; but our latter Aſtrologians do make it to conſiſt of 5000400 miles; ſo others more, and others leſſe; they can never agree in one point. And ſo man is a vaſt creature, hardly to be knowne, hard to be defined; it would require a great ſtudy for a man to know himſelfe; and yet

2. In reſpect of ſmalneſſe.

Naſſonius c. 7. de terra. p. 133.

2. If we compare the earth unto the celeſtiall orbes, we ſhall find the ſame to be, but, as the Philoſophers terme it, punctum & adhuc puncto minus, a little point, or leſſe than the leaſt point; for the Aſtrologers doe averre, that every ſtarre in the eight Sphere is bigger than the whole earth, and there are many ſtarres there, which we cannot ſee; and thoſe, that we do ſee, are but like little points, or glaſſe buttons, not much bigger than a ſpark of fire; and therefore the earth, in reſpect of thoſe ſuperlunary ſpheres, muſt needs ſeeme to be no bigger than nothing; even ſo man, that, when he lookes upon himſelfe, ſeemes to be a world of wonders and beauties unto himſelfe, if we ſhould ſet him by the ſides of heavenly things, he would then appeare to be worſe than nothing.

3. In reſpect of the production of things.

Non omnia ferè omnia tellus.
Nec tellus eadem parit omnia, vitibus illa convenit, hæc oleæ, hic bene farra virent. Ovid. de arte amandi. l. 1
Hæc eſt mate dictio Adami in agro cordis noſtri, nociva & inutilia gratiſsimè, & paſſim ſi veniunt, nullis vero & neceſſariis cum labore, & potèſt homo per ſeſe nihil aliud quam ſpinas & tribulos vitiorum generare. Bern. Mores mali quaſi herba irrigua. Plaut. in Trinum. act. 1.

3. As the earth doth ſoone bring forth thoſe herbes, that do naturally ſpring out of the ſame, but it giveth not ſo faſt an increaſe to thoſe, that are by art planted and inſerted therein; becauſe that, as the mother which hath children of her owne wombe, and others of her husband, by a former venter, will be moſt indulgent to them that ſucked her owne breaſts; but, as a ſtepmother, will ſhew farre leſſe reſpect unto the others, that are but her children in the ſecond place; ſo the earth is but a ſtepdame, to all artificiall and all planted herbes and flowers, and therefore yeeldeth not ſo much nutriment unto them, as it doth unto the thornes and thiſtles, which, without labour, without tilling, without planting, without manuring, will grow apace, and over-ſpread the ground where they ſpring; and ſo man, will eaſily produce his naturall inclinations, and his evill diſpoſitions will increaſe amaine, we have juyce enough to feed their roots, and we are like a tender mother unto them, that will cocker them and cheriſh them beyond meaſure; but for thoſe vertues and graces, that are planted in our hearts, by the preaching of Gods Word, or by any other good counſell of our friends, or the example of Gods Saints, or any other way whatſoever, O how ſlowly do theſe take root, how hardly do they grow, and how long will it be, before they bud and bring forth any fruits of goodneſſe? for we are like ſtep-dames unto theſe, that do imbrace them but with halfe our hearts, halfe our loves.

4. In reſpect of the cavernes thereof.

Nancel. l. 9. p. 1379.
Subtellure procul barathrum demergitur atrum. Homer Iliad. 8.

4. The earth hath many cavernes and hollow places in it, ſome deeper, and ſome higher, ſome wider, and ſome leſſer than others, wherein there are many fountaines and great rivers, both of fires and waters, and many blaſts of winds, and ayres, and ſmels, ſome ſweeter, and ſome more loathſome than other; and, as the Poet ſaith, τόσσε μάλ' ἧχι βάθιστον ὑπὸ χθονὸς ἔστι βέρεθρον.

Even

Even so the heart of a naturall man is very full of hollow places, I meane not only those veines and cavernes, wherein the blood and wind, and other naturall itinerants do make their passages, through the body of man, but also those materie, and ferie, and fowle qualities, that lurke deepe and large in every man, so that it is impossible for us to fathome into the bottome of these hollow hearts: whereupon Nassovius saith, Nassovius de terra, c.7.p.142.

Non sum læta seges, lolium sed triste, sed oro
Me tamen in messem collige Christe tuam.

Therfore man in his pure naturals, after his fall, being but a lump of clay, & a masse of corruption, our Saviour desires, that the whole body of sinne might be destroyed, to that end he came to send the foresaid fire into this earth, to consume all terrene things in man: and, if you marke it, you shall find, that, as the earth, so man hath most need of fire; for the earth hath these three speciall properties.

Rom.6.6.

Three properties of the earth.

1. Fruitlesse. 2. Darke. 3. Cold.

1. Fruitlesse, Quia terra erat inanis & vacua, The earth was without forme and void.

2. Dark, Quia tenebræ erant super faciem abyssi, And darkenesse was upon the face of the deepe.

3. Cold, because it is immoveable, and free from all the causes of heat; as the Philosopher saith.

Therefore of all sublunary things, the earth hath most need of fire.

1. To inflame it, because it is cold.
2. To inlighten it, because it is darke.
3. To fructifie it because it is barren.

} So every man naturally hath these three deadly qualities.

How man is indued with three vile properties.

1. Filthinesse. 2. Darknesse. 3. Coldnesse. Which we call, 1. Disobedience. 2. Ignorance. 3. Malice.

Therefore not the celestiall Angels, which have purity of substance, perfection of knowledge, and burning charity; but the naturall man, which is filthy by reason of his sinne; darke, by reason of his ignorance; and cold, by reason of his malice, hath most need of fire,

What the fire of Christ doth.

1. To purifie his soule from sinne.
2. To illuminate his understanding from errour.
3. To inflame his heart with love; and so the fire of Christ doth; for if by fire you understand love and zeale, this will cleanse our soules from all filthinesse; for, if we love God, we will keepe his commandements, and the zeale of Gods house will eat up all the drosse that is in us; if by this fire we understand the Word of God and the Spirit of truth, these will lead us into all truth, and we shall not walk in darknesse, because his Word is a lanterne unto our feet, and a light unto our paths: and if by this fire we understand afflictions, then will they do all these: for Ioh.14.15.& v.23.

Psal.119.

What afflictions do.

1. Afflictions will drive us away from sinne, as the Prophet David sheweth, before I was afflicted I went wrong, but now I have learn'd thy judgements.

1. Drive us from sinne. Psal.119.

2. Oculos quos culpa claudit, pœna aperit, the eyes which sinne hath shut, punishment hath opened, as S. Gregory saith, and as we see it in the sonnes of Iacob, who, when they were afflicted, could say one to another, We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soule, when he besought us, and we would not heare, therefore is this distresse come upon us.

2. Open our eyes. Gen.42.1.

3. As pride and abundance make us to scarne and disdaine one another, so afflictions will teach every man Queene Dido's lesson,

3. To pitie others. Virg. Æneid.l.1.

Haud ignara mali miseris succurrere disco.

To commiserate all those that are in trouble; because common calamities are the best tutors of pitie and commiseration: therefore Christ sends troubles and afflictions unto his Church, to make the members of the Church charitable one towards another. And although the Divell sends the same, yet herein they differ; Satan sends his fire to consume us, as the traytours on this day, to destroy us: but

God

God ſends it to cheriſh us, and to let us ſee, that as many ſweet ſhowers are exhaled out of the ſalt and brackiſh ſeas, ſo the power and wiſdome of God extracts much grace and goodneſſe out of our troubles and afflictions; and if he did not ſuffer ſome evill to be done, we ſhould want much good, that we receive: becauſe the evills that he ſuffereth, doe alwayes produce ſome good effects, as this dayes treaſon hath, and will bring many dayes praiſes unto God. And if you would know the reaſon of this point of Gods providence; I anſwer, that Salomon ſaith, the lockes of the ſpouſe are curled, and his haire blacke as a raven; and if you wonder why his haire ſhould be ſo blacke, when himſelfe is the faireſt amongſt the ſonnes of men, you muſt note, they are curled and intortled, ſo that we cannot ſearch into the reaſon of it; and ſo the wayes of God herein are good, but they are paſt our finding out.

God converteth our evill to much good.

Cant. 5. 11.

Rom. 11. 33. Pſal. 77. 19.

And ſo you ſee, how wonderfull God is in all his works, and how he doth all his wonders for the love and good of man; O that men would therefore praiſe the Lord for his goodneſſe, and ſhew the wonders that he doth for the childeen of men! And by this you may know, whether you have the celeſtiall or the infernall fire reſiding in your ſoules; for if your zeal be blind, if your hearts be malicious, if your ſpirits be proud, you may eaſily know with what fire you are inflamed: but if you be ready to forgive, willing to obey, and patient in your ſufferings, then (no doubt) the fire of God remaineth in you, and will burne up all the droſſie affections of your earthly bodies, that you may be like pure gold, to make veſſels for Gods honour, and to be honoured with him in his kingdome: Into which kingdome, the Lord of his infinite goodneſſe bring us, thorough Ieſus Chriſt our Lord, to whom be glory and dominion, both now and for evermore.

Amen.

IEHOVÆ LIBERATORI.

THE NECESSITIE OF REPENTANCE.

Luke 13.5.

I tell you, Nay: but except yee repent, yee shall all likewise perish.

OVr blessed Lord and Saviour Iesus Christ, that knew best his Fathers minde, saith, ô Ierusalem Ierusalem, how often would I have gathered thy children, as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings? at sundry times and in divers manners, he perswadeth us to lay hold upon our offered happinesse, by secret inspirations, open and often vocations, intreatings, threatnings, mercies, judgements, on others, on our selves, by all meanes to win us to himselfe; and when he seeth nothing will availe to make us good, then I beseech you marke, how he seemes to bewaile our miseries, saying, ô that my people would have hearkned unto me, and that Israel would have walked in my waies; I should soone have put downe their enemies and turned my hands against their adversaries: I should have fed them with the finest wheat-flower, and with honey out of the hard rocke would I have satisfied them.

Mat. 23.37. & v 34 huius Cap. Luk. 13.

Psal. 81.14, 15, 16, 17.

And therfore, from a God so earnestly indeavouring our good, and so much lamenting our evills, I could never be induced to imagine, any positive induration of our hearts, or any primative and causeless negation of any requested grace, should proceed, till the most froward averseness of our corrupted natures, had so willfully refused the intended and the offered meanes of our salvation; for as the Prophet saith, What could the Lord doe more for his vineyard? what more to save man, unless, contrary to his divine dispensation, he would use his absolute and irresistible power, to pull man into heaven in despight of his heart? For first, he useth all the faire meanes in the world, to allure them to accept his grace, he gives them beneficia nimis copiosa, multa & magna; and when they have despised his blessings and trampled his benefits under feet, then he saith, well, hac non successit alia alia aggrediemur via. Terent: this way doth not ſucceed, I will take another courſe; I will viſit their iniquities with the rod, and their ſinnes with ſcourges; I will fill their faces with confuſion, and then perhaps they will ſeeke unto my name.

God no positive Author of induration.

Esay 5.4.

Pſal. 89. 32.

And becauſe he takes no pleaſure in the deſtruction of the living, no nor in the correction of his creatures, to inflict puniſhment, being not primarily eſſentiall, but as it were adventitiouſly impoſed on God, by his juſtice, for our ſins: therefore he proceedeth alwaies, a minori ad majus; and firſt he will but ſhew the rod and threaten, yet forty daies, and Ninive ſhall be deſtroyed, and except ye doe repent, you ſhall periſh: and if this will not doe; then as a tender Father, he will turne his face againſt others and begin to chide his ſervants, and perhaps whip them too, to ſee if this will amend his ſonnes, and make them alieno periculo cautos; quia afflictio aliorum dat nobis intellectum; & pœna non ſolum afflictis ſed etiam ſpectantibus ſæpenumero prodeſſe ſolet; for, as the beames of of fire confected out of the exhalations of the earth, and lifted up among other vapours in the aire, though, after the breaking thereof, it falls and lightens in one part alone, yet it frightneth and ſtrikes a terror into moſt of the inhabitants of that region; ſo pœna in paucos, the calamity of one or few men, ſhould terrifie all, and keepe them all backe from ſinne; and if this will not ſerve, then he will lay on the gentle corrections of croſſes, and afflictions, to awaken us out of our dead ſleepe of ſecurity; and if, with the Iewes, when he ſtriketh us we will not ſorrow, when he layeth on ſtripes, we ſhed no teares, then will he lay on ſeven times more for our tranſgreſſions, and as Ioab never deſiſted his ſiege againſt Abell, till he ſaw the head of Sheba throwne over the wall, ſo will he never leave to puniſh us, till we cut off the heads of our ſinnes, or be conſumed and cut in peeces for our tranſgreſſions; for except we repent we ſhall periſh. And ſo, perditio tua ex te, our deſtruction is from our ſelves, not from our God, irremedily decreeing it, but from our owne froward and wilfull diſpoſitions, moſt ungraciouſly perpetrating ſo much evill, and ſo unperſwadably refuſing to accept the offered meanes of our owne ſalvation. And this Text is one ſpeciall meanes of the ſecond claſſis, which our Saviour uſeth to drive us towards our own happineſſe: a moſt fearefull commination of a ſudden deſtruction, if we labour not to prevent the ſame, by a ſerious and a ſpeedy repentance; for except you repent you ſhall periſh.

The afflictions of others are inſtructions for us.

2 Sam. 20. 21.

The maine ſcope of the Text.

Two things contained in the words.

And the words containe two ſpeciall things.

1. A demonſtrative ſolution of a ſecret and doubtfull ſuppoſition, of ſome people, that came to Chriſt, and told him of the Galileans, whoſe blood Pilate mingled with their Sacrifices.

2. A moſt excellent application of his anſwer, unto their preſent ſtate and condition; except ye doe repent, &c.

1. Of the ſlaughter of the Galileans.

1. Touching the ſlaughter of theſe Galileans, Saint Luke onely doth relate the ſtory, and ſo thoſe eighteene, upon whom the tower in Siloam fell, are not mentioned by any author, either divine or humane, but only by S. Luke, and yet S. Luke tells us not where, nor why, nor yet when Pilat committed this ſlaughter.

Joſephus l. 2. c. 8.

Suidas referreth this Hiſtory to that, which Ioſephus writeth, l. 2. c. 8. how Pilate, with a band of men ſlew many, wounded more, and put all to flight, when the people made a commotion about their treaſure, which they called Corban, but theſe were in Ieruſalem, not in Galilee, and they were ſlaine making an hurly-burly in the ſtreets, and not ſacrificing in the Temple, as Maldonate, out of Ioſephus, rightly collecteth.

Das ex tribunali ſignum, confeſtim cædebantur Iudæi, quorum multi perierunt plagis, multi vero ſe invicem trucidantes in fugam miſere contritione verſi ſunt.

Ioſephus and Hegeſippus ſay, it was done at Mount Garizim, in the village Tarathaba, where Iudas Galileus had appointed all the people to meete him, to make head againſt the Romane governement; becauſe they exacted tribute, which Iudas denied to bee due unto them; and Pilate, underſtanding their plot, prevented their deſigne and put them all to death, before they could effect their deſire.

But

But the Greeke interpreters of this place, Euthymius, Theophylact, Oecumen. Saint Cyrill, and others ſay, that Iudas Galilens taught, it was not lawfull for the ſervants to call any man Lord, but onely God, and therefore that they ought not to ſacrifice, or to pray for the life of the Emperour; and for this cauſe Pilate, under pretence of knowing their myſteries, as Hegeſippus ſaith, came, when they were ſacrificing, and, as Saint Luke ſaith, cauſed them all to be put unto the ſword, and ſo mingled their blood with their ſacrifices; this was the cauſe of their deſtruction.

What the Greeke interpreters ſay was the cauſe of their death.

But why this people came now, and told this to Chriſt, Saint Luke doth not relate; therefore

Why the people tell this ſtory now to Chriſt.

Maldonate ſaith it was done, non alia cauſa quam quia nova, for none other cauſe, then that it was new, as when Iohn Baptiſt was beheaded, they came and told the ſame to Chriſt; becauſe they thought every man to be ſomewhat an Athenian, deſirous to heare newes.

1. As newes. Maldon. in hunc loc. Act. 17. 21.

But others ſay, they told it not as newes; becauſe this ſedition of Iudas Galileus, of whom, as Stella ſaith, this place is generally underſtood, was donne, at leaſt, above thirty yeeres before this time, as Ioſephus writeth; and therefore they conclude, it was either out of curioſity, to know why God ſuffered this to be done, as when the Apoſtles came unto him, and ſaid, Maſter, who hath ſinned, this man or his parents, that he was borne blind? or els out of malignity and hatred to the Galileans, whom they held moſt deteſtable, as when they ſaid, can any good come out of Galilee.

2. Out of curioſity Didacus Stellas in hunc loc.

Iohn 9. 2.

So this relation was, either out of vanity, or curioſity, or malignity; the firſt was bad, the ſecond worſe, and the third worſt of all; becauſe it reflected upon Chriſt, which was a Galilean, and whom, by this meanes, they thought to abaſe, to obſcure his worth, and to vilifie his excellency, though no waies from the indignity of his perſon, but from the baſeneſſe of his countrey; All ſheweth the corruption of our nature, how vaine we be in our ſelves, when toyes, newes, and trifles bee the chiefeſt of our deſires; and yet we muſt ſearch into the moſt ſecret counſells, and deepeſt myſteries of God; what he doth, and why he doth it, or why he leaves the ſame undone; and for all this, every man deemes himſelfe beſt, and others moſt odious in the ſight of God; becauſe the eye of man lookes forward, and ſo ſoone eſpieth the faults of others, but doth never retroverſe it ſelfe to behold it ſelfe, unleſſe it be in a glaſſe, which is the law of God, that reflects all our ſight upon our ſelves, and ſheweth to every man what he is, in his right colours.

3. Out of malignity Ioh. 1. 46. & c. 7. 52.

The corruption of our nature.

Why we ſee not our owne faults.

Therefore our Saviour Chriſt, not regarding with what mind they came to him, but as his Father heareth our prayers, non ad voluntatem ſed ad utilitatem, ſo doth he anſwer them, not to ſatisfie their deſires, but for the ſalvation of their ſoules: And it ſeemes by his anſwer, that they ſuppoſed theſe Galileans to be greater ſinners then all others; becauſe they had ſo heavily felt the hand of juſtice, not onely to be ſlaine, but to be ſuddenly ſlaine, and then ſlaine, when they ſacrificed unto God; as if God would thereby ſignifie, that neither themſelves, nor their gifts, were any waies acceptable unto him, but rejected as moſt odious, and delivered as moſt guilty to be puniſhed, and put to death, by their cruell & malicious enemies; a moſt fearefull caſe: ſo fraile is mans judgement, to judge of the judgements of God; onely according to the outward appearance; but Chriſt tells them, nay; it is not ſo with God, that he ſhould alwaies lay the heavieſt puniſhments, in this life, upon the greateſt ſinners; for whom he loves he chaſtens, & bos mactandus liber ibit ad paſcua; and the oxe, reſerved for the ſlaughter, ſhall freely goe to the beſt paſture; Becauſe the time of retribution, to every man according to his workes, is not in this life, but in the next, when indeed the greateſt offendors ſhall beare the greateſt torments: therefore Iob, ſpeaking of the wicked, ſaith, ducunt in bonis dies ſuos, they ſpend their daies in wealth, and as the Prophet David ſaith, They flouriſh like the greene bay tree, they have all things at their deſire, and the rod of God is farre from them.

What the Iewes thought of theſe Galileans.

That God deales not with men, as we many times thinke he will.

Heb. 12. 6. Gregorius in moral.

Revel. 20. 13.

Iob 21. 13.

Pſal 37. 36.

Iob 21. ver. 9.

Ob. But you will ſay, it was not ſo with theſe; becauſe the hand of vengeance lighted on them, when Pilate mingled their blood with their sacrifice.

Chrysost. to. 3. Ser. 1 de penitent.

Sol. I answer that many supposed it a blessing, to be suddenly dispatched of life, and a misery to be detained with any long disease; therefore Saint Hierom against Iovinian, and Saint Chrysostome doe say, that the Massegets and Derbits doe esteeme them most miserable, that die with any tedious sickness; and therefore the youth and abler sort doe strangle their parents and kinsfolke, when they are old, rather then they will suffer them to languish till they die; and it may be the Prophet David alludeth hereunto, when speaking of the wicked reprobates, he saith, non esse ligamenta in morte eorum, sed sanam esse fortitudinem eorum, there are no bands in their death, but their strength is firme, as our last translation reads it, and which Stella expoundeth of their death in their full strength; and Iob seemes to approve it in some sort, when he counteth his owne tedious sickness, as a great misery, and reckoneth the sudden death of the wicked among their blessings, at least wise in their judgements, when he saith, in puncto ad infernum descendunt, that is, they descend in a moment unto the grave, as the best Authors doe understand it, and the context makes it plaine, and our last translation doth so render it; because he prosecuteth their felicity from their cradle to their grave, they live at ease, and they die without sorrowes, quia non ut boni, longa ægritudine discruciantur, sed in momento descendunt ad infernum; because they are not in trouble as other folke, neither are they plagued like other men, that is, with any tedious disease, but are lusty and strong at their death, when they doe suddenly consume away like a dreame.

How some accounted sudden death a blessing.

Psal. 73. 4. & 5 ver.

Iob 21. 13.

Psal. 73. 5. & 18.

But indeed, decipimur specie recti; for that, which should be for their advantage, is to the wicked an occasion of falling, the prosperity of fooles slayeth their soules, and as Saint Gregory saith, mala quæ sancti patiuntur, ad Deum ire compellunt; therefore though sudden death bee a lessening of paine, and so a kind of mercy, as Seneca saith, yet many times it deprives us of the time of repentance, so a judgement, and a fearefull judgement too, to be praid against, that the Lord would deliver us from it, as our Lyturgie teacheth us; yet, because no death can be sudden to him, that is alwaies ready; and death comes amisse in no place, to him that doth expect it in every place; therefore wee can judge no man miserable, because we deeme him to have died miserably: for our Saviour tells us plainely, that although these suffered heavie punishments, yet they were not the greatest sinners; but many others, though they were not folded in the same sinnes, yet were they taynted with the like, or perhaps more and greater faults.

Sudden death a judgement to bee prayed against.

No death sudden to the godly.

That we should not rashly judge of men by their death.

Therefore this should teach us, not to judge of the judgements of God, nor to censure our brethren according to their outward sufferings; but as the Poet saith, Persius Satyr. 1.

Tecum habita, ut noris quam sit tibi curta supellex,

Mat. 7. 5.

And as our Saviour saith, pull the beame out of thine owne eye, then shalt thou see cleerely to pull out the moate, that is in thy brothers eye. And so much for the solution of their supposition.

2. What they thought of themselves.

Selfe-love a common fault.

2. As they thought these Galileans, to be most odious in the sight of God, and so worthie of this fearefull death; so they thought themselves most holy, free from all fault, and worthy of all favour; a vice no lesse common, but of more danger, then the former; to be blinded with this φιλαυτία, the too much love of our owne worth; therefore ut bina venena juvent, as he had confuted their unjust supposition of their neighbours vices, so that their false opinion of their owne vertues, might redound to their profit; hee tells them plainely, except you repent, you shall all likewise perish. Wherein two things are to bee observed;

Two things to be observed.

1. Touching the Galileans.
2. Touching the Messengers.

} For

1. Of the Galileans.

1. Here is an approbation of their punishment, though no justification of the punisher; because our Saviour doth not say, they were no sinners, therefore he denieth denieth not the equity of their puniſhment; but he ſaith, they were not the greateſt ſinners; therefore others deſerved the like as well as they.

And this ſheweth how acceptable unto God is the puniſhment of evill doers; contrary to them, which thinke it piety to ſpare offendors, and many times, to pull off bloody murderers out of the hands of juſtice, which is the cauſe that iniquity is multiplied above meaſure.

And further this giveth us to underſtand, how odious is ſedition and rebellion in the ſight of God; for theſe men ſuffering for their ſedition, for denying tribute unto Cæſar, and refuſing to pray for the health of the Emperor, and our Saviour approving their puniſhment for theſe faults, doth plainely ſhew that, as Samuel ſaith, rebellion is as the ſinne of witch-craft.

And laſtly this teacheth us to underſtand the ougly ſhape and the bittter fruit of ſinne, the ſhortning of our life, and the unmercifull bringing of our death without delay. The Philoſophers indeed confeſſed the vanity, and deplored the brevity of mans life; for Cicero ſaith, confer noſtram longiſſimam ætatem cum æternitate, & in eadem propemodum brevitate, qua illa beſtiolæ, quæ hemerobioi dicuntur, reperiemur, if we ſhould compare our longeſt life with eternity, we ſhall find the ſame to be ſo ſhort, as the time of thoſe little beaſts, hemerobioi, whoſe age is not more then thoſe, whereof Ariſtotle ſpeaketh, that live but one day: and Seneca ſaith, punctum eſt quod vivimus & adhuc puncto minus, our life is but a moment, or indeed leſſe then a moment; and therefore the daies of man are compared to the wind, that paſſeth away and commeth not againe, to a weavers ſhuttle, to a bubble of water, to a cloud, to a ſhaddow, to a dreame, to a thought, or to any other thing that periſheth in the conception, and is forgotten, aſſoone as it is delivered; So the Heathens found man, in his greateſt glory, to be but a ſmoaking vanity, that aſcendeth high and ſcattereth it ſelfe preſently; Yet all the Schoole of Athens could never find out the true cauſe, nor preſcribe the right remedy of this univerſall diſeaſe; for they onely found how we were all generally inſnared in this net, but they knew not how we came ſo miſerably intangled.

But my Text diſcovers the roote of this bitter herbe, to be nothing els but ſin; for that was the firſt introducer of death; and ever ſince, the more ſins we doe commit, the more we haſten our owne death; becauſe as the Wiſe man ſaith, The feare of the Lord increaſeth thy daies, but the yeeres of the wicked ſhall bee diminiſhed; and the Prophet David ſaith, The blood-thirſty and deceitfull men ſhall not live out halfe their daies; for ſin is an epitomizer or ſhortner of every thing; it conſumes our wealth, it confines our liberty, it impeacheth our health, and it abbreviateth our life, and brings us ſpeedily unto our graves.

Ob. Yet againſt this it may be objected, that as Iob ſaith, the daies of man are determined, and the number of his moneths are with God, who hath appointed his bounds, which he cannot paſſe; therefore vertue cannot prolong, and ſinne cannot ſhorten the leaſt jot of our determinate time.

Sol. To this we may rightly and briefely anſwer with Piſcator, that the terme of mans life is twofold, { 1. Supernaturall. 2. Naturall.

1. Supernaturall, as it is decreed from above, in the foreſight and determination of God, which doth not alwaies agree with the naturall; and thus, as Marianus ſaith, a prima die pender extrema, & in ortu ſanxit quantum quisq; victurus eſt; the laſt day depends upon the firſt, and at our birth, yea before we were conceived, God hath concluded how long every man ſhould live, as he that foreſeeth as well the waies that we would goe, as the end, which thoſe waies would bring us to.

2. Naturall, which a man may attaine unto by his naturall ſtrength, unleſſe he doth neglect the meanes, or ſhorten his owne dayes, by ſome unlawfull deeds; and thus the godly may be ſaid to prolong their daies, when by their upright life, they have the aſſiſtance of the divine clemency, to produce them to the furtheſt period, that their naturall ſtrength could carrie them; ſo Abraham lived

The former doctrine teacheth three things.

1. The equity of their puniſhment.

2. The odiouſneſſe of rebellion.

1 Sam. 15.23.

3. The bitter fruits of ſin.

Cicero in Tuſcul. Quæſt. l. 1. ἀμερόβιοι. i. unius diei vita plin. l. 11. c. 36. Ariſtot de nat. animal. l. 5. c. 19. Rapta velut venti vox irrevocabilis ætas, aut quaſi collocuto fabula vita fugit, ſeptenis decies homini prorogantur anni, ſi ſpacioſa fuit iſta bis octo ætas. Maxima pars huius labor eſt & plena dolorum, iam celeri motu præcipitata volat. Fridericus Widebramus.

Sin the author of death and the ſhortner of life.

Pro. 10. 27.

Pſal. 55. 23.

Pro 6 26. 2 Chron. 23. 10, 18 Ioh. 5. 14.

Iob 14. 5.

The terme of our life twofold. Piſcator. in Pſal. 55. 23.

1. Supernaturall.

Marianus in Iob 14. 5.

2. Naturall.

Gen.25.8.

to a good old age, and ſo divers of Gods Saints became old men and full of yeeres: and thus the wicked may be rightly ſaid to ſhorten his owne daies, when for his impiety, the divine hand of heaven doth abridge that ample time, which hee might have lived, and when, according as he determined from the beginning, when he foreſaw his waies, he doth meaſure his life with a ſhorter line, then the ſtrength of nature would have done: ſo laſcivious Zimri was cut off for his ſinnes in the midſt of his age, ſo the Old world, ſo the Sodomites, ſo theſe Galileans, ſo all thoſe ſinners, that doe provoke the hand of God to uſe the ſword of juſtice, to cut them off for their Murders, Robberies, and the like; and ſo the wanton Onans, roaring Duellers, Drunkards, and all others, that are looſe in their lives and diſorderly in their diets or behaviours, may be ſaid to be cut off each one of them, in die non ſuo, before his day; that is, before that day, ad quem per naturam, juxta hominum opinionem pervenire poterat, to which nature, in the judgement of all men, might have brought him to, if he had not prevented the ſame by his unſeaſonable death, vel gladio, vel morbo, vel aliqua alia cauſa violenta, morte non ſua, either by the ſword, or diſeaſe, or ſome other violent cauſe, as Mercerus ſaith.

Num.25.14.

Exiguo vivat ve-ſanus tempore ſoſpes;
Quis, Deum ſpernat, ſic velut umbra cadet.
Marian. in Eccleſ.
8.13. Iob 15.32.

Mercerus in Iob 14 5.

And therefore this ſhould teach us all, to hate this tyrant ſinne, which hath ſhut us out of Paradiſe, will exclude us out of heaven, and thruſt us downe quicke to hell, and doth now deprive us of Gods favour, load us with all miſeries, fill us with all diſeaſes, and ſhorten our daies here on earth. Yet behold the vanity of a wretched man, behold the ſimplicity of a vaine man; that, rather then he will foregoe the ſight of a play, the luſt of his fleſh, the faſhion of the world, or perhaps the wagging of his feather, that ſheweth the levity of his minde, he will undergoe ſo inſupportable a burthen and fall into ſo inevitable deſtruction; which makes me pittie him, though I cannot helpe him, unleſſe it be by the opening of the next point that followeth. And therefore

The miſchiefes of ſin.

2. Of the Meſſengers.

2. Touching the Meſſengers, our Saviour threatneth them with the like deſtruction, if they prevent not the ſame by ſpeedy repentance; A courſe that God alwaies uſeth with his ſervants, to give them warning before he commeth, and to threaten us before he beates us: and this is plaine in all the writings of the Prophets, as more apparently you may ſee it in Ieremy 36. by that roll of a booke, which was written full of threatnings; and in the law of grace, Chriſt treadeth in the ſame ſteps, as his Father had done in the law of workes; for as Ionas ſaid, yet forty daies and Ninive ſhall bee deſtroyed, ſo he that is greater then Ionas ſaith, except you repent you ſhall all likewiſe periſh.

The uſuall practice of God.

Ier.36.2.&c.

Ionah 3.4.

And the reaſon is, that although good natures are wonne by kindneſſes, and allured by faire promiſes, yet improbus a nullo flectitur obſequio, and the foole is never taught but with the rod; therefore, becauſe we are ſuch fooles and of ſuch froward diſpoſitions, as to ſwell with pride, when we are filled with bleſſings, God ſheweth us the roll, wherein woes, and curſes, and threatnings are written againſt us; and then, as the Princes of Iſrael, when they heard the words of the booke, were affraid both one and another; ſo all thoſe, that have any care of their ſalvation, will be affraid of Gods judgements; & quia majori dolore injuria, quam honor nos afficit voluptate, magisq; morbus fatigat, quam delectat ſanitas; and becauſe injurie doth more vex us, then honour and reſpect doe delight us, and the feare of hell doth oftner keepe us from evill, then the love of heaven doth make us good, this courſe is very availeable with many men, and winnes many a ſoule unto God. And therefore this ſheweth

The reaſon of Gods proceeding

Pro.10.13.& cap. 26.3.

Ier.36.16.

What the former doctrine ſheweth.

1. The mercy of God.

Ezek.18.32. Exod.4.3.& c 7. 10

1. The great mercy of God, uſing all meanes, as well the poyſon of puniſhments, as the honey of his bleſſings, the ſharpe wine, as the ſmooth oyle, to cure our wounds; for he deſireth not the death of any ſinner, or if he did, he would never have turned Moſes rod into a Serpent, to fright us, but rather into a Beare or a Lyon, to devoure us.

2. The wiſedome of the Church.

2. This ſheweth the great wiſedome of the Primitive Church, by the threatnings and the curſes of Gods law, denounced on Aſhwedneſday, to bring men to re-repentance, and then by the works of penance, faſting, praying, watchings, teares and the like humiliation of the body, all the Lent after, to prepare us for the Goſpell, to ſimpathize with Chriſt in his Paſſion, that we might happily partake with him of glory at his Reſurrection.

3. This condemneth them, that would have nothing but Goſpell preached unto them; for Chriſt himſelfe, which is the ſumme and ſubſtance of the Goſpell, begins the ſame with the end of the Law, and ties theſe together with an indiſſoluble knot, repent and beleeve the Goſpell; for repentance, which the Prophets expreſſed by convertimini ad me, returne to me, is the conſummation of the Law, and faith in Chriſt is the perfection of the Goſpell; and yet here he ſaith, except you repent, you ſhall all likewiſe periſh. And therefore we muſt preach, as well repentance from dead workes, as, faith to beleeve in the living God. Indeed it is true, which Chryſologus ſaith, qui innocentiæ creditum ſervat, pœnitentiæ non ſolvit uſuram, he that walketh in his innocency, need not pay the intereſt of repentance; but ſeeing every ſonne of man (excepting Chriſt) hath plaid the unfaithfull ſervant with God, ferat amaram pœnitentiæ curam, quia ſervare debitam noluit ſanitatem, let him ſeeke for the bitter cure of repentance, becauſe hee had no care of his former health, & currat pœnitentia, ne præcurrat ſententia, and let him judge himſelfe here, leſt God condemne him hereafter.

3. The folly of them that preach nothing but Goſpell.

Mark. 1. 15. Ioel 2. 12. Ezech. 18, 32. Ieremy 4. 1.

Heb. 6. 1.

Chryſol. de Iohan Baptiſ. Ser. 167.

Quia Deus non ſibi redire deſiderat, non perire Idem ibid.

But for the threatning it ſelfe, Except you repent, you ſhall all likewiſe periſh. Two things are principally to be conſidered.

Two things to be conſidered in the threatning.

1. The forme of ſpeech.
2. The ſubſtance of this ſpeech.

For

1. This forme of ſpeech, Except you doe repent, and the like, Come unto me, Open to me, Beleeve in me, Keepe my lawes; or, if you doe not theſe things, you ſhall periſh; beſides thoſe three things, which Saint Auguſtine ſaith wee may learne hereby, 1 quid potuiſti ante lapſum, 2 quid jam debes, 3 unde gratiam ad perficiendum petas; it doth ſufficiently ſhew unto us, that there is ſome thing, which man muſt doe, or he ſhall periſh for not doing the ſame; for Chriſt would never ſay theſe things to us to no end, as it is in vaine for me to ſay to theſe ſtones, remoove ye hence, or I will grinde you all to powder.

1. The forme of ſpeech.

What the precepts or commands of God do ſhew unto us.

Ob. But you will ſay, no man commeth to Chriſt, but whom the Father draweth, no man can beleeve, no man can repent, but they to whom God beſtoweth theſe gifts; for it is given to you to know the myſteries of the kingdome of heaven, and ſo to beleeve, ſaith Chriſt, and repentance is the gift of God, ſaith the Apoſtle, therefore it is not in our power to doe any of theſe.

Ioh. 6 44.

Mat 13. 11. Act. 5. 31. 2 Tim. 2. 25.

Sol. I anſwer, that it is moſt true; faith and repentance, and ſo all other graces, are not in our power to practice the ſame, when we will; but they are the gifts of God, and he muſt inſpirare, breath his graces into our hearts, as he breathed upon the Apoſtles, before we can ſuſpirare, breath out any one ſigh of ſorrow for our ſinnes; and he muſt powre out the waters of his ſpirit, upon the dry ground of our hearts, before our eyes can ſhed forth any one repentant teare for ſinne: for the ſpirit of God is in the heart of the godly, like unto a fire in a Still, that ſendeth up the dewes of grace, the teares that drop out of our eyes, the praiſes that proceed out of our mouthes, and all other vertues, that ſpring any waies from any of us: And therefore, as Moſes ſtroke the rocke and the waters guſhed out, ſo the Prophet ſaith, thou bloweſt with thy wind and the waters flow; till then, not one drop comes out; and Ezechiel ſaith, I will powre the ſpirit of grace upon the houſe of Iudah, and then they ſhall lament; and the Prophet Ieremy ſaith, Convert thou me, and I ſhall be converted, Ier. 31. 18. and the Lord himſelfe ſaith, perditio tua ex te, ſalus autem ex me; and in the Collect, on the ſecond Sunday in Lent, it is ſaid; Almighty God, which doſt ſee, that we have no power of our ſelves to helpe our ſelves.

Vide Alexand. Halenſ p. 4. q. 13. memb. 2. vello bonum, niſi gratiæ adminiculo non poſſumus. Aug. de grat. & lib. arbit.

The ſpirit in our hearts like fire in a ſtill.

Pſal. 147. 18.

Ezech. 12, 16.

Hieron. in Ier. c. 31 18.

Whereby you ſee, the Scripture, Fathers, and the Liturgy of our Church doe all plainely teach us, that it is not in us, of our ſelves, and from our ſelves to doe any one act of grace.

Where God looketh for fruits.

Yet this you muſt know, that when he blowes with his winde, he lookes that our waters ſhould then flow, when he powres out of his ſpirit, he lookes that we ſhould then produce the fruits of grace, and when hee hath quickned our dead hearts, he will then expect from us the motions of a ſpirituall life, to beleeve and repent, and ſo forth, or els we ſhall periſh; for, though he never calls any to account, for what he never delivered him; nor requires any more of any man, then according to what he gave him; as the Gentiles, which received not the Law on mount Sinay, ſhall not be condemned for the breach of the Decalogue, but as they are ingrafted in their hearts by nature; and thoſe infidells, which never heard ſo much as the name of Chriſt, ſhall not be accuſed, at the day of judgement, ſo much, for not beleeving in the Sonne of God, as for not releeving the ſonnes of men, not cloathing the naked, feeding the hungry, and the like workes of charity and juſtice, which their owne conſciences tell them continually they ſhould doe: and that man, to whom he gives but one talent, ſhall never be blamed for not gaining ten; but for not gaining any at all; the poore ignorant man, that was borne to till the ground or to feed his flocke, ſhall not be queſtioned, becauſe he cannot underſtand the ſubtilties of the Schooles, and the intricacies of all controverſies, but becauſe he is careleſſe in the grounds of his ſalvation, and remiſſe in performing the common duties of Chriſtianity; yet to whom he gave much, of them he will require much, to whom he gave the Law, they ſhall bee judged according to the Law; to whom he manifeſted the Goſpell of his Sonne, they ſhall be condemned, if they beleeve not the Goſpell, whom he hath made the teachers of others, he will looke that they ſhould be apt and able to teach, whom he calleth, he lookes that they ſhould anſwer, and whom he draweth, he lookes that they ſhould willingly follow after; quia trahit volentem, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith; for, though God worketh theſe things in us, yet he worketh them not without us, but there is a co-operation of man with every grace of God, to bring forth any effect that we doe acceptable unto God; or otherwiſe, there could be no reward to our actions, and it were to no purpoſe, to bid us doe thoſe things, wherein we had no hand, no manner of waies: and though in compound agents, as when the body and ſoule doe produce any one act, that act may indifferently be aſcribed to either of them; as we may ſay, the body moveth, though the body could never move, without the helpe of the ſoule; yet, as it is more proper to ſay, the knife cutteth, then the hand which moveth the knife; becauſe the effect is more properly to be aſcribed rather to the immediate, then to the remoteſt and aſſiſtant agent; ſo though we can doe, not the leaſt good act, no not to thinke a good thought, without the grace of God, yet are theſe acts commonly aſcribed to us, and we are commanded and injoyned to doe them, to beleeve, to repent, to obey, and the like; becauſe we are not onely thoſe immediate inſtruments, which the ſpirit of God uſeth to effect the ſame, but alſo thoſe co-operate agents, that together with Gods grace doe produce them all; and therefore when he would have us to doe theſe things, and we will not, we ſhall periſh; and that worthily; for, though that ground, which receives no raine, cannot ſo much be blamed for bringing forth no fruit; yet that earth, which drinketh in the raine that commeth oft upon it, and for all this beareth forth nothing els but thornes and bryers, is rejected, and is nigh unto curſing, whoſe end is to be burned: So, though the Gentiles and infidells, which know not God, and heard not ſo much as the name of Ieſus Chriſt, may have ſome excuſe to leſſen their offence, yet we, which are choſen for Gods inheritance, and which are a vineyard planted, hedged, dreſſed, and ſo well manured, that the Lord ſaith, What could I doe more to my vineyard, that I have not done? if inſteed of grapes, we bring forth wild grapes, inſteed of faith and repentance, wee bring forth infidelity and wickedneſſe, then, as our Saviour ſaith, we ſhall periſh; for Except you repent, you ſhall all likewiſe periſh.

Luk. 12, 48.
Rom. 2. 12.
Iohn 3. 18, 19.
2 Tim. 2, 24.
Eſay 65. 12. Pro. 1. 24. Cant. 5. 6.
Qui fecit te ſine te, non ſalvabit te ſine te. Aug.
How effects are aſcribed to agents
Heb. 6. 7. 8.
Eſay 5. 4. 7. 2.

Rom. 2. 15.
Mat. 25. 25, 27.
Mat. 25. 42. &c.

2. For the ſubſtance of the ſpeech, three things to be conſidered.

2. For the ſumme and ſubſtance of this ſpeech, theſe three ſpeciall things are to be obſerved.

1. The

1. The cauſe of our deſtruction, cloſely inſinuated, the want of repentance.
2. The prevention of our deſtruction plainely expreſſed, which is repentance.
3. The deſtruction it ſelfe, if it be not prevented, you ſhall all likewiſe periſh.

So here is the diſeaſe, the remedy, and the danger; the wound, the ſalve, and the miſchiefe, if the ſalve be not applied unto the ſore.

1. The cauſe of all miſeries is ſinne; for man ſuffereth for his ſinnes, and thou with rebukes doſt chaſten man for ſinne, ſaith the Prophet; ſo I could heape you a cloud of teſtimonies, Scriptures, Fathers, and reaſons to confirme this; but it is clearer than the day light; and yet our Saviour here doth not ſay, if you ſinne, you ſhall periſh; but if you repent not for your ſins, you ſhall periſh; ſo here is ſome comfort in the very cauſe of our miſeries, for if he had ſaid the firſt, we had been utterly and preſently undone, becauſe we do continually ſinne, the juſteſt man ſeven times a day; but the cauſe being, not repenting, we may conceive ſome hope, that although we did not yet repent, yet we may have the grace to repent.

1. The cauſe of miſeries is ſin.

Pſal. 39.12.

Not repenting the cauſe of our deſtruction.

Pro. 24. 16.

But you muſt note, the cauſe of our deſtruction is ſaid to be, the omiſſion of a duty, and not the commiſſion of any ſinne: which is alſo a ſinne of defect, though not properly of act.

Sinnes of omiſſion, how dangerous they be.

And therefore, think not, it is enough for you to ſay, I am no oppreſſour, no adulterer, no ſlanderer, and the like; for the barren tree ſhall be cut downe, not becauſe it brings forth poyſon, but becauſe it brings not good fruit; and God will condemne the wicked at the laſt day, not becauſe they robbed the poore, but becauſe they clothed not the naked; and here Chriſt ſaith, we ſhall periſh, not becauſe we have ſinned, but becauſe we have not repented for our ſinnes: Si igitur in ignem mittitur, qui non dedit rem propriam, ubi miſſurus eſt, qui tulit aliena? Wherefore I beſeech you, conſider this, all ye that forget God, if he ſhall be caſt into hell, which doth not good unto his neighbour, what ſhall become of him that doth oppreſſe him? If they ſhall periſh that omit ſome duties, where ſhall they appeare, that commit ſo many hainous offences? For except you repent you ſhall periſh.

Mat. 3.10. & c. 7.19

Mat. 25.42.

Ambroſius.

Pſal 50.22.

2. Having ſeene the cauſe of our deſtruction, the commiſſion of the leaſt ſinne, or the omiſſion of any duty, conſider the remedy, and that is, repentance; for we find no wayes in the world to pleaſe God, and by pleaſing him, to come to life, but onely two.

2. The remedy that preventeth our deſtruction twofold.

1. Perfect obedience to his Law.
2. Vnfained repentance for our ſinnes.

1. Obedience which Adam loſt.
2. Repentance, which we muſt find, or periſh.

The firſt, we loſt in Adam, and therefore now there is none left but the ſecond; this is the onely phyſicke that can recover our dying ſoules; I confeſſe it is γλυκύπικρον, a bitter-ſweet; Nam ſicut moleſtus eſt medicus furenti phrenetico, ita pater indiſciplinato filio, ille ligando, iſte cedendo; for as when the Chyrurgian binds the wound, the patient is very teſtie, ſo when the Phyſitian gives a pill, it is no wayes pleaſing to our taſt; but,

The nature of repentance.

Dulcia non meruit, qui non guſtavit amara,

And God brings light out of darkneſſe, ſweet out of ſowre, and life out of death; therefore be content a while; and then, as the pill, which was bitter in the taſte, will prove ſweet in the effect, ſo the doctrine of repentance, which is harſh to fleſh and bloud, will bring health and ſalvation unto your ſoules; for except you repent you ſhall periſh, but if you do repent, you ſhall not periſh; becauſe God deſireth not the death of a ſinner, but rather that he ſhould turne from his wickedneſſe and live; for if he delighted in our deſtruction, he might (and who could ſtop him) uſe martiall lawes againſt us, and, like Draco, write his lawes in bloud, and ſend his judgements amongſt us, whiles the ſinne is in our hearts, as he did to Nebuchadonozar; whiles the word was in his mouth; but when we have ſinned, and caſt our ſelves into the ſea, then doth he ſtretch forth his hand as he did

The fruit of repentance.

Ezek. 18.32. & c. 33.11.

Dan. 4.31.

Mat 14.31. Repentance a ſecond plank after ſhipwrack.

did unto S. Peter, and give us repentance, as a ſecond plank after ſhipwracke, as S. Hierom cals it, to bring us backe againe to him; and not onely ſo, but he gives us alſo the whole courſe of our life, to the very laſt houre, to lay hold on this planke; what could we have more? he gives us time to repent, till the very pronouncing of our judgement, to the parting of our ſoule, which is the firſt judgement of every man; and therefore, either we muſt wiſh there were no judge at all, ſo no God at all, to guide this whole world, which were a moſt miſerable thing to all poore and juſt men, and would bring all ſuddenly to confuſion, or we can wiſh no more than he gives us. And if ſo, then certainly, we can lay on God not the leaſt cauſe of our deſtruction, but, as the Prophet ſaith, perditio tua ex te; though the beginning and the ending, the inclination, progreſſion and perfection of our health is onely and wholly from God, yet our deſtruction is wholly and ſolely from our ſelves, that we will neither leave to ſinne, nor, when we have ſinned, accept the grace of repentance, till God is inforced by his juſtice to pronounce the ſentence of our condemnation.

The large time that God giveth us to repent.

Hoſ.13 9.

Repentance alone not ſufficient to ſave us. Ioh.3.36.& c.6.53

1 Cor.13.2.

Heb.12.14.

Object. I, but you will ſay, repentance is not ſufficient to ſave us; for our Saviour ſaith, Except you believe in the Sonne of God, you have no life in you; and except you eat my fleſh and drinke my bloud, you cannot have eternall life; and S. Paul ſaith, though we had all faith and all knowledge, yet if we have not charity, all will availe us nothing; and he ſaith againe, that we muſt follow peace and holineſſe, without which no man ſhall ſee God. Therefore repentance is not enough to prevent deſtruction.

Nothing is abſolutely evill.

Sol. I anſwer, that as there is a concatenation of vices among themſelves, and although no man can be perfectly wicked, quia non datur ſummum malum, becauſe the eſſence of every thing is good, and if we reſpect the relation, betwixt the chiefeſt being and no being, it is better there ſhould be a being of Divels, than their not being at all, though in reſpect of themſelves, it were better for them never to have been, as our Saviour ſaith of Iudas, It had beene good for him he had never beene borne; yet in the wicked there is the ſeed of all vices, and a proneneſſe to commit all wickedneſſe, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, that the gentiles were filled with all unrighteouſneſſe, that is, with the ſeed of all unrighteouſneſſe; ſo in the godly there is the ſeed of all vertues, and ſuch a connexion of graces, that although the moſt ſanctified man hath not the perfection of any one grace, yet hath he all in ſome reſpects, and in ſome meaſure; becauſe he deſires them all, and there is ſuch a dependancy of faith upon hope, of hope upon charity, and of all upon repentance, that the one cannot poſſibly ſubſiſt without ſome meaſure of the other, but, like Hypocrates twinnes, they muſt all die or live together, and therefore, whoſoever doth truly repent, he ſhall never periſh.

Mat.26.24. The ſeed of all vices in the wicked, Rom.1.29.

That there is a connexion of all vertues in a godly man.

But he muſt looke to the quality of his repentance; for as God puniſheth us in meaſure, juxta numerum criminum erit numerus plagarum, ſo our repentance muſt be anſwerable to our ſinnes; as Manaſſes made the ſtreets of Hieruſalem flow with bloud, ſo he made the priſon of Babylon ſwimme with teares; as S. Peter denied his maſter moſt cowardly, ſo he went out and wept moſt bitterly; as S. Paul perſecuted the Church more than any, ſo he laboured more than all; ſo muſt every great ſinner ſhew a great deale of repentance for his ſinnes.

Great ſinnes muſt be greatly repented. Num.14 34. 2 King. 21.16. 2 Chron.33.12,13 14,15,16. Mat.26.74.& v.75. Acts 8.3. 1 Cor.15.10.

And although God giveth us all the time of our life to repent, and as Popilius the Roman Legat, when he was ſent to Antiochus, made a circle round about the King, and bade him make his anſwer before he went out of it, ſo God incircleth us with the compaſſe of few dayes, and chargeth us to repent before we finiſh thoſe dayes; yet becauſe this time of life is both very ſhort, and very uncertaine; for as the Poet ſaith,

Nathan Chytræus ex triumph. Poetico

Bulla paluſtris homo, ventus, flos pulveris, umbra:
Incipit & ceſſat, naſcitur & moritur.

Therefore the Prophet ſaith, Palmares dediſti dies meos, thou haſt made my dayes like a ſpan long, ideſt, parvos, breveſq;, ut menſura quatuor digitorum ad ſe junctorum, quæ eſt minima; that is, very few and very ſhort, as it were the length of foure

foure fingers, which is but very little, or the leaſt meaſure that can be ſaith Rabbi David in l. radicorum Santes Pagn. in Topach. and Seneca ſaith, quem dies veniens vidit ſuperbum, hunc dies fugiens vidit jacentem, whom the morning ſaw ſtout and ſtrong, the evening ſaw him dead upon the ground; as among many others, the ſtory of Manius Acilius may well put us in minde of the ſhortneſſe of our life, and of the uncertainty of this world; for he that, a little before, was the beſt of the Romane Embaſſadors, and the chiefeſt cauſe of that warre with Mithridates, is ſuddenly taken, and then baſely carried upon an aſſe, and ſcoffingly ſhewed to all paſſengers, this is Manius, and at Pergamo put to death, by powring the molten gold into his mouth, to reprove the inſatiable covetouſneſſe of the Romanes. Therefore wee ſhould exhort one another, and turne every man to God, while it is called to day.

Appian p. 13. de bello Mithridat.

Heb. 3. 13.

Indeed many thinke of their repentance before their death, as divers doe ridiculouſly thinke of making their Wills, that if they make their Wills in their health, it is an ominous preſage of a ſpeedy death, and becauſe moſt men make not their Wills till they die, therefore they muſt needs die, if they make their Wills, which prevents many men from any Will; ſo divers men thinke of repentance; that becauſe moſt men make it a death-bed duty, therefore to doe this duty, will haſten them to their death; whereby fearing it in their life, they are denied it at their death; quia non facile inveniuntur in adverſitate præſidia, quæ non fuerunt in pace quæſita, as Saint Auguſtine ſpeaketh; and therefore, to day, if you will heare his voice, harden not your hearts; but ſay with the Prophet David, Have mercy upon me, ô God, according to thy loving kindneſſe, and according to the multitude of thy compaſſions doe away mine offences: Create a new heart in me, ô Lord, and renue a right ſpirit within me; and herein take heed thou diſſembleſt not with God, as Saint Auguſtine himſelfe confeſſeth he ſometimes did, when he ſaid, da mihi caſtitatem, & continentiam, ſed noli modò; quia timebam; ne me citò exaudires, & citò ſanares a morbo concupiſcentiæ, quam malebam expleri quam extingui; give me the gift of chaſtity and continency, ô Lord, but not yet; becauſe I was afraid he ſhould heare me too ſoone, and ſhould too ſoone heale me from the diſeaſe of my luſt and concupiſcence, which, as yet, I deſired ſhould be fullfilled rather then extinguiſhed; for if thou deſireſt God to give thee a penitent heart, and a cleane ſoule, and yet thou hadſt rather wallow in thy ſinnes, and adhere unto thy luſt, then be reconciled to thy God, thou maiſt take heed, leſt God be doubly angry with thee, firſt, for the committing of ſuch ſinnes, and then for diſſembling with thy God, who ſeeth thy heart contrary to thy words, and knoweth that although thou askeſt grace, yet thou doſt delight in ſinne; and therefore, let our deſires be unfained, and let the time of our returning to God be preſent, let us ſay with the Father; Deo ſervire ſtatui, & hoc ex hac hora, & in hoc loco aggredior; I have reſolved to ſerve my God, and I doe begin at this houre, and in this very place; I will not deferre it till anon, I will not referre it to my chamber, but I will doe it now, I will doe it heere; becauſe, as the Poet ſaith, ſemper nocuit differre paratis, and as Saint Bernard ſaith, non illuceſcet ei dies craſtina, cui non illuxit hodierna, hee may feare to miſſe repentance to morrow, which hath not ſought the ſame to day; which made Saint Auguſtine to crie out, quamdiu cras, quamdiu cras? quare non modò, quare non hac hora finis turpitudinis meæ? how long ſhall I ſay, I will repent to morrow? and why not to day, why not even now, why not at this inſtant, to put a period to my wickedneſſe?

How men put of their repentance.

Pſal. 51. 1.

Pſal. 51. 10.

Aug. confeſſ. l. 8. cap. 7.

How ſome doe pray, for what they doe not deſire.

Diſſembling with God moſt dangerous.

You have heard of repentance in the groſſe, you muſt take a little of it by retaile; and though Saint Ambroſe ſaith, repentance is mala præterita plangere, & plangenda iterum non committere, to bewaile our ſins paſt, and to commit the ſame no more; quia inanis eſt pœnitentia, quam ſequens culpa coinquinat; Yet the whole Schoole of Divines ſay, there bee three ſpeciall parts of true repentance.

Politianus de Antonio. Sed mora damnoſa eſt, nec res dubitare remittit, dum ſupereſt aliquid, cuncti coeamus ad illum. Ovid. ait ad arma. Metamor. l. 11.

Aug. confeſſ. l. 8. c. 12.

Pet. Bleſenſ. in quod. Ser. 10. Alexand. Halen. p. 4. q. 16. par 10. Bonavent. in compend. theologiæ. c. 23.

1. Contrition

1. Contrition of heart.
2. Confeſſion of mouth.
3. Satisfaction of workes.

1. Of contrition. Pſal. 51.19.

The firſt is ſo acceptable unto God, that the Prophet ſaith, A broken and a contrite heart ô God thou wilt not deſpiſe; but you muſt know, that the contrite heart doth never walke in the pride of life, becauſe the ſorrowfull ſoule takes more delight in teares, faſtings, and prayers, then in all the toyes and vanities of this world; therefore the penitent Saints did ſit in ſackcloth, and beſprinkled themſelves with aſhes, and many times tearing their beſt clothes; becauſe their ſinnes had made a breach betwixt them and God; and Saint Cyprian ſaith truly, non reſipiſcunt iſtæ mulieres, quæ Chriſti indumenta negligunt & ſua ornamenta quærunt; for the beſt Saints were moſt plentifull, not in painting of their faces with proud Ieſabel, but in ſhedding teares for ſinne with Mary Magdalen: and no marvell; for if we beleeve the Philoſopher, teares are hot and moiſt, ſalt and wet, bitter and ſweet; but to what end the Divine anſwereth; hot, to warme the cold conſcience; moiſt, to mollifie the hard heart of an impenitent ſinner; ſalt, to ſeaſon the ſoule that putrifieth in ſinne; wet, to cleanſe that mind, which is defiled with iniquity; bitter, to weane us from the vanities of this world; and ſweet, to turne all our outward ſorrowes into inward joyes: and another compares the flood of teares unto the river, that we read of in Cicilia, where, if the blackeſt ſheepe be bathed, they will preſently become white; ſo if we bath our ſinnes in teares, though before, they were as red as ſcarlet, yet immediately they ſhall be made as white as ſnow; Therefore, though I know ſome may truly repent, when they can no more wring a teare from their eyes, then the blood from their heart, becauſe ſometimes cure leves loquuntur ingentes ſtupent, ſmall griefe doth ſpeake, and the greater ſorrow doth amaze us; yet I muſt adviſe all to doe their beſt, to weepe and howle for their ſinnes, and if they can with David, to water their couch with their teares; for as Pharaohs daughter, when ſhee deſcended into the river, did finde a babe among the flags, ſo when we bathe our ſelves in the river of repentant teares, we ſhall find that ſweet babe Chriſt Ieſus, which ſhall wipe away all teares from our eyes; but if we weepe not here, we ſhall weepe the more hereafter; becauſe, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith, aut continui dolores cruciabunt panitentem vitam meam, aut cruciatus æterni vexabunt panitendam animam meam; either continuall teares and ſorrowes muſt afflict my penitent life in this world, or els eternall torments ſhall vexe my damned ſoule in the world to come; therefore, ſeeing we muſt weepe or we ſhall periſh, ô good God, grant that my head may be full of water, and mine eyes a fountaine of teares, that I may weepe day and night, to eſcape that weeping, which is with gnaſhing of teeth.

The properties of teares.

The flood of teares like the river Brecho in Cicilia.

Eſay 1.18.

Iames 5.1. Pſal. 6.6. Exod. 2.5,6,7,8,9.

Revel 7.17.

2. Of confeſſion of our ſins.

2. Confeſſion of ſinnes is another part of repentance, and a ſpeciall meanes to obtaine pardon; for he that hideth his ſinnes ſhall not proſper, but he that confeſſeth and forſaketh them, ſhall find mercy; therefore, though confeſſion of crimes among men, is the neereſt way to condemnation, yet confeſſion of our ſinnes to God, is the readieſt way to remiſſion; for if we acknowledge our ſinnes, God is faithfull and juſt to forgive us our ſinnes, ſaith the Apoſtle; but, as it is ſaid in the Legend, that a leud fellow being come to the prieſt to confeſſion, the divell came with him, and being asked by the Prieſt, why he came, he ſaid to make reſtitution; being demanded of what, he anſwered ſhame; becauſe, ſaid he, I ſtole it from this fellow, to make him impudent in ſinning, and now I will reſtore it him, to make him aſhamed to confeſſe; So I feare moſt of us are aſhamed to confeſſe thoſe things, that we have done, without ſhame, in the ſight of the ſunne: but we need not; for they are all patent to the eyes of God, and if we will not confeſſe here, that ſhame and confuſion belongeth to us, God will ſhame us before men and Angels hereafter.

Pro. 28.13.

1 Ioh. 1.9.

How the divell came with a leaud fellow that came to confeſſion.

Heb. 4.13.

Of confeſſion of our ſins to men.

For confeſſion of our ſinnes to men, though there may be a time, when I may juſtly ſay with Saint Auguſtine, quid mihi cum hominibus, ut audiant confeſſiones meas, meas, what have I to doe with men, that they ſhould heare my confeſſions? yet there may be a time, wherein it ſhall be good for us, to acknowledge our faults one to another, and eſpecially unto the Prieſts; becauſe they know beſt how to yeeld us comfort; but —ſtultorum incurata, pudor malus, ulcera celat, the ſhame of fooles doth increaſe their ſmart, becauſe they conceale their ſores from their Phyſitians; therefore Saint Auguſtine ſaith, non erubui profiteri hominibus blaſphemias meas, & latrare adverſus te, I was not aſhamed to confeſſe to men, the faults I committed againſt thee; yet all this doth no waies prove, or patronize the neceſsity of that unjuſtly impoſed auricular confeſſion, whoſe unſavery fruits were ſoone eſpied in the primitive Church, in the time of Nectarius Biſhop of Conſtantinople.

James 5.16.

Socrat. Eccleſ. hiſt. l. 5. c. 19.

3. Satisfaction is the laſt part of repentance, and it is a making of amends for what we have done amiſſe, quia non tollitur peccatum, niſi reſtituitur oblatum, ſi reſtitui poteſt, becauſe God will not pardon the ſin, unleſſe you make reſtitution for your fault, if you be able to reſtore, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith.

3. Of ſatisfaction, and what it is.

So you ſee the three parts of repentance; exemplarily behold them all in Iudas; for when hee ſaw that Ieſus was condemned, he repented himſelfe, and brought againe the thirty peeces of ſilver, to the chiefe Prieſts and Elders, ſaying, I have ſinned, in betraying the innocent blood, and he caſt downe the peeces of ſilver in the temple. Where obſerve,

The particulars that we may obſerve in the repentance of Iudas

1. His contrition, in that he was penitentia ductus, drawne or induced, that is, not by any outward feare, but by the inward teſtimony of his own ſoule and conſcience; a ſtrange and ſecret thing, which as Publius ſaith, —ille nocens damnat quo peccat die; did preſently ſwinge his ſoule, aſſoone as ever he betrayed his Maſter; becauſe as S. Auguſtine ſaith, juſſiſti Domine, & ita eſt, ut animus inordinatus ſit ſibi ipſi pœna, thou haſt appointed it, Lord, and it is ſo, that a wicked and diſordinate ſoule ſhould ever be a plague, and a puniſhment unto it ſelfe, and carrie a rod upon the ſinners backe, to whip him ſtill whereſoever he goeth.

1. His contrition.

2. His confeſſion is remarkeable in many things, as

2. His confeſſion remarkable in theſe particulars.

1. It was ſimple, without tricks; he leſſeneth not his fault, with King Saul, nor laieth the fault upon others, as did Adam; he ſaith not, the high Prieſts inticed me, but he ſaith, ego, ego ſum qui inique egi, it is I, even I am he, that have ſinned and have done this evill; meme adſum qui feci, in me convertite ferrum.

1. Simple.

2. It was publique, not in any corner, to God alone, but in the Temple before the Prieſts, and before the Elders of the people; for he doth not ſay, Againſt thee onely have I ſinned, and thou onely canſt forgive my ſins, therfore to thee onely will I confeſſe my faults; but ſeeing I have ſo highly diſhonoured thee before men, I am contented to ſhame my ſelfe before men, and to confeſſe, even before the Prieſts, that I have ſinned in betraying the innocent blood.

2. Publique and before men.

3. It was diſtinct, and not in generall termes, I have ſinned and don amiſſe; for ſo might any one ſay, without any great ſhame unto himſelfe, or any glory unto God; but more diſtinctly, he doth confeſſe the very particular ſinnes, that he had committed, even as Ajax ſhould ſay, I Ajax Oilus have ſinned, in that I have violated Caſſandra, the Virgin, the Propheteſſe, in the very Temple of the goddeſſe Minerva; ſo doth he, ſaying, I have ſinned in betraying the innocent blood; and I confeſſe my ſelfe to be a ſinner, a traitor, a murderer, and that, which is above all, and more then all, a murderer and a ſhedder of moſt innocent blood, and therefore of the Sonne of God, becauſe ſince Adam, never man was innocent but the Sonne of God.

3. Diſtinct and particular.

3. His ſatisfaction is equivalent to his confeſſion, and that in two reſpects.

3. His ſatisfaction conſiderable in two reſpects.

For { 1. In the juſtification of the perſon, that he had wronged. 2. In the reſtitution of the reward, that he had received.

1. He doth not onely confeſſe his owne ſin, but as much as in him lieth, he doth alſo juſtifie that man, which he had vilified, ſaying, I have betrayed the innocent blood; for he is guiltleſſe, and I onely am guilty herein.

1. In juſtifying Chriſt.

2. He made reſtitution of all the ſilver, that he had received; not like Ananias, that

2. He reſtoreth the monie, and he reſtoreth all.

Act. 5. 2.

that kept part of the price of his lands behinde; but he reſtoreth all; tantum reddidit, quantum accepit; for hee had but thirty pieces of ſilver, and hee brought backe the thirty pieces of ſilver, ſaith the Evangeliſt, he kept not backe ſo much as one pennie; and it is worth the obſerving, that when the chiefe Prieſts made light account of his great repentance, his unfaigned confeſſion, and plenary ſatisfaction, proijcit argenteos, he threw downe the ſilver pieces, contemptu quodam, with contempt and diſdaine; ſo he caſt away that, which had cauſed him to caſt away himſelfe.

Wherein Judas did ill.

Thus farre went Judas well; wherein then did he ill? in that which followeth, and hee went out and hanged himſelfe; this was his fault; for had he joyned faith in Chriſt, with this repentance for his ſinnes, and had looked as well to the bound leſſe ocean of Gods mercy, as to the ſtrictneſſe of Gods juſtice, there is no queſtion but he had obtained mercy, as well as Saint Peter, or any other of the true repentant ſinners; for the fathers all confeſſe, that he ſinned more in deſpairing of Gods mercy, then in betraying the innocent blood. And therefore our repentance muſt have faith joyned with it, as an inſeperable companion; or els all the other parts of repentance will availe us nothing; but as Judas was ſhort herein, ſo let not us come ſhort of Judas, leſt he that was ſo ill, ſhall riſe in judgement to condemne us, that thinke of our ſelves ſo well. For except we doe repent, we ſhall all likewiſe periſh.

Deteriore ſemetipſum vinculo iniquitatis obſtrinxit, cum ſe occidit nocentem, quam tum, cum Chriſtum tradidit innocentem. Fulgent. de remiſſ. peccat. l. 2. c. 16.

3. The danger, if not prevented, deſtruction. Cyprian l. 1. ep. 8.

3. You have heard of the diſeaſe and the remedy; the danger, if it be not remedied, is deſtruction; for ſinne is the firſt-borne of the divell, he was a lier from the beginning; and as Saint Cyprian ſaith, mentitur peccatum, ut deſtruat, & vitam pollicetur, ut occidat; ſinne lieth too, and promiſeth life, that it may bring us to death; for the reward of ſinne is death, and whenſoever you ſinne, except you repent, you ſhall periſh; this is the danger of ſinne; and it is heere amplified two waies.

Rom. 6. ult.

The danger is exemplified two waies.

1. From the generalitie of it, you ſhall all periſh.
2. From the quality of it, you ſhall all likewiſe periſh.

} For

1. The generality of the danger. Rom. 2. 11.

1. With God there is no reſpect of perſons, ſaith the Apoſtle; Sauls Crowne, and Cayphas Ephod, the Magiſtrates Sword, the Biſhops Miter, the Noble mans honour, and the Merchants wealth, ſhall never preſerve them, if they be wicked, from the wrath to come; nay the meane man may obtaine mercy, ſed potentes potenter cruciabuntur, and the ſword, that devoured the blood of the innocent, ſhall be made drunke with the blood of the oppreſſor, and thoſe candid robes, that doe vaile crimſon ſoules, ſhall bee turned to the blackneſſe of darkeneſſe for ever.

Nothing can corrupt our God.

For though with men, wealth may corrupt, as Jugurth did the Senate of Rome, power and pollicie may ſubdue, as Alexander and Julius Caſar did their enemies, and eloquence may perſwade, and ſometimes ſeduce us to ill, as Curios tongue did buy and ſell the Romane liberty; yet with GOD, not any of theſe, not all of theſe, not the power of all the world, not the gold of Ophir, nor the tongue of Angels, can work with him any ſhadow of turning.

Iames 1. 17.

Qua donatiſſima forma, Mille procis placuit. Ovid. Metam. l. 9. de Chione.

And therefore the greateſt Monarchs, that have the world at their command, the faireſt Ladies, that have a 1000 woers, and the proudeſt Phariſees, that faſt much, pray often, and pay tythe of all they have; notwithſtanding all this, exeept they repent, they ſhall all periſh; for, as there is no way to ſave us but repentance, ſo there is no man, (be he never ſo holy, be he never ſo great, be he what he will, as wiſe as Salomon, as bold as Elias, as ſanctified as Ieremy, who was ſanctified before he was borne) that without repentance can be ſaved; for except you repent, you ſhall all periſh.

2. For the quality of the danger.

2. For the quality of the puniſhment, you ſhall likewiſe periſh; where we muſt obſerve theſe two things.

1. What it is to periſh.
2. How the Galileans periſhed; becauſe he ſaith, we ſhall likewiſe periſh; riſh; that is, as it ſeemeth after the ſame manner and with the ſame deſtruction as they were deſtroyed.

1. I find that the Greeke word, ἀπολεῖσθε, which the Evangeliſt uſeth, and which both the vulgar and Beza doe tranſlate, peribitis, ye ſhall periſh, habet ſuas quasdam obſcuras notiones, hath certaine obſcure notions and ſignifications, as Flacius Illyricus ſaith; but omitting all other interpretations thereof, I find that it doth chiefly ſignifie three things.

1. What to periſh ſignifieth. Flacius Illyricus. in verbo. pereo. p. 896.

To periſh ſignifieth three things.

1. To be miſerable. 1. To be miſerable and afflicted with croſſes and calamities in this life; ſo the Poet uſually upon any adverſity, ſaith, Hem perij; alas, I am undone.

2. To die, or to bee killed. 2. It ſignifieth to be deſtroyed, killed, or dead; as where the Prophet ſaith, In gladio pereant parvuli eorum, which we tranſlate, they ſhall fall by the ſword; and Zacharias is ſaid, perijſſe inter templum & altare, that is, to bee killed; ſo our Saviour ſaith, omnis qui gladium acceperit, gladio peribit; all they that take the ſword, ſhall periſh with the ſword; that is, ſhall die, and be deſtroyed by the ſword: and ſo this phraſe is uſed in many other places in the ſame ſignification, as Luke 13. 33. Daniel 2. 12. Ionah 2. 14. Eſay 57. 1. Micah 7. 2. &c.

Hoſea 13. 16. Luk. 11. 51. Mat. 26. 52.

3. To be damned. 3. It ſignifieth to ſuffer everlaſting death, as Athanaſius ſaith, whoſoever keepeth not the Catholique faith whole and undefiled, without doubt hee ſhall periſh everlaſtingly: and our Saviour meaneth the ſame thing, when he ſaith, whoſoever beleeveth in me, ὁ μὴ ὑποθάνῃ εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, which is all one, as ἀπολεῖσθε, he ſhall not periſh everlaſtingly; ſo the Apoſtle meaneth, when he ſaith, as many as have ſinned without law, ſhall alſo periſh without law; and where he ſaith, that the preaching of the croſſe is to them that periſh, fooliſhneſſe; and ſo the word is to bee underſtood in 1 Cor. 8. 11. 2 Cor. 2. 15. 2 Theſſal. 2. 10. 2 Peter 2. 12.

Ioh. 11. 29. Rom. 2. 12. 1 Cor. 1. 18.

So you ſee what is meant by this word, ἀπολεῖσθε, to periſh; to be miſerable, to die, to be damned.

And all this is due to every man and woman that ſinneth, and that repenteth not for every ſinne, that he or ſhe committeth; for

1. All miſeries come upon us for our ſins. Deut 27. 15. v. 20. 21, 22. 1. Moſes tells us, that if we diſobey the voice of the Lord our God, and breake his commandements and his ſtatutes, that he giveth us to obſerve, then all theſe curſes ſhall come upon us and overtake us; vexation, and rebuke in all that we ſet our hand unto, the peſtilence, conſumption and fever, and inflammation, and extreame burning, the ſword, and blaſting, and mildew ſhall purſue us, till we periſh; the heavens ſhall be braſſe, and the earth iron unto us, we ſhall be ſmitten before our enemies, we ſhall goe out one way and flee ſeven waies before them, we ſhall be ſmitten with botches, with emerods, with the ſcab, and with itch, whereof wee cannot bee healed, and ſo forth, of all and every evill, that happeneth, or can happen to any man, it is for none other cauſe, or reaſon, but, as Moſes ſaith, becauſe he ſinned againſt his God, and, as our Saviour ſaith, becauſe he repented not for his ſins.

Ver. 23. Ver. 25. Ver. 27.

Vide Lamentat. Ier. 3. 39. Vide Epiſcop. Sarisbur. in Atheomaſt. l. 2. c. 5. p. 236

And not onely the holy Scriptures, but alſo the very heathens doe aſcribe all publique calamities, unto the anger of the gods for our ſinnes; for Herodotus ſaith, the grievous ſickneſſe of the Scythians happened unto them, for their Sacriledge, in ſacking the temple of Venus; and Plutarch affirmeth, that the deſtroying plague, which happened in the time of Romulus, was inflicted upon them, for the trechery, which they uſed in the murdering of King Tatius. So Homer ſheweth the ſtormes and tempeſts and other plagues, that happened upon the Grecians, in Aulides haven, to be inflicted upon them by Apollo, for the abuſe that they offered unto his Prieſt, and Ovid writes the like of the Æginets; and therefore, when any man is afflicted with any kinde of croſſe, or calamity, whether want, or diſgrace or diſeaſe, griefe of mind or ſickneſſe of body, or any other malady whatſoever, I would to God they were ſo wiſe, that they would not only aſſigne them unto the exceſſe or defect of the primarie qualities, heat, cold, moiſt, drie, or unto the impuritie and corruption of our meates, or unto the Herodat. l. 1. p. 51. Plutarch in vita Rom. p. 67. Apollo pleum vastarum nec lue ipsi assimilu. Homer. Iliad 1. p. 3.

Dira lues populis, ira Iuvenis iniquæ incidit Metam. l. 7.

Mens error in miſtaking of cauſes.

infection of putrid ayres, or to the trecherie of friends, or the malice of foes, or the overſight and indiſcretion of our owne ſelves, or to any other materiall cauſe or cauſes whatſoever; but that alſo, they would looke a little higher and better into the cauſe of theſe cauſes, and ſay with the Prophet David, there is nothing ſound in my fleſh, becauſe of thine anger; neither is there any reſt in my bones by reaſon of my ſin.

Pſal. 38.3.

2. Saint Paul tells us, that our death is the reward of our ſinnes, and ſo hee told the Corinthians, that for their ſinnes and abuſes in receiving the bleſſed Sacrament, they were ſtrucken by God, with divers kinds of puniſhments; ſome with ſickeneſſe; ſome, with weakeneſſe; and ſome, with death; and this I ſhall more fully ſhew unto you in my firſt golden Candleſticke.

2. Sinne the cauſe of our death. Rom. 6. 21. 1 Cor. 11. 30.

3. Sinne brings everlaſting death, where the worme never dieth, and the fire never goeth out; and therefore it is rightly termed an unquenchable and an everlaſting fire; and all other fires are but cold, if wee compare their heat to the heat of this fire; for as Saint Hierom hath a conceited gloſſe upon the words, which David uſed, to the men of Iabeſh Gilead, for the ſincere kindneſſe that they ſhewed to their dead Maſter, where hee ſaith, the Lord ſhewe kindneſſe and truth to you; hoc eſt, miſericordiam in præſenti & veritatem in futuro; that is, ſaith he, mercy for the preſent, and truth hereafter, for the time to come; as if the mercy, which is now ſhewed, and is here taſted, is no mercy, but as nothing, in reſpect of that reall truth and great mercy, which ſhall be ſhewed hereafter; even ſo the wrath and death, which is here manifeſted, in all the temporall afflictions, that are laid upon us, are but as ſhaddowes, and as nothing, if we compare them with that truth of miſeries and torments, which wicked men, that will not repent, ſhall feele in hell, when God ſhall drinke to them in puniſhments, and ſhall make them pledge him in a bitter cup, and ſucke up the very dreggs of that cup, of his great fury and indignation againſt them.

3. Sinne brings everlaſting death. Eſay 66. 24. Mat. 25. 41. & 6. 3. 10. 12.

2 Sam. 2. 6.

All the wrath in this life, is but the ſhaddow of Gods wrath.

And therefore, why will wee not abſtaine from ſinne, or if, through the infirmities of the fleſh, we doe fall into ſinne, why doe we not repent us of our ſinnes, and ſhew our ſelves as eminent in our repentance, as wee have beene eminent in our wickedneſſe? for I doubt not but you know inough of noted ſinners, ſtigmatiz'd drunkards, ſwearers, blaſphemers, uſurers, adulterers, prophaners of Gods Sabbaths, and the like, that are as well knowne by their ſinnes, as they are by their trades, or by their names; and I would we might as well take notice of them by their repentance and newneſſe of life, as now we doe by the diſſoluteneſſe of their manners and the wickedneſſe of their converſation.

Noted ſinners many, but few noted penitents.

And if any man intendeth to repent, then let him follow the advice of the firſt Evangelicall preacher of repentance, Iohn the Baptiſt, and bring forth fruits meet for repentance.

Mat. 3. 8.

Theſe fruits are very many, I will onely name you theſe three.

The fruits and ſignes of repentance, are principally three.

1. Sorrow, that we have offended.
2. Hatred of our offences. } For
3. A voluntary ſhunning of all ſins.

1. The true penitent man is ever ſorrowfull for his ſinnes, and is more grieved for the offence then for the puniſhment, more for the ſinne that he committed, then for the croſſe that, for his ſinnes, is inflicted upon him; yet he doth not alwaies ſenſitively perceive the difference of theſe ſorrowes; becauſe he may be ſometimes overcome with ſudden griefe, that may miſerably, for a time, diſtemper his minde, for ſome outward loſſe; but intelectivè, quoad diſplicentiam voluntatis, in his moſt ſerious thoughts and recollected cogitations, he ſees his ſinne, as that ſwallowing evill, which drowneth all other thoughts, as the light of the ſunne darkeneth all the light of ruſh candles.

1. True ſorrow for ſin.

2. As the Angell ſaid of the Church of Epheſus, this thou haſt, that thou hateſt the deeds of the Nicolaitans, which I alſo hate; ſo every penitent man hateth ſin,

2. A perfect hate of ſin. Revel. 2. 6.

ſinne, and caſteth off the ſame, not as the Merchant throwes away his goods in a tempeſt, becauſe he cannot keepe them; nor as Phaltiel parted with Micholl, when David came unto the crowne, and he durſt not diſobey, to keepe her from him; therefore hee ſends her unto David, but full ſore againſt his will, when after ſhe was gone, he ſtill lookes after her unto Bahurim, weeping, becauſe he was compelled to part with her; nor yet as men in their ſickneſſe, after ſurfeting, or drunkenneſſe, or the like, doe hate their ſinnes, becauſe of their pangs, by reaſon of their diſeaſes, not for want of any love unto their ſinnes, but out of love unto themſelves, and the apprehenſion of their preſent paine; they part with their ſinnes, and yet they are loth to depart from them; but as a man that is maried to a wicked wife and a lewd ſtrumpet, ſues for a bill of divorce, with all willingneſſe, and is grieved that he is ſo long wedded to her, ſo infinitely plagued by her; ſo the true penitent ſinner hates his ſinnes with a perfect hatred, with a great, conſtant, and immortall hatred.

2 Sam. 3.15.16.

That we ought with all readines and deſire to leave our ſins.

3. They that doe truely repent them of their ſinnes, will not only hate them, but they will alſo reforme themſelves, and amend their whole lives and converſations; for he that can ſee his ſinne, and ſorrow for his ſinne, and yet returne to his ſinne againe, I ſhould hardly beleeve that he hath ever truly repented for his ſinnes; yet I denie not, but there may be ſuch an infirmity, even in ſome of Gods Saints, as to fall, and to fall againe, into the ſame ſinnes; but if, after you repented of your ſinnes, you ſtill cleave and continue in them, you may not onely feare, but aſſure your ſelves, that your repentance is very defective; becauſe the beſt fruit and ſureſt ſigne of true repentance is a new life, new thoughts, new deſires, and new delights; new motions, new actions, and in brieſe all things new; but becauſe, as one ſaith very well, theſe motions and actions may be found in divers things, therefore this rule muſt be diſtinctly examined in three reſpects.

3. A totall reformation of our manners.

A threefold difference betwixt the good actions of the naturall & the Chriſtian man. Toſhell in his ninth Sermon of humiliation. p. 59.

1. In reſpect of the cauſe or firſt principle of theſe motions; for prayer, reading, hearing, meditation, and the like, are good motions and godly; and yet men, none other then meere naturall, may performe them; but the difference is from the principle, or firſt cauſe of that motion; for, as you ſee an engine moves, and a man moves; and yet the motion of the engine is not from the ſame principle or cauſe, as the motion of the man; becauſe the engine is made by art and upon wheeles, which being wound up to a certaine height, the wheeles runne, till the ſpring be downe, and then it ſtaies, and unleſſe it bee wound up againe, like the wheeles of a clocke, or the waights of a jacke, it continues idle, becauſe it is but an engine; but a man moves from a principle of life, and hath of himſelfe a loco-motive faculty; ſo the naturall man and the Chriſtian may have both good motions and good actions in them; and yet theſe motions proceed not from the ſame principle; for if the naturall man be upon any good motion, it is becauſe ſomething windes him up; for you may pegge and ſtraine a meere man to what you will, by preſenting ſuch reſpects and objects unto him, as doe pleaſe and delight his minde, which will ſet him a going in any good duty, ſo long as theſe objects doe continue, but no longer; but the true Chriſtian moves not from any outward cauſe or reſpect, but from that life of grace, which Chriſt formeth in him, even as the Apoſtle ſaith, that we live by the faith of the Sonne of God.

1. In reſpect of the firſt principle of theſe motions.

By reſpects make many wicked men to do many good deeds.

Gal. 2.20.

2. In reſpect of the quality of this motion; for the naturall and wicked man, may be as forward upon many things that are good, as many good Chriſtians are; but herein is the difference, from the quality of their motion; for, as when two horſes doe run upon their full ſpeed, and the one is forced forward by the ſpurre, and if the ſteele were from his ſide, the Iade would ſtand ſtocke ſtill, but the other, being full of ſpirit and courage, doth of himſelfe ſo willingly runne, that he can hardly be kept in; ſo the naturall man doth many times much good; but it is, becauſe he is ſpurred on, on the one ſide, for the love of his profit, the doing of good duties bringing alwaies bleſſings, even to the wicked,

2. In reſpect of the quality of theſe actions.

That we ought to do all good willingly.

for they ſhall not looſe their reward; and on the other ſide, for feare of puniſhment, which extracteth the good that they doe from them; but in the true Chriſtian there is a προθυμία, a freeneſſe and a readineſſe of minde to doe that which is good, with all cheerefullneſſe; and therefore Saint Paul ſaith, τὸ κατ' ἐμὲ πρόθυμον, whatſoever is in me is ready.

Rom. 1. 15.

3. In reſpect of uniformity or regularity of our motions; for man moves not, as the ſpheres, orbicularly, which is the reaſon, that men are ſoone giddie, if they turne round, but his motion muſt be right and not circular; and therefore the motion of a Chriſtian, being to be made ſtraight, according to the line and rule of Gods Word, though the wicked ſhould doe the ſame duties as the godly; yet if they be not done in the ſame manner, and to the ſame end, as the Scripture preſcribeth, they may be bona but not benè, good deeds, yet not well done.

3. In reſpect of uniformity.

Bonum debet fieri benè.

By theſe things we may judge of our repentance, and by our repentance eſcape that judgement, which is due to us for our ſins; for Popiſh penance, we doe utterly denie it to be a Sacrament, as having neither Sacramentall matter, nor Sacramentall inſtitution; and we doe juſtly blame the multitude of their idle impoſed penances; and yet we denie that we ever denied, either penitence or penance, or abſolution; but we beleeve and teach, that it is ſometimes needfull, to require and receive abſolution from the Church, according to the power and authority, that Chriſt committed unto her: and therefore it is an impudent ſlander of the Ieſuites, to ſay, that wee, with the Novatian heretiques, have taken away, not onely the name, but alſo the nature and the power of the Eccleſiaſticall reconciliation of a ſinner unto God; becauſe we confeſſe the power, and we commend the practice of the Church herein; and we denie, that the Novatians did ever denie the reſtitution of the fallen by publique penance becauſe this fiction of penance to be a Sacrament, was not then invented, and therefore could not be queſtioned; and their error was, that there is no place for repentance to thoſe, that ſinned after Baptiſme; the baptized then being men more then children; but they have more fopperies then this, and I never delighted to be padling, I will not ſay in their dirty, but in their new deviſed divinity.

Of Popiſh penance, that it is no Sacrament.

The hereſie of the Novatians, what it was.

They baptized more men then children in the Primitive Church.

2. For the Galileans, how farre they periſhed, it is apparent, they were ſlaughtered, and put unto a miſerable death; but we can goe no further; we may not ſit in the ſeate of God as Gods; and when I ſee any ſudden judgement upon any men, as the falling of the houſe in the Blacke-friers, upon thoſe Recuſants, that were there aſſembled, or the ſudden falling of any man into the fire, or water, or apoplexie, or any other ſudden and unexpected death; I will rather beleeve, as I pray and deſire, that God hath mercy upon his ſoule, when he layeth this puniſhment upon his body, then thinke any otherwiſe of him, that, for ought I know, may be eternally deerer to God, for all this externall judgement, then I am my ſelfe, who, if I doe not repent, may, ere long, I know not how ſoone, likewiſe periſh; for we know the mercy of God is great, and as they ſay, inter pontem & fontem, betweene the bridge and the water, he workes in a moment, he ſaves in an inſtant, he moves our thought, and in that thought, he takes us to eternall life; and yet I ſay not this, to make men careleſſe of their ends, or negligent of their lives; but to teach us, not to be judges of others, eſpecially of ſuch, as have felt the hand of God; let us not lay our cenſure to it; for to their own maſter they do either ſtand or fall, and it is the beſt way for us, errare in tutiorem partem; to beleeve that God is mercifull; it is far ſafer and more charitable, to hope, that a man, which perhaps may be damned in hell, is in eternall happineſſe in heaven; then to beleeve, that a man, which is with God, in heaven, enjoying everlaſting happineſſe, is tormented with the divell and his Angels in hell; the one being an error of love, and a miſtaking out of charity, the other being a raſh judging of Gods judgement, and a moſt uncharitable, unchriſtianlike minde and affection, towards our deceaſed brethren; and therefore I will onely

2. How farre the Galileans periſhed.

That we ought not to judge of them hardly, which undergoe ſudden judgements.

God abundant in mercy.

Rom. 14. 4.

onely feare mine owne destruction, and I will hope the best of the salvation of all others; because the mercy of God is over all his workes, and his mercy rejoyceth against judgement; that is, his mercy rejoyceth that it hath prevailed to save us, when our sinnes have most justly deserved to damne us, and the justice of God cannot choose but denounce our desert, yet beyond all our deserts and hopes, beyond all that we can imagine, mercy will oftentimes save all those, whom it pleaseth God; who is therefore to be loved and praised of all and above all; but I have presumed too farre upon your patience already, and I hope the remedy prescribed will preserve you all, that not one of you shall perish, and the punishment shall not belong to you; I may therefore leave the punishment to the unrepentant, and commend you to the grace of God, through Iesus Christ our Lord, To whom be glory, and dominion, and praise, and thankes, both now and for evermore, Amen.

IEHOVÆ LIBERATORI.

FRom depth of conscience, fountaine of my moanes,
From heart quite rent with sighes and heavie groanes,
My wounded soule, by great and many sinnes,
Mine endlesse woes and wailing worke beginnes.
I sorrow that my sorrowes are augmented,
And grieve to see my griefe is not prevented,
By griefe and sorrowes fully to be made,
For all those sinnes that doe my soule invade.
ô that I were the best Poet of these times
Not to abuse my wit in hatefull rimes
Of love-sicke lines and sonnets to indite,
But for my sinnes my true repentance write.
For I too long on bitter fruits have fed,
And sinnefull lusts my sences have misled;
A thousand deadly sinnes, I have committed,
Besides the vertuous deeds I have omitted.
Yet my hard heart true sorrowes doth forbeare,
And graceless eyes will not straine foorth a teare;
Because my soule so false, so full of sinne,
Doth yeeld no place for grace to enter in.
What shall I doe? Caine Abels blood did spill;
I wretched man, my selfe, my selfe doe kill,
I wish mine eyes could powre foorth streames of blood,
And send the trickling teares downe like a flood.
I cry to Christ, I call, I never cease,
And yet Gods anger will not me release;
But rangeth all my sinnes before my face,
And saith, I am full high in his disgrace.
The Iudge I see before mine eyes hath laid
What I have done; which makes me sore afraid;
And now my heart, my soule and conscience tell,
I doe deserve none other place then hell:
But, ô my God, as thou hast pittied many,
So pittie him, that worst deserves of any,
And, the more mercies thou wilt shew on me,
The more praises will I render thee.
I will retire from wretched worldlings sight,
And in these pleasures never take delight,
Rejoycing, when my heart and soule doth crie
For sinne, untill mine eyes and springs are drie.

I'le curſe the time I have ſo ill mis-ſpent,
And hate the courſe wherein I lately went,
Deſiring pardon for what ere is paſt,
And give thee praiſes while my life doth laſt.
And, when my ſinnes I muſter all apart,
Ile waſh them with the teares of bleeding heart,
Or, if my teares will faile me at moſt need,
Ile ſhew thee how Chriſts pretious ſide did bleed.
And, when thou ſeeſt how Ieſus for my ſake,
That bitter Paſſion did ſo undertake,
I hope, when ſorrowes ſhall ſpend all my breath,
Thou wilt preſerve me from eternall death.

Amen.

S^t. PETERS CHARGE.

IOHN 21. 21,22.

Τοῦτον ἰδὼν ὁ Πέτρος λέγει τῷ Ἰησοῦ, κύριε, οὗτος δὲ τί;
λέγει αὐτῷ ὁ Ἰησοῦς, ἐὰν αὐτὸν θέλω μένειν ἕως ἔρχομαι, τί πρός σε; σὺ ἀκολούθει μοι.

Peter ſeeing him, ſaith to Ieſus, Lord, and what ſhall this man doe?
Ieſus ſaith unto him, if I will that he tarrie till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me?

THeſe words are a perfect dialogue, betweene two of the moſt excellent men in the world, Ieſus Chriſt, the Son of God, and Simon Peter, the ſonne of Ionas; ſo we muſt obſerve herein theſe two parts.

1. The ſpeakers.
2. The ſpeech.

Two parts. 1. The ſpeakers. 2. The ſpeech.

1. The ſpeakers are { 1. Ieſus Chriſt. 2. Simon Peter. } And

1. The ſpeakers are two.

1. For theſe ſpeakers, the firſt in dignity, though the laſt in the dialogue, (as commonly the wiſeſt ſpeak laſt and leaſt) is Ieſus Chriſt; the wiſdome of God; therefore too great for any wiſdome of man, to conceive aright, much leſſe to expreſſe, as it ought, the leaſt part of his excellency; It is true indeed, which Salomon ſaith, that unguentum effuſum nomen ſuum; his name is like pretious oyntment powred out; the more we ſpread it and ſpeake of it, the more ſweet and fragrant it will ſmell unto us; but it is as true, which Zachary ſaith, that, oriens nomen ejus, it is a tranſcendent name, the more we conſider it, and the longer we muſe upon it, the higher it will aſcend, like the Sun riſing in the Eaſt, that at laſt, if we cover not our faces, as the Cherubims do, with two of our wings, we ſhall be confounded with the brightneſſe of this inacceſſible light: and therefore the beſt elogie that I can give him is, that he is ineffable, and holy is his name, beyond all the praiſes and commendations that any man can give him; yet we ſhould all do our beſt, to ſet forth his praiſe and glory; and therefore, praiſe him all ye Angels; praiſe him, all his Saints; praiſe him Sun and Moone; and

1. Ieſus Chriſt.

Luke 11.49.

Cant. 1.3.

The excellency of the name of Chriſt.
Zach 3.8. & 6.12. Ecce vir, oriens nomen ejus.
Eſa. 6.3.

The name of Chriſt is ineffable, and his praiſe not able to be expreſſed.
Pſal. 148.2,3.

and let every thing that hath breath praiſe his holy name; and when we have all praiſed him what we can, we can do nothing worthy of the leaſt part of that praiſe which he deſerveth; for who can expreſſe his noble acts, or ſhew forth all his praiſe, even for thoſe things onely, which he did for the children of men: And therefore, as not worthy to expreſſe, and not able to ſpeake of the worthineſſe of this Speaker, I will returne to the other, Simon Peter the ſonne of Jonas.

Pſal. 150. 6.

Pſal. 106. 2. Vide Pſal. 145. 3. &c.

2. Simon Peter, was (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of Elias) a man ſubject to the like paſſions that we are, and therefore, though regenerate in a great meaſure, yet not fully perfect, nor perfectly cleanſed from all vices, for in many things we ſinne all, and ſome of us in all things, and the beſt of us in ſome things; and if we ſay we have not ſinned, we deceive our ſelves, and the truth is not in us; becauſe we ſeek hereby to make God a liar, when we maintaine our ſelves to be true.

2. Simon Peter. Iam. 5. 17.

Iam. 3. 2.

1 Ioh. 1. 8.

And therefore, ſpeaking of ſuch men, as are both Saints and ſinners, S. Auguſtine tels us, that two ſpeciall faults are to be avoided,

Two ſpeciall faults to be avoided, when we ſpeak of men.

1. Perverſa delectatio in accuſando.
2. Perverſus furor in excuſando.

} that is,

1. A perverſe and a froward delight in accuſing others.
2. A wilfull fury in defending faults.

The one makes every man all ſin, the other ſees no ſin in any Saint; the one makes us farre worſe than we are, the other, not halfe ſo bad as we be; both are bad, about bad things; and therefore, as we muſt not call good evill, ſo we may not call evill good; we muſt not call white blacke, nor blacke white; S. Peter then had his faults; I will not excuſe him; or if I did, my text will prove it; becauſe he was more curious than wiſe, in prying into anothers office, and ſeeking to know, what Iohn muſt do. And yet he was not ſo full of faults, as many men amongſt us lay upon him; for he was an excellent man, full of rare vertues and moſt admirable graces; and, as S. Hierom ſaid of the bookes of the holy Scriptures, ſo I may ſay of this holy man, parum dixi pro merito; laus omnis inferior eſt; I have ſaid little for his deſert, and my beſt praiſe is too ſhort of his worth: and therefore, how ſhall I ſpeake of it, which am filius Gemini de minima tribu Iſrael? The meaneſt of Gods Miniſters, not worthy to be called a Miniſter, when I conſider mine own unworthineſſe?

That S. Peter had his faults.

Hieron. in Epiſt. ad Paulin. de omnibus divin. hiſt. lib.

1. Ne quid minus. 2. Ne quid nimis. Firſt, leaſt I ſhould ſpeake too little; and ſecondly, leaſt I ſhould ſay too much; for there be many here, qui infinita magnalia ejus norunt, which have ſeene more of him than I have heard, and do know more than I can thinke; and therefore perhaps theſe men, as I would, I ſhall hardly ſatisfie, and I can give them but ſmall content; when it is no pleaſure to us, to know nothing but what, or perhaps leſſe than what we know; and there be others that know little, and perchance would know leſſe of the great worth of this great Apoſtle; and therefore, whatſoever I ſhall ſay of his praiſe, I ſhall ſeeme to theſe men to ſay too much; and as Boſquierus ſaith of another Saint, invidioſum potius quam admirandum illum faciam, I ſhall rather make him to be envied and diſdained, than admired; becauſe theſe men are ſuch, as Cicero ſpeakes of, Qui nihil laudant, nec laudari patiuntur, niſi quod faciunt ipſi, aut ſui, aut niſi quod ſe imitari confidunt; that neither praiſe any one, nor ſuffer any thing to be praiſed, but what they doe themſelves, or thinke themſelves able to doe the like.

How hard it is to ſatisfie all hearers

Boſquier. in feſto S.

Cicero in Tuſc. Queſt. l. 2.

But ſeeing this bleſſed Apoſtle and glorious Martyr of Ieſus Chriſt, is one of the two ſpeakers in my text, and this is the day, which the Church of Chriſt hath aſſigned and ſet apart, for the commemorations of Gods great love unto his Church, in giving him to teach her the true knowledge of Ieſus Chriſt, and of his great fidelity to God, and ſervice to Gods Saints, my duty doth require that I ſhould do my beſt, though I ſhould not ſatisfie you as I would; for S. Paul tels us, that Chriſt being aſcended up on high, he gave gifts to men; and theſe gifts (ſaith he) are the Apoſtles, Evangeliſts, and Preachers of Gods Word; and our Saviour adviſeth us, to pray unto the Lord of the harveſt, that he would ſend forth

Preached on S. Peters Day.

Eph. 4. 8. 11.

forth labourers into his harveſt; and good reaſon for it; becauſe without them your ſoules ſhould be unweeded of your ſinnes, unplanted with any grace, un-invited to Chriſt, and unfit for any thing, but to be bound in bundels, and to be caſt into eternall fire: and therefore, ſeeing you muſt pray for them, you ſhould praiſe God, when you have them; and when God gives them to you, you ſhould not be forgetfull of ſuch gifts, and they ſhould not ſeeme contemptible in your eyes; but, as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, we ſhould laudare Dominum in Sanctis ejus, praiſe the Lord in his Saints, and in thoſe ſervants, that he gives unto us, and prize thoſe Saints, as we prize great gifts, to ſhew the bounty of the giver.

Mat. 9. 38.

That we ſhould praiſe God for our Miniſters.

Saint Peter then was a gift of God, and he was a rare gift too, excellent in many things, but in three things moſt excellent, that is,

1. Humility.
2. Magnanimity.
3. Charity.

Three ſpeciall vertues of S. Peter

The three beſt, or, at leaſt, equall to the beſt vertues and divineſt graces, that I do know; for

The praiſe of humility, magnanimity and charity.

1. Humility is the firſt baſis, and the loweſt ſtone in Gods building, that ſupporteth all the reſt.

1. Humility.

2. Charity is the beſt and the higheſt of all graces, this entreth into heaven, when moſt of the reſt ſhall be excluded and ſhut forth. And

2. Charity.

3. Magnanimity is that ſole vertue, which preſerveth our lives, and tranſporteth our ſoules, throughout all the miſeries of this wicked world; and when it hath taught us to ſuffer with joy, the greateſt griefes, and to paſſe with patience through reproaches, baniſhments, martyrdomes, and all other ſorts of death, then will this vertue preſent us, to be admitted Kings and Prieſts, and to be crowned with the crowne of life.

3. Magnanimity.

Rev. 2. 10.

But for this our Apoſtle S. Peter, of whom, we are now to ſpeak;

1. His humility was not like Diogenes, Majori faſtu Platonis ſuperbiam concalcare, with an outward humility and a proud heart to tread, and trample Platoes braveries under feet; nor like Caligula. Quitanti in avum. & qui juxta erant, erat obſequij, ut non immerito ſit dictum. nec ſervum meliorem ullum, nec deteriorem dominum fuiſſe; which was to humble unto his grandfather, and ſo reſpective towards all that were about, that it was rightly ſaid of him, when he became Emperour, and began to change his manners, there could not be an humbler and a better ſervant, nor a prouder and a more imperious maſter; But as our Saviour had formerly taught him, ſo he did continually practice, to ſhew himſelfe meeke and lowly in heart; for when he ſaw the great draught of fiſhes, that was taken by our Saviours advice, to throw the net on the right ſide of the ſhip, he preſently fell downe at Ieſus knees, ſaying, Depart from me, for I am a ſinfull man, O Lord; and when Ieſus came to waſh his feet, then he, conſidering the worthineſſe of his maſter, that he was the Sonne of God, and the unworthineſſe of himſelfe, that he was a man full of ſinnes, and not knowing the myſtery, wherefore Chriſt went about to do ſuch a thing, ſaid, thou ſhalt never waſh my feet; as if he ſhould further have expreſt himſelfe, ſaying, thou art the Saviour of the world, of whom God the Father ſaid, This is my beloved Sonne, in whom I am well pleaſed, whoſe miracles we have ſeene, whoſe Sermons we have heard, and whoſe glory we have beheld in the mount; for thee to come and waſh my feet, which am but a poore worme and wretch of the earth, not worthy of the leaſt of Gods bleſſings; thou ſhalt never do it while I live; and indeed, he never meant to let him doe it, untill our Saviour told him, if he did it not, he ſhould not and could not have any part in him: And therefore, though his ignorance cannot be commended, yet his humility is to be admired herein; and this made him, as he profeſſeth and confeſſeth of his owne accord, to forſake all and follow Chriſt, and to be, as Bonaventure ſaith of S. Francis, ſuch a deſpiſer of all worldly vanities, Ut nemo tam auri cupidus, quam ipſe paupertatis; as that no man could be found ſo greedy of gold and worldly wealth, as he was of poverty, want, and mean eſtate.

1. The humility of S. Peter.

Stobæus in vita Diogen.

Sueton in vita Caligulæ. c. 10.

Mat. 11. 29.

Luke 5. 8.

Luke 13. 8.

Mat. 3. 17.

Mark. 9. 2, 3, 4, &c.

Pſal. 22. 6.

Bonavent. in vita S. Franciſci.

2. For

2. His magnimity. Mat. 16, 16.

Mat. 14. 26, 27, 28.

2. For his magnanimity, we find he was of the braveſt ſpirit of all the Apoſtles; none prompter to ſpeake, none bolder to doe, none conſtanter to ſuffer, than S. Peter was; for when Chriſt demaunded of them all, Whom do men ſay that I the Sonne of man am? S. Peter immediately anſwered, Thou art Chriſt the Sonne of the living God; and when Chriſt walked upon the ſea, and the Diſciples ſeeing him, were ſore troubled, and cried out for feare, becauſe they thought he was a ſpirit; aſſoone as Chriſt told them it was he, and therefore, that they ſhould not feare, S. Peter preſently anſwered, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water,; and when Chriſt ſaid, come, he went downe out of the ſhip, and walked on the water to go to Ieſus: wherein you may obſerve both his admirable humility, and humble reſpect unto his Maſter Chriſt, that he would not preſume to come towards him, till he gave him leave: and then his wonderfull boldneſſe, and unheard of the like magnanimity, to walke upon the ſea, aſſoone as ever his maſter bade him come; and as, when the village of the Samaritans

Luk. 9. 54.

would not receive our Saviour to come within it, S. Iames and S. Iohn preſently would have fire called out of heaven to deſtroy them, becauſe they had deſpiſed Chriſt, and refuſed to entertaine him into their city, which was an act almoſt as void of charity in them, as the other was void of piety in the Samaritans; and therefore, S. Peter had no hand in it; ſo when the ſouldiers came with ſwords and ſtaves to apprehend our Saviour Chriſt, then S. Peter, not like a poore fiſherman, nor like a freſh-water-ſouldier, or any of our carpet-knights, that weare gilded

Virg. Æneid. lib. 1 p. 123.

hilts and ruſty blades, but, like a noble heroicke, ruſhed on, medijs q. in millibus ardet, and, Alexander-like, drew out his ſword, and ſmote off Malchus eare, no obſcure fellow, but, as you ſee, a man well knowne by name, and a ſervant of the high Prieſt; yet he cared not, who he was; he feared not any one; for he was ready to die with his Maſter, ſo magnanimous a man was he, and ſo his martyrdome afterward did plainely teſtifie.

Ob. But you will ſay; he denied his maſter moſt cowardly, and therefore, where was his magnanimity?

Sol. I anſwer, Semel inſanivimus omnes, there is no man wiſe at all houres, but the beſt may faile at ſome time or other; Hanniball that dreaded no foe, yet ſometimes feared his enemies; and Iulius Cæſar, that purſued his victories as much as any man, yet did he ſometimes flie, as he did at Dirachium, from the face of his foes; ſo might S. Peter once faile and fall into ſome feare; and yet, as any one act of vice takes not away the habit of the contrary vertue; ſo this one

One act takes not away the habit of any faculty.

forſwearing of his maſter (for his three denials were all at one time, within the compaſſe of leſſe than one ſmall houre) cannot denie him the habit of magnanimity, which did alwayes reſide in the heart and breaſt of this noble Apoſtle.

3. His charity.

Bonavent. in vita S. Franciſci.

3. For his charity and his love both to God and men, I may ſay of his charity unto his brethren, as Bonaventure ſaith of S. Francis, ignoſcebat alijs multa, nihil ſibi; he was moſt ready to remit many things to others, but nothing unto himſelf; and before he was inſtructed by Chriſt, how far he ſhould proceed herein, he was willing to remit any fault till ſeven times, and afterwards till ſeventy times ſeven times; and for his love to Chriſt, our Saviour himſelfe cleares this point; for when Chriſt ſaith, Simon, loveſt thou me more than theſe? that is, not more than thou loveſt theſe; for that was a point without queſtion, that he had farre greater reaſon to love Chriſt, better than all the reſt of his fellow-Apoſtles and Diſciples; but loveſt thou me more than all theſe men do love me? S. Peter makes him none other anſwer, but Lord thou knoweſt that I love thee; and ſo S Auguſtine, Michael de palatio, and others do ſay, that although Chriſt loved S. Iohn

Ioh. 21.

Our Saviours queſtion explaned

Michael. a palatio in Iohan. c. 22.

beſt, (in what ſence I ſhall ſhew hereafter) yet S. Peter loved Chriſt beſt, better than any of them all did love him; and therefore, ut ſingularem amorem ſui exigit Chriſtus, as Chriſt required a more ſpeciall love from S. Peter, than he did expect from all the reſt, ſo S. Peter profeſſeth a more extraordinary love to him, than all the reſt could beare unto him.

Object. But then it may be demaunded, how Chriſt could love S. Iohn beſt, if if S. Peter loved him best? quia diligentes me, diligo; because God loveth them that love him, and it were a kind of injustice, at least partiality, in Christ, to love him lesse that loved him most. 1 Sam. 2. 30.

Sol. I answer, the Schoolemen and some others have puzled themselves about this question, and have alleaged many probable reasons to confirme their owne opinions; Aquinas saith, there were some, and those no meane expounders of the holy Scriptures, which thinke that S. Iohn was therefore best beloved of Christ, quia ab ineunte pueritiâ castissimus vixerit, because he had lived most chast from his very youth; and I will not stop his mouth with as many, that think this S. Iohn to be the man, which was married in Cana of Galile; because I think not so my selfe, and I find most of the best Writers that thinke the contrary: but I say, that although Aquinas, Euthymius, S. Hierom, S. Chrysostome and others, do seeme to agree, that Christ loved S. Iohn best, because he was holier, and had a greater measure of grace than the rest of the Apostles had; and therefore Christ loved him best, propter puritatem vitæ, because of the purity of his life, as S. Cyrill saith, & propter raras virtutes, for the excellency of his rare vertues, as S. Hierom saith; yet this seemes to be contrary to the truth; because then he had whereof to boast, and some cause of this love of Christ to him had beene in himselfe, when as the Scriptures tell us plainely, that God loveth us first, and loveth us freely, when he findeth not any, the least cause of love in the best of us, but a great deale of cause, and many many reasons, for which he might condemne the best, the purest, and the holiest Saint; as I have more fully shewed in another place.

Thomas in Catena super Iob. cap. 22.

In what sense Christ loved S. Iohn best.

1. Opinion.

Euthym. in loc. c. 22 Chrysost. Hom. 71.

Cyrill. lib. 9 cap. 15. Hieron. in Ep. ad Heliodor.

1 Ioh. 4. 19.

And therefore Cardinall Tolet saith, that Christ loved S. Iohn best, Non dilectione charitatis, sed ratione familiaritatis, non amore divino, sed amicitia humana; not with the love of charity, but because of greater familiarity that was betwixt them, which he proveth in the eleventh Chapter of S. Iohn, that he had this humane love, and this familiarity with Christ, more than any other of the Apostles; and Michael a palatio saith, that S. Iohn calleth himselfe, the disciple whom Iesus loved, quod sensibiliora dilectionis in eum proferebat signa, quam in Petrum, ut parentes minoribus signa dilectionis suaviora ostendunt, cum alioqui primogenitum plus ament; because Christ shewed more sensible testimonies, and apparent signes of love towards S. Iohn, than he did unto S Peter, as those parents that show more love unto their younger children, though indeed they love the elder a great deale better.

2. Opinion. Tolet. in Iohan. c. 13 p. 55.

Michael a palatio. in Ioh. c. 22.

Others, answering to this question, say, that before Christ his passion, S. Iohn loved him best, and so he was best beloved of him; for S Iohn followed Christ with love, S. Peter with feare, into the high Priests pallace; and our Saviour saw S. Peter would deny him, which he could not love in him, though he loved him; and therefore all this while he loved S. Iohn best, as being most worthy of his love; but after S. Peters repentance, which made him more glorious than he was before, he now loving much, because much was forgiven him, and loving more than S. Iohn, because he received more mercy from Christ than S. Iohn, therefore Christ loved him best, and better than S. Iohn. And therefore also, these men say, Christ gave him the keyes of the kingdome of heaven, and thereupon, the priority of the rest, and the superiority over all his fellow-Apostles, and so made him the prime and supreame governour of and over all the whole Church of Christ.

3. Opinion.

S Peters repentance made him more glorious than he was before he sinned.

To all which I briefly answer, that he could no wayes merit the love of Christ, neither could he have repented of his sinne, had not Christ looked backe, as the Evangelist sheweth, and by his grace sent him out, to weepe and to wash away his sinnes with teares; for repentance is the gift of God; and for the keyes of the kingdome of heaven, he had them none otherwise, than the rest of the Apostles had them, and their successours still have them: for priority of order, were I the Patriarch of Alexandria, or Constantinople, Antioch, Ephesus or Ierusalem, or if there were any other greater in the world; yet for diverse reasons, I would yeeld the same to him and to his successours, in the sea of Rome; but for superio- rity

The former opinions answered.

Luke 23. 61.

Priority of order granted to S. Peter

Sebastian. Meyer. in Apoc. c. 4. & Fox. ex Lyrano.

rity of jurisdiction, sub judice lis est, the matter is not yet determined, and it will never be granted, till it be better proved, to belong unto him.

The Authors opinion.

Therefore to tell you what I conceive of our Saviours love to these two Apostles, I say, that as in Christ there were two natures, and two wils, divine and humane, so two loves; the one in respect of his humane nature, so he loved the Iewes better than the Gentiles, and came principally (as himselfe testifieth) to seeke and save the lost sheepe of the house of Israel, of whom he came according to the flesh; and among all these he loved his mother best; and next to her, those that were his next allyes and neerest kinsmen by flesh and bloud, according to the rule of nature, and the dictate of true reason, if there was no obex, no just let, or right reason to the contrary, because Christ, induendo divinitatem, in clothing himselfe with the Deity, did not exuere humanitatem, put off those humane affections, that are no sinnes; they were guided, but not excluded from him; therefore S. Iohn being his first cosen (as we collect out of the Evangelists) he, as man, loved him best, both before and after his passion, as being the neerest to him by flesh and bloud: the other love, wherewith he loved S. Peter best, was in respect of his divine nature, which is immutable and unchangeable, neither procured by our merit, because it is a free grace of God, nor diminished by our sinnes, because that whom he loveth, he loveth unto the end; though, quoad nos, in respect of our sense and apprehension, we do often perceive the same love to be either more or lesse, according as we do more or lesse seeme to serve or to offend our God; or, as God pleaseth to dilate the fruits thereof unto us, for our comfort, or to with-hold the influence of his favour from us, and so seeme to desert us, for our triall; and thus, with God there is no respect of persons, no naturall cause, no humane merit, to procure this love, but in all nations, and among all people, to whomsoever he giveth the grace, to feare him and to worke righteousnesse more than others, more than any; them he loves better than others, better than any; in which respect he saith in the law, diligentes me diligo, and in the Gospell, He that doth the will of my father, the same is my mother, my brother and my sister; and thus I take it, that, as God gave this grace unto S. Peter, to love Christ best, so Christ loved him best.

Two natures and two loves in Christ. Mat. 15. 24. Rom. 9. 3.

Christ refused no humane property that is without iniquity.

Christ loved S. Iohn best, as man.

Christ loved S. Peter best, as God. Ioh. 13. 1.

The immutable love of God is not alwaies perceived in the same measure.

Act. 10 35.

Mat. 3. 35.

And this should teach us, though not (with the simple Catholique) so farre to magnifie him, as almost to deifie him, and, as Bonaventure and Bosquierus do relate, not probable, but incredible, and, in many places, most ridiculous things of S. Francis; so to ascribe to S. Peter more than we can colour with any reason, or himselfe would accept, if he were here in person; yet as S. Augustine saith, Vereri ne in Petro contumelioſi existimus, to be afraid, we doe no wrong unto S Peter, and to be injurious to him, now a Saint in heaven, when as we ought to sleight no servant of God on earth; because (as S. Bernard saith) he was honorabilissimum membrum in corpore Christi, vas in honore plenum gratiæ, a most honourable member in the body of Christ, a vessell full of grace and glory; and, as S. Augustine saith, Omnes sciunt illum apostolatus principatum cuilibet episcopatui præferendum; all men do know, that the principality of his Apostleship is to be preferred before all episcopality whatsoever. And therefore, seeing S. Peter was so excellent a gift, we ought to praise and blesse the name of our good God, for giving unto his Church so holy and so blessed an Apostle as S. Peter was.

What the former doctrine should teach us.

Aug. de baptismo. cont. Donatist. l. 2. c. 1.

Aug. quo supra.

And so much for the speakers in this dialogue.

2. The speech in this dialogue is twofold.

2. The speech in the dialogue; twofold.

1. A question of S. Peter.
2. An answer of our Saviour.

1. For the question, we must consider { 1. The occasion 2. The substance } of it.

1. The occasion of this question I find to be threefold.

1. The words of Christ to S. Peter.
2. The turning about of S. Peter.
3. The sight of S. Iohn following Christ.

} For

1. The question, two things to be considered. 1. The occasion: which is threefold.

1. Our

1. Our Saviour told him (as S. Iohn sets it downe) with what kind of death he should glorifie God; and the better to incourage him, most chearfully, to go on in this sad passage, he saith, follow me; then, gressu corporis festinationem itineris ostendens, shewing by a bodily progresse, what hast and speed he should make, to finish that spirituall journey of glorious martyrdome, he walks on, and leaves this our Apostle to follow after. Then

1. The words of Christ. Petrum crucifixit Nero. Euseb. l. 3. c. 24.

2. S. Peter turned aside, and looked about him, to see what he should behold, or perhaps to consider what he should do; and then

2. The turning about of S. Peter.

3. He seeth S. Iohn, without any further adoe, following Christ; and this subsequent sight of his turning about, moved him to ask this question, and what shall this man doe? that is, as S. Cyrill doth expound it, quis vitæ exitus hunc expectat? What manner of death shall this man die? Or, by what kind of suffering shall he glorifie thy name?

3. The sight of S. Iohn. Cyrill. l. 12. c. 66. & Chrys. Hom. 87.

Where I beseech you to observe seriem causarum, how our Saviours words were causa sine qua non, the first motive that produced this turning about, and this looking about brought him to the sight of S. Iohn, and the sight of S. Iohn moved him to ask this curious question, and what shall this man do?

The chaine of causes that moved S. Peter to aske this question.

And therefore when Christ commandeth us to do any thing, we should take heed of turning backe, or looking aside, and gazing about to disturbe our minds from what we should intend; but we ought to go on speedily and steddily to the performance of Gods precepts, and remember Lots wife, that for looking backe was presently turned into a pillar of salt, and Orpheus, that had his wife Euridice granted him out of hell (as the Poets faigne) upon condition, that he should not looke backe upon her, till she was come out of those infernall confines; but he

That we ought not to look backe in Gods service.

Luke 17. 32.

How Orpheus lost his wife Euridice.

Flexit amans oculos, & protinus illa relapsa est;

Being so inamour'd upon his wife, did cast backe his lookes on her, and she was presently fetch'd back againe to hell; to teach us, as Ferus saith, Ut nunquam retrospiciamus, that we should never looke back from the works of our vocation; nor make any stay, to put those good thougths, that come in our mind, to execution; but, as the Poet saith, Ferus in h. loc.

Tolle moras; semper nocuit differre paratis;

Lucan. Phars. l. 1.

Delay no time, which is alwaies dangerous to great designes; for many men have omitted many good things, that they intended, by reason of their delay, which produced many accidents, that fell out inter calicem supremaq; labra; as we read of Agrippa, that was almost perswaded to become a Christian, but by deferring his resolution to another time, he hindered his owne conversion, for ought we read of, to this very time; and therefore, when God puts any good thoughts into our heads, any good purposes into our hearts, let our hands put them presently into action, let us not stay their execution; good things need no reprivall.

To delay Gods service, how dangerous it is. Acts 26. 28.

But now why S. Peter, upon the premises, should make this quære, and demaund this question, it may be soone inquired, but not easily answered; because I find Expositors very various in this point; for

Why the premises moved S. Peter to ask this question.

1. Michael a palatio saith, he did it out of his singular love to S. Iohn, qui voluit amici statum discere, which love made him carefull for his friend, and out of that love to him, he desired to know what should become of him; quia amor solicitos facit, because true love makes us very carefull, as S. Chrysostome saith; and respects not onely our selves and our owne good, but also the good of our friend.

1. Opinion. Michael a palatio in Iob. 22. The property of true love. Chrys. Hom. 87.

2. S. Ambrose saith, that he did it for the strengthening of his owne faith; Quia non audens voluntatis perseverantiam sibi polliceri, ad solatium sui-ipsius consortium quærit alterius; because he durst not promise unto himselfe the stability and perseverance of his owne will, to suffer and die for Christ, he having so much experience before, of his owne imbecillity and weakness, when Christ told him he should denie him; therefore he might now feare the more, when Christ tels him that he should die for him; and in that respect, seeing as the Poet saith,

2. Opinion. S. Amb. in Luc. Afflicted men have some comfort to see others in the same afflictions with themselves.

Virgil. Æneid. Cyrillus l. 12. c. 66.

Solamen miseris socios habuisse doloris.

And Saint Cyril saith, volumus nostrorum laborum habere socios, it is most naturall unto us to desire partakers of our labours, and it is some comfort unto us to see some fellowes in our sufferings; he might be desirous to know whether S. Iohn should die with the same death or not.

Second opinion answered and rejected. Tolet. in Iohan. c. 22.

But to this Cardinall Tolet answereth, in my minde, as truly as he doth briefely, that, ruina alterius vitiosum est solacium homini justo; the fall or death of another man is no right comfort to a just man, who takes no great pleasure in the unjust suffering of another man, and therefore,

3. Opinion. Maldonat in hunc loc. Iohannis.

3. Maldonate, weighing all these things a little better, saith, that S. Peter considering with himselfe, how deerely Christ loved S. Iohn, he thought that hee should obtaine this priviledge, not to suffer death for Christ, but, when upon these words he saw S. Iohn following Christ, then, on the other side, he supposed that he might likewise drinke of the same cup; and therefore, being thus doubtfull what to thinke of him, and desirous to be resolved of his doubt, hee saith, & quid hic, and what shall this man doe? So it is apparant, it was curiosity in S. Peter, that moved him to aske this question; and so the Major part of the best Writers doe conclude the same; for honest Ferus, the best of the Friers, saith, in Petro manifestè se prodit natura carnis, quia semper solet caro, in alienam vocationem respicere, & suam negligere; the humane frailty did manifestly shew it selfe in S. Peter, because flesh and blood doth alwaies love rather to looke into another mans state, then his owne; and so Saint Cyrill, Cajetan, Baronius, Iansenius, and divers others, that are as much devoted to S. Peter, as any other of the wiser sort of Papists, doe all yeeld, it was an infirmity in him, to move this question, and what shall this man doe? Yet Cardinall Tolet seemes to justifie him; and his reason is, that he was so lately, so highly advanced by Christ to such transcendent prerogatives, that we have no reason, to beleeve so easily, he should so suddenly fall into curiosity.

That curiosity made Saint Peter to aske this question. Ferus in hunc loc. Iohan.

Cyrillus l. 12. c. 66. Baron. to. 1. ad an. 34. Iansen. in Concordant. sup. hunc loc. Tolet in hunc loc. Iob:

The excuse of S. Peter.

But to this I answer (as Saint Augustine hath observed in the like case) that, in uno momento, infra pauca verba, qui antea beatus postea Satanas dicebatur; within a moment, after the speaking of few words, the same man, the same S. Peter, that was called blessed, is termed Satan; and therefore, though I doe most willingly yeeld to Bellarmine, that in regard of S. Peters love to S. Iohn, the care of his fellow, the comfort of his heart, the confirming of his faith, and many other considerable circumstances that might induce him to aske this question; hac si curiositas dicenda, venia dignissima est; this curiosity of S. Peter, if you will call it curiosity, may be placed, inter minutissima peccata, in the lowest ranke of the most veniall sinnes, and so the Apostle may be well freed a tanto from any great sinne, though, non a toto, not wholly from all fault; yet I must confesse this curiosity can bee no lesse, then a humane frailty in this divine Apostle.

Answered. Aug. de verb. dom. ser. 13.

Bellar. de rom. pont. l. 1. c. 28.

S. Peters fault not great.

And this is the comfort of Gods Saints, that when they see their owne infirmities, how subject they are to many falls, and sometimes to foule mistakings; yet they should not despaire, nor cast downe their soules from all hope; because they may consider how the best men failed and attained not unto perfection; and therefore, if the strong winds of mans temptation have shaken the great oakes of Bashan, and the tall Cedars of Libanus, what wonder is it if they doe much more shake the small and low shrubs of Cades? if S. Peter stumble, it is no marvell if I doe fall; And so much for the occasion of this question.

A comfort to Gods servants that they should not despaire.

2. The question wherein two things are observable.

2. The question it selfe is, and what shall this man doe? wherein you must consider these two points.

1. The connexion, in the word, and; and what shall this man do?
2. The interrogation, in the other words, what shall this man do?

3. The connexion

For this word, and, must not be omitted; because Saint Chrysostome and his Epitomist, Theophylact, and others, doe understand this precept and command of Christ, follow me, of a corporall bodily following of him; but this connexion

of

of the Apoſtles words, with that, which our Saviour ſaid before, doth ſufficiently ſhew that Saint Peter did well inough perceive our Saviours mind, that he ſpake this of his death and of the manner thereof; and it is as much as if he ſhould have ſaid, well, I underſtand what ſhall become of me; and now I deſire to know, what ſhall become of Saint Iohn; whether he likewiſe ſhall glorifie thee by a violent death or not? So from both theſe points, that is, the connexion of S. Peters words with our Saviours; and the interrogation of S. Peter unto our Saviour; we may obſerve two ſpeciall things moſt conſiderable.

Saint Peter underſtood Chriſt ſpake of his death.

2. The interrogation.

Two things obſervable.

1. The piety of our Apoſtle, in this his patient and moſt voluntary ſubmiſſion of himſelfe unto his Maſters prediction.
2. The infirmity of our Apoſtle, in this his curious inquiſition after his fellowes ſtate and condition: For

1. When Chriſt told him what and how he ſhould ſuffer for him, he ſhould die for him; non reclamat, non refugium quærit, non obmurmurat, ſaith Ferus; he was contented with all that, he murmured not, he refuſed it not; ſo noble was he, ſo Heroicke was his minde, and ſo willing to undergoe any thing for Chriſt his ſake, and for the Goſpells ſake; a rare example for us to follow him, to gaineſay nothing that God ſhall ſay unto us, and reject nothing that Chriſt ſhall impoſe upon us.

1. S. Petri piety.

Ferus in Iohan. 21. ult.

2. Though he was indued with ſuch rare vertues, with ſuch divine graces, and dignified by Chriſt to be the firſt and chiefe of all the Apoſtles; yet behold he was but a man, fleſh and blood, fraile and weake, ſubject to fall, when he thought to ſtand faſt; and though glorious for his promptneſſe to ſuffer martyrdome, and admired for his readineſſe to undergoe, for Chriſt, all kinds of afflictions; yet he was too curious to inquire, and too inquiſitive to ſearch after Saint Iohns ſtate and condition.

2. S. Peters infirmity.

And this ſhould put us all in mind of the Apoſtles rule, qui ſtat videat ne cadat, let him that ſtandeth take heed leaſt he falleth; for the frailties of the Saints, are recorded in the Scriptures, not that we ſhould, with the ſwine, paſſe by the ſweet and pleaſant flowers, and runne to roote in the dunghill, that we ſhall eſpie in any garden; ſed ut caſus majorum ſit tremor minorum, but that the pointing at their ſlips, and the ſetting downe of their faults, might move all others to looke better unto their ſteps, and to be the more carefull of their waies: for if Abraham, David, Peter, and the beſt of all Gods ſervants had their faults, Why ſhould you looke that we ſhould be without ſinne? or, why ſhould we thinke, we are able to ſtand, without a great deale of care, and many prayers to God for his grace to aſſiſt us? and therefore this ſhould teach us, the more warily to looke unto our ſelves, and not to be, too ſtrictly, cenſurers of our brothers weakeneſſe. And ſo much for the queſtion of S. Peter.

1 Cor. 10. 12.

The frailties of the Saints why recorded in the Scriptures.

2. The anſwer of our Saviour is in theſe words, ἐὰν αὐτὸν θέλω μένειν ἕως ἔρχομαι, τί πρὸς σε; σὺ ἀκολούθει μοι; if I will that he tarrie till I come, what is that to thee, follow thou me.

2. The anſwer of our Saviour.

In which words, you may obſerve theſe two parts.

Two parts:

1. A ſharpe reprehenſion.
2. A ſtrict injunction. } And

1. In the reprehenſion two things are likewiſe to be conſidered
1. The one concerneth S. Iohn, if I will that hee tarrie till I come.
2. The other reflecteth upon S. Peter, what is that to thee?

1. A reprehenſion, wherein two things.

1. That part of this reprehenſion, which concerneth S. Iohn, containeth theſe foure things very obſervable.

1. His continuation, or abode here on earth, if I will that he tarry.
2. The limitation of his abode, till I come.
3. The cauſe of this tarriance, or abode, is the will of Chriſt, if I will.
4. The condition of all this, expreſſed in this ſhort word, if, if I will that he tarry till I come.

1. What conceerneth S. Iohn, containeth foure points.

1. S. Iohns abode on earth.

1 Cor. 15. 6.

Ioh. 14. 2.

Luk. 16. 9. We have no long abiding in this world.

Heb. 13. 14. Iob 14. 2. 1 Cor. 7. 31. Aulus Gell. noct. attic. l. 12. c. 2.

Luk. 12. 19.

Seneca in ep. 22.

2. The limitation of S. Iohns abode. Bern. de advent. serm. 3.

A threefold comming of Christ.

1. Comming. Iohn 1. 14.

2. Comming.

Idem quo supra.

Iohn 1. 11.

Gal. 2. 20. Rom. 8. 9.

Two speciall signes of Christs comming to us.

1. The driving away of sin.

Rom. 6. 14.

Sap. 1. 5.

1. This tarrying of S. Iohn is not to be understood, of his abiding in the place, where he was standing, or continuing in that countrey, where he was now living; but of his remaining in that state of life, which he then injoyed, as the same word signifieth, where the Apostle saith, ἐξ ὧν πλείους μένουσιν ἕως ἄρτι; of whom the greater part remaine unto this present; and it noteth a tarrying for a time, with an expectation of an end, and not perpetually without end; and so the words, till I come, doe make it plaine unto us; because our μοναὶ, that is, our constant mansions, or αἰώνιοι σκηναὶ, our everlasting habitations, (as Saint Luke calleth them) are in heaven, and here is but τὸ μένειν, a tarrying onely with a donec, for a short time, till he comes: And therefore the life of man, in this life, is but a temporary stay, and not a perpetuall abiding in one state; for so Iob sheweth, that man borne of a woman hath but a short time to live, and so the Apostle teacheth, that the fashion of this world passeth away, and every man is like to iron, si exercens conteritur, si non exercens rubigo corrumpit; if you use it, it will weare, and waste away; and if you use it not, the rust will as fast eat it and consume it, as the wearing waste it, saith Aulus Gellius.

And therefore this condemneth the folly of them, that would, if they were able, build them here everlasting habitations, when they say with that foole in the Gospell, soule thou hast goods in store for many yeeres; for this should teach us rather, to imploy the time of our tarryance here, to Gods glory and the furtherance of our everlasting happinesse, by desiring rather to live well then to live long, cum omnibus contingat benè vivere, nulli diu; when as every man should live well, and no man can live long, as Seneca saith.

2. The limitation of the Apostles tarrying is in these words, till I come; and Saint Bernard saith there is a threefold comming of Christ.

1. Ad homines, unto men, in infirmity.
2. In homines, into men by his vertue.
3. Contra homines impios & propter homines justos, against wicked men and for godly men in glory. And

1. The first comming was, when the Word was made flesh; and this was past before these words were said; and therefore this comming here spoken of must bee understood, either of the second or of the third comming of Christ; And

2. The second comming, est occultus & spiritualis, is a secret and a spirituall comming, & est via, per quam felix efficitur ultimus; and it is the way to come unto, and the meanes that makes the last comming of Christ most happy unto us, as Saint Bernard speaketh; for when hee comes amongst his owne, and his owne receive him not, then will his third and last comming be to their torments; because they refused the comforts of his second comming.

And therefore we should give all diligence to examine, whether Christ bee come unto us by his spirit, and doth now abide in us by faith, or not: for if any man hath not the spirit of Christ, the same is none of his, saith the Apostle; and if you would know, whether Christ be come to you or not, I would be contented to go a little out of mine owne way, to teach you this way to make you happie; and therefore I say that you may know it best, by these two speciall signes,

1. The diminution of your sins.
2. The accumulation of graces.

For

1. As Dagon could not stand before the Arke of the Lord upon one table, so Beliall cannot reside with Christ in one heart; but if Christ be in us, then sinne shall have no dominion over us; and on the other side, if our hearts be full of evill thoughts, our mouthes of lascivious, wanton, and prophane discourses, and our hands deale with wickednesse, our eyes wander after our neighbours wives, and our feet walke in the pathes of unrighteousnesse, we may be sure Christ is not yet come unto us; or, if he hath knocked at our gates, we may be certaine, we have not yet opened, and he is not yet entered into our hearts; because the holy spirit of discipline, that is, the spirit of Christ, fleeth from deceit, and dwelleth not in the body that is subject unto sinne.

the

Non bene conveniunt nec in una sede morantur. Ovid. Metam. l. 2. 1 he exercises of grace.

2. Saint Bernard demands, quid est venire ad te, nisi gratiam suam conferre tibi? What is to come unto thee, but to bestow his grace upon thee? For Christ is no niggard, and hee never comes empty-handed; but he is, and hee comes, full of grace and truth, and his grace, if it be in us, will not be in vaine, will not bee idle; but it will give light to them that sit in darkenesse, and guide their feet into the way of peace; and as Saint Bernard saith, it will awaken the drousie soule, mollifie the stonie heart, plucke out vice, and plant in vertue, water that which is thirsty, inlighten that which is darke, open that which is locked up, and kindle that which is cold; This is the second comming of Christ; and these are the surest signes of his comming; as the tree is knowne by his fruits, or the fire by his heat, so by these and the like signes you may know of the comming of the Sonne of God. And Bernard. in Cant. ser. 74. Joh. 1. 14. 1 Cor. 15. 10. Luk 1. 78.

The effects of grace. Idem Bern. qui supra ser. 74.

3. The third comming of Christ is in the last day, in the glory of his Father with his Angels, to render unto every one according to his deeds. 3. Comming. Mat. 16. 17. Revel. 22. 12.

But which of these two last commings is here meant by Christ in this place, it is not easily agreed; For Which comming is here understood.

1. Some doe understand this speech of Christ to signifie the second comming of Christ, in spirit, by his grace; and they make the words of our Saviour in the 16. Chapter of Saint Matthew, There bee some standing heere, which shall not tast of death, till they have seene the Sonne of man come in his kingdome, to paralell these words here, If I will that hee tarry till I come; for (say they) what is, hee shall tarrie, but hee shall not taste of death? and what is, till I come, but the comming of the Sonne of man in his kingdome? and what is that kingdome, but the effectuall preaching, and the obedient receiving, that is, beleeving and doing the doctrine of Christ, as our Saviour himselfe sheweth, when he saith, the kingdome of God is come unto you. 1 Opinion, of the comming of Christ in spirit by his grace. Mat. 16. 28. Mat. 10. 7, & c. 12. 28. Vide etiam 1 Pet. 1. 16.

But for my part, I cannot yeeld to this exposition; because our Saviour seemes to yeeld some speciall prerogative or favour unto S. Iohn, more then to the rest of the Apostles, that he should tarrie till hee came, which the rest should not doe; and therefore, till I come, cannot signifie the effusion of the gifts of the Holy Ghost, which was done on the day of Pentecost, nor the ample promulgation of the Gospell, which was presently done after our Saviours Ascention, nor for the effectuall conversion of many gentile nations unto the Church of Christ; because all this was done in the times of many more, which tarryed alive till this comming of Christ, and saw all this as well as S. Iohn, and were themselves great helpes to further this his comming, for the promulgation of the Gospell, and the conversion of the world unto the Church of God. And therefore The former opinion rejected.

2. Others understand it of his second comming, but not in mercy, for the preaching of the Gospell, and the conversion of the people to the faith of Christ, but rather for his comming in justice, by Titus Vespatian, for the destruction of Ierusalem, and the people of the Iewes, for their cruell murdering of the Son of God, and not beleeving in the faith of Christ; because he onely saw the same, and no more, of all the Apostles; and thus Oecumenius doth expound it; volo eum manere in Palestina usq; ad excidium Hierosolimæ, I will have him to stay untill hee sees the destruction of Ierusalem; and so Theophylact and Dorotheus in his Synopsis writes, that divers men thought so. But 2. Opinion, of the comming of Christ to execute judgement upon Hierusalem.

3. Others doe understand it of his third comming, to judgement; and yet all of these cannot agree in what sence he should tarrie, till Christ should come to judgement; for some of them would have it hyperbolically spoken, to signifie that he should live very long; as we doe usually speake of a long time, I thinke, hee will tarry till the day of judgement; that is, he will stay a very great, and a very long tedious while; and others have hereupon grounded a most senceless error, that he should not die at all, but should remaine untill the 3. Opinion, of his third comming to judgement, yet not all in the same sence. Lemnius & Theodor. Mopsuestius apud. Maldonat. in Ioh. cap. 21.

Mat.16.28.

comming of Christ to judgement; and they would prove their mistaking out of our Saviours words, There bee some standing here which shall not taste of death, till they see the Sonne of man comming in his kingdome; so thought Hypolitus, and Beda, if that be Beda, which wrote the Serm. de Iohanne Evangelista, and Simeon Metaphrastes, and Isidorus, and others, that supposed he died not at all, but remaineth yet alive, with Enoch and Elias, who are not dead in their graves, but are sleeping in some place, where the LORD appointed them.

Hypolitus in lib. de consummat. seculi.

The former opinion answered and rejected.

But to answer these mens supposition, our Saviours words in that place of Matthew, are generally understood of all Expositors for the kingdome of grace, and his comming by his spirit to inlarge his Church after his Resurrection; or of that glory of his transfiguration, on Mount Tabor, which is immediatly expressed in the next Chapter, and was seene by Saint Peter, Saint Iames, and Saint Iohn, which were some of them that were standing by, when our Saviour spake these words; and to confute their error, that thought hee remaineth alive; Theophil. saith, that he was slaine under Trajane; and to prove not onely that he died, but also that he died a violent death, he alledgeth the saying of Saint Matthew, calicem quidem meum bibetis; ye shall drinke indeed of my cup; that is, saith he, you shall die a violent death, as I shall die; and therefore, he addeth, Quis audeat dicere eos violentam mortem non obijsse? who dares denie that they died a violent death? especially, when it is apparant that Saint Iames was slaine with the sword, and so dranke of that cup, and therefore most probable, that his brother tasted of the same drinke; yet this may be answered, that the drinking of Christ his cup, doth not alwaies signifie to undergoe the same or the like violent death, but to sustaine a great measure of sorrow and afflictions for Christ his sake; so every Christian drinketh of his cup; and so Saint Iohn, quamvis materiali cruce vel gladio non occubuerit, verè tamen calicem Domini bibit, though he died not with the sword, or by any other materiall crosse, or violent death; yet did he truly drinke of the cup of his Lord, and drinke deepe thereof; first, when he stood under the crosse of Christ, with Mary and others, when Christ was crucified, and saw his bitter Passion, heard his lamentation, and considered all the scornes and contradictions of sinners against him; and then secondly, when, under Domitian, he was cast into a boyling tunne of oyle, at Rome, and after that banished into the Ile of Patmos, and alwaies persecuted for the testimony of Iesus Christ.

Mat.20.23.

Act.12.2.

To drink of Christ his cup what it signifieth.

Perus in hunc loc. Iohn.c.21.

When Saint Iohn dranke of Christ his cup.

Nicephorus lib.1. c.35.

That Saint Iohn lay in his grave and rose againe.

Ambros. de Spiritu Sancto.

That opinion confuted.

Beza in annotat. in Iohn.c.21.

Tertullian de anima cap. de Menandro hæretico.

Polycrates apud Euseb. l.3.c.31.

Ambros. in Psal. 45. & Ser.20. in Psal.118.

Euseb. & Myss. hom. de Iohn. Evangelista.

Chrysost. in Iohn hom.2.

Aug. de temp. serm.149.

Leontius in h. loc.

Gregor. hom.35. in Evang.

Haymo in vita Nicolai. &c.

And there be some, that, with Nicephorus and Saint Ambrose, thinke, that hee died indeed, but rose againe the same day; because it is reported, that he prepared a grave for himselfe, and laid himselfe downe alive therein, but afterwards, being sought there, his body could not be found; and therefore Saint Ambrose saith, hinc clausis tumuli foribus, gratia Resurrectionis sublatus est, ut constaret Sepultura & non inveniretur sepultus; hee was taken out of his Tombe, though the doores thereof were shut, that his Sepulture and buriall might appeare, but himselfe might not be found; and all this, no doubt, by the power of Christ his Resurrection, and for a testimony of the Resurrection of all flesh.

But to confute this fiction of Nicephorus, which made that Impostor of France to take upon him the person of Saint Iohn, and to be therefore justly burned at Tolouse, as Beza saith; Tertullian tells us plainely, obijt & Iohannes, quem in adventum Domini remansurum frustra fuerat spes; that Saint Iohn also died, whom they did hope, but in vaine, should remaine unto the last comming of the Lord to judgement; and so Polycrates, and Saint Ambrose too, in another place, is of this minde, and Emyssenus, Saint Chrisostome, Saint Augustine, Leontius, Saint Gregory, Haymo, Theodoret, Heracleota, Beda, Theophylact, Euthymius, Rupertus, and divers others, doe unanimously affirme that hee died, and was buried at Ephesus, about the ninetie eight yeere of his age.

And therefore, this tarrying of S. Iohn, till the comming of our Saviour Christ to judgement, is to be understood, not of his remaining alive, without seeing of death; but of continuing without tasting of any violent death, that is, manere illæsum, integrum, & non crucifixum, to remaine unkilled, and uncrucified, which S. Peter was to undergo; so Eusebius Emyssenus in his Hom. de S. Iohanne, S. Augustine de temp. Ser. 149. Rupertus & Maldonat. in Ioh. 21. and many others, do say, this is the true and genuine sense of our Saviours words, and S. Iohn himselfe in this very place, doth seem to intimate the very same thing; for after he had said, that S. Peter should follow Christ, that is, be crucified as Christ was; he saith, S. Iohn should remaine till Christ came; and that we might not mistake this phrase, he tels us, that Christ said not, he should not die; and therefore this tarrying of him must not be understood of his death, but of the manner of his death, that he should remaine uncrucified, untorne, and unmartyred, till Christ should come to judgement.

The true meaning of the phrase expressed.

And this is some comfort unto the Saints of God, that not onely Martyrs, which undergo death, and do lay downe their life for the truth of Christ, should be so well beloved of Christ, and received into his kingdome, but also all Saints that do love God, and do lead a godly life, should be most dearely beloved of God, and so much regarded of Iesus Christ; and therefore the Church of Christ (saith Ferus) rectè ita cumbentes martyrij rosas amplectitur, at nihilominus celebret candidæ confessionis lilia; doth so rightly honour the cropt-off roses of bloudy martyrdome, as that it doth no lesse celebrate and commend the standing lillies of a candid profession; quia in altero vita activa fortitudo, in altero contemplativa præstet pulchritudo, because the heroicke fortitude of an active life doth shine in the one, and the delightfull beauty of the contemplative life doth appeare in the other; and both are dignities and diversities of gifts, and both good, both from God, and both most acceptable unto God. And so much for S. Iohns tarrying.

What we may learne from the former doctrine.

Ferus in h. loc. Joh. 21.

Innocency loved of God and honoured by the Church.

3 The cause of S. Iohns tarrying is here set downe to be the will of Christ, if I will that he tarrie; and the will of Christ is to be considered two wayes.

3. The Cause of S. Iohns tarrying, the will of Christ.

1. As he is a man, so he came not, he desired not to do his owne will, but to do the will of his Father that sent him.

Ioh. 5. 30.

2. As he is a God, and so, letting passe all other schoole-distinctions, I say this will of Christ is either $\left\{\begin{array}{l}1.\ Secret.\\ 2.\ Revealed.\end{array}\right\}$ And

The will of God twofold.

1. The secret will of Christ, as he is God, is inexpressible, and incomprehensible; whatsoever pleased him, that he did, that he doth, and that he will do; and what he will do, besides what he hath said, we cannot know; for his wayes are in the seas, his paths in the great waters, and his footsteps are not knowne; but his thoughts are unsearchable, and his judgements past finding out. And this will of God hath these speciall attributes or conditions.

1. Secret.

Psal. 77. 19.

1. It is absolute, without dependance, Psal. 135. 6.
2. It is omnipotent, without resistance, Rom. 9. 19.
3. It is free, without coaction, Rom. 9. 15.
4. It is universall, without limitation, Dan. 4. 3. Mat. 10. 29.
5. It is constant, without altering, Esa. 46. 10.

Quæ Deus de ipso vult, necessariò vult, sed necessitate naturæ, non coactionis. Zanch. de natura Dei. Hieron. adverss. Pelag. l. 2.

And therefore, this will of Christ is rather to be suffered with patience, than to be searched into with curiosity, as S. Hierom saith; because, (as Moses saith) the secret things belong unto the Lord our God, Deut. 29. 29. And yet such is the nature of man, that he will be ever prying into this will of God, which he would have secret unto himselfe, but he shall never have it so with our good will; we are still so desirous to tast of the forbidden fruit; and therefore Christ still reproveth us with a Quid ad te, what is that to thee? Why wilt thou drown thy selfe in this ocean, why wilt thou burne thy selfe in this fire?

2. The revealed will of Christ is that, which is set down in the holy Scriptures, and is expounded by the Preachers of Gods Word; and this (as Moses saith)

2. Revealed.

Deut. 29. 29.

belongs unto us, and to our children after us; and it is our wisdome to know it, and our happinesse to do it, as our Saviour testifieth, if ye know these things, blessed are ye, if you do them: and the Prophet David tels us, that the blessed man, which lookes for happinesse, will exercise himselfe herein day and night; and he may well enough spend his whole time herein, without any further prying into Gods secret will; because this very will, this revealed will, is so deepe and so unsearchable, as that the best wit and the greatest learning can never dive into the depth hereof.

Ioh. 13. 17.

Psal. 1. 2.

And so much for the cause of S. Iohns tarrying, the will of Christ.

4. The condition of his tarrying.

4. The condition of this tarrying is, if I will; and here I must tell you, that I find great difference and great difficulties about the reading of these words; for the vulgar Latine saith, Sic volo eum manere, so I will have him to tarrie, absolutely, without condition; and so S. Augustine, S. Ambrose, Gregory, Archbishop of Turone, venerable Bede, S. Bernard, Rupertus, Ferus, Thomas, Cajetan, Michael a palatio, and diverse others, that doe follow the vulgar Latine, do read it thus without condition; and so Oecumenius, and Eusebius Emyssenus are cited to read it after the same manner.

The difference about the reading Aug. Tract. 124. & de tem. Ser. 149. Amb. in Psal. 45. & in Psal. 118. & in Luc. l. 7. Bern. in Serm. de natali Innocent. Ferus, Thom. Cajet. Michael a palatio in loc. Emyss. in hom. de Iohan. Evang. Cyrill. l. 12. c. 66. Chrys. hom 89. Hieron cont. Iovin. l. 1.

But the Greeke reading, together with most of the Greeke Fathers, as S. Cyrill, S. Chrysostome, Theophylact, &c. and S. Hierom, and the old exemplary Latine copies, as Erasmus testifieth that he saw them, do read it, si, if I will; and so most of the learned Iesuites and other Popish Writers do follow the Greek reading; for though Georgius Trapezuntius, a very excellent Grecian, saith, that ἐὰν with the Greeks, if it be joyned with the subjunctive mood, signifieth, if, but when it is joyned with the indicative mood, it signifieth, so; and therefore, it being here joyned with the Indicative mood, he thinketh that the best reading is according to the vulgar Latine, so; yet Michael a palatio confesseth, that the conditionall reading, if, is the plainer reading, though he addeth, just like a Iesuite, that is loth to stay in the truth, when he is forced to confesse it against his will; at non quò planior eò certior, nec quò plausibilior eò verior; but that is not alwaies the surer which is plainer, nor that truest which is the most plausible; and Iansenius saith, he is peevish, that will contend for the vulgar translation, and Maldonat ingenuously confesseth, that incredibili scriptorum negligentia, by the incredible negligence of transcribers, this reading, nulla specie probabilitatis, with no colour of truth, with no shew of probability, had invaded and corrupted almost all the Latine Bookes: but he saith, In omnibus quos legere potui Græcis codicibus, etiam illo celebratissimo vaticano, & apud Syriaca exemplaria, & nonnulla Latina, & vetusta manuscripta, & omnes Græcos enarratores summo consensu reperitur si: In all the Greeke bookes that I could read, and also in that famous one of the Vaticane, and so in the Syriacke exemplars, and some Latine copies, and ancient manuscripts, and all the Greeke Interpreters, we doe find it written with one consent, if; so Tolet, Sa, Cajetan, and Bellarmine doe say, that the text should not be changed for the ancient errours of ignorant writers.

Michael a palatio in Iohan. c. 21.

Iansen. in Concord. c. 148. Maldonat. in loc. Ioh. 21.

Bellarm. de Verbo Dei. l. 2. c. 11.

And this may serve to shew unto us these three speciall points worth our observation.

The former point teacheth three things.

That is, { 1. The infirmity of man. 2. The providence of God. 3. The difficulty of finding out many truths.

1. The infirmity of man.

1. I make no question, but the Scribes and writers of the holy Scriptures did apply their best diligence to do the same sincerely, without errours, and yet behold here how one crept into the Booke of God, & omnes ferè Latinos codices contaminavit; and hath almost corrupted all the Latine bookes, saith Maldonat; and therefore you may observe frailties, as in the best men, so in the best of our desires, wherein the best of us cannot justifie our selves free from all faults.

Maldonat. in loc. Ioh. 21.

2. The providence of God.

2. Though the Divell be never so subtill, and his instruments never so cunning, ning, to thrust in sic for si, a very small difference in the writing thereof, as among the Arrian heretickes he made them to believe Christ was ὁμοιούσιος, instead of ὁμούσιος; which is but a very little difference in sound, the adding of one poore iota, though it be very very great in sence, no lesse than the deniall of the Deity of the Son of God; yet the providence of this all-wise God, which neither slumbereth nor sleepeth, hath been alwaies so watchfull over his Church, that although heresies and errours have oftentimes invaded the same very much; yet he hath never suffered his truth quite to faile, but in some place or other, as the Church in the wilderneſſe, so his truth in the Church, he hath alwaies preserved the same uncorrupted; but then

The great hurt out of a small show.

Rev. 12. 6.

3. Here is need of diligence; for it is thesaurus absconditus, a hidden treasure, like the wheat in the chaffe, not alwayes seene; nay, almost like a needle in a bottle of hay, there it is, but well-neare impossible to find it out, without a great deale of art and industry, by turning many bookes and looking over many leaves to find out si from sic, and the like: And therefore let our braine-sicke Enthusiasts think what they will, that they can with S. Hieroms delirus senex & vetula anus, doting old man and poore old wife, cum legerint per seipsos intelligere, understand it of themselves, assoone as ever they read the Scriptures, as S. Augustine saith to Honoratus; yet we that wast our strength, weare our selves, and consume our times in studies, do find, that difficilis via ad astra, the way to heaven is not easie, but it is a hard matter, many times, to find out the truth, when Satan, that dwels in darkneſſe, will so often transforme himselfe into an Angell of light.

3. The difficulty of finding out the truth.

Aug. in Ep. ad Honorat.

2 Cor. 11. 14.

And so much for our Saviours speech concerning S. John.

2. That part of our Saviours speech, which pertained unto S. Peter, is, Quid ad te? What is that to thee? If I will that he tarie till I come, what is that to thee? Why dost thou thrust thine oare into another mans boat, or thy sickle into thy neighbours harvest?

2. What concerneth S. Peter.

So here we must consider two speciall things.

Two things to be observed.

1. How curiosity is reproved.
2. In whom it is reproved.

For

1. I never read the curiosity of any one suffered by Christ to go unchecked; for when the Disciples would needs know, when he meant to restore the kingdome to Israel, he tels them, It is not for them to know the times and the seasons, which the Father hath set in his owne power: so when they would know whether many or few should be saved, he tels them, it were fitter for them to strive to be found in the number of them that were saved, then to desire to know how many should be saved: and so here, when S. Peter would know, what S. John must doe, our Saviour answereth him with a quid ad te? What is that to thee? Quid quaeris quae nec scire potes, nec si scias, beatior sis? To what end shouldst thou inquire after those things, which thou canst not know, or if thou knewest, thou couldst not be the happier, as Lactantius speaketh? And the reason, why curiosity is thus checked, is, quia curiositas invenit haeresin; because, as S. Augustine saith, curiosity hatches heresies; it intoxicateth mens heads, and leads them into such labyrinths, that they, failing of the truth, do fall into all kind of errours.

1. Curiosity reproved. Acts 1. 6, 7.

Luke 13. 24.

Lactant. instit. l. 2. c. 9.

2. This sheweth unto us, that with God there is no respect of persons; for when his owne mother said unto him, They have no wine, he answered her, Woman, what have I to do with thee? mine houre is not yet come: and S. Ambrose is not afraid to say, Christum arguisse matrem, that he reproved his mother, saith Iansenius; and when S. Peter asked what S. John must do, our Saviour answered, What is that to thee?

2. In whom curiosity is reproved. Ioh. 2. 3.

And therefore, Si Christus Matri, si Petro non pepercit, sed eos reprehendit, quanto asperius nobis dicet, quid ad vos? If Christ spared not his mother, nor his chiefe Apostle Peter, how much sharper will he say to us, what have you to do to enter into my secrets, and, with the men of Bethshemesh, to peepe into my arke? You say, my counsels are like the great deepe, and my secrets are past finding

What the former doctrine teacheth.

1 Sam. 6. 19.

The curious inquiſitions of fooliſh men.

A foole will aske more queſtions in an houre, then a wiſe man can anſwer in a yeere finding out; and yet you will know them; one will know, what God did before hee made the world, another would know, who are predeſtinated to life, who reprobated to death, and he muſt know the cauſe, the manner and the end, and all of all this; a third would know, why two having the ſame meaſure and proportion of grace and divine helpe offered unto them, the one is converted the other hardened; a fourth would faine know, when the day of judgement ſhall be, and what ſhall become of the divels and damned ſoules, after they have endured ſo many millions of ages; and a thouſand ſuch curious godleſſe queſtions we would faine know, though the knowledge thereof ſhould make us worſe and not better; and therefore there can bee no better anſwer to ſuch inquiſitors, then quid ad vos, What is that to you? for what hath the ſillie Ruſticke and the meane Mechanich, (quorum res fides q̃, in manibus ſita ſunt, whoſe credit, wealth, and wit, lieth in their hands and not their heads, as Saluſt ſpeaketh of the factious Plebejans) to doe, to cenſure Church or State? they thinke they ſee the arch ſhake, and the ſtate reele; and therefore they will bee the men to ſtay and to ſtate all things right; I cannot make any better anſwer, then the Prophet Eſay doth, Who hath required this at your hands? or, then our Saviour doth heere, quid ad vos; what have you to doe with another mans ſervant; ſpartam, quam nactus es, cole, till thine owne ground, beare thine owne burthen, and diſcharge thine owne duty, and be not curioſus in aliena Republica, deſidioſus in tua, like thoſe travellers, that goe to learne other countries before they know any thing of their owne; but let us all looke at home, and looke unto our ſelves; and as the Apoſtle adviſeth every man, in the affaires of the Church and Sate, to ſtudy to bee quiet, and to medle with his owne buſineſſe, ſo eſpecially in the ſecrets of Almighty God, we ſhould, as the Apoſtle ſaith, ſapere ad ſobrietatem, bee wiſe unto ſobriety, leaſt if we approach too neere to this mount Etna, we ſhall with Plinie, burne our ſelves in the flames of this conſuming fire. And ſo much for our Saviours reprehenſion, quid ad te, what is that to thee.

Saluſt. de bello Iugurth.

Eſay 1.12.

1 Theſſ. 4.11.

Rom. 12.3.

The

The ſecond part.

2. HAving ſpoken of the reprehention of Saint Peter, wee are now to treat of the injunction, σὺ ἀκολούθει μοι, follow thou mee: and wee find that in theſe three words, there are three ſpeciall parts:

2. Part: Three ſpeciall points.

1. The act,
2. The agent,
3. The object.

Or, to ſpeake more agreeable to the words;

1. The precept, follow
2. The perſon, thou
3. The patterne, me.

1. For the precept, follow, obſerve in the firſt place, how gently Chriſt deales with us; for he doth not bid us goe before, but follow after; and you know that, ſicut periculoſior eſt docentis quam audientis conditio; it is ſafer to be a hearer then a teacher; it is a greater danger to leade then to follow; for

1. The precept.

Ovidius in ep. Laodam. Protesilao.

Qui primus Danaum Troada tanget humum,
Infælix, qua prima virum lugebit ademptum;

He that firſt laid his foot on the Trojane ground, was deſtined to be laied firſt dead upon the ground; and therefore Laodamea prayeth for her husband, tua ſit milleſſima puppis, that his ſhip might be the laſt that ſhould enter into that port, and that he would be the laſt, which ſhould goe out of that ſhip; whereas on the other ſide, Iulius Cæſar and Alexander, and all other brave Commanders were the firſt in all heroicke exploits, and never ſaid unto their ſouldiers, ite, goe ye, but venite, come ye; becauſe they were ready for the gaining of more honour, to undergoe the greateſt dangers themſelves; and therefore Chriſt, like a true heroicke, makes himſelfe the Captaine of the hoſt of the Lord, and doth firſt enter upon the pikes of his adverſaries; and although, as Lucan ſaith of Sceva,

The braveſt Commanders would be the firſt in any heroicke enterprize.

Ioſhuah 5.14.

Lucan. pharſal. l. 6. p. 633. in fol.

Illum tot petit moles, illum omnia tela
Nulla fuit non certa manus, non lancea falix;

the foes incircling round,
At him direct their weapons all, and all
Their hands aime right, and javelins rightly fall:

The divell aimed chiefly at him, and bad his ſouldiers fight againſt neither great nor ſmall, ſave onely againſt the King of Iſrael, againſt this principall Leader of all Gods Saints; yet he like the patterne of all true valour,

1 Kings 22.31.

Idem quæ ſupra.

jam pectora non tegit armis
Ac veritus credi clypeo, lævâq; vacaſſe
Aut culpa vixiſſe ſua, tot vulnera belli
Solus obit, denſamq; ferens in pectore ſylvam.

His breaſts, no armes now hide
Scorning to uſe a ſhield, leſt his left ſide
Should want a wound, and he be fore'd to live
By his owne fault, what wounds the warre can give
He takes alone, and bearing a thicke wood
Of darts upon his breaſts.——

Huius clypeo ajunt C xx. ſagittas inhæſiſſe, corpuſq; eius ſex vulneribus tranſfixum; ſed Cæſar CCxxx foramina in eius clypeo inventa fuiſſe ſcriptum reliquit, Comment in Lucan. p. 660 in fol.

He ſtands in the forefront of Gods army, to beare the greateſt brunt himſelfe, and to be a patterne for all others to follow after;

And yet, three ſorts of men are to be blamed for the tranſgreſſion of this precept, of following Chriſt.

1. They

Three ſorts of runners blamed.

1. They that runne before him;
2. They that walke cheeke by joule with him;
3. They that will not follow after him.

The firſt wrong themſelves, the ſecond abuſe Chriſt, and the third neglect both the precept of Chriſt and the ſaving of their owne ſoules; for

1. Runners before Chriſt: Aug. in Pſal. 62.

1. They that do antecedere Chriſtum, runne before Chriſt, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith, are ſuch as make more ſinnes then the Law prohibiteth, and would faine be farre more righteous then the Lord requireth, becauſe they will follow their owne inventions rather then the divine directions; but we need not bee over-curious, when God lookes not we ſhould ſhunne thoſe things, which he gave us leave to uſe; and there are ſinnes inough by the law preſcribed, as rebells, to be apprehended, without medling with thoſe that were never ſuſpected; and therefore Salomon ſaith, bee not righteous overmuch, neither make thy ſelfe over wiſe, why ſhouldſt thou deſtroy thy ſelfe; that is, when the Lord doth not deſtroy thee: for this too much preciſeneſſe in Gods ſervice, is like the poyſon of Ieloufie betwixt man and wife, an exceſſe of love, but the greateſt miſchiefe in the world; and makes them fall moſt deſperately, becauſe they runne too furiouſly: and therefore I would wiſh theſe men to follow the counſell, that grave Phœbus gave unto his raſh and giddie-headed ſonne Phaeton, Againſt too much preciſeneſſe.

Eccleſiaſt. 7. 16.

Ovid. Metamor. l. 2. p. 33.

Parce puer ſtimulis, & fortius utere loris;
Sponte ſua properunt, labor eſt inhibere volantes.

You need not ſpurre your fiery affections, but you ſhould rather curbe and bridle your furious paſſions; for as it is not good to ſpurre a free horſe, ſo it is no wiſedome to run too violently downe the hill; the one will tyre, the other will fall, if he doth not diſcreetly ſtay his courſe.

2. Preſumptuous companions of Chriſt.

2. They that walke cheeke by joule with Chriſt, are ſuch as joyne their owne righteouſneſſe with the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, to make them righteous in the ſight of God; they muſt partake with Chriſt in ſatisfying for ſins, and they muſt ſhare with him in the purchaſing, or meriting of heaven; they are loth to give him all the glory of all alone; but, as the Poet ſaith,

Lucan. l. 1.

Quæ mare, quæ terras, quæ totum poſſidet orbem
Non cepit fortuna duos.
That ſtate, that miſtreſſe ore the world did raigne,
Rul'd land and ſea, yet could not two containe;

Men cannot abide rivalls in what they deerely love.

And the reaſon is rendered by Curio, —Partiri non potes orbem, ſolus habere potes; — man loves not to be halfe maſter, in any thing that is excellent, we cannot abide to have rivalls in our loves; and therefore, God will not give his glory, that is, any part of his glory, unto another; but he muſt have all our hearts, all our ſoules and all our ſervice, or, if he ſhall not have all, he will have none at all; and yet Chriſt ſhall not have all the glory of our ſalvation, but we will part ſtakes with him, though we bore no part of the wrath of God, but, as the Prophet Eſay ſaith, he hath troden the winepreſſe alone; he hath paid all our debts, and yet he ſhall not have all the thankes; becauſe Adam was never ſo aſhamed of his nakedneſſe, as the ſonnes of Adam are now proud of thoſe poore ragges of humane abilities, which they thinke they have to co-operate with Chriſt (I do not ſay in the workes of grace, for ſo we doe by the helpe of Chriſt) in the meriting to themſelves the reward of glory; but for my part; let me never receive any joy in heaven, but what I ſhall wholly acknowledge to bee moſt freely received from my Saviour Chriſt, without the leaſt reſpect or thought of meriting any part thereof, by all the beſt ſervice that either I have, or ſhall be ever able to doe to God, though by the beſt helpe and grace of Chriſt: this ſhall bee my faith for ever; I will looke for all from thee, and I will render all thankes unto thee, ô Saviour Chriſt.

Eſay 42 8.

God will have all or none.

Eſay 63. 3.

The fooliſh pride of mans nature.

The Authors reſolution.

3. Refuſers to follow Chriſt.

3. They that will not follow Chriſt, are thoſe Iewes and Infidels, that will not beleeve in him, and thoſe prophane worldlings and wicked ſinners, that will not walke according to his lawes.

But

But there are many motives to perſwade us to follow our Saviour Christ, eſpecially;

{1. The danger of the neglect; / 2. The benefit of our following him.} For

Two ſpeciall motives, to move us to follow Christ.

1. The danger of the neglect.

1. The Iewes that would not beleeve in him, were given over into the hands of their enemies, who moſt miſerably deſtroyed both them and their Temple, and made them a moſt lamentable ſpectacle of Gods fearefull wrath, which diſperſed them as vagabonds among al nations to this very day; and all thoſe children of diſobedience, that will refuſe to follow Christ, ſhall be ſure to leeſe the favour of God heere, and eternall happineſſe in the life to come; and, as it was with the Iſraelites, when they revolted from God, and would not walke in his ſtatutes, the hand of the Lord was againſt them whether ſoever they went, ſo, when we forſake Christ, he will forſake us, and we ſhall be deprived of his protection here, and of eternall ſalvation hereafter.

The miſerable deſtruction of the Iewes ſet forth by Ioſephus.

Iudg 2.15.

2 Chron. 15.2.

2. The benefit of following Christ is manifold, eſpecially

{1. In this world. / 2. In the world to come.} For godlineſſe hath the promiſe of both, ſaith the Apoſtle; and to follow Christ, is the ſumme of all godlineſſe: and therefore,

2. The benefit of following Christ twofold. 1 Tim. 4.8.

1. In this life, the following of Christ is {1. The moſt comfortable / 2. The moſt honourable / 3. The moſt profitable} of all the things in the world; For

1. In this life.

To follow Christ is 1. Moſt comfortable.

1. The remembrance of our ſervice unto our Saviour Christ, and the following of him in the ſervice of God, is the greateſt comfort that any Chriſtian can have either in life or death; and therefore Saint Peter would by no meanes depart from Christ, becauſe hee had the words of eternall life, without which all the world would availe him nothing; an Hezechias, upon his deth-bed, makes this the ground of all his comfort, not that he had beene a great King, and had enjoyed all pleaſures, that either his eye had ſeen, or his heart could wiſh, and had don whatſoeuer he would, but that hee had walked before God in truth, and with a perfect heart, and had done that which was good in his ſight; and this was Samuels comfort, Saint Pauls glory, and the delight of every Saint, to bee a true follower of our Saviour Christ.

Ioh. 6.68. Mat. 16.26.

2 Reg. 20.3.

1 Sam. 12.3. Act. 23.1 & 6.34. 16.

2. The Sonne of Syrach ſaith, it is great glory to follow the Lord; and Saint Bernard ſaith, non erit tibi indignum ſequi authorem tuum; it is no diſgrace to thee to follow thy Maker; for if we thinke it an honour to be the Kings ſervant, how much greater honour is it, to be, not a ſervant, but a friend unto the King of Kings? for Christ is the King of Kings and Lord of Lords; and of them that follow him, he ſaith, henceforth, I will not call you ſervants but my friends; quia ſervire ſibi eſt conregnare ſecum; becauſe that to ſerve him is to reigne with him, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith; It is ſaid of Iohn the Baptiſt, that he ſhould be great; and yet we read of no great honour, that he had in this world; for he went poorely, in camells haire, with no ſilke, but a lether girdle about his loynes; and hee fared meanely, when he had none other meat then Locuſts and wild honey; but the Evangeliſt tells us, how he ſhould be great in the ſight of the Lord; all other greatneſſe are but little, moates and triſles, of none account; and they onely are truely great, truly honourable, and truly noble, that are great in the ſight of God.

2. Moſt honourable. Eccleſ. 23.28. Bernard de aduentu Domini ſer.

Reuel. 19.16. Ioh. 15.15. Aug. de tempore ſer. 182.

Luk. 1.15.

3. They that follow Christ, ſhall want no manner of thing that is good; they ſhall be ſafe from all their enemies, and they ſhall bee freed from all neceſſities; for hee will keepe them as the apple of his eye, hee will protect them under his wings, and they ſhall bee ſafe under his feathers, yea hee will giue his Angels charge over them, to keepe them in all their waies, that they dash not their foot againſt a ſtone; and the Evangeliſts have all obſerved the great care of Christ over his followers, though many of them were but formall, that

3. Moſt profitable

Deut. 32.10.

Pſal 91.11.

The great care of Christ over his followers.

Mat.14.16,17.18. Mar.6.37.& 41. Joh.6.10,11. Mat 15.32,36. Mar.8.1,2,3.

they should not want any necessary thing at any time, hee was loth to send them home, when they had beene any space with him, without meat, least they should faint by the way: therefore he would rather doe miracles to multiply their bread, then suffer them to want necessary food; and who would be loth to serve such a master, or to follow such a Lord?

2. In the life to come. Mat.19.28. Vide etiam Iohn 12.26.

2. The following of Christ here in this life, will bring us to reigne with Christ hereafter, in the life to come; for you that have followed me in the regeneration, shall sit also upon thrones and judge the twelve Tribes of Israel; so, he will never turne them away without their reward, when they have done their service; because he is such a master, as takes pleasure in the prosperity of his servants, as the Psalmist saith, and doth not deale with his followers, as an Indian Merchant is said to have served his asse, which after all her travell both in heat and cold, night and day, when she began to grow faint and feeble, and not able to carrie him and his wares, as she had formerly done, was disrobed of her trappings, dislodged of her stable, and left in a ditch, to starve for hunger, or to die for cold; but if wee will bestow the flower of our youth, and spend our strength in following him, he will never turne us off when wee are old, hee will not suffer us to want when we are weake; but when we are past our labour on earth, he will provide a kingdome for us in heaven for evermore; ô happie are the people that follow such a Lord.

Psal.35.27.

How the Indian Merchant dealt with his asse.

And therefore, seeing the refusall to follow Christ is so dangerous, and the benefit of following him so manifold, we should all be most ready and willing to follow him.

Two things to be observed in following Christ.

But then you must understand { 1. Quibus / 2. Quomodo } sequendus est,

That is, { 1. In what things; / 2. After what manner; } we should follow him. For

1. Wherein wee must not, or must follow Christ; as

1. Not to follow him.

1. Non in omnibus sequendus est Christus; there bee some things wherein wee may not, and some things wherein wee need not follow him; and some things wherein we must follow him, or we shall never attaine unto felicity; As

1. In his miracles. Aug. de sanct. virgini. c.27. Aug. de bon. Conjugal. cap.37.

1. We may not follow him in those waies, which he walked, or those workes which he did, quatenus filius Dei, as hee was the Sonne of God, or quatenus Mediator Dei & hominis, as hee was the Mediator betwixt God and man; of the first sort are his miraculous workes, whereof Saint Augustine saith, hee never bad us, either mundos fabricare, to create worlds, or to raise the dead, or to give sight unto the blinde, or to feed thousands of men with five loaves and two fishes; because they are the workes of his Deity, which is impious in us to seeke to imitate; and of the second sort are his Meritorious workes, whereof the Prophet saith, I have troden the wine-presse alone; that is, I alone must appease my Fathers wrath; because the workes satisfactory must bee of infinite value, or els they can never be able to satisfie an infinite justice.

2. In his workes satisfactory. Esay 63.3.

2. Wee need not follow him in every circumstance of his actions, wherein we have no particular precept of a certaine imitation; because these things are not of the Essence of Gods service, and do add little unto the glory of God; and therefore, though he preached out of a ship, and fate often when hee preached, and it may bee, at the institution of his last Supper, and prayed with his face groveling vpon the ground; yet are we not bound to follow him in these, or the like circumstances of his morall actions.

3. In every circumstance of his actions. Mat.26.39.

3. The things wherein wee should follow Christ, are very many, even all the things that he did, in quantum filius hominis, as he was the Sonne of man; especially in his { 1. Humility, / 2. Charity, / 3. Piety, / 4. Patience. } And so in all other duties of a Christian.

2. Wherein wee should follow Christ, in all vertues, especially

1. In humility. Phil.2.5.

1. He was so humble, that being in the forme of God, and knowing it no robbery to thinke himselfe equall with God, yet did hee make himselfe of no reputation, putation, and tooke upon him the forme of a ſervant; and therefore, ſicut dux nobis fuit ad ſuperbiam Diabolus, as the Divell was our ring-leader unto pride, when hee ſaid, you ſhall bee like gods, ſo Chriſt was contented, to become our maſter, to teach us, both by his precept and practice, to become meeke and lowly in heart; and if hee had not taught us this great vertue, which is radix omnium virtutum, the roote of all vertues, it had beene unknowne to us to this very day; for humility cannot bee found in any of the gardens of the Philoſophers, I could not find the name of it in direct terme, within the whole compaſſe of all Ariſtotles Ethicks, nor in the learned Moralls of grave Seneca; and I found the reaſon in Iohannes Sarisburg. quia humilitas ταπεινοφροσύνη dicitur; quod φρονήματος, id eſt, ſpiritus, eſt ταπείνωσις, id eſt, abjectio; becauſe humility teacheth us to denie our ſelves, and to caſt away whatſoever ſeemeth good and pretious in the ſight of fleſh and blood, which no Philoſopher would ever teach us to doe; but Chriſt teacheth us to abhorre our ſelves in duſt and aſhes, and therefore as Saint Gregory ſaith, tanto pretioſior Deo, quanto propter eum vilior eſt ſibi, every man ſhall be ſo much the more pretious in the ſight of God, by how much the more vile he appeareth unto himſelfe; and therefore, though I ſee a man learned in all the learning of the Gentiles; though I ſee him valiant in all the exploits of the moſt couragious heroickes; though I ſee him laborious in all the workes of his calling; and though I ſee him endued with all other morall vertues, humanity, curteſie, affabilitie and the like; yet in all this I cannot judge him to bee a Diſciple of our Saviour Chriſt; becauſe hee may learne all this, and much more, in the Schoole of nature, but humility hee cannot have without grace, becauſe God giveth grace unto the lowly; & ut quo vas aliquod profundius, eo plura recipit, ita tantum unusquiſq; accipit gratiæ, quantum pollet ſubjecta animi humilitate; and the more lowly he is, the more grace he ſhall be ſure to receive at the hands of God, as Thriverus ſaith, by comparing us to a veſſell, which holdeth the more liquor, by how much the more deepe it is.

Aug. hom. 12. ex 50.
Gen. 3. 5.
Mat. 11. 28.
The vertue of humility not found in all the writings of the Philoſophers.
Iohannes Sarisburg. in polyc. l. 4.
Mar. 8. 34.
Iob 42. 6.
Gregor. moral. l. 18
Humility onely found in the ſchoole of Chriſt Iames 4. 6.
Thriverus in apoth. reg. 200.

2. We muſt follow Chriſt in love, in the paths of charity; and our love to our neighbours muſt bee, as Chriſt hath loved us; and how was that?

2. In love.
How our love muſt bee.

1. Intenſively. 3. In action.
2. Extenſively. 4. In affection.

1. It was intenſively, from the heart, amore vero, non ficto, with true love, and no diſſembled ſhew of charity, but ſo faithfull, and ſo great, that hee laid downe his life for us; and therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, that wee ought alſo to lay downe our lives for the brethren.

1. Intenſively.
1 Ioh. 3. 16.

2. It was extenſively, ſo farre, that he loved not onely his friends, which wicked men can eaſily bee induced to doe, but alſo his enemies, for whom he, not onely prayed, but alſo died; and when they were full of rage and furie againſt him, mocking him, and wagging their heads, ſaying, hee ſaved others, but himſelfe hee cannot ſave, he was full of pitie and compaſſion towards them, ſaying, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they doe; and therefore our Saviour ſaith, that wee ſhould love our enemies, bleſſe them that curſe us, doe good to them that hate us, and pray for them that perſecute us.

2. Extenſively.
Luk. 23. 34.
Mat. 5. 44.

3. His love was not in words, but in deed and verity; and it was moſt active, when it was more then it could be expreſt by any words, or conceived in our deepeſt apprehenſions; and therefore Saint Iames ſaith, that we muſt ſhew our love by our workes, and not by our words, as moſt hypocrites uſe to doe; for if a poore man come unto you, and you ſay unto him, depart in peace, be you warmed and filled; and yet you give him not thoſe things, which are needfull to the body, what doth it profit?

3. Actively.
Iames 2. 16.

4. His love was not onely outwardly in the act, for ſhew and oſtentation unto the world, but alſo inwardly in affection, from a good heart, that deſired nothing more, then the glory of God and the good of men; for otherwiſe, if a man ſhall feed the poore, yea give all his goods unto the poore, and his body to be burned,

4. Affectionately.
1 Cor. 13. 3.

1 Cor.13.3. and he have not love, that is, in his heart, which is the ſeat of all love and affection, it profiteth nothing; and therefore, as the tree, which wanteth fruit, was accurſed by Chriſt, notwithſtanding all his greene leaves, to ſhew that good words without deeds are worthleſſe and unprofitable; ſo the fruit, that ſpringeth from the tree, which wanteth root, will ſoone wither, notwithſtanding they be moſt precious in the ſight of men; to ſhew that all the good works in the world, which proceed not from love, will prove but like the ſpiders web, that will make no garment for us, of a curious art, but of no uſe.

Mat.21.19.

Eſa.59.6.

3. In godlineſſe. 3. We ſhould follow Chriſt in godlineſſe and the paths of piety, wherein our Saviour walked without reproofe; it was meat and drinke to him to do his Fathers will, and he was ſo zealous of Gods glory, that the zeale of his houſe hath eaten him up, and as fire turnes all things to fire, ſo his zeale made him wholly zeale, that he was more grieved to ſee God diſhonoured, than to have himſelfe ſcourged and crucified; ſo ſhould we be pious in our ſelves, and zealous of Gods honour; I need not ſtand here to commend the excellency of piety, or to ſet downe the benefits of godlineſſe, I may rather ſit and wonder to ſee ſo little piety practiſed amongſt us; I know the Practice of Piety is almoſt in every houſe, in every hand, and it ſhould be ſo; but it is not in many hearts, that have it in their hands; they are like the Iewes, which carried Chriſt in their Bibles, but not in their boſomes, as S. Hierom ſpeakes of them; for what a ſhame is it now to ſee ſo much drunkenneſſe and prophaneneſſe, ſo much vanity and laſciviouſneſſe in every place? More Play-houſes in London, profeſſing Chriſt, than in Rome in her greateſt paganiſme; more Play-bookes printed, and better ſale for them, as Stationers have told me, than any bookes of Divinity whatſoever; a miſerable thing, to conſider, what a company of gameſters do make a trade of playing, and lead a fairer life, in the judgement of ſome, by this abominable trade, by this moſt wicked calling, than many merchants do by their greateſt adventures; and to thinke, what time is ſpent, what money is waſted, what men and women are corrupted, and what abominable abuſes are committed, by thoſe abundant multitudes of all ſorts of people, that for moſt dayes in the weeke, have no better exerciſes, no greater buſineſſes, than to viſit theſe prophane Theaters; I ſay not this, to abridge the lawfull ſpectacles and recreations of Chriſtian Princes, whoſe royall preſence are as checks to ſuppreſſe many impudences, that are ſhamelefly ſeene in other places, but to bewaile the miſeries of theſe times, and the fearefull ſtate of thoſe deceived Chriſtians, that think they walk fairely towards heaven, when as they run ſo faſt unto perdition; for, I feare, I may truly ſay to them, as Salomon ſaith of the harlot, She hath caſt downe many wounded, yea many ſtrong men have beene ſlaine by her; her houſe is the way to hell, going downe to the chambers of death; none that go unto her returne againe, neither take they hold of the paths of life; therefore I wiſh to God, he would open the eyes of theſe men, theſe play-haunters, theſe common gameſters, to let them ſee their great iniquity, leaſt otherwiſe, as Salvian ſaith, the Goths and Vandals ſpoyled the Temples of the Chriſtians, becauſe they were then, as we are now, ſo given to theſe vanities, that they frequented the theaters more than the Churches, and therefore God, in juſtice, gave them over to deſtruction, ſo God will bring ſome plague or other upon us, or our poſterities, becauſe the warnings of Gods Preachers cannot perſwade us to abandon theſe impious practiſes.

How little we do practice piety in every place

Of the great abuſes of playes and play-houſes, and common gameſters, that do make a trade of life by gaming.

The playes and ſpectacles of Princes not ſo full of abuſes, as thoſe of other places.

Prov.7.26,27. & Cap.2.19.

Salvian. de gubr. Dei.l.6.

4. In patience: 4. We ſhould follow him in patience and ſuffering all the evils and injuries, that ſhall be done unto us, and all the croſſes that God ſhall lay upon us; for hereunto we are called, and Chriſt alſo ſuffered for us, leaving us an example, that we ſhould walke in his ſteps, ſaith the Apoſtle; and his ſufferings were inſufferable, if he had been any other than the Sonne of God; for he indured ſuch contradictions at the hands of ſinners, as cannot be expreſſed by the tongues of Angels; as

1 Pet.2.21.

Ioh 7.46. Luke 4.22. 1. Contradictions of his words; for though never man ſpake as he did, and all men wondred at the gracious words, that proceeded out of his mouth; yet they ſay,

we

we have heard his blasphemie, when he did speake the truth, and he is worthy of death, for that truth, which is onely able to bring us to eternall life. Mat.26.65.

2. Contradictions in his works; for though he did all things well, and went about doing good, healing the diseased, comforting the distressed, giving sight unto the blind, and casting out the Divels, from those poore soules that were possessed, yet their malice was so blind, and their blindnesse so malicious, that they said, he cast out Divels through Beelzebub the chiefe of the Divels, and he was a wicked transgressour of Gods Law, because he made a man perfectly whole on the sabbath day*. Vers.66. Mark 7.37. Acts 10.38. Mat.12.24. Luke 11.15. Ioh.7.23. * Or, every whit.

3. Contradictions in all his life, from the cratch to the crosse. And

4. Contradictions specially at his death, when he suffered all kinds of indignities, mockings, scoffings, scourgings, crucifying, at the hands of all sorts of sinners, priests, people, souldiers, thieves, and all that could doe any thing, did all powre forth their poyson and malice against him. And yet he, good man, in all these injuries, oppositions and contradictions, was so meeke and so patient, that he did not strive, neither was his voice heard in the streets, but as a sheepe before his shearer was dumbe, so opened he not his mouth. Esa.53.7.

And therefore, though we should suffer injuries, and be unjustly traduced, wronged and oppressed; yet if we will follow Christ, we must not swell with hatred, nor maliciously seeke to revenge our selves, but we should patiently suffer it, and leave vengeance unto him that judgeth righteously, as Saint Peter speaketh. 1 Pet.2.23.

And as we are to follow him in these speciall vertues, in these excellent paths of righteousnesse, so we must follow him in all other duties, wherein he went before us, and commanded us to imitate his example; and this our imitation of him must not be in words, but in deed and verity; for, as the Emperour Adrian, as I remember, demaunding of two gentlemen, that prosered their service unto him, what they could doe, and what service they could performe; the best Orator beginning to dilate his own worth, with no mean properties of a good servant, said, if he imployd him in his chamber, he could give such attendance, and shew such diligence, as his Highnesse could no waies distast him; if he put him to wait at his table, he was inferiour to none in that faculty; if he tooke him for any sport, he could hawke and hunt, and the like, with the best; if he sent him to warre, he was an expert souldier, not inferiour to Achilles, and had as many stratagems as Hannibal; and if his Majesty would do him that honour, to use him for a Messenger, or Ambassadour to any forreigne State, he was as cunning as Ulysses, and as eloquent as Demosthenes, to deliver his message, and to discharge that office, for the honour of his master; so he passed through all the things, that were any wayes worthy of any praise; and when he had finished his owne elogie, the Emperour asked the other what he could doe; and he seeing this prating Rhetorician had left nothing for him to excell in, thereby to deserve the Emperours favour, answered briefly, I will endeavour to doe all that this fellow hath said, who, as I feare, hath said more than he can do; and the Emperour liked best of the last: So God had rather have doers than talkers; for not the hearers of the law, but the doers of the law shall be justified; and the Law of God is the Law of works, and not of words; and therefore Christ saith, Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdome of heaven, but he that doth the will of my Father, which is in heaven.

That we ought to follow Christ in works, not in words onely.

The story of the two gentlemen that wanted service.

God likes of doers, though but little, better than of great talkers, if they be no doers. Rom.2.3. Vide Iam.1.22. Mat.7.21.

So you see, wherein we must follow Christ, in his paths, in the things that he did, and enjoyned us to doe the same; and then we shall not slide, we need not feare; because he is a way without by-wayes; truth, without errour; and life, without danger; or, as S. Augustine saith, a way, per quam curris, ad quam tendis, & in qua requiescis; by which thou runnest, to which thou tendest, and in which thou restest, he being the onely arke, where the simple dove may find sure ground for her feet.

2. After what manner we should follow Christ.

2. We must consider, after what manner we must follow Christ, or els as a good cauſe may be ſpoyl'd by ill handling, ſo this following of Chriſt, if it be not in the right forme, will never bring us to our deſired end; and therefore, ſeeing forma dat eſſe rei, and as the Schoolemen ſay, fides informis non ſalvificat, no grace will availe us any thing, if the manner be not as compleat as the matter; you muſt obſerve that we ought to follow Chriſt, Foure wayes.

{1. Sincerely. 3. Totally. } For {2. Diligently. 4. Finally. }

1. Sincerely. Gen.17.1. 1Chron.28.9.

1. God ſaith unto Abraham, Walke before me, and be thou perfect, and King David charged his ſonne Salomon, that he ſhould ſerve the Lord with an upright heart, which is the ſame precept, though in other words; and both aime to condemne hypocriſie, which God hateth, above all things, in his ſervants; quia hypocritæ boni videri volunt, ſed non eſſe, & mali eſſe volunt, ſed non apparere; becauſe hypocrites would faine ſeeme to be good, but will not be ſo by any meanes, and they will needs be evill, and yet will not be ſo thought by any one; and therefore, as a little ruſtie gold is better than a great deale of the brighteſt braſſe, ſo God loveth a weake ſincerity better than the moſt pompous hypocriſie.

Bern. Serm. 65. in Cam. The properties of hypocrites.

2. Diligently. Eccleſ.9.10. Horat.

2. We muſt follow Chriſt diligently, which is a vertue required in every ſervant, whatſoever he doth, to do it with all his might: for who can indure a lazy ſervant? The Poet ſaith,

Non mihi glis ſervus ſubeat, non hoſpes hirudo:

He could not abide a horſleech for his gueſt, nor a dor-mouſe for his ſervant; for ſuch gluttonous cormorants, and ſuch ſleepy ſluggards would ſoone make a rich man poore; and therefore, if we love no lazineſſe in our buſineſſes, ſhall we thinke that God will permit careleſneſſe in his ſervice? and therefore he ſaith, Luke 13.24. ἀγωνίζεσθε εἰσελθεῖν διὰ τῆς στενῆς πύλης; Strive to enter in at the ſtrait gate, that is, labour with all your might to get into the kingdome of heaven, and ſpare no paines to obtaine that happineſſe, or els perhaps, to your griefe, you may be ſhut out of it; becauſe, many, I ſay unto you, will ſeeke to enter, that is, careleſly and coldly, and ſhall not be able; becauſe they ſeeke ſo great a matter with ſo little care; and therefore the Prophet Ieremie ſaith, Curſed is he that doth the worke of the Lord negligently; for as men, that deſire to be good, grow better and better, and he that will ſtrive to learne, ſhall become wiſer and wiſer, ſo he that delights in evill, will grow worſe and worſe; as we ſee it in S. Peter, qui cepit ambulare longinquum, which began to follow his Maſter afarre off, then denied him, and then ſwore that he knew him not; and therefore, if you would avoid this fearefull curſe, and obtaine the right benefit of following Chriſt, you muſt follow him neither timidè, that is, fearefully, with Nicodemus, that came to Chriſt by night, or with Ioſeph of Arimathea, that was a Diſciple of Chriſt, but, as the text ſaith, ſecretly, for feare of the Iews, or with thoſe ſpies, that liked well of the land of Canaan, but were ſore afraid of the Anakims, *Num.*13.27, 28. Nor yet tepidè, that is, coldly, with the Church of Laodicea, which was neither hot nor cold, *Rev.*3.15. but like Salomons ſluggard, that could be content to receive the profit, yet could not abide to indure any paines; but we muſt be like Barnabas, that with full purpoſe of heart did cleave unto the Lord.

Vers.24. Ier.48.10. Mat.26.58. Iob.3.2. Iohn 19.38. Vult & non vult piger. Pro.13.4. Acts 11.23.

3. We muſt follow Chriſt totally, {1. In all his wayes. 2. With all our hearts.} For

3. Totally, that is, 1. In all his waies.

1. We muſt have reſpect unto all his commandements; becauſe the obſervation of the firſt table, with the neglect of the ſecond, is but meere hypocriſie; and the obſervation of the ſecond, with the neglect of the firſt, is but faire morality; the firſt moſt odious in the ſight of God, the other unprofitable for any man; and we muſt not, with the Iewes, draw neare unto God with our lips, and to have our hearts farre from him; becauſe God is the ſearcher of the heart, and he requireth truth in the inward parts.

Eſa.29.13. Ier.17.10. Pſal.51.6. Mar.6.26.

And therefore God cannot indure thoſe Herodians, that can heare Iohn Baptiſt gladly, and obſerve what he ſaith in many things, but cannot indure to forſake their beloved Herodias, that darling ſinne, that lieth ſo cloſe in their boſome, and is ſo ſweet unto their palate.

2. As

2. As the naturall mother of that child, which we read of 1 King. 3. 26. could not abide to have it divided, but either would have all, or give all away; ſo God cannot indure that, with the Iſraelites, we ſhould halt betwixt two religions, or part our ſervice betwixt Chriſt and Antichriſt, but he will be ſerved with all our hearts, or he will accept of no ſervice at our hands.

2. With all our hearts.

1 King. 18. 21.

And therefore, let us not deceive our ſelves, to thinke that we can ſerve God and Mammon, faſhion our ſelves like unto the world, & be true followers of our Saviour Chriſt; for he that is a friend unto the world, is thereby made an enemy unto God, who will not give his glory to another, and can no ways ſuffer we ſhould ſay,

Diviſum imperium cum Iove Cæſar habet,

We will part the rule betwixt God and man, and yeeld halfe our ſervice unto Chriſt, and the other halfe to Belial, to ſerve God upon the Sabbath, and to follow the world all the weeke after; for as the Poet ſaith,

Mat. 6. 24.

Iam. 4. 4. Eſa. 42. 8.

——Partiri non potes orbem,
Solus habere potes,——

Lucan. lib. 1. Pharſ.

And S. Bernard tels us, this ſtrictneſſe of God, to have all or refuſe all, non eſt invidentiæ, ſed providentiæ, is not an argument of envy towards any one, but of his ſpeciall providence towards us all; Quia totum ſibi manere jubet, ne totum nobis pereat, becauſe hee would preſerve all to himſelfe, leaſt all ſhould periſh with the Divell; becauſe that part which is not his, will draw all the reſt to hell.

Why God is ſo ſtrict to have all unto himſelfe.

4. Quia incaſſum bonum agitur, quod ante finem vitæ terminatur, becauſe that good is to no purpoſe, which is not continued while we live, as S. Gregory ſaith; & ſola perſeverantia coronatur, and perſeverance is the only vertue that can bring us to the crowne of glory, as S. Bernard ſaith; for he that endureth to the end ſhall hee ſaved; therefore, wee muſt follow Chriſt conſtantly without revolting, without ſtarting aſide like a broken bow; for there be many that (with the Galathians) do begin well, but do end ill; they begin in the ſpirit, and will end in the fleſh, which in the end will bring them to corruption: And our Saviour Chriſt, in the parable of the ſeed, doth ſet down three ſorts of men, that give their names to Chriſt, to follow him in his warfare, and yet in the end prove like the children of Ephraim, which being harneſſed, and carrying bowes, turned themſelves back in the day of battell.

4. Finally.

Bern. Serm. 1. in Paſcha.

Mat. 10. 22.

Pſal. 78. 57.

Gal. 5. 7. c. 6. 8.

Mat. 13. 19.

Three ſorts of evill followers.

Pſal. 78. 9.

The firſt are they that receive the ſeed by the way ſide, and the fowles of the ayre devoure it; that is, as Ludolphus ſaith, the birds of pride and vaine-glory; which will not beare the reproach of Chriſt; and therefore, Chriſt ſaith, the Divell commeth and taketh the word out of their heart; Quia ipſe eſt rex ſuper omnes filios ſuperbiæ, becauſe he is the king over all the children of pride.

1. Sort. Proud men.

Volucres inanis gloriæ.

Ludolph. de vita Chriſti. p. 1. c. 64. in fine.

The ſecond are they that receive the ſeed upon the rocke, that is, ſuper petram duræ obſtinationis, upon a hard and ſtony heart, that cannot eaſily be penetrated, to make any deepe impreſſion therein; and therefore, when any trouble or temptation riſeth, they will, with Lots wife, looke backe towards Sodom, and with the Iſraelites, in their hearts turne backe againe into Egypt; and the Prophet David complaineth of many that would ſerve God fairely, and follow Chriſt willingly, cum benefecerit illis, while he bleſſeth them, healeth their ſores, and feedeth their bodies; that is, while he ſendeth them health, wealth and proſperity, they will praiſe God for his goodneſſe, and ſhew the wonders that he doth for the children of men; but if God put forth his hand, and touch their bones and their fleſh, then they will curſe God to his face, and, with S. Peter, they will ſweare that they never knew him; becauſe they thought him to be a God all of ſweetneſſe, all of pleaſures, whereas now they feele his hands heavy upon their loynes; and therefore, they that heretofore followed him with hoſanna, are now ready to ſpit in his face, with a crucifige, crucifie him, crucifie him; becauſe he crucifieth our ſinnes with croſſes, that they might not crucifie us in hell.

2. Sort. Fearefull men.

Idem Ibid.

Gen. 19. 26.

Acts 7. 39.

Pſal. 107. 8.

Iob 2 5.

Mat. 26. 72.

Ioh. 12. 13. Luke 23. 28.

The third are they that receive the ſeed among thornes, that is, in ſpinis ſolicitudinis, among the thorns of worldly cares, which choak up all the zeal and godlineſſe that is in us: And therefore, though they follow Chriſt for a time, yet ere

3. Sort. Worldly men.

2 Tim.4.10. long with Demas, they will forsake the Apostles for the love of this present world.

The three chiefest revolters from Christ. So you see the chiefest revolters from Christ { 1. The Ambitious. 2. The Timerous. 3. The Voluptuous. }

Mat.10.22. The ambitious scornes to be derided, the timerous feares to be troubled, and the voluptuous goes away sorrowfull, when Christ tells him, hee must forsake all and follow him.

They that professe the faith, and denie obedience in their workes, are said to revolt from Christ. And you must observe, that as hee, which forsakes the faith and profession of Christ, is an apostata, or revolter from Christ, ita qui ad perversum opus, quod deseruit, redit, apostata a Deo reputabitur, etiamsi fidem tenere videatur; so hee that returneth to any leaud worke, or any foule sinne, that formerly he had forsaken, is rightly said to apostate from God, though hee should seeme to hold still his faith, saith Saint Gregory; and therefore it is not inough for us to professe the faith of Christ, unlesse we will follow him in our deeds, of shunning all vices and fulfilling all righteousnesse, and so follow him unto the end, that we may say with Christ, I have finished the worke which thou gavest me to doe, and with Saint Paul, I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for mee the crowne of righteousnesse.

Ioh.17.4. 2 Tim.4.7.

2. The person that is to follow Christ, every one. 2. The person that is to follow Christ is, thou, whosoever thou art, { 1. Young, 2 Old, } { 3. Rich, 4. Poore, } { 5. Private, 6. Publique, } or whatsoever thou beest, all ought, and all must follow Christ here, in the waies of grace, or they shall never raigne with him in the kingdome of glory; for with God there is no respect of persons, and hee grants no dispensation unto any, to exempt him from his service; but

Rom.2.11.

1. The Young man. 1. The Young man thinkes he hath time enough to spare, and he is yet too weake a plant, too small a sprig, to undergoe so hard a service; and therefore hee will a little take his pleasure, while the vigor of his strength and the heate of his youth doth last; and then he will follow Christ and thinke of heaven, when hee beginnes to bee wearie of the world; this is the Young mans plea.

2. The Old man. 2. The Old man is full of paine, diseased and troubled with the gout, rewmes, coughes, and all kindes of distemperature; and therefore he hath scarse time to thinke of his owne affaires, lands and livings, much lesse is he able, at these yeeres, to runne after Sermons, or to thinke of any thing els save his ease, and those things, that pertaine unto his health: this is the Old mans answer.

3. The Rich man. 3. The Rich man is so troubled with the world, and so delighted with the pleasures thereof, that if he might have his owne desires, little England would please him better then all the joyes of the greatest kingdome of heaven.

4. The Poore man 4. The Poore man is in want and scarcity, and ever pining at the rich, envying those, that are in better fortunes or in happier state then himselfe; and hee hath not yet learnt with Saint Paul, in any state to bee content; and therefore hee is rather angry with God, that hee hath not dealt well with him, then willing to praise him, for all those blessings, that hee received from him; because hee forgetteth what hee hath, by his continuall discontent for what hee hath not.

Phil.4.11.

5. The Private man. 5. The Private man, supposeth nothing belongs to him, but to provide for his owne family, let religion sinke or swimme, what is that to him, he hath no benefit by it, and hee will not trouble himselfe with it.

6. The Publique man. 6. The Publique man hath little time, and lesse desire to bestow any time in Gods service; the affaires of State, and the service of the Common-wealth doe many times exclude all thoughts of heaven out of his thoughts.

How few men do rightly follow Christ. So of all other sorts and degrees of men, they all seeke their owne, and not the things things of Chriſt Ieſus; they are like the children of Iſrael that came out of Egypt, none followed the Lord unto Canaan, but Caleb and Ioſhuah; like the followers of Chriſt, when he was apprehended by the Iewes, they all forſaoke him and fled, onely Saint Iohn went with him to the High-Priests hall, and Saint Peter followed him afarre off; ſo few did rightly follow him, of all that profeſt ſo highly to love him. Ioh. 18. 15. Mat. 26. 58.

3. The patterne, which wee ſhould follow is Chriſt, follow me, and whoſoever followeth him ſhall never doe amiſſe; becauſe hee is the way, the truth, and the life; and therefore if we follow him, we ſhall not wander, we ſhall not erre, we ſhall not die; for hee is the reſurrection and the life, and whoſoever beleeveth in him ſhall not die for ever. 3. The patterne which we muſt follow, Chriſt. Ioh. 14. 6. & c. 11. 25, 26, 27.

And yet few men will follow Chriſt, but you may ſee, Divers ſorts of men that faile in following Chriſt.

And yet
1. Some follow the luſts of their owne fleſh.
2. Others follow the vanities of this wicked world.
3. Others follow the practiſe of the greater part of people, or at leaſt, the examples of their friends and companions.

1. The Sonne of Syrach ſaith, quid nequius quam quod excogitavit caro & ſanguis? fleſh and blood will imagine evill, and as Drexelius ſaith, ſui amore ſtultiſſimo decepta, ut aliquot mellis guttulas emat, cœlum vendit, our fooliſh fleſh deceived with ſelfe-love, ſells all the joyes of heaven for a few drops of honey, and deales with us juſt as Iahel dealt with Siſera, ſhe calls him in, ſhe ſpeakes him faire, and gives him more then he deſires, for hee asked water to coole his thirſt, and ſhe gave him milke, ſhe brought forth butter in a lordly diſh; but when ſhe ſaw him faſt aſleepe, ſhe tooke a nayle out of the tent, and nailed him faſt unto the ground, ita miſer ſomnum, quem cepit, nec dum finijt, and ſo the wretched man hath not yet ended that ſleepe, which he then began; and therefore, as a certaine fellow being angry with a Muletor, whom hee intended to beate, and hee cried, I am an Athenian, I am an Athenian, he preſently turned himſelfe unto his aſſe, and ſaying, thou art no Athenian, he cugelled the ſame full well; ſo though our ſoules bee ſpirituall, yet our fleſh is from the earth, and no Athenians, no celeſtiall creatures; and therefore, if our ſoules doe anger God, wee ſhould not ſpare to whip this earthly aſſe, that is ſo ſottiſh and ſo fooliſh in all her waies; or otherwiſe we may feare to leeſe both body and ſoule, if we do ſuffer our ſoules to follow after the deſires of the fleſh; for as Proſper tells us a prettie ſtory, of two travellers that walked together towards the ſame cittie, whereof the one was wiſe, the other fooliſh; and when they came where two waies met, the one broad and faire, the other ſtraight and foule, the foole would needs goe the broader way; but the wiſe man told him, though the narrow way ſeemed foule, yet was it ſafe and would bring them to a good lodging, and the other ſeeming faire, was very dangerous, and brought them to a deſperate Inne; yet becauſe the foole would not yeeld to any reaſon, but beleeved what he ſaw with his eyes, rather then what he heareth with his eares; the wiſe man, for companies ſake, was contented to goe the worſer way; and being both robbed by theeves, detained in their company, and at laſt apprehended with the robbers, and carried before the judge, theſe two began to accuſe one another, and to excuſe himſelfe; the wiſe man ſaid, he told his fellow the dangers of that narrow way, and therefore hee onely was to be blamed, becauſe hee would not yeeld unto his counſell; but the foole had ſo much wit to replie, that he was but a foole, and knew neither the way nor the dangers of the way, and therefore he was to be excuſed, and the wiſeſt man to be condemned, becauſe he would follow ſuch a foole; whereupon the judge, having heard them both, condemned them both; the foole, becauſe he refuſed to follow the counſell of the wiſe, and the wiſe man, becauſe he would not forſake the ſociety of the foole: ſo when the foule, which is the wiſe man, and doth know the dangerous iſſues of the waies of ſinne, and the pleaſant fruits of vertue, will notwithſtanding follow the vaine delights of our fooliſh fleſh, we may well feare, that the juſt judge will condemne both body and ſoule: and therefore

1. Sort. Eccleſ. 17. 30.

Drexelius Nicrea l. 2. c. 4. ſect.

Iudges 5. 25.

The ſtorie of the Muletor.

Plutarch in lib de ira.

Proſper de dono ti morum. lib. 2.

The ſtory of the wiſe and fooliſh traveller.

The end of the broad way.

The ſentence of an impartiall judge.

Galat.6.8.

Rom.8.13.

2.Sort. The vanities of this world like feathers.

What honour, titles, beauty, and other vanities are

The vanity of ſome women.

3.Sort.

2 Sam.16.18.

To doe as moſt men doe.

An uſuall thing to follow the waies of our fathers.

The cauſe of many Papiſts in England.

The former reaſon anſwered.

A moſt excellent example.

Ioſh.24.14,15.

To forſake all friends rather then to offend our God.

therefore let us not follow the concupiſcence of the fleſh; leaſt of the fleſh we reape corruption; becauſe the Apoſtle tells us plainely, that whoſoever liveth after the fleſh ſhall die.

2. The vanities of this world are little worſe, if not worſer then the concupiſcence of the fleſh; they are like feathers in the aire, toſt up and downe with the winde, and they that follow after them, may ſoone wearie themſelves in the purſuit; and if they be ſo cunning as to catch them, yet when they get them, they have got but feathers; of little value and of leſſe durance; becauſe they are vanities; for what is honour but a breath? what are titles but names, ſometimes undeſerved, alwaies puffing up the minde, but never ſatisfying the ſoule with any true content? what is beauty, but a due commixtion of colours in a proportionable forme, pleaſing the eye, and either wonderfully wounding or ſuddenly deceiving the heart of the beholder; and what are all the other things of this world, but vaine things, and things of nothing and worth nothing, tenui pendentia filo, like the ſpiders web, curious to behold, but not worthy of the care that is beſtowed about them; when I have knowne ſome women ſpend three houres almoſt every day, to make them ready, and yet ſcarce ſpend two houres in a weeke to ſerve their God.

3. We have too many men in this world, that preſcribe none other rule unto themſelves, then to doe as others doe; and as Huſhai ſaid unto Abſolon in jeſt, and out of love to King David, to defend his maſter and to defeate his enemie, whom the Lord, and this people, and all the men of Iſrael chooſe, his will I be, and with him will I abide; ſo theſe men thinke and doe in earneſt, even as moſt men doe, without any regard to what they ought to doe; or if the practiſe of the people, and the greater part doth not induce them to their bias, then certainely they will follow the ſame way, and tread in the ſame ſteps, as their fathers, and forefathers, their friends and their acquaintance, have and doe walke before them; and truly this is the cauſe of many Papiſts at this day, in this kingdome of great Brittaine, they have none other reaſon in this world, to ſhew, why they will be Romiſh Catholiques, but onely, becauſe their Fathers were, and their friends are of that Religion.

But, alas, beloved, this is the pooreſt reaſon that ever was alleaged; for where had Chriſtians beene, if our firſt Fathers, that were converted to the faith of Chriſt, had ſaid, wee will live and die as our forefathers died; or we will beleeve as our friends beleeve? who then would have imbraced the faith of Chriſt? who would have turned from Paganiſme? or who would have forſaken the Iewiſh Synagogue, that had continued in the Church, and in the favour of God, ſo many yeers and ages together? I am ſure, this was no argument with Ioſhuah, to perſwade him to continue in the profeſſion and religion of his forefathers; for after he had aſſembled all the Tribes of Iſrael at Shechem, and had made a brieſe rehearſall of Gods benefits unto them, he ſaid (and I will not thinke much to ſet downe his words at large) Now therfore feare the Lord, and ſerve him in ſincerity and in truth, and put away the gods which your Fathers ſerved, on the other ſide of the flood and in Egypt, and ſerve ye the Lord; and if it ſeeme evill unto you to ſerve the Lord, chooſe you this day whom you will ſerve, whether the gods that your fathers ſerved, that were on the other ſide of the flood, or the gods of the Amorites, in whoſe land ye dwell; but as for me and my houſe, wee will ſerve the Lord. A moſt noble, excellent, and moſt heavenly ſaying, worthy to be ingraven in Characters of gold, and perpetually to be reſerved for the honour of ſo faithfull a ſervant of God, and for the inſtruction of all others, that deſire to learne how to behave themſelves in Gods ſervice; that is, not to regard what others doe, but what wee ought to doe; and if our Fathers, and Mothers and Friends, yea our owne Children, or our Wives that lie in our boſome, and that wee love as deere as our owne ſoules, will not joyne with us in the ſervice of God, then to ſay with Ioſhuah, I will leave you all, before I will leave my God, and I will cleave to him, though all my friends ſhould forſake me.

Namq;

Namq; erit ille mihi semper Deus, illius aram
Sæpè tener nostris ab ovilibus imbuet agnus. Virg. Eglog. 1.

Object. But I know what will be objected; doe not they serve the true God as well as you? and therefore, why may not I serve God as well with them, as with you?

Sol. I will answer in a word, the Israelites might have said so to Ioshua; our fathers served the true God, though they differed from you in the manner of their service; therefore why may not we serve our God, as our fathers served him? Beloved, I could make you many other answers; but I will onely wish you to remember, that God is not mocked, and we cannot deceive him by any meanes.

And thus you see, they that follow the flesh, shall be betrayed; they that follow the world, shall be deceiv'd, and they that follow the Divell, shall be destroyd, but they that follow Christ, shall never do amisse. And

There be three speciall Reasons, besides all that I have spoken, which should perswade all men to become willing followers of our Saviour Christ; for he is Three reasons to perswade us to follow Christ.

1. Affabilis ad conferendum.	That is:	1. Courteous to be conferred with.
2. Facilis ad reconciliandum.		2. Easie to be reconciled to.
3. Copiosus ad remunerandum.		3. Bountifull to reward us.

The three best properties of any master.

Three of the best properties that any servant can desire in a master; for

1. Some Lords and Masters are so harsh and so testy, that their servants and followers know not how to speak unto them; they are at the top of the house, when their poore slaves creepe at their feet; such a one was churlish Nabal, that his owne wife durst not, at all times, speake unto her husband, but she must expect the good houre to move him for any thing: It is not so with Christ; for he is meeke and lowly in heart; and I can goe to my chamber and speake with him at any time, I can conferre with him of any thing, I can tell him what I want, I can ask him what I would have; and the oftener I come, the better welcome I shall be, and the more courteous I shall finde him; so gentle is his nature, and so sweet is his disposition, that he loves to be thus troubled with his servants.

1. How gentle and curteous is our Saviour Christ.

Mat. 11. 29.

2. As there is no servant but he shall sometimes offend his master, so there is no master but he will be sometimes displeased with his servant; but herein is the difference; some for a small fault are implacable, and their anger is insanabilis, irreconciliable; others will be easily intreated to remit the greatest offence, upon the acknowledgement of the fault: and such a Lord is Christ; he is not easily angrie, for if he were extreame to marke what is done amisse, O Lord, who might abide it? And when he is angry, he will not alwaies be chiding; for his wrath indureth but the twinckling of an eye; and if we confesse our sinnes, he is faithfull and just to forgive us our sinnes, saith the Apostle; faithfull and just? a strange saying; I thought he would have said, he is mercifull to forgive us our sinnes; no: he knew what he said better than I; for God thinks not himselfe just, if hee did not forgive us our sinnes, when we confesse our faults. God send me still to serve such a Master.

2. How easie is Christ to remit our offences.

Psal. 130. 3. Psal 30. 5.

1 Ioh. 1. 9.

3. Christ deales with his servants, as he did with his friends, at the mariage in Cana of Galile, he keepeth the best wine till the end of the feast; he keepeth his reward till they have done their worke, till they have finished their journey: and as he plenteously rewardeth the proud doers, so he doth most bountifully reward his faithfull servants; but not in the same kind, though both of them in a very large manner; and S. Paul expresseth both; To them, who by patient continuance in well doing seeke for glory, and honour, and immortality, eternall life; but unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousnesse, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish upon every soule of man that doth evill; if I had the intelligence of Angels, and the elocution of all Oratours, I were not able to expresse the greatnesse of this reward; it passeth all understanding.

3. How plentifully God rewardeth his servants.

Ioh. 2. 10.

Psal. 31. 20.

Rom. 2. 7, 8, 9.

And

And therefore, seeing the following of the world, the flesh, and the Divell, is worse, than the poore following of some meane minded titular great men, that think their countenance to be a sufficient satisfaction for all their servants time and service; because these masters will give them their full paiment, but of all miseries; their end being death, and their reward eternall destruction; and seeing the following of our Saviour Christ is so honourable and so profitable in this life, and so excellent in all respects, to make us eternally happy in the life to come; I counsell all men alwaies to consider, and continually to remember, how farre beyond all thoughts is the excellency of this following of Iesus Christ, of whom I do in all humility beg this grace, that we may be furthered and inabled to follow him with all willingnesse, unto the end; that in the end, we may live with him world without end, in that kingdome, which he hath prepared for us, before the foundation of the world; for which, and for all other his mercies and loving kindnesses, which he hath most graciously bestowed upon us, we give and ascribe unto him, together with his Father and the holy Spirit, all possible thankes, and praise, and glory, and dominion, both now, and for evermore. Amen.

***

IEHOVÆ LIBERATORI.

THE ROYALL FEAST.

MATTH. 22. 11,12,13.

And when the King came in to see the ghests, hee saw there a man, which had not on a wedding garment,

And he saith, unto him; Friend, how camest thou in hither, not having a wedding garment? And he was speechlesse.

Then said the King to the servants; Binde him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into outer darkenesse, there shall bee weeping and gnashing of teeth.

MOses was never counted among the Muses, and prophane Iulian, Porphorie, and the rest of the learned Atheists geered at the simplicity, and derided at the plaine narrations of the holy Scriptures; they would have finer bread then could be made of wheat; and the reason is rendred by the wise man, quia malitia eorum execavit eos; because malice cannot speake well of the best vertue, and blindnesse cannot judge of the fairest colours.

But if wee will open our eyes to see, and bring our judgement to discerne, we may soone perceive, that, besides the truth of Scripture, which will admit no comparison with any writings; there is more learning in Moses, then in all the learned men of the Gentiles; more Rhetoricke in Esays prophesies, then in all Tullies Orations; * more Logicke in S. Pauls Epistles, then in all Aristotles Analiticks; there is sweeter musique in King David, then in all the Lyricke Poets of the Heathen; there is better Philosophie in Iob, then in all the Philosophers of Greece; there is truer morality in Salomon, then can bee found in all humane Ethiques; and there is more heroicke vertues and martiall prowes in Iosuah, Iudges, and the Chronicles, then can bee fetcht out of all the Greeke and Romane Stories; and you shall find more patheticall expressions of

The excellency and elegancy of the Scriptures.

* Inter aquas perquam disertus est Esayas, oratio eius erudita ubiq; & maiestatis plena, artes omnes scientiasq; didicerat, quibus ingenia ad magna fortuna cultum excitantur, Petrus Cunaus de republ. Heb. l. 3. c. 7. p. 488.

sorrow and griefe, in a little more then one leafe of Ieremies lamentation, then you can find in all the mournefull Elegies of the Poets; you shall read such ravishing encomies of true love, in eight little Chapters of the Song of Songs, as the like are not to be found in all the Epithalamions of the world; and you shall see more elegancie of expressions, more excellency of demonstrations, and more admirable allusions in our Saviours doctrine, then can be collected out of all the millions of volumes that are extant; So it was foretold, that hee should open his mouth in parables, and declare hard sentences of old, such as the wit of no other man could ever find out; and so his very enemies confesse it, never man spake as he did; when all men wondered at the gracious words that proceeded out of his mouth, Luke 4.22. & inter quam plurimas lepidas, suaves, & elegantes similitudines; and among the many, sweet, and elegant similitudes, whereby the state and condition of Gods Church, is expressed here on earth, hæc suavissima & præcipua est, this parable that resembleth Christ to a Bridegroome, and the Church unto a Spouse, is the first and chiefest, saith Dietericus; and we finde it oftenest repeated, and more amply inlarged and explained in the Scriptures then any other, as you may see in Esay 61.10. & 62.5. Matth. 9.15. & 25.10. Iohn 3.29. Ephes. 5.26.30. Yea it pleased the Holy Ghost so well, that it is not onely set downe in bare words, as hee useth to doe in other points, but he doth more particularly describe the parts and pomps of this royall wedding; as

Psal. 78.2.

Ioh 7.46.

Dietericus super Evangel dom. 10. post trinit. p. 956.

The many particulars of this resemblance of Christ and his Church to a Bridegroome and his Spouse.

1. Their glorious ornaments and attires, Psalme 45.10. Esay 61.10. Ezek. 16. 10.

2. Their faithfull despousall; Hosea 2.19. 2 Cor. 11.2.

3. Their betrothing earnest; 2 Cor. 1.22. Ephes. 1.14.

4. Their inward and unfeigned love and affection; Esay 61.10. 61.5. Ephes. 5.26.30.

5. Their invitation of friends unto the wedding, as In hoc capite, & Ioh. 3.29. Revel. 19.6.

Ita allegoricis tegminibus involuta, ut desiderentur ardentius, undetur, incundius. Aug. de civit Dei. l. 17. c. 20 to. 5 p. 984. a.

6. Their nuptiall song, in Salomons Canticles, which as Saint Augustine saith, is nothing els, but, spiritualis sanctarum mentium voluptas; the spirituall delight of holy minds.

7. Their bringing together to an everlasting habitation, Revel. 21.2.

And therefore, as this Mariage of Christ and his Church is a great mystery, as the Apostle sheweth, Ephes. 5.32. So I beseech you, let us give all heed and diligence, to doe our duties, that we may be found worthy to sit downe at this mariage feast.

Whether this Parable be the same as that in Luk. 14.

But before I enter upon the particulars, it will not be amisse to examine, whether this Parable be the same, which Saint Luke sets downe, in Chap. 14. of his Gospell, or not: for some have so concluded them; yet I find many circumstances that doe prove them different, as

The differences of them.

1. There, it is said, homo pater-familias, a man that was an householder, heere quidam Rex, a certaine King.

2. There it is said, he made a supper; here, a dinner.

3. There, one servant is sent; here, many.

4. There the neglecters excused themselves, here they kill the servants.

5. There the punishment is, non gustabunt, they shall not taste of my Supper; here, he destroyed the murderers.

6. That was uttered in the feast of one of the chiefe of the Pharisees; this to the chiefest Pharisees, and to the Elders of the people, in the Temple of Hierusalem.

Aug. de Consensu Evangel. c. 72.

And therefore Saint Augustine saith; similis est, sed non eadem, this parable is like that, but not the same; and so Saint Gregory, and others are of the same minde: for these two Parables signifie two speciall things.

1. A dinner in the Church militant.
2. A supper in the Church triumphant.

} And you know that after dinner we should go to work; we must work the works of him that sent us while it is day, for

Ioh. 9.4.

for the night commeth, when no man can worke; and after supper we goe to rest, when we shall enter into our Masters joy; and therefore we should never looke for rest in this life, but to labour and take paines in Gods vineyard, and when our day is ended, we shall sup with Christ, and then goe to everlasting rest. Matth.25.23.

And this Parable signifieth the dinner, which the Lord makes in his Church militant; and wee must consider two speciall things concerning the same.

Two things considerable in this Parable.

1. The assimilatum, or thing likened, the kingdome of heaven,
2. The simile, or thing, to which it is likened, to a certaine King, that made a feast, &c.

1. The assimilatum

1. By the kingdome of heaven is understood the Church of God.

The kingdome of heaven signifieth the Church of God. Aug. de temp. ser. 136.

1. Because the Church is the onely way to heaven, per portam Ecclesiæ, intramus in portam Paradisi, and as there was no way to the Temple of honour, but through the Temple of vertue, so there is no way to Paradise but through the Church, as Saint Augustine saith; and therefore Saint Cyprian, and all other Saints, doe conclude, that he shall never have God for his Father, which hath not the Church for his Mother.

The Church like heaven in five respects.

2. Because the Church is like heaven in these fivefold respects; for as in heaven,

In heaven:

1. Some celestiall bodies have an innate light in themselves, which they give to others, though they received the same from none; as the Sunne, which gives light to all, and receives it from none.

Sunne.

2. Other bodies receive light, but give little or none at all, as the Firmament.

Firmament.

3. Others receive it and then give it, as the Moone and the Starres.

Moone.

4. Others neither receive it nor give it, as those blacke clouds that receive no impressions from the Sunne, nor give any light unto the world.

Blacke clouds.

5. Others are ignes fatui, such elfe-fires as are nothing els but exhalations and false shewes of true light.

Exhalations in the Church.

So in the Church of God, which is militant,

1. Christ is that Sunne of righteousnesse, and that true light, which hath all fullnesse in himselfe, and from his fullnesse wee doe all receive, and grace for grace.

Christ. Ioh.1.16.

2. The Laitie and ignorant people doe receive the light of knowledge and understanding from the Priests and Preachers of Gods Word, but can impart with little or none at all to others.

Lay-Christians.

3. The Prophets, Apostles, and Ministers of the Gospell, doe receive all their light from Christ; for I delivered nothing, but what I received from the Lord, saith the Apostle; & os Domini locuntum est, and the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it, saith the Prophet; and, I set downe what I have received, not what I have invented, saith Lyrinensis; and this, which we receive from Christ, we teach unto the people.

Clergy. 1 Cor.11.23 & c.15.3.

Vincentius Lyrinensis.

4. The worldlings, are like the Sodomites, so strucken with blindnesse, that they cannot find the wall at noone day; they cannot perceive the light of truth in the Sun-shine of the Gospell.

Worldlings. 1 Cor.2.14.

5. Hypocrites are puffed up with a vaine shew of a holy profession, when wee can find no true vertue in their lives and conversations; much like those verball preachers, that make a faire shew of learning and knowledge, when they fill up their Sermons with nothing els but the frothie delights of rhetoricall exornations.

Hypocrites.

Verball Preachers.

And this Church is called a kingdome, not kingdomes; because herein, wee have but one Lord and one Law, one Faith, and one Baptisme, as the Apostle speaketh.

Ephes.4.5.

And it is called the kingdome of heaven; because all things are, or should be, most heavenly in this Church of God; as, heavenly Lawes, heavenly Scriptures, heavenly King, heavenly People, whose conversation is in heaven, as Saint Paul testifieth.

Phil.3.20.

This King, which hath but one Sonne, and for whom hee makes this great mariage, is God, which governeth all things by his power, and doth raigne in heaven by his glory, in the Church by his grace, and in hell by his justice, as Saint Augustine speaketh.

The Bridegroome is Iesus Christ; the Spouse is the Church, as Iohn Baptist sheweth, Ioh. 3.29. and Christ himselfe, *Mar.*2.19. and this mariage betwixt Christ and the Church was first made, quando verbum caro factum est, when the Word was made flesh, as Saint Gregory saith, *Greg. Sup. Evangel. hom.*38. and it was made, to reconcile God to man; for as mariage is the best meanes to reconcile two disagreeing families; so is the taking of our flesh to Christ, and the giving of his spirit to us, the onely way, to reconcile us unto God.

Why the Word was made flesh.

The love of Christ to his Church.

And this sheweth the great love of Christ unto his Church; for, hoc erit jus Regis; this shall be the manner of the King, that shall raigne over you; hee will take your sonnes, and appoint them for himselfe, for his charets, and to bee his horsemen; and hee will take your daughters, to bee confectionaries, to bee cookes, and to bee bakers; but the heavenly King takes our soules and makes them not his slaves, but his Spouse; and as Moses, speaking of the husband and wife, saith, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother and cleave to his wife; so Christ left heaven, which was his Fathers house, and the Synagogue of the Iewes, which was his Mother, that he might cleave unto his Church, which he gathered out of Iewes and Gentiles; and as Iacob served seven yeeres for Rachell, and they seemed as nothing unto him; so Christ served thirty three yeeres for his Church, and notwithstanding all the paines and sorrowes, that hee suffered all that time, ten thousand times more then Iacob did; yet did all this seeme as nothing unto him in respect of that great love, which hee bare unto his Church. So you see the summe of this Parable, wherein three things are most considerable.

1 Sam.8.11.13.

*Bernard ser.*2. de dom post Octav. Epiphan.

Gen.2.24.

Gen 29.20.

Three things to be considered in this parable.

1. A feast.
2. A view.
3. A consequent.

1. Touching the feast, we are likewise to consider these three things.

1. A feast-maker.
2. The inviters.
3. The guests.

1. We find three sorts of feast-makers,
1. Men.
2. Divels.
3. God.
And

1. Men doe make feasts either
1. For men, or
2. For divels, or
3. For God.
For sometimes they do

1. A feast, touching which three things are to be observed.
2. The feastmaker, whereof there be three sorts.

1. Men.

Mat.6.2.

Mat.10.42.

Luk.15.7.

1 Tim.1.5. Revel.3.20.

feast their friends and their friends them, so they have their reward; sometimes they feast the poore, then God will reward them; sometimes they feast the divell, when they heape up sinne upon sinne; for as there is joy in heaven over one sinner that converteth, so there is a feast in hell, while he goeth on still in his wickednesse; and sometimes they feast God, when they keepe a pure heart, and a good conscience; this is his feast, and to these hee will come in and sup with them, and they shall sup with him.

2. The divell makes a feast for all his servants, and that is both

1. Here, and
2. Hereafter, and in each of these feasts, they shall have both their first and their second course.

2. The divell.

1. In this life.

Eccles.1.2.

Chap.1.ver.14.

1 Ioh.2.16.

1. In this life, they shall have vanity and vexation of spirit; for though hee filleth them with delights, and crowneth them with rose-buds; yet all is but vanitie of vanities, saith the Preacher; and, if this were all, it were something; but it is not: for after vanity comes vexation of spirit; so Salomon, the wisest man found it; and the foolisheſt among the sonnes of men, may soone find it so; and no wonder, that we should find no better fruit from so bitter a roote; because all that is in the world is either concupiscence of the eyes, or concupiscence of the flesh, or pride of life; and therefore these guests, at the best, can be but like the glome-worme, which, in a darke night, doth make a faire and fierie shew, but if you presse

presse him, you shall find but a little cold moisture.

2. In hell the Divell makes another feast to welcome all his guests; and there shall be weeping & gnashing of teeth, their meate shall be coales of fire, their drink fountaines of teares, their sauce shall be a guilty conscience, that shall set a sharpe edge upon every thought, and be a gnawing corrasive unto their soules for every sinne; for now they must pay the old score, and for all that they consumed in the world, they must here pay the utmost farthing; and although in other feasts, the more the merrier, yet in this blacke banquet they shall finde, the more the greater misserie; and therefore take heed to follow many to perdition.

2. In Hell. Mat 8.12.

Mat.5.26.

3. God maketh a feast; and in him we may observe, out of this place,

1. Mercy, that he would be pleased to make such a plentifull feast for sinfull man.

2. Clemency towards all his guests, and a most gentile cariage towards his very adversaries, to whom he useth none other words, but Friend, how camest thou in hither?

3. Iustice upon them that slew his servants, and refused to come unto his feast; for he was wroth with them, and therefore sent forth his armies and destroyed those murderers and burnt up their cittie.

4. Severity both towards those ingratefull refusers, and this careless commer unto his feast; for he was bound hand and foot and cast into utter darkenesse, where was weeping and gnashing of teeth.

3. God in whom we may observe 1. His mercy.

2. His clemency.

3. His Iustice.

4. His severity.

And therfore, as S. Paul saith in another place, so we may say in this place, behold both the goodnesse and severity of God; towards us, goodnesse, in making this feast for us, especially so good and so often as hee makes it; for I find the same to bee threefold, which we may call { 1. His breakefast. 2. His dinner. 3. His supper. } And

Rom.11.22.

God maketh a threefold feast for his servants.

1. The breakefast was the promulgation of the law, after which men are fresh to worke; and this was done in mount Sinai, and belonged properly unto the Iewes, because as David said, The heathen had not the knowledge of his lawes.

1. A breakefast.

Psal. 147.20.

2 When God saw his people wearied, and heavie laden under the burthen of the law, then did he make a dinner for them in mount Sion, and thereto invited all nations to be partakers of that banquet; and this dinner, consisteth of three speciall courses { 1. Doctrina Evangelica. 2. Mystica Sacramenta. 3. Cœlestia Charismata. } Whereof Saint Augustine saith, they be fercula dulcissima, the sweetest juncates in the world; quia major est refectio mentis quam ventris; because these are given for the feeding of our soules; and the refection of our mindes is a great deale better then the filling of our bellies; for though the faireness and the sweetnesse of these earthly things do seeme exceeding good; yet as the apple tree is among the trees of the forrest; that is, a transcendent tree, excelling all the rest; so doth the sweetnesse of this dinner, excell all the dainties of this world; and therefore the Prophet David saith, quam magna multitudo dulcedinis tuæ timentibus te? which we reade, O how plentifull is thy goodnesse towards them that feare thee? and Saint Augustine, though at first hee tooke great delight in humane learning, and in other like worldly things, yet after he had once tasted, quam suavis Dominus, how sweet was Christ unto him, then he presently confesseth, quam suave mihi subitò factum est carere suavitatibus nugarum? ô how pleasant was it unto me, when thou entered'st into me, to have all these pleasures ejected out of my soule; quia suavitas Christi omnes mundanas suavitates amaras reddit, because the sweetnesse of Christ makes all the sweetnesse of the world bitter unto us: and therefore, ô taste and see how sweet this dinner is.

2. The dinner consisteth of three courses.

The most excellent sweetnesse of our spirituall dinner.

Cant.2.3.

Psal 31.21.

S. Augustines error when he was young.

The first course consisteth of Evangelicall doctrines, which bring the glad

1. Course, Evangelicall doctrine.

tidings of peace and ſalvation to every one that beleeveth; and theſe be the beſt of all good things; becauſe as the Poet ſaith, nos pacem poſcimus omnes, there is no man but he deſireth peace; eſpecially, that peace with God, which the Goſpell preacheth through Ieſus Chriſt; and ſalvation is the height of all happineſſe, without which all other things are worth nothing; for What availeth it a man to win the whole world and to leeſe his owne ſoule?

Mat. 16. 26.

2. Courſe, myſticall Sacraments.

The ſecond courſe conſiſteth of myſticall Sacraments, which are chiſely two,

1. Baptiſme.
2. The Lords Supper.

Baptiſme waſheth us from ſin, and the Euchariſt nouriſheth us in grace; and though the firſt courſe was very ſweet, yet this is far ſweeter; becauſe in this, we do not onely heare of Chriſt preached unto us, as we did in the former, but wee have him alſo moſt lively repreſented unto our eyes, and, in the Euchariſt, ſerved in at our table, to be received and eaten of every faithfull gueſt, that commeth to be partaker of this bleſſed Sacrament; for, hee is the true bread of life; and therefore this feaſt is called

Ioh 6. 35.

The names whereby the Euchariſt is expreſſed.

1. Lords Supper.

1. The Lords Supper; a Supper, becauſe it was made and given after ſupper; and the Lords Supper, becauſe our Lord Ieſus Chriſt was the author and the inſtituter of it.

2. The Communió

2. It is called the Communion, 1. Becauſe it is a ſymbole of our communion with God, ſhewing, that, as he tooke our fleſh upon him, per æternam unionem, by an eternall union, ſo we are made partakers of his fleſh, per internam comeſtionem, by an internall commeſſation. 2. Becauſe it is a token of our union among our ſelves, teaching, that as many graines doe make but one bread, ſo we that are many men, are but as one man in Chriſt Ieſus: and therefore it is ſaid of the Primitive Church, that they had but one heart and one minde.

1 Cor. 10. 17.

Act 4. 32.

3. Euchariſt.

3. It is called εὐχαριστία, thankefullneſſe; becauſe hereby we doe teſtifie our thankefullneſſe unto God, for all the benefits he hath don unto us.

4 Love feaſt.

4. It is called ἀγάπη, the feaſt of love; becauſe it ſheweth the great love of God to us, and that none of us ſhould come to this feaſt, but ſuch as love both God and men.

5. Vnbloodie ſacrifice, and in what ſence.

5. It is called ſacrificium incruentum, the unbloodie ſacrifice of Chriſt, non per oblationem, ſed per commemorationem, not that we doe herein offer up Chriſt to his Father, but doe hereby commemorate that bloody ſacrifice, which was made and offered by Chriſt himſelfe, upon the altar of his Croſſe, for the appeaſing of his Fathers wrath.

Foure principall things to be conſidered touching the Euchariſt.

But for the better underſtanding of the great worth of this banquet, and the worthineſſe of this Sacrament, we may conſider

1. The manifold prefiguration
2. The majeſty of the Author
3. The pretiouſneſſe of the parts
4. The excellency of the end

} of this invaluable feaſt.

1. How it was prefigured.

1. If we reſpect antiquity, this Sacrament is as old as the world; for it was prefigured

1. By the tree of life.

1. In Paradiſe by that tree of life, which was in the midſt of the garden of God; for whoſoever had eaten of that tree, he had lived for ever; ô happy Adam, if thou hadſt taſted of this tree before thou hadſt eaten of the forbidden fruit: ſo whoſoever eateth of this bread, he ſhall live for ever; ſo happy we ſhall be, if wee doe worthily eate hereof.

Ioh. 6. 51.

2. By the Bread & Wine Melchiſedech offered to Abraham. Gen. 14. 18.

2. It was prefigured in that Bread and Wine, which Melchiſedech offered unto Abraham; for, as that preſerved his life when he was ready to faint, and he was therein bleſſed, after his victory over his enemies; ſo this preſerveth our ſpirituall life, and inableth us to ſubdue all our adverſaries.

3. By the Shew-bread. Exod. 25. Levit. 24.

3. It was prefigured by that Shew-bread, which none muſt eat but thoſe that were cleane, and therefore it was called the holy bread; to teach us, that none ſhould eate of this bread, but thoſe that are holy and undefiled.

4. It

4. It was prefigured by that cake, which the Angell brought unto Elias, when he ſate under the Iuniper tree: for as hee walked in the ſtrength of that cake, till he came to the mount of God, Horeb, where hee ſaw the Lord; ſo may we walke by the vertue of this bread, till we come to enjoy the fruition of God.

4. By Elias cake. 1 Reg. 19.

5. It was prefigured by the Paſchall Lambe; for as the blood of that Lambe ſprinkled upon the doore-poſts of the Iſraelites, preſerved them from the fury of the deſtroying Angell; ſo the blood of Chriſt preſerveth us from the wrath of God.

5. By the Paſchall Lambe, Exod. 12. 13. &c.

6. It was prefigured by that Manna, which the Lord rained unto the Iſraelites; For

6. By the Manna in five reſpects.

1. Though ſome gathered more and ſome gathered leſſe, yet there was inough for every one, and each one had his Gomer full; ſo in this Sacrament, every one ſhall have his full meaſure of grace, according to the meaſure of his faith.

2. As the Manna vaniſhed when the Sun did riſe; ſo this Sacrament ſhall ceaſe when the Sonne of righteouſneſſe ſhall appeare in his glory.

3. As the Manna might be gathered every day, but the Sabbath; ſo this Sacrament may bee received at all times, untill wee come to our everlaſting Sabbath.

4. As the Manna gave a taſte of all kinds, according to the will of the eater; ſo this Sacrament gives comfort to every faithfull receiver, according to his ſeverall neceſſity; becauſe in it, there is contained a remedy againſt all diſeaſes, and the ſumme of all felicity.

5. As they that loathed Manna were moſt greevouſly puniſhed; ſo the contemners of this Sacrament ſhall be moſt ſeverely plagued.

Numb. 21. 5. 1 Cor. 11. 30.

7. It was prefigured by the Arke of God; and that in three ſpeciall reſpects: For

7. By the Arke in three reſpects. Exod. 25. 10.

1. As the Arke was made of Shittim wood, that is, ſhining, and pure Cedar, the beſt of all wood, and was guilded within and without; ſo is this Sacrament of the pureſt wheat, to ſignifie the pure body of the Son of God, which is repleniſhed with all heavenly graces.

2. As the Arke had in it three things of ſpeciall note, 1. The golden pot. 2. Aarons rod. 3. The two Tables; ſo in this Sacrament is Chriſt, whom theſe three things doe repreſent; as firſt, the pot ſignifieth his ſonle, which contained the fullnes of all divine graces; ſecondly, the rod ſheweth his Prieſtly power; and thirdly, the two Tables ſhew him to bee the Author and the giver of this Law.

Vide Petrum Cunæum de repub. Hebr. l. 1. c. 14. p. 136

3. As two things are moſt remarkable concerning this Arke, that is,

1. The people carrying themſelves worthily towards God, were exceedingly proſpered and bleſſed, by the benefit of the preſence of the Arke, as we read by the houſe of Obed-Edom.

2 Sam 6. 11.

2. The unworthy intreaters of this Arke were moſt greevouſly puniſhed, as you may ſee by the example of the Philiſtines, and the men of Aſhdod, which were, not a little plagued for a little contempt unto this Arke; even ſo we find the ſame two things in this Sacrament as you may ſee, 1 Cor. 11.

1 Sam. 5. 6.

8. It was prefigured by the meale of Elizeus; for as that, being caſt into the pottage, ſweetened all the broth, and preſerved the children from death; ſo this Sacrament ſweeteneth all our afflictions, and preſerveth us to everlaſting life. So by theſe types and figures you ſee the antiquity, and the continuance of the memory of this Sacrament.

8. By the meale of Elizeus. 2 King. 4. 41.

2. For the Author of this Sacrament, it was Chriſt himſelfe who conſecrated and delivered the ſame, with his owne hands, and commanded us to doe the like; And he deferred the ſame to the end of his life, that it might worke the deeper impreſſion in the hearts of his Diſciples: and, at the inſtitution thereof, I beſeech you marke it;

2. The Author of this Sacrament. Aug. ep. 118. ad Ianuar. Obſervable things.

1. The desire of Christ.

1. He saith, I earnestly desired to eate this Passeover with you; therefore it is a matter of no small importance.

2. The blessing of the Sacrament.

2. Hee blessed both the Bread and the Wine, that is, powred forth prayers, and sent up supplications unto heaven, that the blessings of God might descend, and remaine heere on earth, with all the worthy receivers of this most holy Sacrament; and therefore it is no fruitlesse thing to be partakers hereof.

3. The summe and substance of it. Mat. 14. 11.

3. For the summe and substance of this Sacrament, here is Christ, yea whole Christ offered to every faithfull soule; not his head alone, as Iohn Baptist head was served in a platter, nor his heart alone, but his heart, and hands, and head, and all Christ, body and soule, Deitie and Humanity, is here served in, at our dinner, and not onely preached in his Word, but also receved in this Sacrament; for he is the true bread of life, his flesh is meate indeed, and his blood is drinke indeed;

Ioh. 6. 55.

Therefore, Take, eate, this is my body; I say not by Transubstantiation, or Consubstantiation, or Conversion, or any other expresse way; for as there is docta ignorantia, a learned, or, I am sure, a happy ignorance, when we keepe our selves within the limits of faith and obedience; so there is, indocta scientia, an unlearned and unhappy science, when we would grow wise beyond sobriety; and therefore not following the Church of Rome, which hath too farre erred, and too much troubled the whole world, with a multitude of unprofitable disputes about this sacred Sacrament, I will say with the Apostle, ô altitudo, ô the depth of an inexplicable mysterie; and as the people that were cured by our Saviour, never inquired curiously, by what meanes this vertue proceeded from him, but were thankefully satisfied with the health that they received, and did most humbly glorifie the God of their salvation; so will I never inquire too busily, how Christ is here present, but as some have faith, though they have not skill inough to shew the reason of it, and some have knowledge of the truth, though they have not art inough to defend it; so I will beleeve that the body of Christ is in this Sacrament, though I cannot expresse, quomodo fieri potest, how these things can be, no more then Nicodemus could tell, how a man could bee borne againe when hee is old; and my reason is, because, as the blessed Virgin said at the mariage in Cana of Galilee, Whatsoever hee shall say unto you, doe it; so whatsoever he saith, I will beleeve it; therefore seeing he saith, This is my body, This is my blood, I will constantly beleeve, heere is all Christ undivided, his body, by consecration, his blood by connexion, his soule by conjunction, and his Deitie by an hypostaticall union. Therefore who can expresse the excellency of this feast, and the worthinesse of this Sacrament; for as Bonaventure saith,

Not to be too curious.

Rom. 11. 33.

Faith better with humility then curiosity.

Aug. de tempore ser. 132.

Ioh. 3. 4.

Ioh. 2. 5.

Mat. 26. 26, 28.

1. His body.

1. Magnum corpus, quia ex sanctificato beatissima Virginis corpore fuit sumptum; his body was a very excellent substance, because it was formed of the pure seed of a most blessed Virgin.

2. His soule. Ioh. 1. 14.

2. Major anima, quia plena gratia & veritate; his soule was more excellent, because it was full of grace and truth.

3. His Deity. Psal. 96. 4.

3. Maxima Deitas, quia magnus Dominus & laudabilis nimis; his Deity is most excellent, because the Lord is great, and cannot worthily be praised; so here is in Christ, nobilissimum in cœlo, & nobilissimum in terra conjuncta; the noblest thing in heaven, and the noblest of all things on earth united together.

How much wee owe to Christ.

And therefore, my deare brethren, let us not refuse this feast, wherein Christ himselfe is become our food, and our soules do feed on him, by a spirituall commessation; but rather, as S. Bernard saith, let us learne hereby, how much we ought to love that God, that Christ, qui dedit nobis carnem suam in cibum, sanguinem in potum, animam in pretium, & aquam lateris in lavacrum regenerationis; which hath given to us, his flesh for meat, his blood for drinke, his soule for the price of our redemption, and the water that gushed out of his side, to be the laver of our regeneration; and if we do faithfully receive the same, then shall we find, find, as the ſame S. Bernard ſaith, that corpus Chriſti, eſt aegris medicina, peregrinantibus vita, debiles confortans, valentes delectans, languorem ſanans, & ſanitatem ſervans; the body of Chriſt is a medicine to them that are ſicke, and life to them that do wander, comforting the weake, confirming the ſtrong, healing our diſeaſes, and preſerving our health and happineſſe; Quia per hoc fit homo manſuetior ad correptionem, patientior ad laborem, ardentior ad amorem, ad obedientiam promptior, & ad gratiarum actionem devotior; becauſe a man, by this, is made meeker to be reproved, patienter to labour, feruenter to love, readier to obey, and deuoter to give God thanks. So you ſee the ſumme and ſubſtance of this Sacrament.

The benefits of the worthy receiving of this Sacrament.

Now if you deſire more particularly to know the parts thereof, they are eſpecially three.

Three parts of this Sacrament.

1. Earthly ſignes ſignifying.
2. Divine words ſanctifying.
3. Heavenly graces ſignified.

} Three moſt excellent things.

1. The earthly ſignes are bread and wine. And

1. Earthly ſignes, two.

2. He choſe bread for theſe three ſpeciall reaſons.

1. Bread, choſen for three reaſons.

First, becauſe bread is eaſie to be had, if we will labour for it; ſo is Chriſt to them that ſeeke him: Aske and you ſhall have, ſeeke and you ſhall find, knocke and it ſhall be opened unto you.

1. Reaſon. Mat. 7. 7.

2. Becauſe bread is the ſuſtainer of mans life; and ſo is Chriſt the preſerver of the ſpirituall life of all believers.

2. Reaſon. Pſal. 104. 15.

3. Becauſe of the analogies, and reſemblances betwixt bread and our Saviour Chriſt; for as the wheat is beaten and grounded to meale before it be made bread, ſo Chriſt was faine to ſuffer and to die before he could redeeme us, as the Scripture ſaith, thus it behoveth Chriſt to ſuffer; and ſo muſt we ſuffer likewiſe before we can be ſaved; and as bread is made of many graines, ſo is the myſticall body of Chriſt, the Church of God, made of many Chriſtians, as the Apoſtle ſheweth.

3. Reaſon. Luke 24. 46. Acts 14. 22. 1 Cor. 10. 17.

2. He choſe wine, to ſhew, how his bloud was ſhed for our ſinnes; becauſe without bloud there is no remiſſion; and he choſe wine, to ſhew, that as wine maketh glad the heart of man, ſo the remembrance of the ſhedding of Chriſts bloud for the ſatisfaction of our ſinnes, is the onely thing that doth rejoyce us, when (like corne) we are grounded for our tranſgreſſions: And therefore, they do greatly amiſſe, that deny the wine unto the laitie.

2. Wine. Heb. 9. 22. Pſal. 104. 15.

2. The divine words, which are the words of inſtitution, do ſanctifie theſe ſignes, and make them now not as common bread and wine, but Euchariſticall and Sacramentall ſignes and ſeales of the body and bloud of Chriſt, ex duabus rebus, ſcilicet terrena & cœleſti conſtantia; conſiſting now of two ſpeciall things, that is, celeſtiall and terreſtriall nature, as Irenæus ſpeaketh.

2. The divine words.

Irenæus lib. 4. c. 30.

And though, by the receiving of this Sacrament, we are made partakers of the body and bloud of Chriſt, yet doth the ſubſtance of bread and wine ſtill remaine, ſaith Gelaſius; Quia Chriſtus viſibilia ſymbola corporis & ſanguinis appellatione honoravit, non naturam mutando, ſed gratiam adjiciendo, ſaith Theodoret. And therefore, there is no mutation of ſubſtance, but an acceſſion of grace, and an alteration of them from what they were, not in nature, but in name, uſe, and eſtimation; for whereas before they were called bread and wine, they are now termed the body and bloud of Chriſt; whereas before they were uſed to nouriſh our bodies, they are now applied to ſtrengthen our faith; and whereas before we eſteemed of them none otherwiſe than of common bread and wine, we deeme them now as holy ſeales and ſymbols of moſt excellent graces; neither is it ſtrange, that they are called the body and bloud of Chriſt; quia ſolet res, quæ ſignificat, ejus rei nomine, quam ſignificat, nominari, ſaith the Schoolеman; becauſe the thing ſignifying is uſually called by the name of that thing, which is ſignified.

The ſubſtance of the bread ſtill remaining.

The Sacramentall bread differenced from other bread in three things. 1. In name. 2. In uſe. 3. In eſtimation.

* That is, the Sacramentall body, not the naturall.

3. The heavenly graces, ſignified by theſe ſignes, are the body and blond of Chriſt;

3. The heavenly graces.

Christ, together with all the benefits of his incarnation, and the merits of his death and passion, as especially, the remission of sins, the infusion of graces, and the possession of eternall joyes.

4. The end of this feast threefold.

4. The end for which Christ makes this feast is threefold.

1. To put us in mind of Christs death.
2. To confirme our faith.
3. To preserve our spirituall life.

} For

1. To put us in mind of Christs death. Psal. 111. 4. 1 Cor. 11. 26.

1. God hath so done his wonderfull workes, that they ought to be had in remembrance, saith the Psalmist; and therefore, as often as you receive this Sacrament, so often do you shew the Lords death, saith the Apostle, which we ought continually to do, to free our selves from that insupportable burden of ingratitude; for (you know) this is the greatest of sinnes, & ingratum si dixeris, omnia dixeris, and he that saith, I am ingratefull, can never say worse of me; and forgetfulnesse is the height of all ingratitude; therefore the Prophet David, upbraiding the most careless Iewes for their great ingratitude towards God, saith, that when he had wrought his wonders in Egypt, and fearefull things by the red sea; yet within a while, even presently, before he had scarce made an end of blessing them, they forgat all his workes, and became unmindfull of his covenant; and shall we forget all that Christ hath done for us? God forbid; therefore let us often partake of this Sacrament, that we may be often put in remembrance of his passion.

Forgetfulnesse the height of all ingratitude. Psal. 78. 12. 43. Psal. 106. 13. 21.

2. To strengthen our faith.

2. God institutes this Sacrament, and maketh this feast, to strengthen and to confirme our faith in Christ; for this is the maine end of preaching, and the chiefest aime of our receiving, to bring us to believe in Christ: Quia credere in Christum est manducare panem vivum; because to believe in Christ, is to eat the bread of life; and S. Augustine saith, Manducare illam escam, & illum bibere potum, est in Christo manere, & Christum in nobis manentem habere; to eat that bread, and to drinke that drinke, is to abide in Christ, and to have Christ to abide in us: and S. Iohn saith, He that believeth in me, as saith the Scripture, out of his belly shall flow rivers of waters of life; and againe, he saith, he that commeth to me, that is, to eat me, shall never hunger, and he that believeth in me, shall never thirst; to shew unto us, that to believe in him, is to drinke of him; and besides, we find the same thing, that is, eternall life, is as well promised to the believers in him, as to the eaters and drinkers of him, as you may see by comparing Ver. 47. with Ver. 51. of the 7. Chapter, and the very same thing is aswell threatned to the not-believers in him, as to the not-eaters of him, as you may see by comparing Ver. 33. with Ver. 64. of the same Chapter.

To believe in Christ, is to eat him and to drinke him. Ioh. 6. 35. Cap. 7. 37. Cap. 7. Ver. 47. Ver. 51. Ver 53. Ver. 64.

And so the Fathers teach as much; for S. Augustine saith, Accedunt ad Iesum non carne sed corde; and againe, Quomodo in cœlum manum mittam, ut ibi sedentem Christum teneam? mitte fidem, & tenuisti; how shall I extend my hand to heaven to lay hold on Christ that sitteth there? send thy faith, and thou hast done it; and againe, speaking of the carnall eaters of our Saviour Christ, he saith, Quid paras dentem & ventrem? Why dost thou prepare thy teeth? Believe in him, and thou hast eaten him: because, as Tertullian saith, Christus est auditu devorandus, intellectu ruminandus, & fide degerendus: Christ is to be eaten by hearing, to be swallowed by understanding, and to be digested by faith; and S. Chrysostome saith, Christs Table is not for chattering Iayes, that feed below, but for the noble Eagles that have their thoughts on high: and S. Bernard saith, Christ may be touched, affectu, non manu; fide, non sensibus.

How Christ is to be eaten and to be digested. Bern. Serm. 76. in Cant.

And the reason, why the Word is preached, and the Sacraments administred to beget and to increase our faith, is, because our faith unites us, and makes us one with Christ; for Christ is compared to the head, and we to the members; and if the head be not united to the body, there can be no life in it; so he is compared to the husband, and we to the wife; and the Scripture saith, they two shall be one flesh; whereupon S. Paul saith, that we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones: and so Christ saith, I am the vine, and you are the branches; and if the branches be disjoyned from the vine but a haires breadth, they will presently be

Why the Word is preached, and the Sacraments administred. Eph. 1. 22. Cap. 5. Ver. 32. Mat. 10. 8. Ioh. 15. 5.

be withered; and so shall we, if we be any whit separated from Christ; and therefore he saith, I pray for them which shall believe in me, that they all may be one with us. Ioh.17.21.

But here you must understand that this union is not corporall, but spirituall; for except you eate the flesh of the Sonne of man, you have no life in you; that is, whosoever eateth not my flesh can never have eternall life; but the fathers that were before his incarnation could not eate it carnally, with their mouthes, but onely spiritually by faith; therefore to eate Christ to be made one with Christ, is onely to be made one with him by faith. Our union with Christ is spirituall, and not carnall.

And this faith in Christ is internally wrought in our hearts, by the spirit of Christ, through these two externall meanes. Faith wrought in us by two meanes

1. The preaching of the Word.
2. The receiving of the Sacraments.

} For these Sacraments doe shew unto our eyes, what our eares do heare; and therefore they be called, verba visibilia Evangelij, the visible words of the Gospell; for it was their manner among the Iewes, for the more certainty of any thing, to expresse the same by some outward signes, as the Prophet in the Old Testament tooke the hornes of iron, and said unto Iehosaphat, Thus shalt thou push the king of Syria: and Agabus in the New Testament tooke S. Pauls girdle, and said, thus shall he be bound that oweth this girdle; therefore God doth not onely preach his goodnesse unto our eares, but also shewes the same by visible signes unto our eyes. 2 Chron.18.10. Acts 21.11.

3. God maketh this feast to preserve our spirituall life; for as man consisteth both of body and soule, so he liveth a double life. 3. To preserve our spirituall life.

1. Naturall, which is an union of the body and soule.
2. Spirituall, which is an union of the soule with the Spirit of Christ. Man liveth a double life.

And as there be three things necessary for the naturall life of man, to make the same to subsist; that is,

1. A mother, to bring him forth into the world.
2. Meat, to sustaine him while he is well.
3. A Physician, to cure him when he is sicke.

} Even so, there be three things requisite for our spirituall life, that is, Three things necessary for our naturall life.

1. A mother, which is the Church, by Baptisme to beget us unto God.
2. Meat, which is the Eucharist, whereby we are fed with the body of Christ.
3. A Physitian, which is the Minister, that prescribeth unto us the spirituall physicke of faith and repentance, to recover our dying soules from sin. Three things necessary for our spirituall life.

And if we do seriously weigh and diligently compare these two lives together, we shall easily find that this naturall life is but the shadow of death, and scarce worth the name of life; and yet such is the condition of the world, that our chiefest care is for this life; for what will we not do to preserve this? and alas, what do we do to sustaine the other? Ideo offert Deus quod rogari debuerat, & non rogatus dare vult, quod vix sperari poterat; therefore God offereth us what we ought to seeke; and not asked, he would faine give us, what we could scarce hope any wayes to obtaine, as S. Gregory saith. And so much for the maker of this feast. The simplicity of men in neglecting their spirituall life. Greg. in Evang. Hom.36.To.2.f. 493.c.

2. The inviters are said to be his servants; and he sent them twice to invite his guests; that is, under the Old and New Testament: under the Old Testament he sent his Prophets; and under the New Testament he sent his Apostles, Evangelists, and their successours, the Ministers and Preachers of the Gospell. 2. The inviters of the people to this feast.

And in these servants, two things are chiefly to be noted.

1. Diligence.
2. Patience.

} Two necessary vertues for the Ministers of Christ. Two things to be noted in the servants.

1. Diligence, to please their Master, without which no vertue is worth much in a servant; therefore the Scripture saith, cursed is he that doth the worke of the Lord negligently. 1. Diligence. Ier.48.10.

2. Patience, that they may be able to undergo their task; for we have need of patience more than others. 2. Patience.

1. Because

Why Preachers have need of patience, more than others. 1. Reason.

1. Because we are more subject to wrongs than any other, as here you see, for their good deeds, for inviting men to Christ, to a feast, they are beaten, abused and murdered; oderunt nos gratis, it is a common thing, to hate them freely without a cause.

2. Reason.

2. Because we are more sensible of wrongs than any other; for as the fairest face is soonest fowled, and the tenderest heart will easiest weepe; so the most innocent man, that doth least wrong, doth ever take it most to heart, that he is wronged; whereas the wicked, like hardened weather-beaten skins, are so accustomed to do injuries, that they make none other account of received wrongs, than how they may revenge them; of these the Poet saith.

The wicked receiving wrongs, thinke of nothing but how to revenge them.

Ovid. Epist. Ariadne Theseo.

Non pater est Ægeus, nec tu Pittheidos Æthræ
Filius: authores saxa fretumq́, tui.

Catullus.

And Catullus saith,

Quænam te genuit sola sub rupe leæna?
Quod mare conceptum spumantibus expuit undis?
Quæ Syrtis? quæ Scylla rapax? quæ vasta Charybdis?

Sure the gods have not begotten them, but the stones and the rockes are their sires; they are so hardened in sinne, and so blockish in ill natures, that they are insensible of every thing; but it is not so with the godly; and therefore, as they receive more wrongs, and are more sensible of their wrongs than others, so they have more need of patience than any other.

3. The guests.

3. The guests that are invited, are { 1. The Iewes. 2. The Gentiles. } For

1. Iewes. Acts 13.46. Acts 21.20.

1. He was sent to the lost sheepe of the house of Israel; ideo oportuit primum loqui verbum Dei Iudæis, therefore it was requisite the Word of God should be first preached unto the Iewes; and so Christ did first invite them, and thousands of them have believed, as S. Iames testifieth.

2 Gentiles. Mat 11.28. Esa. 49.6. Cant. 4.8. Mat 28.19.

2. He invited the gentiles, saying, Come unto me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden; for he was given to be in lucem gentium, for a light unto the Gentiles, a light unto all the people; and therefore he saith, Veni de Lebanon sponsa mea, come with me from Lebanon, O my spouse; and he sends his Apostles and servants to preach the Gospell to all nations.

But of all those that were invited, both of Iewes and Gentiles, there were but few that came as they ought; for many of them came not at all, and others came with no care at all: and therefore the guests are divided into two ranks.

The guests are of two sorts. 1 The obedient.

{ 1. Obedient. 2. Disobedient. } 1. The obedient came, and were welcome, and thereby happy, even as the Pharisee confessed, Happy are they, that shall eat and drinke in the kingdome of heaven.

Luke 14.15.

2. The disobedient

2. The disobedient were two, for one of them that were obedient.

{ 1. Some, in not comming. 2. Others, in ill comming. }

1. Not commers: in whom three faults are to be noted.

1. For the refusers to come, we find in them three speciall faults.

{ 1. Contempt of God. 2. Cruelty to his servants. 3. Neglect of their owne happinesse. } And commonly these three do ever goe together; for non despicitur persona loquentis servi, si servatur in corde reverentia mittentis Domini; the person of the servant speaking to us is never despised, if there be any feare of God, and reverence of the Lord that sends him, remaining in our hearts, saith S. Gregory; and he that hath any care of his owne soule, will neither despise God, nor abuse his servants. For Greg. in Evang. Hom. 36. T. 2. pag. 493. b.

1. Contempt of God. Pro. 19.12. Deut. 4.24.

1. If the wrath of a king be as the roaring of a lion, then what a fearefull thing is it to provoke God to wrath, whose anger is a consuming fire, whereof none can say, vana est sine viribus ira. And yet

2. Gods servants, how used. 1 King. 19.2.

2. These men do not onely contemne God himselfe, but also they persecute his servants; Elias hated unto death, Esayas cut with a wooden saw, Ieremie throwne throwne into the dungeon, Ier. 38.6. Michaiah ſmitten upon the face, and after caſt into the priſon, 1 King. 22.24. & 27. Zachary ſtoned, 2 Chron. 24. 21. and S. Steven demandeth, which of the Prophets ſcaped unperſecuted? Acts 7.35. our Saviour foretels the like uſage to his Diſciples, Mat. 10.17. c. 23.34. John 15.1. c. 16.20. And what he propheſied was fulfilled, and will be practiſed while the world ſtands; for John Baptiſt was beheaded, Steven ſtoned, Iames killed with the ſword, John throwne into a tun of ſcalding oyle, Iames the leſſe throwne downe from the Temple, and after that ſtoned to death, Hieron. in catal. Script. Eccleſ. T. 1. p. 264. c. Bartholomew flayed alive, Iſiodor. Hiſpal. de vit. & mort. Sanct. N. T. Num. 76. p. 365. h. Peter, Andrew, and Philip crucified, Thomas and Matthew thruſt through with a launce, Niceph. l. 2. c. 40. And of S. Paul, what ſhall we ſay? Looke 2 Cor. 11. v. 23. uſq; ad finem. And of the Fathers of the Primitive Church, Polycarpus, Babilas, Macareus, and Alexander were burned to death; Iuſtin, Irenæus, and Cyprian were killed with the ſword; Ignatius throwne to wild beaſts, Laurentius roaſted, and all perſecuted. And therefore, reſpicientes ad Ieſum, looking unto our Saviour Chriſt, as S. Baſil adviſeth us, and conſidering theſe holy men that went before us, per glorioſam imitationem intendamus, let us ſtrive, by a glorious imitation of them, to diſcharge our duties, that we may ſay with them, Lord, it is done as thou haſt commanded: So you ſee how they abuſed Gods ſervants. But Chryſ. in Mat. hom 33. oper. imperfect. com 3. pag. 638. c. Mat. 14 10. Acts 7.60. Acts 12 2.

Tertull. de præſcr. c. 36. p. 399 a.

Aug. de verb. & Saluſt. præcit. c. 8.

Euſeb. l. 4. c 24. Euſeb. l. 4. c. 1. & l. 6. c 31. Idem l. 5. c. 1. & ſequent. l. 3 c. 36. & l. 8. c. 8, 9. Baſil. de bapt. l. 2. q. 13 t. 2. p 436.

3. They do the greateſt wrong unto themſelves; for they do not onely ſhew their ingratitude towards God, and their hatred towards men, but they do hereby deſtroy their owne ſoules. For What evills the refuſers to come to Gods feaſt do procure unto themſelves. 1. Evill.

1. They neglect the aſſurance of their ſalvation, and the chiefeſt remedy againſt all adverſities; for (God knowes) we have enemies inow, croſſes, wants and imperfections; and this bleſſed Sacrament is a remedy againſt them all; and therfore, as Merchants do frequent thoſe places, where they ſee greateſt hope of gaine, and beggars, where the largeſt almes are given, ſo ſhould we frequent the Church of God, where we may find the beſt reliefe for our neceſſities.

2. Evill. Num. 9. 13.

2. They do incurre many dangers, and pull downe many feareſull plagues upon themſelves; for he that kept not the paſſeover, that ſoule was cut off from his people, and here you ſee, to deny to come to this feaſt, doth not onely exclude us from all the benefits of Chriſt, but doth alſo procure our ruine and deſtruction; Nam ad naturalem juſtitiæ ordinem pertinet, ut aut peccata non fiant, aut impunita eſſe non valeant; for it pertaines unto the rule of juſtice, that either ſin ſhould not be committed, or that it ſhould not be unpuniſhed, ſaith S. Auguſtine: therefore the King being wrath with the contemners of this Feaſt, ſent his men of armes and deſtroyed them all; he ſent Veſpaſian and Titus to execute his vengeance upon all that rebellious nation: ſed hæc eſt ſemper incredulitas humanæ duritiei; but this is alwaies the incredulity of humane frailtie, that we never care for the deſtruction of others, ſo long as we ſee our ſelves ſafe and untouched; and we are not a whit troubled at the death of our fellowes, while we thinke they deſerve it, or were unable to reſiſt it, but our ſelves do merit well, and are able to withſtand all miſadventures; neſcientes præberi cunctis exempla, cum fuerint quibuſdam irrogata ſupplicia; not knowing, that when the puniſhments are inflicted upon ſome, it is done for the example of all.

Aug. com. Fauſtum. l. 26. c. 3.

Cyprian. de ſing. Cleric. p 392.

Yet I hope our neceſſities, and the benefits of our comming, together with the avoiding of theſe dangers, will be as a threefold cable to draw us to this feaſt; and the rather, becauſe we are commanded to doe it, Doe this in remembrance of me; Nam ſi grande dixiſſet; for if he had commanded ſome great matter, would you not obey him? And will you not do ſo ſmall a matter? If he had commanded you to give, would you not have done it? And will you now refuſe to receive, when he doth give? No; I hope better things of you all.

Luke 22.19. 2 King. 5.13.

But there be two ſpeciall things that detaine men from this bleſſed Sacrament.

Two things that hinder us from receiving the Sacraments.

1. A careleſſe remiſſeneſſe.
2. A conceit of our owne unworthineſſe.

} For

1. Worldlinesse.

1. As Pharaoh, to withdraw the people from sacrificing unto God, caused their taskmasters to set them about drudgery worke, so the Divell, to detaine us from this feast, distracteth our mindes with worldly businesses; we can find time inough to follow our profit, to injoy our pleasure, but for this serious service of God, we can say with Felix, Goe thy way for this time, we will post it over to another time.

Act. 24. 25.

2. Timerousnesse.

2. Some are afraid to be presumptuous to approach unto this holy table; because they see their owne worthlesnesse, and consider the great worth of this blessed Sacrament. But

Answer to the first. Gen 25. 29. &c.

For the first, I say, we should not with Esau, to satisfie our appetite, sell our patrimony, or with the Gergesites, for the love of our swine, drive our Saviour out of our coasts; for what profit is it for us to win the whole world, and to leese our soules? And

Mat. 8. 34.

Answer to the second.

For the second, I say that to see our sinnes is a signe of grace, and if thou hate them and leave them, when thou seest them, thou art in the number of those that are invited.

3. The ill commers. Foure sorts of men that receive the Sacrament.

3. For the ill commers to this feast, they are expressed in him that had not on his wedding garment; where you must note, there be foure sorts of men that do receive this Sacrament.

1. Spiritually only, and thus all the elect infants doe receive this Sacrament.

1. Some doe receive it onely spiritually, the matter of the Sacrament, that is, the grace of Christ, but not the Sacrament it selfe, according to that saying of Saint Augustine, crede & manducasti, beleeve in Christ and thou hast eaten Christ; so all that die before they can communicate, and those that by accident cannot get this Sacrament, though they doe desire it never so earnestly, doe receive the grace thereof, because they desire the same and beleeve in Christ.

2. Sacramentally onely.

2. Others doe receive it onely Sacramentally, that is, the Bread and Wine, but no grace, as all wicked and irrepentant sinners; and therefore, hi manducantes non manducant, though they eate the bread, yet they doe not eate the body of Christ.

3. Spiritually and Sacramentally.

3. Others doe receive it spiritually and Sacramentally, that is, both the Sacrament and the grace of the Sacrament, as all the faithfull Saints, qui manducantes manducant, which doe eate both the Sacramentall bread and the flesh of Christ.

4. Neither of these waies.

4. Others receive it neither way, that is, neither the true Sacrament nor the grace of the Sacrament, as those heretiques that corrupt either the forme or the substance thereof.

Three sorts of men excluded from the Paschall Lambe.

And you must further note, there were three sorts of men excluded by the law from the Paschall Lambe.

1. The uncircumcised,
2. The stranger,
3. The uncleane,

that is,

1. The irreverent.
2. The infidell.
3. Great sinners.

So now

Indignè sumis, si sumis non reverenter,
Vel non catholice, vel habens mortale scienter.

Infidells, Hereticks, and leaud livers, are not to receive this blessed Sacrament. And therefore our Saviour saith, when thou commest to offer thy gift, that is, thy prayers and praises for this gift, and then remembrest that thy brother hath ought against thee, leave thy gift at the altar, and goe reconcile thy selfe to thy brother; what, leave thy gift? this is strange; quia imperfectum relinquere sacrificium, magnum piaculum habebatur; for it was counted a hainous offence to leave our sacrifices unfinished; and therefore Valerius praiseth a certaine young man, I know not who, because he suffered his arme to be burnt off, rather then hee would leave his sacrifice unperfected; and yet rather then we should receive unworthily, our Saviour bids us leave our gift and be gone. And the reasons are:

Mat. 5. 24.

A hainous thing to leave our sacrifices unfinished

why we should not receive this Sacrament, if we be unworthy.

1. Reason. 1 Sam 4. 4. Act 8. 20.

1. Because that to receive it thus, will availe them nothing; for the Philistines had the Arke of God, Simon Magus was baptized, and Judas received the the Lords Supper; and yet; becauſe they were unworthy of theſe outward ſignes, they received no inward grace by any of theſe.

2. Becauſe the unworthy receiving of it will indanger them very much; for whoſoever eateth this bread and drinketh this cup unworthily, is thereby made guilty of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, and ſo he doth but eate and drink his own damnation.

2. Reaſon.

1 Cor. 11. 29.

And therefore no leaud liver ſhould preſume to come to this table; Or if hee doth, then are wee commanded to inhibite him, and not to give the ſame unto him; for we may not take the childrens bread, and give it unto whelpes, and we are forbidden to eate common bread with the wicked; and therefore much leſſe ſhould we give this holy bread unto them; we muſt not bid them God ſpeed; and therefore much leſſe give them the Body and Blood of God; And this is the Law of the Paſſeover, that no ſtranger ſhall eate of it; and therefore no wicked man, that is a ſtranger from the life of God, muſt eate of this Sacrament, but as Eſdras kept backe all that were uncleane from the Paſſeover, and is commended for it, ſo ſhould wee keepe backe all prophane ſinners from this Euchariſt.

Mat 7 6.

1 Cor. 5. 11. 1 Ioh. 1. 10.

Exod. 12. 43. 48.

Eſdras 1. 6. 21. 1 Chron. 23. 29. Mal 1. 10.

Ob. I, but they will have it whether wee will or no, ſo long as there is a way to vexe us, and a court to compell us, to give it them, in deſpight of our teeth.

Reſp. I anſwer, if they will with Adam ſtretch forth their hands to the forbidden tree, and eat this apple in ſpite of our teeth; then, as Iudas dipt his ſop in the bitter ſauce, which the Iewes were to eate with their Paſſeover, and then preſently Satan entred into his heart; ſo we muſt dreſſe this meat and make the ſauce for them, that is, mixe all the curſes of God with it, to them that eate the ſame unworthily; and then they ſhall have it with ſuch a vengeance; that they were farre better go without it then thus fearefully to receive it.

What a terrible thing it is to receive the Sacrament unworthily.

Neither doe I ſay this, to deterre any man from this holy table; God forbid, I ſhould ſo imagine; for I ſhewed the danger of neglecting to come before, but I ſay this, to perſwade all men, when they come, to ſtrive to come worthily, that their comming may be for their comfort and not for their confuſion.

And thus much ſhall ſerve for this feaſt.

2. The viewing of the feaſt, and the obſerving of the gueſts, is the next thing to be conſidered, where we muſt note

2. The viewing of the feaſt, wherein two things are obſervable.

{1. Who came / 2. When he came} to viewe them;

1. He did not, as it is in Eſops Fable, ſend his ſervant, that would be negligent or might be corrupted, but he comes himſelfe, thats more ſure; and himſelfe is ſaid to be a King; for the King came in to ſee his gueſts; and he is the King of nature, becauſe he raigneth over all the nations of the earth, and all other Kings are but his ſubſtitutes; he is the King of grace, becauſe he ruleth over his Church; and he is the King of glory; becauſe hee raigneth in the kingdome of heaven for evermore.

1. Who came to view it.

2. The time of this view is either {1. The day of death. / 2. The day of judgement.}

2. When he came to view it.

A long time and uncertaine; and ſo the worſe ſervant in Gods houſe confeſſeth, his maſter will be long ere he commeth; and therefore ſeeing he gives us ſo long a time to repent, we are the more inexcuſable, if in all that time, we cannot provide a wedding garment.

3. The conſequent of this feaſt is manifold and moſt obſervable; eſpecially in theſe two things, {1. What he ſeeth. / 2. What he ſaith.} For

3. The conſequent of this feaſt. Two things obſervable.

1. He ſpied one, that had not his wedding garment; for it was a cuſtome among many nations, when they came to any wedding, as we have wedding gloves or bride-laces, ſo they uſed indui veſtibus cænatorijs, to put on garments, anſwerable to thoſe ſolemnities; and all, that ſate at the nuptiall feaſt, Syndonibus amicti accumbebant,

1. What he ſeeth.

Cuſtomes of the Antients about weddings.

cumbebant, did were syndons, saith a learned author; therefore Ahashuerus, at the time of his mariage, would not suffer any man cloathed in sackcloth, to enter into his pallace; And this King, comming in, saw one that had not on this wedding garment.

Two things to be considered.

But here we must consider { 1. Who this one was. 2. What this garment is. }

1. This one signifieth multitudinem reproborum, all the multitude of wicked reprobate men; as Saint Augustine, Saint Hierom, and venerable Bede doe expound it; and they are called one,

1. What this one was: the multitude of the wicked, and why all they are called one.

1. Because all of them are of one kind, wicked, faithlesse and ungodly.
2. Because all evill proceedeth from one Adam.
3. Because he that faileth, but in one, is made guilty of all.
4. Because one of Christs flocke was a Iudas and a traytor.
5. Because many hypocrites are not worth one righteous man.

Vide Eccles. 16. 3.

6. Because Gods sight is so piercing sharpe, that if there were but one evill man, among ten thousands of Gods Saints, yet hee could not so lurke but God would soone spie him out.

2. What is the wedding garment

2. For the wedding garment, it is diversly taken by interpreters; for hereby

1. Some doe understand Christ, as Origen,
2. Others, the New man, as Eusebius,
3. Others, Faith, as Kilius,
4. Others, Grace, as Saint Gregory,
5. Others, Charity, as Ardens,
6. Others, a Pure heart, as Aretius,

And so, alij atq; alij, aliud atq; aliud opinati sunt, as Saint Augustine speaketh in another case.

Aug. de Civitate Dei. l. 8. c. 3.

But indeed the wedding garment may well signifie some externall comelinesse, because a garment, which is so called, vestis, a vestiendo, because it covereth all other deformities; for the exercises of piety and religion are twofold,

The exercises of piety twofold.

{ 1. Internall. 2. Externall. } And it is not inough for us to have inward devotion in our hearts, but we must have also outward operation in our lives; we must have outward workes as well as inward faith: or els the Lord will say unto us, why takest thou my lawes in thy mouth, why sittest thou at my table, and why receivest thou my holy Sacraments, whereas thou hatest to be reformed?

Psal. 50. 16.

The commers to Christ must doe three things.

And therefore if we would come to Christ, as we ought, we must

1. Put off our old weeds, by repentance.
2. Put on the wedding garment, by newnesse of life.
3. Weare it on, by continuance in well-doing. For

1. To repent.

1. There is no comming to Christ without repentance of all our former deeds; or els we may with Iudas receive the Sacrament, and therewith swallow downe the divell; and therefore, as Moses put off his shooes, when he stood before God, the children of Israel put out all leaven from their houses, when they kept their Passeover, and the poore begger threw away his patched cloake, when he went to Christ; so let us cast off all the dust, all the leaven, and all the raggs of sinne when we come to this table; and let us say with the Prophet David, I will wash mine hands in innocency, and so I will goe to thine altar.

Exod. 3. 5.

Exod. 12. 15. & 8. Mark. 10. 50.

Psal. 26. 6.

2. To leade a new life.

2. It is not inough, in the Schoole of Christ, to eschew evill, but we must also do good; and therefore we must not onely cast off all the old ragges of sin, but there must be likewise in us a renovation of the whole man, new hearts, new hands, new heads, new all. And as this day is the beginning of the New yeere, so we should begin a new life. And this renovation, though it must be generall and universall, over all the parts of man, yet doth it principally consist,

Newnesse of life consisteth

{ 1. In faith to God. 2. In love to man. } For

1. In faith.

1. Accedere ad Deum oportet credere Deum esse, he that comes to God must beleeve that God is; and without faith it is impossible to please God, Heb. 11. 6.

2. If

2. If we come without love, we must not stay without love, but leave our gift at the altar, and goe to reconcile our selves to our brother; quia magis amat Deus, ut diligamus invicem, quam proprium honorem, because God preferreth our mutuall love before his owne divine worship: and it is worth the observing, that Christ saith, no more, but, si habet aliquid adversus te, if thy brother hath ought against thee; to shew that whether it be right or wrong, yet thou shouldst labour to reconcile thy selfe unto him; because he doth not say, if thou hast any thing against him, but, if he hath any thing against thee; that is, if thou thinkest that he beareth any malice against thee, though thou beareſt none against him, yet thou must goe to him and doe thy best, to bring him into friendship; for Christ would bring all men unto perfection, saith Euthimius; ideo non solum cum alios læsimus, sed etiam cum ab illis læsi sumus, relicto sacrificio, vult nos reconciliationem quærere; and therefore he would have us leave our sacrifice, and seeke reconciliation with our neighbours, not onely when we have wronged them, but also, when they have most unjustly wronged us.

2 In love. Mat. 5. 23.

A good observation upon our Saviours words.

Euthymius super Mat. 5. 23.

3. When we have put on our wedding garment, we must never put it off againe, nor so soyle it and defile it, as to make it ougly or unseemely; for Satan is a subtle adversary, and a cunning fencer, that seekes us on every side, and cares not where he hits us, so he may wound us; and therefore first, he laboureth to hinder us to put on this garment, and if he cannot doe this, then he striveth to make us to cast it off againe; and if he failes herein, then all his care will be, to teare it and defile it, that wee were allmost as good have none at all, as have it so ill handled: thus he did from the beginning; for in the Primitive Church he laboured by grievous persecutions, to suppresse Christ, and keepe men off, from Christian Religion; when he could not doe this, he caused many of them to revolt, as, Himenæus, and Philetus, and the like; and because he saw, this stripping of some would not serve his turne, therefore he stirred up Arrius, Mavis, Eusebius, and others to denie the Deity of our Saviour Christ; so, as good no Christ, as such a Christ, as being no God, could have no power to defend us: and when he saw this flame was quenched by the wisedome of the Church, then he raised up wicked Macedonius, Marcion, Valentinus and others utterly to denie the humanity of Christ; so no good to us if no man; and when this wound was cured by the diligence of the Doctors, then steps up Eutiches, and he tells us, that if he be God and man, then are these two natures so confounded, that indeed he shall be neither God nor man; then came Bishop Nestorius, and he to confute Eutiches, will have Christ to consist of two persons, as well as of two natures; so we shall have two Saviours, or never a Saviour; and when these mists were dispelled by the light of truth, and Satan saw the head well fenced against all his assaults; then he aimes at the body, and stirres up Pelagius to preferre, or at least to equalize nature unto grace; and then he stirred up many others of like nature; and when he saw he could not teare the garment of Christ, but that the breaches were still made up by the Watchmen of Gods Church, then he devised another course, to lull them all asleepe by too much peace and prosperity, that so he might easily defile their garment by the lust and concupiscence of this world: but the watchfull God, that doth neither slumber nor sleepe, awaked Luther, Melancton, Calvin, Zanchie, Musculus, Peter Martyr, Bucer, Beza, and many more; and here amongst us, Cranmer, Latimer, Iewell, Bilson, Whitaker, Raynolds, Perkins, Willet, and many others not to be despised, to purge and reforme the Church of Christ from all humane drosse: and yet presently Satan did bestirre himselfe, and would rather play at small game, then be quite excluded and thrust out of doores; and therefore he stirred up men of contentious spirits and unbridled zeale, to disturbe the peace, and to rent the unity of our Church, by seeming to be so pure, as not to weare a white surplesse, for feare it would defile their Christian garment, or to use the signe of the Crosse in Baptisme, lest that should make them no lesse then Idolaters; but the strong fury of these weake men was soone suppresst, and their violent flames were presently quenched;

3. To continue unto the end.

The subtilty and practise of Satan.

Religio peperit divitias, & filia devoravit matrem, quando peccata clericorum pra abundantia latere non valeat & pra impudentia non quæratur. Bern. Ideo dicebatur, venenum tunc intrasse in Ecclesiam. Naucler vol. 2. genet. p. 505.

ched; the power of one Bishop was able to make mute a too of them; and then our Church did appeare glorious, when it seemed pure with the fewest Puritans.

What we may feare, the divell will strive and do his best, to bring amongst us.

But shall we thinke that Satan will now be quiet? alas beloved, the good man had no sooner sowed his wheat, but immediately the envious man, superseminavit zizania, sowed his tares; and he sowed them among the wheat, in the same field, he was loth to plow another; so we must not looke that the divell will surcease his malice, for when he seeth that these poore puritanes, which have nothing in their hands but their pens, and many of them not much to put in their mouthes, are no waies able to make good their hold, then wee may feare he will doe his best endeavours to bring in his armies out of the Low-countreys of hell, either to hedge us in, that wee shall not bee able to spread the truth; or, as fantasticall Gentlewomen are so belaced, and doe so be-knit their garments with all kindes of all coloured ribanes, so he will strive, to fill our Church, as he did the Church of Rome, with, I know not what, humane trickes and traditions; that, if he can effect his will, our Christian Religion may seeme to bee rather a may-pole ornament, then a wedding garment; or, like the inticing attire of lascivious Lais, and not the modest dressing of a grave Lady; and the best preachers of the Protestant Doctrine, (to bring them into the greater contempt) shall be termed Puritanes, though you see them in their Surples, and subscribing to all former Ceremonies, if they do not magnifie the practice of every new invented guegawe, that some ambitious Prelate, or Popishly affected Patron, to get a name unto themselves, by seeming holyer then their predecessors, will labour to introduce into the Church, and the divell soyst them in to another end; that is, to obscure the beauty of true Religion, as women doe their faces with counterfeit colours, and to fill us, as we are naturally inclined, with the pompous shaddowes of superstition, in steed of the most glorious light of the true service of God; for he knoweth, quam proclives sumus ad malum, how prone we are all to such toyes; and this will be but a bridge to passe over the Rhyne, or as Hannibalis besieging of Saguntum, to breake the league with the Romanes, with these men to make a league with Rome, so to make a passage into Italy; or rather, to breake the peace amongst our selves, and by raising such a faction by preferment, to make an introduction unto Popery, to make a passage into our Churches; yet I say not this, out of any present cause of feare; for I doe most confidently beleeve, that at this time, Gods holy name bee blessed for it, and God still blesse our gracious King, and the good Governours of our Church, that our English Church, is the purest and most Orthodoxall for Doctrine, and the best for Discipline, of all the Churches, that are upon the face of the earth; but I say this onely to shew the malice of Satan, the corruption of mans nature, and the things, that every Church may feare, if God doth not still continue his watchfull care over us, and we use all diligence of serving God, and looking well unto our selves, to preserve our faith and a good conscience, least, for want of these, God in justice may suffer the divell, by those meanes foreshewed, to fill the Church full of tares.

The best Preachers oftentimes misse-termed.

Plutarch in vita Hannibalis.

God be thanked, our Church is yet, as I beleeve, the purest in the world.

And seeing Satan is so spitefull, it behooveth us all to bee very watchfull, that when we have put on our wedding garment, we keepe it holy and undefiled; least, as in former times, the Popish Prelates had taske inough to understand their rubrique, and to observe the multitude of crosses, which were set in every period, and other crouchings, and creepings, and the like antique gestures, whose totall observation would require little lesse then Simonides memory; whereby the substance of Religion was quite omitted; so we with Ixion shall come to imbrace a cloud for Iuno, and vaine shaddowes in steed of the wholesome food of our soules. And so much for what our Saviour seeth.

2. What the King saith.

2. What he saith is divided into two parts, { 1. To his guest. 2. To his servants. }

2. When

1. When he ſpied this fellow, he ſaid, friend, how cameſt thou in hither? Whereupon Saint Gregory ſaith, amicum vocat & reprobat, quaſi dicat, amice, & non amice, that is, a friend in a twofold reſpect.

1. To his gueſt.

The wicked hypocrites called friends in two reſpects.

1. Ex parte Dei vocantis, on Gods part that called him.
2. Ex parte ipſius profitentis, on his part profeſſing himſelfe, by this coming, to be a friend. For

1. In reſpect of God.

1. God would have all men to bee ſaved, and to come to the knowledge of his truth; therefore God ſheweth himſelfe a friend to every man, if we be not foes unto our ſelves; for hee deſireth not the death of a ſinner, and hateth nothing that he hath made; therefore he called Iudas that betrayed him, friend; it was thou mine owne familiar friend; to ſhew that in God there is no fury; tu Dominator virtutis cum tranquilitate judicas; and the reaſon is rendred by Saint Auguſtine; quia ira Dei non eſt perturbatio animi, ſed judicium, quo irrogatur pœna peccato; becauſe the anger of God is no perturbation of mind, but a juſt judgement whereby ſin is puniſhed.

1 Tim 2.4.

Pſal. 55.14.

Sap 12.

Aug de Civit. Dei li 15. c. 25.

To teach us, that when we condemne a man, or reproove him for his evill deeds, yet we ſhould doe it with mildneſſe and good words; for when the Angell ſtrove with the divell about the body of Moſes, he gave him no reproachfull ſpeeches, but ſaid the Lord rebuke thee; and a foule mouth is a full argument of a corrupted heart; therefore we ſhould never uſe rayling unſeemely termes, no not towards thoſe that doe offend; for as God here, though he called him friend, yet did he puniſh him ſore inough; ſo with faire words, we may give any offender his full deſart.

Iude v. 10.

2. He was a friend in profeſſion, and a friend in ſhew, though not in deed; to teach us, that there is but ſmall profit in this formall friendſhip. And therefore the King ſaith, how cameſt thou in hither? that is, why cameſt thou thus unmannerly, and ſo impudently, without any manner of care of thy ſelfe, or of any reſpect unto mine honour, or any correſpondencie unto my gueſts and thy fellowes that came with thee? and he was even ſpeechleſſe; he had not one word of excuſe to ſay for himſelfe; but as the Poet ſaith, vox faucibus hæſit, his tongue clave to the rooffe of his mouth; becauſe, as the Prophet ſaith, when the Lord ſhall come to judge the earth, the mouth of all wickednеſſe ſhall be ſtopped; and no wonder that all ſuch ſhould be ſpeechleſſe; nam ad confitenda peccata jam muti ſunt; ergo ad reddendam rationem tum muti erunt; for it is juſt with God, that they, which now will neither praiſe God for his goodneſſe, nor confeſſe their owne ſins and wickedneſſe, but remaine dumbe in thoſe things, which they ought continually to utter, ſhould be then dumbe, and then not able to ſpeake, when they have moſt need of a tongue and a ſpeech to anſwer for themſelves, to ſee if they might obtaine ſome favour.

2. In reſpect of their profeſſion.

Virgilius.

Pſal. 63. 12.

Gregorius ſuper Job.

And therefore this ſheweth both { 1. The juſtice of God. / 2. The miſery of man. } For

The former point ſheweth two things.

1. The Lord ſaith, ultionem capiam, & non reſiſtet mihi ulla caro; I will execute juſtice, and take revenge upon the wicked, and no fleſh ſhall be able to withſtand me; becauſe, when God judgeth, he doth the ſame ſo juſtly, that the wicked themſelves have not one word to ſay againſt him, but they are all mute, & quemadmodum veſte ita ratione carent, and as they want their garment, ſo they have no ſpeech to excuſe themſelves, when their owne conſciences doe aſſent unto Gods judgement, and ſay Amen unto all his proceedings: ſo God is juſtified in his ſayings and cleere, both when we are judged by him, and he is judged of us; we judge him juſt in all his workes, and holy in all his waies.

1. The Juſtice of God.

Pſal 51.4.

2. This ſheweth how miſerable is the caſe, and how wretched is the condition of poore ſinfull man, that hath not one excuſe, not one word, nor ſillable to ſay for himſelfe; for he could not ſay, that he was poore, and had no money to buy it; becauſe the Prophet Eſay tells us, we may have it without money or money-worth; he could not ſay, it was not offered unto him; becauſe we have ſtretched out our hands all the day long, and deſired him to accept of it; and yet he refuſed our offer,

2. The wretched ſtate of a ſinner

Eſay 55 1.

Pro. 1. 20. & c. 8. 1, &c.

Mat.22.25. Ver.25.

and would have none of our counsell; and therefore, as the Iewes, when our Saviour demanded of them, whether the Baptisme of Iohn was from heaven or of men, answered, we cannot tell; so this man could not tell any one reason, why he came without his wedding garment. And therefore

2. What the King said unto his servants.

2. The King said unto his servants, binde him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into outer darkenesse; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth; and this is the judgement to be executed; too full of considerable points, to be particularly passed over and expressed, in so short a space, as I have left to treat of them; yet I desire you to observe how this judgement is and may be executed,

The judgement executed two waies.

1. By the Ministers of Christ here.
2. By the Angels of God hereafter.

For

1. In this life, by the Preachers.

1. The Ministers and Preachers of the Gospell do binde all wicked sinners here, by the sentence of excommunication, when they cast them out of the Church, and deliver them unto Satan, as S. Paul did that incestuous Corinthian, which lay with his fathers wife; for our Saviour gave this power unto his Church, and left this authority unto his servants, that whosoever sins they did remit, they were remitted, and whosoever sins they did retaine, they were retained, and so whatsoever they did binde on earth, should be bound in heaven, and whatsoever they did loose on earth, should be loosed in heaven; and howsoever the Church of Rome hath oftentimes transcended her own power, and abused this divine ordinance, by loosening them that deserved to be bound, and binding those that never offended, which makes the loosed never the better, nor the bound ever a jot the worse; yet the power is most just, and being justly executed, it is none other then the voice of God, to be reverenced of all, and feared of all sinfull men.

Ioh.20.23. Mat.16.19. & c.18 ver.18.

2. In the life to come by the Angels.

2. This binding may signifie, how the wicked shall never bee able to escape everlasting torments, sed qui nunc ligantur in vitijs, tunc ligabuntur in supplicijs; but as they are now bound in their sins, so they shall be then bound in their punishments; because now is the time of operation, and then will be the day of retribution; and therefore, ut cessabit peccatorum operatio, ita erit operum bonorum cessatio; they cannot then do good, though they would; but they must needs suffer the evills that they would not, when God shall bid his Angels, to binde Kings in fetters and Nobles in linkes of iron, and then to cast them into outer darkenesse, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth; weeping, by reason of the extreamity of heat, and gnashing of teeth, because of the excessive cold; which though they be two contrary qualities, and cannot physically subsist, in the height, in the same subject; yet here, by the power of Gods justice, and the unspeakeable desert of sin, they shal be both imposed upon the wicked; and this shall continue for ever and ever, from which, the Lord deliver us for his mercy sake, through Iesus Christ our Lord, to whom with the Father and the Holy Spirit, be ascribed all Glory and Majesty, and Dominion, both now and for ever and ever, Amen.

Gregorius in moral

Psal.149.8.

IEHOVÆ LIBERATORI.

THE PASCHALL SACRIFICE.

1 CORINTH. 5.7.

καὶ γὰρ τὸ πάσχα ἡμῶν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν ἐτύθη Χριστός.

For Christ our passeover is sacrificed for us.

THe blessed Apostle S Paul, had most confidently heard of a most lewd Corinthian, who professed great holinesse; for he had the forme of godlinesse, and yet committed more than detestable wickednesse, and by the carnall abusing of his fathers wife, (his owne mother in law) had spiritually defiled his owne soule, and so filled the same with all filthinesse; and he heard also how this sinne, like an infectious plague, had soone invaded all the rest of the Corinthians, when they reproved not his folly, but connived at his lewdnesse, and tooke no notice of his transgression; a point too common among all carelesse Christians, to say with Cain, Numquid ego custos fratris? Am I my brothers keeper? Must I burne my face, to quench the fire in my neighbours house? What have I to do with another mans servant? To his owne master he doth either stand or fall: when as, not onely the Law of God injoyneth us, to reduce home the asse that goeth astray, and therefore much more, to advise my brother that doth offend; but also the heathen man can tell us, Qui non vetat peccare cum possit, jubet, he that reproveth not sinne, when it is committed, shall be sure to be partaker of the vengeance, when it is punished. And yet these Corinthians saw the sinner, but said nothing against his sinne; and not onely so, but also, which is a great deale worse, they laughed at his looseneſse, and made a sport of his lasciviousnesse, as the foole doth with the halter that strangleth, or the sword that destroyeth him; a point indeed of the greatest madnesse; to laugh and sing, with Nero, when our destruction is neerest, and to be then most frolique and most careleſse, when we have most cause to bewaile and lament our great unhappinesse; for if they, which commit such things, are worthy of death, how much more worthy of judgement are those men, which not onely do the same, but also consent with them, or have pleasure in them that do them? And therefore, the Apostle tels them, their rejoycing was not good; nay it was exceeding bad;

The occasion and coherence of these words. 2 Tim 3.5.

A common fault. Gen.4.9.

Rom.14.4. Exod.23.4.

Senec. in quad. Epist.

Vide Sueton. in vita Neronis.

A point of great folly. Rom.1.32. 1 Cor.5.6.

bad; becauſe it was their duty rather to reprove ſinne, and to purge out all the old leaven of iniquity, and ſo to lead an holy and a godly life, than to mocke at this, which ſo highly offendeth God, and to rejoyce at that, which ſo lamentably would deſtroy their owne ſoules: And the reaſon, why it was their duty to do ſo, is here rendred in my text: καὶ γὰρ τὸ πάσχα ἡμῶν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν ἐτύθη Χριστός; for that Chriſt our paſſeover is ſacrificed for us.

Two parts.

Touching which, we muſt obſerve theſe two ſpeciall things.

1. The diſcuſſion of every particular point in this reaſon alledged.
2. The application of the reaſon unto that, which the Apoſtle inforceth.

And

1. The reaſon alledged. Wherein three things are obſervable.

1. In the reaſon it ſelfe three things are to be conſidered.

1. The ſubject, Chriſt our paſſeover.
2. The act, is ſacrificed, or ſlaine.
3. The end, for us; For Chriſt our paſſeover is ſacrificed for us.

1. The ſubject.

1. The ſubject of this our diſcourſe is not the invention of Poets, nor the fiction of ſuch Chimera's, as were never ſubſiſting but in conceits; it is no Arcadia, no Romance, no fable, no falſhood; but it is the true ſtory, and the moſt admired tragedy of the Authour of all things; the end of him, that hath neither beginning nor ending, the death of him that giveth life to all fleſh, Ieſus Chriſt, the Sonne of God, and the Saviour of all men; and here he is deſcribed two ſpeciall wayes.

Chriſt deſcribed two wayes.

1. Properly, by his name, Chriſt.
2. Allegorically, by the end for which he came into the world, to be our paſſeover, or ſacrifice.

1. Properly, by his name.

1. Chriſtus ſignifieth annointed; and there were three ſorts of men annointed among the Iewes, Kings, Prieſts and Prophets; and ſo Chriſt was annointed to be a King, a Prieſt, and a Prophet; and this point of the annointing of Chriſt, to fit him for theſe offices, I have handled at large, in my reſolution of Pilate, to which Treatiſe I will referre him, that deſireth to ſee any thing of this point.

2. Allegorically, by the end, to bee our Paſſeover.

2. This Chriſt is our paſſeover; and we do read of a twofold paſſeover.

A twofold Paſſeover.

1. Of the Iewes.
2. Of the Chriſtians.

} And

1. Of the Iewes.

1. The Iewes, the ſeed of Abraham, the children of Iſrael, that ancient people of God, had many ſolemne feaſts appointed and commanded to be obſerved by God himſelfe; as ſpecially, the feaſt of unleavened bread, of Pentecoſt, of Tabernacles, of Trumpets and new Moones, of Expiation, of Purim, and the like; and of all theſe feaſts, the feaſt of unleavened bread was the chiefeſt, was the greateſt. And although they were to keepe, and did keepe the paſſeover every yeare, yet do we read but of ſeven memorable paſſeovers; whereof, the firſt was in Egypt; the ſecond in the wilderneſſe; the third in the dayes of Ioſhua; the fourth in the dayes of Hezekiah; the fift in the dayes of Ioſias; the fixt after they returned out of Babylon; and the ſeventh was that, which our Saviour kept with his Diſciples, where he put an end unto the Iewiſh paſſeover, and inſtituted the Chriſtians Sacrament of his owne Supper in the place thereof.

Exod 23.14,15,16. c.34.22. Levit.23.34.

Of ſeven memorable Peſſeovers. Ioſh.5.10. 2 Chron.30. 2 King.23.22. Ezra 6.9. Luke 22.

The feaſt of unleavened bread, the chiefeſt feaſt among the Iewes.

And, as this feaſt was the chiefeſt of all the Iewiſh feaſts, ſo the moſt memorable thing in that feaſt was the Paſſeover, or the Paſchall Lambe.

Exod 25.40.26.30 27.8. Heb.8.5.

And becauſe this Paſſeover of the Iewes was a type and a figure of the Paſſeover of the Chriſtians, and their Paſchall lamb was the ſhadow of our Lamb Chriſt Ieſus; and, as the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, The ſubſtance of the worke muſt be in all things, according to the patterne, which was ſhewed thee in the Mount; ſo the things typified muſt cohere with their types and figures, that there be no diſſonance in divine things, and we muſt take away the veile from Moſes his face, and diſcuſſe the particulars of theſe ſhadowes, before we can perceive the truth of our ſubſtance; therefore, if we would underſtand the myſteries of our own Paſſeover, we muſt conſider many things, eſpecially theſe foure points, concerning the Paſſeover of the Iewes.

Exod.34.33. 2 Cor 3.16.

1. The

Foure things considerable in the Iewish Passeover.

§1. The name §3. The matter of their Passeover.
§2. The time §4. The end

1. The word Passeover

1. For the word Passeover, Tertullian in his booke against the Iewes, cap. 10. and S. Ambrose de myster. Paschæ, c. 1. and some others of the Latine Fathers following them, doe thinke it is derived from a Greeke word, which signifieth to suffer; but S. Augustine among the ancients, Peter Martyr and most of our moderne Writers do say, that it is derived from the Hebrew word phase, which signifieth to passe by; because the Lord passed by all the houses of the Israelites, when he slew all the first-borne of the Egyptians: and I think, it skilleth not much from which it is derived; because it might as well signifie the suffrings of the lamb, that was to be slaine within the doores, as the passing by of the Angell when he saw the bloud of the lamb sprinkled without the doores.

Exod. 12. 29.

2. The time of the Passeover.

2. For the time, when this was done, we find that the word Passeover is taken in the Scriptures three speciall wayes; as Scaliger. de Emend. tem. l. 6. p. 270.

1. For the yearely solemnity; that was celebrated on the foureteenth day of the moneth Nisan, which was called the passeover of the lamb, Mat. 26. 19. Mar. 14. 12. where it is said they killed the passeover, that is, the lamb.

Deut. 16. 2.

2. For the great festivity, that was celebrated on the fifteenth day of Nisan, which was called the passeover of sheepe and bullocks, vide 2 Chron. 35. 11.

3. For the whole solemnity, which was to be observed from the 14 day of Nisan, to the 21 day of the same moneth; so it is taken in Luke 22. 1.

And besides these acceptations of it, we find it is somtimes taken for passing over; because the Angell passed over the houses of the Israelites, and destroyed them not, as he did the Egyptians, Exod. 12. 11. And Somtimes it is taken for those actions, which were done about the Passeover, as the killing of the lamb, the sprinkling of the bloud, the eating of the lambe, and the like, as you may see in Mat. 26. 17.

The Passeover of the Lambe was simply called the Passeover.

But in very deed, the first of these, which is called the passeover of the lambe, was simply called the Passeover; and the other two were called the feast of the passeover, and the other were but circumstances of the feast; as you may see in Numb. 28. 16, 17. And so we find the Passeover, or the Paschall Lamb, was to be kept on the foureteenth day of the first moneth at even; and whosoever neglected the same, was to be cut off from among his people.

Num. 28. 16, 17.

The punishment of the neglecters Exod. 12 5.

And therefore, this teacheth us, that although God, of his bounty, giveth leave unto his servants, to call upon him, and to serve him when and where they please, as their zeale doth move them, and their necessities do require, which is an infinite mercy of our good God, that we may speake with him when we list, when as we shall wait many houres, and dayes, and moneths, to speake a word or two with sinfull man, or to deliver a petition, sometimes for their owne good; yet God, out of his soveraigne authority, will have those times and places which he specifieth, to be inomissively observed by his servants; as here you see; the Passeover must be kept on the foureteenth day of the first moneth, and in the place where the Lord shall chuse; or that soule, which neglecteth the same, shall be cut off from among his people. Therefore, though we should serve God on other dayes at home with our families, or by our selves, as our need requireth; yet this excuseth no man, this lesseneth not the fault of any man, that will omit the Lords Day, to serve God in the Church with the congregation; for though thou shouldst keepe holy all the other dayes in the week; yet for all this, thou must remember to keepe holy the Sabbath Day, and Gods time must not be neglected at thy pleasure, because thou hast served him on other times for thy necessities.

The great benignity and gentlenesse of God.

That Gods appointed time must not be neglected.

But because (as I told you before) the Paschall Lamb was a type and figure of Iesus Christ, therefore as the Lamb was taken at the tenth day, and separated untill the foureteenth day, and at the evening of the foureteenth was to be killed; so Christ, the Lamb of God, came six dayes before the Passeover unto Bethania, and the morrow after, he went unto Hierusalem, where they met him with the branches branches of palme trees, and spread their garments in his way; and this was six dayes before the Passeover; and after that, he stayed foure dayes at Ierusalem; and then he was killed on the day of the Passeover at night, according to the institution of the Law.

Iohn 12. 1.

Ioh 17.62. Obiect. Yet here it may be objected, that Christ did eat his Passeover on the day of the preparation to the Iewish Passeover; therefore, either Christ did it not upon the right day, or the Iewes did it not upon the day that it was commanded.

The Iewes translated their Feasts. Sol. I answer, that after the returne of the people out of their captivity, they reckoned their moneths from the apparition of the Moone; and this being so uncertaine, that the beginning of the moneth was not alwayes at the selfe same period, but that the last day of Adar might fall out so, that it should be the beginning of Nisan; therefore the Sunhedrin appointed that the full Moone should be the thirteenth day, which, according to the truth, was not till the foureteenth day; and when the Passeover, by this account, did precede the Sabbath, they transferred the holy actions of that day unto the Sabbath, that two feasts might not fall out together; and therefore, by this translation of their feasts, the Iewes did, the yeare of our Saviours suffering, eat the Passeover in the end of the fifteenth day; but our Saviour, observing the true time, did eat it in the end of the foureteenth day and the beginning of the fifteenth, according to the verity of the first institution.

Weems of the Iewish sacrifices.

Christ observed the true time of the Passeover.

The dissention betwixt the Easterne and the Westerne Churches about the keeping of Easter. And as this diversity of the observation of this feast grew among the Iewes; so in a short time there sprung up great dissention betwixt the Easterne and the Westerne Churches, about the celebration of Easter; for the Easterne Churches alleadged that S. Iohn and Philip celebrated the Passeover in memory of Christ his Supper, and so observed diem σωτηρίου, the day of his passion, on the 14th day of the moneth; but the Westerne Churches affirmed that S. Peter and S. Paul kept the Passeover upon the Lords Day, after the 14th day of the moneth, which is dies ἀναστάσεως, the day of his resurrection: and therefore Pius Bishop of Rome, anno 147. made an edict, that all men should celebrate the same upon the Lords Day; and after him, Victor made a decree to the same end, and excommunicated all the Bishops of Asia, because they would not imbrace his edict; but as Polycarpus had pacified Pius, so did Irenaus somwhat allay the fury of Victor, to suffer every one to celebrate it after his owne forme; yet this calme lasted not long; for when the Asiatiques, being exhorted by Constantine, not to partake with the Iewes in the celebration of their feast, did answer, that they kept not the Iewes Passeover, which Moses instituted in Egypt, but the new Passeover, which was instituted by our Saviour Christ in Ierusalem; therefore the Councell of Nice decreed, that every Church should observe the Pascha upon the Lords Day, after the custome of the West Churches. And for the certaine finding out of the right day, the Councell composed certaine rules; as first, that it should be celebrated after the Equinox; and secondly, that it should be upon that Lords Day, which should immediately follow after the foureteenth day of that Moone; and thirdly, to find out the time of the Moone, they composed the Cycle of the Golden Number, which did infallibly point out the same in the Kalendar.

What Pius did.

What Victor did

What the Councell of Nice did.

The variation of the Equinox, and why. But now, these rules hold not; because of the variety of the Equinox, which in the space of every hundred and six yeares, (in which time the whole Spheres come from the South to the North one degree) doth retrograde a great time; for in the beginning of the world, the Equinox was thought to be on the third of Aprill; in the time of the celebration of the Passeover in Egypt, it was upon the 27 day of March; in the time of the Councell of Nice, it was upon the 21 day of March; and now it falleth about the 10 of March; And if the world should continue long, it would turne to February, and thence to Ianuary, and so forth alwaies backward, according as the Spheres gained from South to North. And therefore now they take another course to find out Easter, and looke to the first new

new Moone after the firſt day of Lent, and the firſt Sunday after beginneth the Quadrageſima, and the ſeventh Sunday after is our Eaſter Day.

But the retrogradation of all feaſts, as that which falleth out upon the ſaterday this yeare, falleth upon the friday the next yeare, and upon thurſday the yeare following, like to the motion of the Planets, that goe backward, contrary to the motion of the firſt Moover, and the going forward of the Sabbath, as that which fals this yeare upon the firſt day of Ianuary, ſhall fall the next yeare upon the ſecond, and the next to that upon the third, like the motion of the firſt Moover, that goeth alwaies forward, doth ſufficiently ſhew unto us, that all Feaſts ſhall ſtill go backward, till they return to nothing, but our Sabbath ſhall ſtill proceed forward, untill we ſhall come to our everlaſting Sabbath.

The retrogradation of all feaſts, and why; as M. Weems obſerveth.

3. For the matter of their Paſſeover, we are to conſider theſe three particulars.

3. The matter of the Paſſeover.

Three things to be conſidered.

1. The meat to be provided.
2. The company which were to be at it. } For
3. The eating of it by that company.

1. The meat muſt be

1. The meat, or ſubſtance of this feaſt, which was to be provided upon this foureteenth day of Niſan, was to be

1. A Lambe. 3. Of a yeare old. } And
2. Of the male-kind. 4. Without blemiſh.

1. A Lambe. Not a Lion. In what reſpect Chriſt is compared to a Lion. Parcere proſtratis ſcit nobilis ira leonis. Gen 49.9. Ovid. de arte amandi. l. 2. p. 335. Primus Hanno è clariſſimis Pœnorum leonum manſuefacere auſus eſt, damnatus, ſi illo argumento quondam, uro tam artificis ingenij non tam libertas crederetur, cui ceſſiſſet etiam feritas. Comment. in Ovid. Ibid.

1. It muſt be a Lambe, and not a Lion; for though Chriſt, in reſpect of his magnanimity and courage to ſubdue his ſtubborne enemies, and to raigne untill he hath put down all his adverſaries under his feet, and in regard of his generoſity and heroick mildneſſe, parcere proſtratis, to ſpare thoſe poore ſoules that proſtitute themſelves at the feet of his mercy, may rightly be called the Lion of Iuda, as the Scripture calleth him; yet in reſpect of the pride, haughtineſſe, and fiercenеſſe of the Lion, for which the Poet calleth them, tumidos leones, the proud ſwelling lions, Chriſt, that is himſelfe meeke and lowly in heart, and proteſteth that he will reſiſt the proud, and give grace unto the humble, would not be tipified by the Lion, would not have this beaſt uſed in their Paſſeover; but he muſt have a Lambe, and not a Lion. And ſo it muſt be a Lambe, and not a Wolfe. For

Not a Wolfe, which is 1. Moſt untameable.

1. The wolfe is moſt untameable of any beaſt; yea though they be nouriſhed tame, and when they have ſatisfied their hunger and allayed their thirſt with abundance of meat, and plenty of drink, ſo that they are as meeke and as gentle as the Lambe; yet aſſoone as ever they be hungry againe, then preſently, in antiquam feritiam redit, iterumq; lupus exiſtit, they will returne to their accuſtomed fiercenеſſe, they will uſe their old ſavage wildneſſe; and as it is ſaid of the Divell,

Dæmon languebat, monachus fieri ipſe volebat;
Dæmon convaluit, manſit ut ante fuit.
The Divell was ſicke, the Divell a monk would be,
The Divell grew well, the Divell a monk was he.

So the Wolfe, when you feed him, will be a Lambe, but when you have done, you ſhall find him ſtill a Wolfe againe; even as many wicked men, that will be gentle while you pleaſe them, when you ſerve them; but will prove like Wolves, like Tygers, when they cannot have their will upon you.

The property of the wicked.

2. The Wolfe is a moſt degenerate beaſt, and will ingender with other creatures of another kind; as of him and a bitch, comes lupus canarius, the dog-wolfe; and of the Wolfes coupling with the Fox comes the Hyena; and as the moſt ſimple God loves no commixtion of things againſt kind, in which reſpect, he forbad the Iewes to plow with an oxe and an aſſe together, or to weare a garment of linſie woolſie; ſo this degeneration of creatures is an abomination unto the Lord.

2. Moſt degenerate.

Deut. 22. 10, 11.

3. Very crafty. Et ratione fraudis, aliquando voces omnium quaſi hominis, aliquando latratum canum fingit, ut paſtores & oves decipiat.

3. The Wolfe is a very ſubtill and a very crafty beaſt; for it is ſaid, that when he would deceive the goates, he will come with the greene boughes and leaves of oſyers in his mouth, wherewith he knoweth the goats are much delighted, that ſo as by a pleaſant bait he may allure them to a bitter end.

4. Very weache roas. The truce betwixt the Wolves and the ſheepe.

4. The Wolfe is very treacherous and faithleſſe, as the fable ſheweth, when the Wolves and the ſheepe made a covenant of peace and truce, to be obſerved betwixt them for ever, and gave pledges each to other for the confirmation of their league, the Wolves gave their whelpes, and the ſheepe delivered up their dogges for hoſtages; ſic quietis ovibus ac paſcentibus, lupuli matrum deſiderio ululatus edunt; cum lupi irruentes fidem feduſq; ſolutum clamitant, ovesq; canum præſidio deſtitutas laniant; So the ſheepe being quiet and feeding, the whelpes longing after their dammes begin to howle, and then the Wolves ruſhing on, doe cry out, that the league was broken, and the ſheepe had falſified their faith, and ſo they teare and devoure all the ſheepe, which were now deprived of the helpe of their dogs.

The perfidiouſnes of the Wolves.

5. Moſt cruell and bloody.

5. The Wolfe is a moſt cruell and a moſt bloody beaſt; for he picketh quarrell with all creatures, and when he catcheth any one of them, his manner is, not preſently to kill him, but to lead him to his fellow Wolves; and if the beaſt be ſtubborne, and ſeeme unwilling to walke with him, then the Wolfe holding his eare faſt in his mouth, he beareth his hinder part with his taile, and ſo cauſeth the poore beaſt to run as faſt as himſelfe, and faſter then he is able, to the place of his execution, where he findeth a crew of ravening Wolves, which at his firſt appearance ſeize upon him, and like ſo many divells, in a moment, teare him all to pieces.

6. Very ravenous.

6 The Wolfe, is a very ravenous creature, and his greedineſſe is ſuch, ut vorat potius quam comedit carnes, that he rather devoureth then eateth the fleſh that is before him; he ſwalloweth it before he cheweth it; his greedy appetite will abide no delay, and he leaveth nothing of any beaſt, ſave onely the very bowells, which he cannot eate.

7. Exceeding ſpitefull.

7. The Wolfe is exceeding ſpitefull and malicious; for if his prey bee ſo great that he can neither conſume all himſelfe, nor carry all away with him, then he will alwaies hide the remainder in the earth, that no other creature may receive any benefit by his paines.

And therefore God, which hateth all theſe things, abhorring all ſuch deteſtable properties, and is himſelfe ſo milde, ſo mercifull, and ſo faithfull in all his waies, would never have his Sonne prefigured by a Wolfe; but it muſt be a Lambe; And ſo it muſt be a Lambe, and not a Fox; For

Not a Foxe, which is, 1. moſt ungratefull Geminianus de exemplis l. 5. c. 6. p. 243.

1. The Foxe is a moſt ungratefull beaſt; quia pulli vulpium, quando non inveniunt lac in matris uberibus, mordent dentibus, & lacerant, & tanquam extraneam reputant; becauſe the young whelpes, when they can draw no milke from their mothers teats, will bite the ſame with their teeth, and tearing the ſame what they can, they deeme their owne dammes that brought them forth, no better then if they had never knowne them; which is an argument of the greateſt ingratitude in the world, to be ſo ſpitefull to them, that gave them their being.

2. Moſt fabule.

2 The Fox is the moſt ſubtle and the moſt deceitfull of all other beaſts; no boy that read Æſops-Fables, but hath found proofes inough hereof.

3. Moſt fetidous.

3. The Fox is the moſt fetidous, unpleaſant, and ſtinking beaſt of all other creatures, no ſmell ſo unſavoury, no ſtench ſo pernicious as the ſame.

4. Moſt unprofitable.

4. The Fox is moſt unprofitable of all beaſts, there is nothing good of him but his skinne, nothing ſo hanſome of him as his tayle; therefore God, that loves gratitude, ſimplicity, and ſweetneſſe, hating all unthankfullneſſe, deceits and double dealing, would never have his Sonne typified by a Fox; nor yet by a pig, becauſe that is too foule a beaſt for him, that is of pure eyes, and cannot behold any thing that is filthy; but this Paſſeover muſt be a Lambe; and it muſt be a Lamb; becauſe the Lambe is the ſimpleſt, the meekeſt, and the profitableſt of all other creatures whatſoever. For

Not by a pig, and why.

Why God chooſeth a Lambe 1. Becaute ſimpleſt

1. Though the Lambe, aſſoone as ever he falleth, knoweth his damme, as Lucretius ſaith,

Pretereà teneri tremulis vocibus hædi
Corniferas norunt matres, agniq; petulci.

The

The tender kids with trembling voice do know
Their horned dammes; ſo do the Lambes alſo.

Yet Saint Ambroſe ſaith, agnus ſimpliciſſimus ovium, the Lambe is the ſimpleſt of ſheepe, which are the ſillieſt beaſts of all creatures; and when he erreth from his mothers ſide, he hath none other meanes to provoke her to ſeeke him out but onely by bleating; and the nature of this poore creature, this ſilly beaſt, is ſuch, that licet cibi & potus deſiderio tenetur, tranſcurrit tamen aliena ubera, quamvis humore lactis gravida exundent, ſolius q; materni lactis fontes requirit; although he thirſteth never ſo much, yet he will paſſe by all other ewes, and will not offer to taſte of any other teat, though they ſhould ſeeme never ſo full of milke, untill he comes to his mothers fountaines, ſaith the Father.

The Lambe knowes way to ſeeke his mother.

2. The Lambe is the gentleſt and the meekeſt of all beaſts; and therefore the Hebrewes call ſheepe Zon and Zoneth, which the Septuagint tranſlate πρόβατα, which is a word that ſignifieth little ones: and the Prophet Eſay calleth a ſheepe, Tahel Neelamah, that is, a ſilent ſheepe, which is dumbe before her ſhearer and openeth not her mouth.

2 Becauſe gentleſt

Eſay 53.

3. The Lambe is the moſt profitable of all other creatures, and not any part of him, but is good for ſomething, as

3. Becauſe moſt profitable.

1. His fleſh and blood are good to eate, to nouriſh us.
2. His wooll and skinne are good for garments, to clothe us.
3. His guttes and entrailes are good for muſicke, to delight us.
4. His hornes and hooſes are good for perfumes, and the driving away of ſerpents, for our preſervation.
5. His very excrements and dung are good for plowed land, whereby we have our continuall ſuſtentation;

And therefore, as many men nouriſh ſheepe, not like the Apolonians, for the love of ſheepe, but for their fleſh and fleeces ſake, ſo God loveth ſheepe, and all thoſe that are like ſheepe, not for the love of their fleſh, but for theſe good properties ſake: and beſides theſe, Geminianus addeth, that the Lambe is Why the Apolonians nouriſhed ſheepe.

Gemin de exemplis l. 4 c. 105. p. 278. Chriſtus aſſimilatur agno.

1. Moſt innocent, qui nec dente ladit, nec cornu impetit, nec ungue ſcindit, nec calce percutit; which hurteth nothing no manner of way.

1. Propter innocentiam.

2. He is the juſteſt of all creatures, whoſe property is, not onely to doe no hurt, but alſo to doe good in all things unto all; which the Lambe doth, as I ſhewed unto you before.

2. Propter juſtitiam

3. He is, in ſome things, the moſt prudent of all other creatures, and therefore is called agnus ab agnoſcendo; and the chiefeſt things that he knoweth, are 1. His damme among a 1000. others; and 2. His enemies, the Wolves, Foxes, and the like, whom when he ſeeth, he knoweth to be his enemies, though he never ſaw them before.

3. Propter prudentiam.

4. He is moſt patient, when he is tied, he defendeth not himſelfe, and when he is carried to the ſlaughter, nec plorat, nec clamat, nec recalcitrat, he neither waileth, nor crieth, nor kicketh.

4. Propter patientiam,

5. He is the pureſt and cleaneſt of all other creatures; and therefore he is called agnus, as ſome ſay, quaſi animal mundum, which I thinke is farre fetcht, though the thing may be very true: and for this cauſe the chiefeſt matter of this feaſt was to be a Lambe, and none other creature.

5. Propter mundicitiem.

And this ſhould teach us, to endeavour what we can, to become meeke and gentle as the Lambe, and not fierce and cruell, as the Lions; not ſpitefull as the Wolfe, not deceitfull as the Foxe, not angry as a Dog, but humble and patient, as a Lambe; and although it be moſt true, (as the Spaniſh proverbe hath it) that whoſoever maketh himſelfe a ſheepe, the Wolfe will eate him; becauſe that, as we reade of a company of people in Egypt called Lycopolita, that worſhipped a Wolfe for their god, and therefore they alone of all the Egyptians would eate ſheepe, becauſe their Wolfe-god would eate them; So in every place we have ſuch Lycopolites, that, ſerving the Divell more then God, would deſtroy all good and godly men, becauſe the divell laboureth to deſtroy them; yet, if I

What the former doctrine teacheth us.

A Spaniſh Proverbe.

The Egyptian Lycopolites that worſhipped the Wolfe and would eate ſheepe.

Mat.10.16.

have not any honest shift to preserve my life from them, if I have not the wisedome of a Serpent to defend the innocency of a Dove, I had rather be a sheepe for the Wolves teeth, then to be a Wolfe to devoure Gods sheepe; because, here you see, God, which is only good, and loveth nothing but what is good, chooseth a Lambe, and not a Wolfe; a Lambe, and no other beast to be the Passeover of his people.

2. Of the male-kind,

2. This Lambe must be of the male-kinde, to shew the strength, the absolute perfection and the peerelesse vertues thereof; because the female of any thing, (as the Philosopher saith) is an argument of weakenesse, and sheweth the defect of nature to produce that perfection, which it aimed at; and therefore, howsoever we faile in our performance, and with Caine invert the verse, who as the Scripture testifieth,

Gen.4.5.

Sacrificabat macrum non Deo pingue sacrum;

Chap.4.4.

Whereas it is said of Abel, that

Sacrum pingue Deo non macrum sacrificabat;

Yet we may be sure, God will require the best, and chargeth us to be perfect, even as our heavenly Father is perfect.

Mat.5.48.

3. Of the first yeere Vide Munster ad Levit.22. At any time after eight daies: and why not before.

3. This Lambe was to be of the first yeere; filium anni sui, and they say he was allowable, after he was eight daies old and not before, as they collect out of Leviticus the 22. 27.

How highly the Rabbines esteemed of their Sabbath.

And the reason is, (as some of the Rabbines have set it downe) because nothing in the world was thought absolutely perfect, among the Iewes, untill a Sabbath had past over it; so much did they esteeme of their Sabbath, and so imperfect did they account all things, till they did partake of the prayers of the Church and the blessings of the Sabbath; which should teach us, how we ought to judge and esteeme of the Lords day, whereby all the creatures of God are sanctified to us by prayer; And, as this Lambe would serve at any time after eight daies, so if it were but one houre more then a yeere, then it was altogether unlawfull; because the Lord required it should be of the first yeere; so punctuall were they to observe all the outward letter of the law; and we, which look for a farre better reward doe come farre short of them herein.

4. ἄμωμον, that is, without spot, to put them in mind of three things.

4. As the man that had any blemish might not offer unto the Lord, *Levit.*26. 16. So this Lambe that was to be offered, was to be immaculate, without spot, without blemish, without diminution of any member, without corruption of any part, not blinde, not lame, not leane, not any waies imperfect; but, as Christ saith of his Church, Thou art faire my Spouse, and there is no blemish in thee; so the sacrifice, that we offer unto God, should have no μῶμον, that is, nothing worthy of blame in it; for when he saith it must be without spot, he doth not meane that spotted beasts were uncleane, for then the badgers skins, that covered the Tabernacle, had beene uncleane; but the meaning is, that it should neither be defective in any member, nor super-abound in any part, nor any waies worthy to be reproved; and therefore, besides those fifty blemishes, which (as the Rabbines observed) disinabled a beast to be a sacrifice, we finde, that although it were never so faire a beast, without any manner of blemish in any part; yet if it had lien with one of another kind, or if it had killed a man, or if it were the hire of a whore, or the price of a dogg, it might, by no meanes, be offered unto the Lord.

Cant.11

Spotted beasts not rejected because of the spots of their skins. Levit.11.25 & Chap.22.23.

Levit.19.19. Exod.20.28, Deut.23.

And this perfection of their sacrifice, to have it in all parts without blemish, and in every respect without reproofe, was, as I finde it, to put them in mind of three speciall things.

1. The purity of God.

1. The purity of God, that hateth all those that work vanity, and cannot abide the sight of any iniquity.

2. The perfection of Christ. Ioh.1.29.

2. The perfection of Christ, that was the true Lambe of God, which taketh away the sinnes of the world, without spot, without sinne, without any staine of originall corruption, without any sinne of actuall transgression, without guile, without gall, without offence, a Lambe indeed without blemish.

3. Their

3. Their integrity.

3. Their owne perſonall integrity, that was intimated by this Lambe, and ſpecified by this Paſſeover; becauſe God will accept of no offering, untill the offerer be firſt accepted, as you may ſee in *Gen.*4.4. where God is ſaid, reſpexiſſe ad Abel, & ad munera ejus, firſt, to have reſpect unto Abel, becauſe he was juſt and holy himſelfe; and then unto his gifts, becauſe they were de primogenitis gregis, & de adipibus eorum, of the firſt fruits of the flocke, and of the fat thereof; and ſo they were gifts without blemiſh, as himſelfe was without hypocriſie.

Gen 4.4.

The perſon muſt be firſt accepted, then the ſervice.

And therefore this ſhould put us all in mind, to purge our ſoules from all ſins, to cleanſe our ſelves from all filthineſſe, and (as Salomon ſaith) to looke unto our feet, when we enter into the houſe of God, or (as S. Peter ſaith) to lay aſide all maliciouſneſſe, all guile, and all diſſimulation; or els we ſhall but offer unto God the ſacrifice of fooles, and ſo leeſe both our ſelves and our ſacrifice.

2 Cor.7.1. Eccleſ.5.1. 1 Pet.2.1.

M. Weems, of the Iewiſh ſacrifices.

But here the queſtion is, whether this Lambe, that was killed at the Paſſeover, was a Sacrament or a Sacrifice. And Moſt do hold it was not a Sacrifice.

1. Reaſon.

1. Becauſe it might be killed by others than thoſe that were Prieſts; therefore no ſacrifice.

2. Reaſon. Exod.8.26,27.

2. Becauſe it was an abomination for the Iſraelites to ſacrifice in Egypt, as Moſes ſaith unto Pharaoh; and therefore, deſired three dayes journey unto the wilderneſſe, that they might ſacrifice unto the Lord their God; but the Paſchall Lamb was eaten in Egypt; therefore it was no ſacrifice.

3. Reaſon.

3. Becauſe that a Sacrament differeth from a Sacrifice herein, that in a Sacrifice we offer unto God, and in a Sacrament we receive from God: but the Paſchall Lamb was a Sacrament, therefore not a Sacrifice.

4. Reaſon.

4. Becauſe that, which was eaten of the Sacrifice, was to be eaten onely in the Temple: but the Paſchall Lamb was eaten out of the Temple; therefore it was no Sacrifice.

The former reaſons anſwered.

But to theſe reaſons it is anſwered.

1. Reaſ. anſw.

1. That after the people came out of Egypt, and the Prieſthood was once ſetled, the Prieſts onely killed the Lamb, and ſprinkled the bloud, and then gave the Lamb to be carried home to be eaten.

2. Reaſ. anſw.

2. Though it was an abomination to the Egyptians to ſacrifice any beaſt, becauſe they worſhipped their beaſts as their gods; yet was it no abomination unto God; therefore, though during their abode in Egypt, they would not ſacrifice for feare of the Egyptians; yet now, being to depart, as they feared not to kill the Lamb, ſo they were not affraid to ſacrifice the ſame to God.

3. Reaſ. anſw.

3. It is diſtinguiſhed, that there were two things in the Paſchall Lambe, and therefore that it was both a Sacrament and a Sacrifice; and as it was a Sacrifice, they offered unto God; and as it was a Sacrament, they received from God. And ſo

4. Reaſ. anſw.

4. The ſprinkling of the bloud, which was the Sacrifice, was to be done in the Temple; but the eating of the Lambe, which was the Sacrament, might be done at home, in their ſeverall houſes.

The reaſons to prove the Lamb to be a ſacrifice.

And to prove it to be a Sacrifice, they do alledge,

1. Reaſon. 2 Chron.30.1.

1. That Hezekiah gave commandement, that all the people ſhould come to the houſe of the Lord at Ieruſalem, to keepe the paſſeover: therefore it was a Sacrifice; becauſe otherwiſe, it had been enough to have bidden them to come unto Ieruſalem, if it had been onely a Sacrament, and no Sacrifice.

2. Reaſon.

2. They killed the paſſeover; and the Prieſts ſprinkled the bloud from their hands; therefore it was a Sacrifice; becauſe it was the office of the Prieſts to ſprinkle the bloud of the Sacrifice.

2 Chron.35.11. Levit.1.11.

3. Reaſon. Ioſeph de bello Iudaico.l.6.c.45.

3. When Ceſtus Florus would know the number of the Iewes, that were in Ieruſalem at the Paſſeover, he deſired the Prieſts to informe him; and they, by numbering the Lambs, which were killed at the Paſſeover, and computing how many were at the eating of each lamb in every family, did find out the number of the people; therefore it was the Prieſts that killed thoſe Lambs, and by conſequent, that Lambe muſt needs be a Sacrifice as well as a Sacrament.

And ſo much for the meat, the Lamb, that was to be provided.

2. The company that were to be at the eating of the Lamb. The diviſion of the Iſraelites.

2. For the company that was to be at the eating of this Paſchall Lamb; we muſt remember that the whole body of the Iſraelites was divided into twelve tribes, and every tribe into families, and every family into houſes; and if the houſhold or people of one houſe were too few to eat this Lamb, then were they to joyne with their neighbour; but the number of this ſociety was not like the practice of the Gentiles, who in their ſolemne feaſts would not have more than the Muſes, which were nine, χλειώ, τὴν τερπε, τὴν θαλεια, τὴν μελπόμενην, τὴν τερψιχόρην, τ' ἐρατω, τὴν πολυμνιά, τ' ουρανίη, τὴν καλλιόπην; leaſt more than nine might grow to be too troubleſome; nor yet leſſe than the graces, which were three, Aglaia, Thalia, and Euphroſyne; leaſt fewer than three ſhould yeeld no ſociety; for this their company was never leſſe than ten, nor ever more than twenty; juſt ſo many as might well ſit at the ſame table, that there might be a συμπόσια, both a commeſſation, and a compotation among them, as Ioſephus ſaith.

Nomina Muſarum, Clio, Euterpe, Thalia, Melpomene, Terpſichore, Erato, Polymnia, Urania, Calliope, qua omnibus eſt nobiliſſima. Heſiod. in Theogonia.

Ioſephus de bello Iud. l. 7. c. 17.

How careful God is to increaſe the love of neighbours.

And this may teach us to underſtand, how carefull God was to increaſe love and amity among neighbours, by deviſing all the meanes that might be to beget friendſhip, and ſhunning all thoſe things that any wayes might breed or occaſionate contention; and no marvell; for a good neighbour that is nigh, is farre better than a deare kinſman that is farre off; and we do oftener uſe him, and receive more benefit by him both in our health and ſickneſſe; and therfore we ought by all meanes to love and to make great account of a good neighbour, and indeed to love any neighbour, thereby to make him good; becauſe as hatred makes a friend to become an enemy, ſo love will convert mine enemy to become my friend; and therefore, the Law ſaith not, thou ſhalt love thy good neighbour, but thou ſhalt love thy neighbour, be he good or bad, as thy ſelfe; for none ſo great an enemy, but he may become thy great friend, and thou maiſt have great need of him, if he be thy neighbour: and therefore, if I muſt needs have an enemy, I had rather have any man to be mine enemy, than my neighbour. So I take it to be a heavy plague, when a mans enemies ſhall be thoſe of his houſhold, (that is, ſo neare unto him,) as our Saviour ſpeaketh.

Love makes an enemy to become our friend.

A neighbour-enemy the worſt enemy. Mat. 10. 36.

3. For the eating of this lambe, two things are to be conſidered.

3. The eating of the Lamb. Two things obſervable.

1. The preparation for it.
2. The commeſſation it ſelfe, or the manner of it. } And

1. The preparation for it, and the reaſons thereof. Exod. 12 3.

1. Touching the preparation for it; this Lamb was to be taken up the tenth day of the moneth Niſan; and it was to be killed and eaten the foureteenth day of the ſame moneth. And the Rabbins do aſſigne foure ſpeciall cauſes hereof.

1. Reaſon.

1. Leaſt that through the multitude of their ſecular affaires, and worldly buſineſſes, they might forget their ſervice to God, and ſo omit to eat their Paſchall Lambe.

2. Reaſon.

2. That in theſe foure dayes ſpace, they might inquire into the perfection or imperfection of the Lamb, whether he was as he ought to be, without blemiſh, or not.

3. Reaſon.

3. That they might have occaſion hereby, to remember their deliverance out of Egypt, which was one ſpeciall cauſe of the inſtitution of this feaſt; God hating to have his benefits to be forgotten.

4. Reaſon.

4. That they might, in this time, the better prepare themſelves every way for their oblation, and this ſervice of God, which he required at their hands.

What the former doctrine teacheth us.

And if God was ſo ſtrict, to require ſuch carefulneſſe of them, in all this, before they ſhould eat the Paſchall Lambe; O then, how much more carefull ſhould we be, to prepare our ſelves, when we intend to come to eat the true Lambe Chriſt Ieſus? I do much feare that too many of us do come with too little preparation to this bleſſed Sacrament; but if we will do no more, yet, at leaſt, let this induce us, that are Chriſtians, to equalize the Iewes, to take foure dayes for our preparation; and in the firſt day, let us examine, whether we find

in

in our ſelves true repentance for our ſinnes paſt; in the ſecond, let us trie whether we be in the true faith of our Saviour Chriſt; in the third, let us ſearch whether our hearts be in perfect charity with all men; and in the fourth, let us looke into the diſpoſitions of our ſoules, whether we doe ſincerely intend to lead a new life, an upright life, to the glory of God and the good example of all men; and if we find our ſelves thus, then may we come, and we may be ſure, to receive this Paſchall Lambe to our comfort.

How we ought to ſpend our foure daies preparation, before we receive the Sacrament.

2. For the commeſſation it ſelfe, or the manner of the eating of this Lambe, when it was killed, theſe foure particulars were to bee obſerved, videlicet, to eate it

The manner of eating of the Lambe.

1. Roſted. 2. With unleavened bread. 3. With bitter herbes. 4. In all haſt.

Foure particulars to be obſerved.

1. It was to be roſted and not ſodden, nor eaten raw; and that was indeed to foreſhew the moſt bitter paſſions of the true Lambe Chriſt Ieſus, who was throughly roſted betwixt the fire of Gods anger, and the malice of his Iewiſh foes; and therefore Chriſt being thus roſted, and fried upon the gridiron of Gods wrath, ſaith, from above hath he ſent fire into my bones, and it prevailed againſt them; and againe he ſaith, that he poured out his fury like fire; and this fire melted his marrow, and made him ſweat the drops of blood.

1. It was to bee roſted, and what the roſting of it ſignified.

Lament. 1. 13. Chap. 2 v. 4. Luk. 22. 44.

2. They were to eate it with unleavened bread, and then ſeven daies after, no leaven was to be found in their houſes, or if any one, man or woman, did eate leavened bread, either with it, or in any of thoſe ſeven daies after it, that ſoule was to be cut off from among his people.

2. To eate it with unleavened bread

Exod. 12. 15.

And therefore the Iewes were exceeding carefull herein, that they had foure ſpeciall degrees of circumſpection and preparation for this point, of avoiding all kind of leaven, that they might avoid this fearefull curſe.

Their diligence to avoid leaven, conſiſted in theſe foure points.

The firſt was expurgatio fermenti, the waſhing and the cleanſing of all their veſſels, that no leaven, nor the leaſt jot or tincture of any leaven might cleave unto them; and this was two or three daies before the feaſt.

1. Expurgation. Godwin de antiq. Iudæorum.

The ſecond was inquiſitio fermenti, the ſeeking for and ſearching of every place, and every hole, and every corner of the houſe, to ſee if they might finde any leaven in any place; and this was done the night before the Paſſe-over.

2. Inquiſition.

The third was conflagratio fermenti, the burning and conſuming of all and every bit of leaven that they found, whenſoever or whereſoever they found it.

3. Conflagration.

The fourth was execratio fermenti, the accurſing and banning of all leaven and leavened things, which was done in this forme and manner, as Buxtorfius ſaith, let all leaven and all leavened thing, whether ſeene, or unſeene, cleanſed, or not cleanſed, by me or by any other be ſcattered, deſtroyed, and accounted as the duſt and dung of the earth for ever; ſo great was their care and diligence to ſhun and avoid all leaven. Yea Petrus Cunæus doth report, that in this feaſt of Paſſe-over, they were ſo infinitely carefull herein, ut ne vocem panis inter loquendum uſurpent, that they would not uſe the name of bread in any ſpeech, becauſe they thought him to have committed a moſt hainous offence, that throughout all thoſe daies, ſhould be any occaſion to make any man to thinke, though never ſo lightly and ſlenderly, of leaven or any leavened thing.

4. Execration. Buxtorfius c. 12. p. 325.

The forme of their execration.

Petrus Cunæus de repub. Heb. l. 2. c. 9. p. 346.

The myſtery of the leavened bread diſcovered.

And yet all this was but the type and ſhadow of that truth, which they knew not, and we teach unto our people; becauſe this putting away of all leaven was injoyned unto the Iewes, to ſhew how carefull all nations, and eſpecially all Chriſtians ſhould be, to avoid the leaven of ſinne, which ſowreth, corrupteth, and deſtroyeth body and ſoule, as the Apoſtle ſheweth in this verſe; for leavened bread ſignifieth either hypocriſie, or malice, or any other ſinne, as you may ſee in Pſal. 71. 4. & Pſal. 73. 21. where the Prophet David calleth a wicked man by that name, which in the originall, ſignifieth a leavened perſon; to which our Saviour alludeth, when he biddeth his Diſciples and followers to beware of the

1 Cor. 5. 7.

Mat. 16. 1.

leaven of the Phariſees, that is, the hypocriſie of their lives, and the deceitfullneſſe of their doctrine; becauſe this is that leaven which is moſt hatefull unto God, and moſt hurtfull to every man; ô therefore that we had but halfe that care to ſhun the leaven of ſinne, which they had to purge away the leaven of bread! for then we ſhould eſcape many fearefull judgements, we ſhould enjoy many heavenly bleſſings: but indeed we are diligent inough to commit ſinne, wee drinke iniquity like water, ſmoothly, and we are negligent inough to avoid it, which is the cauſe that God is ſo much offended with us, and the curſe, which we ſhould lay on ſin, is laid on us.

How prone wee are to ſin.

3. They were to eate this Lambe with bitter herbes; and that was to put them in mind of their Egyptian bondage, where their ſhoulders were kept under the burdens, and their hands worne with making bricks; in which ſlaviſh ſtate and condition, their very lives were made bitter unto them, under the cruelty and tyranny of their taskemaſters; and the Prophet Ieremy ſeemeth to allude hereunto, when he ſaith, he hath filled me with bitterneſſe, hee hath made me drunken with wormewood; and this was alſo to foreſhew unto all men, the afflictions of the Saints, and the ſufferings of thoſe faithfull ſoules, which ſhould eate of the true Lambe Chriſt Ieſus; of whom our Saviour teſtifieth, that whoſoever will be his Diſciple, hee muſt take up his Croſſe and follow him; yea, and follow him ſo farre, unto death, to the forſaking of his deereſt life; This was the myſtery of thoſe bitter herbes, that Ianus-like did looke backward and forward, to the Egyptian bondage and the Chriſtians perſecutions; And theſe bitter herbes ſaith Moſes Kotſenſis, they dipped in a certaine ſauce, thicke as muſtard, called Charoſeth, to put them in mind of that clay wherein they wrought in Egypt; and Ioſeph Scaliger thinketh this ſame to be that ſauce, wherein our Saviour dipped the ſop, which he gave unto Iudas: and not unlikely; to ſhew unto us, that in the time of afflictions, when God feedeth us with bitter herbes and ſower ſawce, many fall away from God, they ſtart aſide like a broken bow, and leape out of the frying pan into the fire; and therefore when God afflicteth me, and chaſteneth my ſoule for ſinne, I beſeech God, that I may then eſpecially pray unto him without ceaſing, that he would lay no more upon me, then his grace ſhall make me able to beare.

3. To eate it with bitter herbes.

What the Egyptian bondage ſignified Lament. 3. 15.

Mat. 16. 24. Luk. 14. 26.

The ſauce of the Lambe and the herbes.

Scaliger de emendatione temp. l. 6. p. 372.

Many fall away from God in the time of afflictions.

Ob. But yet, this may ſeeme ſtrange, that they ſhould eate their Lambe with unleavened bread, to ſhew their ſincerity, and notwithſtanding eate it with bitter herbes, which is an embleme of miſery, and a prediction of their ſufferings and perſecutions.

Sol. I anſwer as I ſaid before, that this was done, to put them in remembrance of their afflictions paſt, and to prepare them for the life to come; and this is no ſtrange thing in the world, no new thing, no unuſuall thing; becauſe they that will live godly, ſhall ſuffer tribulation, perſecution ſaith the Apoſtle; and though the wicked may flouriſh like a greene bay tree, and bee feaſted with dainty meats and ſweet ſauce; yet the unleavened bread of innocency and ſincerity muſt be alwaies eaten with the bitter herbes of ſcornes, contempts, and all other kindes of indignities and abuſes in this world; and therefore the wiſe man ſaith, fili, accedens ad ſervitutem Dei, ſta in timore & in juſtitia, & prepara animam tuam ad tentationem; my ſonne, if thou come to ſerve the Lord, prepare thy ſoule for temptation; ſo it was from the beginning; Abel the righteous perſecuted and killed by his wicked brother; ſo it was among the Iewes, in the ſeed of Abraham; hee that was borne after the fleſh, perſecuted him that was borne after the ſpirit; and ſo it was among the Gentiles; the beſt men, for the moſt part, fared worſe; Ariſtides was baniſhed out of Athens, Scipio and Cicero out of Rome, juſti quia juſti, onely becauſe they were too juſt to live among thoſe, that were ſo wicked and ſo full of all unjuſtice; and therefore much more it muſt be ſo among the Chriſtians, whoſe profeſſion, as it is moſt holy and moſt excellent in it ſelfe, ſo it is moſt hatefull and moſt perſecuted in the world; and therefore Chriſt tells us plainely, in mundo preſſuram ſuſtinebitis, in the world you ſhall have

That ſincerity and innocency muſt be afflicted.

2 Tim. 3. 12. Pſal. 37. 35.

Eccleſ. 2. 1, 2.

Gen. 4. 8.

Gal. 4. 29.

The beſt men fared alwaies worſe.

Ioh. 16. 33.

have tribulation; and truly they are not worthy to eate of this immaculate and invaluable Lambe, that will not eate the ſame with bitter herbes; becauſe there is no reaſon they ſhould partake of the glory of his transfiguration on mount Tabor, that will not partake of the ſhame of his Paſſion on mount Calvery, or that they ſhould through him, enjoy everlaſting happineſſe in heaven, that will not with him and for his ſake, endure a little ſhame here on earth.

That it is moſt agreeable to reaſon, the beſt ſhould be moſt afflicted Vide Luk. 16, 25.

4. They were to eate this Lambe in all haſte; and that was further ſhewed and ſignified by two ſpeciall things.

4. To eat it in all haſt Shewed two wales.

1. By thoſe things they were to eate.
2. By their manner of poſture, while they did eate thoſe things. For

1. By the things to be eaten, which were,

1. The things to bee eaten were chiefely theſe particulars.

First, Vnleavened bread; to ſhew that the ſhortneſſe of time would not ſuffer them to leaven it, nor to bake it, when the Egyptians compelled them with all ſpeed, to depart out of the land of Egypt.

1. Vnleavened bread.

Secondly, A Lambe roſted; becauſe the time permitted them not either to boyle it or to bake it, or to dreſſe it any other way then that, which might be ſooneſt done.

2. A Lamb roſted,

Thirdly, A Lambe intirely roſted without breaking a bone of it; becauſe they had no leiſure either to get out the marrow, or to ſucke out the ſweetneſſe of it.

3. Intirely roſted.

2. For their manner and poſture in eating of it; the Lord himſelfe enjoyned them.

2. By the manner.

1. That it ſhould be all eaten in one houſe; becauſe they had no time to carry it from one place unto another.

1. In one houſe.

2. That all thoſe which were to eat it, ſhould have their loynes girded, and their coates tied about them.

2. With their loynes girded.

3. That they ſhould have their ſhooes upon their feet.

3. With their ſhooes on their feet.

4. That they ſhould have their ſtaves in their hands; as men that were even ready to be gone, and now beginning to take their journey.

4. With their ſtaves in their hands.

And all this was to teach both them and us, that we ſhould be ever mindfull of what Saint Peter ſaith, that we are but pilgrims and ſtrangers in this preſent world; we are here to day, and gone to morrow, and the next day, we know not where we ſhall be; we know not what will become of us; becauſe, as the Apoſtle ſaith, we have here no continuing cittie; And therefore being not Cittizens of this world, as that Philoſopher profeſſed himſelfe to be, which being demanded what countrey man hee was, anſwered, a Cittizen of this world, we ſhould not ſet our hearts upon the things of this life; but having our loynes girt, our feet ſhod, and our ſtaves in our hands, we ſhould with theſe Iſraelites haſten our journey towards the Celeſtiall Canaan.

What the former doctrine ſheweth. 1 Pet. 2. 11. Heb. 13. 14. The Philoſopher that was a Cittizen of the world.

4. For the end of this Iewiſh Paſſeover, I told you before, it was like Janus, looking backeward and forward.

4. The end of the Iewiſh Paſſeover, to looke

1. To put the Iſraelites in mind of their deliverance out of Egypt, where they lived in great thraldome, and ſerved long in bondage, under the cruell tyranny of King Pharaoh, that was none other then the type and figure of the divell himſelfe, as Rupertus ſheweth.

1. Backward. Pharaoh a type of the divell. Rupertus lib. 3. in Exod. in verbis Dei.

2. To foreſhew unto them the comming of the true Lambe Chriſt Ieſus, to be the true Paſſeover for all men, and to deliver them from the ſervitude of ſinne, and from the hands of the divell, who kept us all in greater bondage, and made us all baſer ſlaves, of farre more lamentable ſtate and condition, then ever the children of Iſrael were in the land of Egypt. And ſo much for the Paſſeover of the Iewes.

2. Forward, to ſhew our redemption by Chriſt.

2. Having ſeene the literall obſervation of the Iewiſh Paſſeover, we are now to conſider of the Paſſeover of the Chriſtians, and therein we are to ſhew the myſticall reaſon of the former, and how that all thoſe things, afore ſpecified, were but the ſhaddowes, types and figures of the true Paſſeover and Paſchall Lambe Chriſt Ieſus; and this you may eaſily ſee, by the compariſon of them both,

2. Of the Paſſeover of the Chriſtians. The Analogie betwixt the Iewiſh Lamb and our Saviour Chriſt.

both, in these fourteene particulars. As,

Revel.13.8. 1. The Paschall Lambe was to be chosen. — So Christ was decreed for this end, to this purpose, before the foundation of the world.

Heb.4.15. 2. The Lambe was to be one of the flocke. — So Christ was to be one of us, perfect man, of body and soule, flesh and blood, as we are, in all things like unto his brethren, sinne onely excepted.

1 Pet.2.22. 3. The Lambe was to be without blemish. — So Christ was to be without sinne, an immaculate Lambe without spot, a most perfect man, without reproofe, in whose mouth was found no guile.

Ioh.19.33. 4. The Lambe was to be sacrificed and slaine. — So Christ was crucified, suffered, and died; and the souldiers saw that he was dead.

Heb.12.29. 5. The Lambe was to be rosted and not boyled. — So Christ had no commixtion of any ease, but felt the greatest of all sorrow; no rosting like the rosting of him, when he strugled for us with the wrath of God, which is indeed a consuming fire.

6. The Lambe was wholly to be rosted and to be eaten without breaking a bone of him. — So Christ, though the malice of his foes was very great, yea so great, that being dead, they thrust him through with a speare, so that he might truly say, Nec mors mihi finiet iras, my death freeth me not from the wrath of mine enemies, yet the providence of God was farre greater, to preserve him so, that they should not breake a bone of him.

Heb.9.22. 7. The doore-posts of the Israelites were to be sprinkled with the blood of the Lambe. — So the bodies and the soules of the Saints must be purged and cleansed from all their sins, by the pretious blood Iesus Christ, or els without his blood there can bee no remission, as the Apostle speaketh.

1 Cor.15.3. 8. This sprinkling of blood was done, that the destroying Angell might passe by the houses of the Israelites. — So the blood of Christ was shed, that sin, death, and hell, and all the rest of our spirituall enemies might never prevaile against us, when they see us washed with the blood, and clothed with the righteousnesse of Iesus Christ.

1 Cor.11.28. 9. The Lambe was to be eaten of the Iewes without leaven. — So Christ is to be received of all Christians without hypocrisie, without iniquity.

2 Tim.3.12. 10. The Lambe was to be eaten with bitter herbes. — So Christ must bee beleeved on with patience, and a full resolution, to suffer all kinde of afflictions, crosses and tribulations, for his names sake.

Revel.6.10. 11. The Lambe was to be eaten in hast. — So must all Christians make haste to come to Christ, and make hast to be with Christ, and most earnestly long for his comming unto them, saying, every day, how long tarriest thou, holy and true, ô God make speed to save us, ô Lord make hast to helpe us.

1 Cor.11.29. & ver.29. 12. The Lambe was only to be eaten by the circumcised. — So Christ is onely to be received by those that are faithfull Christians, and all others, hypocrites and wicked men, by eating him, doe eate and drinke their owne damnation.

1 Pet.4.7. 13. All this was done in the evening. — So Christ came in the last daies, in the last houre, towards the end of the world, when the end of all things was at hand, as the Apostles every where testifie unto us.

14. After

14. After the eating of the Paſchall Lambe, they had a feaſt for ſeven dayes together; and that is, indeed, all the dayes in the yeare, all the dayes in the world.

So after we have worthily received this bleſſed Sacrament of the body and bloud of Ieſus Chriſt, we ſhall never hunger, we ſhall never thirſt, but the grace of God ſhall ſpring in us like a cleare fountaine of living waters, till it brings us to that kingdome, where we ſhall be eternally feaſted with Chriſt for evermore. Ioh.6.35.

Reſtat igitur vetus paſcha non præteriti modo beneficij ἀνάμνησιν fuiſſe, ſed venturi etiam Chriſti Sacramentum, ſaith M. Calvin; therefore it is apparent, that the old paſſeover of the Iewes was not onely a Memorandum or memoriall, to recall unto their minds the great benefits, which God had done for them in delivering them out of Egypt, but was alſo, and that ſpecially, the Sacrament and prediction of the comming of the Meſſias, to deliver both them and us from eternall deſtruction: ſo you ſee the Apoſtles ſaying moſt true, that Chriſt is our Paſſeover. Calvin. in h. loc.

And ſo much for the ſubject of this reaſon, Chriſt our Paſſeover.

2. The act herein ſpecified is ſet downe in the word ἔτυθη, he is ſacrificed or ſlaine, that is, killed, and immolated or offered for a ſacrifice; Et ſacrificium dicitur aliquid factum ad honorem debitum ſolo Deo, ad Deum placandum, ſaith Aquinas; and a ſacrifice is ſaid to be ſome act, done for the honour that is onely due to God, to appeaſe his wrath for ſome juſt cauſe conceived againſt us; and we must note, that in every ſacrifice there are five things to be conſidered, that is, offertur; 2. The act ſpecified in the word ἔτυθη. Thomas 22.q.81. art.4.ad primum. 3. Things to be conſidered touching every ſacrifice.

1. Cui.
2. A quo.
3. Quid.
4. Pro quibus.
5. Quomodo.

That is, 1. To whom it is offered. 2. By whom it was offered. 3. What is offered. 4. For whom it is offered. 5. How it was performed. And

1. The very heathens could tell us, that ſacrifice was onely due to God, though they could not tell us, who that God ſhould be, to whom ſacrifice ſhould be offered; and therefore, when they ſacrificed unto Divels, or to the idols of the Gentiles, they made thoſe Divels and thoſe idols to become their godse,s the Prophet ſaith, dij gentium dæmonia, the gods of the Gentiles are divels, and thoſe divels they ſerved as their gods; and therefore, it is no wonder, that the Chriſtians of the Primitive Church would rather die, than be induced once to taſt of that meat, which was once offered unto the idols, as Euſebius witneſſeth; becauſe that being once admitted unto the Table of Chriſt, they would never eat afterwards of the Divels meat, eſpecially of that meat, which was ſo ſolemnly offered unto him, as to a god. 1. To whom ſacrifice is to be offered. Pſal.106.37. Euſeb.Eccleſ. hiſt.

2. Every ſacrifice was ever to be offered by the Prieſt; ſo the Paſchall Lamb was to be ſlain, and the Paſſeover to be performed by the Prieſts; and ſo Chriſt is ſaid to be a Prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedech; for God being of pure eyes, cannot abide the ſight of any ſinner; and therefore, a ſacrifice being the attonement that was to be made and offered for ſinne, the offendor was to bring his offering unto the Prieſt, and the Prieſt was to kill the ſame, and then to offer it unto God, to appeaſe his wrath, which was conceived and kindled againſt the ſinnes of the offendor: therefore Saul was rejected by God, and deptived of his kingdome; becauſe that he, being (as all others) a tranſgreſſour of the Law, and an offendour of the divine Majeſty, would notwithſtanding preſume himſelfe to offer ſacrifice unto God, rather than he would ſtay for Samuel that was the Prieſt. 2. By whom every ſacrifice is to be offered. 2 Chron.35.6. Pſal.110.4. Heb.5.6. 1 Sam.13.14.

Obiect. But you will ſay, the Prieſt was a ſinfull man himſelfe as well, and it may be, as much, or perhaps ſometimes more than any other of the people; therefore therefore how could his offering of any ſacrifice be more acceptable unto God, than the offering of the ſame by any other.

Sol. I anſwer, that God requireth more holineſſe in his Prieſts, than he expecteth from any other man whatſoever; and therefore Aaron is called the Saint of the Lord; and they ſhould be ſo; becauſe they do alwaies attend in Gods preſence, they do alwayes wait at the altar, and are alwaies buſied about holy things, about Gods ſervice; but whether we be ſo or not, I onely wiſh it, and not determine it; what have I to do to judge another mans ſervants, eſpecially ſervants of that rank? Yet I may pray to God, that when we ſhall be laid in the ballance, we may not be found too light; and for my ſelfe, I will thus pray moſt eſpecially: and for others, I hope they are all ſo, as they ſhould be.

Pſal.106.16. More holineſſe required in Prieſts, than in any other, and why Rom 14 4.

But leaſt we ſhould miſtake this point, and think that becauſe God requireth more holineſſe in his Prieſts than in others, therefore he accepteth his Prieſts for their owne holineſſe ſake; you muſt underſtand, that in the plate of gold, which was on Aarons breaſt, there was written ἁγιασμα κυρίῳ, holineſſe unto the Lord; becauſe that among all the ſonnes of men, there was none that did good, no not one; therefore it became us to have ſuch an High Prieſt, as was holy and undefiled, ſeparate from ſinners, that ſo both the Sacrificer and the ſacrifice might be accepted with God; for otherwiſe, as no ſacrifice of the old Law was pleaſing unto God for its owne worth, but as it prefigured the death and paſſion of the Meſſias, Ieſus Chriſt, which was the onely Lamb that taketh away the ſinnes of the world, and that onely Paſſeover wherewith onely God is well pleaſed; ſo no Prieſt that offered or offereth any ſacrifice unto God, was ever, or is now any otherwiſe accepted with him, but either as he was a type and figure (as was Aaron, and all the Prieſthood of the Law) or do ſtand in the ſtead (as are all the Prieſts and Miniſters of the Goſpell) of that truly holy and everlaſting Prieſt Chriſt Ieſus; and therefore all other prieſts were faine to offer ſacrifice, firſt for their owne ſinnes, and then for the ſinnes of the people; and in that reſpect, you muſt know that the Prieſts were and are accepted with God, not ſo much for their own ſanctity and holineſſe, were they as holy as any man that ever lived on earth, but for their office and callings ſake, which is moſt holy in it ſelfe, though they ſhould be moſt unholy themſelves, and which was a type, and is the repreſentation of the Prieſthood of Chriſt, who is onely accepted of God for his owne ſake, every way, and in every reſpect; and therefore, they that thinke a lay mans bleſſing, though a moſt religious man, to be equivalent to the bleſſing of a Prieſt, though moſt wicked, in things that concerne publique ſervice, are ſo much deceived, and do ſo highly offend God hereby, that it is not an eaſie thing for me to expreſſe the hainouſneſſe of this errour; becauſe they do undervalue that moſt holy calling, and from the indignity of the perſon, perhaps onely in reſpect of his poverty and meane eſtate, do involve indignities and contempts upon his Office and Prieſthood; which, as it is moſt ſacred before God, ſo it ſhould be moſt eſteemed among men; but as the calling of a King, or a Iudge, makes their perſons moſt honoured, ſo the office of a Prieſt ſhould bring more reſpect to Gods Miniſters, than all the acceſſion of all worldly honours.

Exod.28.36.

Pſal.14.4.

Heb.7.26.

Ioh.1.29. In what regard God reſpecteth his Prieſts more than others, and heareth their prayers ſooner than the prayers of others.

A lay mans bleſſing or prayer, &c. no wayes equivalent to the prayers or bleſſing of a Prieſt.

Prieſt how miſreputed.

3. For the matter, which is to be offered unto God, the Schooleman ſaith, that, De ijs, qua veniunt in uſum hominis de terra naſcentibus, ſunt quatuor genera.

3 The matter to be offered.

Foure things ſpringing out of the earth for the ſuſtenance of man.

{1. Cibus. 2. *Potus.} {3. Condimentum. 4 Medicamentum.} Of thoſe things that ſpring out of the earth for the uſe of man, they are ſpecially foure, that is, meat, drink, ſawce, and medicine; therefore man uſed to offer unto God

Man offered foure things to God.

For the firſt, bread, and the fleſh of beaſts.

For the ſecond, wine, and the beſt of all potable liquours.

For the third, oyle, ſalt, and the like.

For the fourth frankincenſe, quod eſt aromaticum & conſolidativum, which is very ſweet, and doth very much comfort our bodies, ſaith the Schoolman.

And

And our Saviour Christ is in all things answerable to all these; as ,his flesh is correspondent to the first; his bloud is answerable to the second; his grace is agreeable to the third, and his prayer is equivalent to the fourth; for his flesh is meat indeed, and his bloud is drinke indeed; his grace seasoneth all our actions, that otherwise would stink in the sight of God; and his prayer, like the incense, healeth and preserveth us from all sinne. Ioh.6.55.

And therefore, what sacrifice in the world could be found more acceptable unto God, or more profitable unto man, than Iesus Christ, who had in himselfe all things that were requisite or necessary for us, and all things that could be required or accepted by God. Psal.141.2.

Obiect. But you will say, that in the sacrifices of the Law, the humane flesh was never offered, but onely the fleshof slaine beasts, as the Prophet sheweth; therefore how can the flesh and bloud of Christ be any acceptable sacrifice unto God? Amos 5.25. Acts 7.42.

Sol. I answer, that every sacrifice is either { 1. Externall. 2. Internall. } Each sacrifice either; 1. Externall. 2. Internall.

The first was of slaine beasts, and of other things springing out of the earth; and this was nothing els but the true signe and manifestation of the second, which was and is the sacrificing of the body and spirit, and of all other things within a man, as the Prophet David sheweth, the sacrifice of God is a troubled spirit; and S. Paul likewise, when he biddeth us to offer up our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God; and this offering of our selves for a sacrifice unto God, by the protesting of our faith, service and devotion unto him, we ought to do, saith the Schooleman, for these three speciall reasons. Psal.51.17. Rom.12.1.

{ 1. For the remission of our sinnes. 2. For the donation and conservation of Gods grace. 3. For the obtaining of everlasting glory. } Thom.p.1.q.82.art. 4 c. Three reasons why we should offer up our selves.

And he saith further, that a man may offer up his body, for a sacrifice acceptable unto God, three severall wayes.

{ 1. By the works of justice. 2. By austerity of life. 3. By suffering Martyrdome. } And all this our Saviour did, and became a sacrifice in each way. For That we offer up our selves three waves, and so did Christ.

1. He came to fulfill all righteousnesse, and so he did perfectly keep the royall Law, and wronged no man while he lived. 1. Way.

2. His works were unreprovable, his life unimitable, and his actions no wayes conformable to the loose and dissolute carriage of this wanton world, but according to the strict rule of Gods Word. 2. Way.

3. His sufferings were most intolerable, and his whole life, from his cradle to his grave, was nothing els but continuall martyrdome. 3. Way.

And therefore the flesh of Christ must needs be the most excellent and the most acceptable sacrifice, that can be, to God; especially in regard of these foure reasons. Foure reasons to prove the flesh of Christ the most acceptable sacrifice unto God.

1. Because it is the flesh of our humane nature, and therefore most congruously and fitly it may be offered for man; that the same nature may make satisfaction, which hath been in the transgression. 1. Reason.

2. Because it is a mortall flesh, and therefore passible and capable of punishment for the sin of man. 2. Reason.

3. Because it is a sanctified flesh, and therefore not reproveable in the sight of God. 3. Reason.

4. Because it is a deified flesh, as Gregory Nyssen saith, that is, Non per conversionem carnis in deitatem, sed per unionem carnis cum deitate, not by the conversion of the flesh into the deity, but by the union of the flesh with the deity, therefore it is every way worthy to be accepted with God, and every way able to make attonement for man. 4 Reason. How the flesh of Christ is deified.

And therefore, though our sinnes be never so great, and our transgressions never so many, though they be as red as scarlet, and as innumerable as the sands, yet seeing ſeeing we have ſuch a high Prieſt to offer, and ſuch a ſacrifice to be offered unto God for our ſinnes, we may with boldneſſe accede and draw neare unto the throne of grace, and aſſure our ſelves of pardon, through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord.

Heb.4.16.

4. The parties, for whom any ſacrifice is to be offered.

4. For the parties, on whoſe behalfe any ſacrifice is offered, it muſt be they that have offended God, and do ſeeke by ſacrifice to be reconciled to him againe; that ſo they may eſcape their juſt deſerved puniſhment, and then attaine unto their much deſired ends; But this point is more fully ſet downe in the next part that followeth in the text, for whom Chriſt was ſlaine; therefore ſo much ſhall ſerve here touching the ſame.

5. The manner how every ſacrifice was to be offered.

5. For the manner how every ſacrifice was to be offered; you muſt know that the Iewes had diverſe kinds of ſacrifices; as Diverſe kinds of ſacrifices.

- Especially their sacrifices
  - 1. Of reconciliation: and they were
    - 1. Burnt-offerings, and that for
      - 1. The Prieſt.
      - 2. The Prince.
      - 3. The people.
    - 2. Sinne offerings, and that
      - 1. Of ignorance.
      - 2. Of errour.
  - 2. Of gratulation or thankſgiving: which were either
    - 1. Peace-offerings, as of
      - 1. Vowes.
      - 2. Voluntary purification.
      - 3. Iealouſie.
      - 4. Leproſie.
      - 5. Nazarites.
      - 6. Conſecration.
    - 2. Praiſes for things
      - 1. Paſt, as deliverances.
      - 2. Preſent, as dedications.
      - 3. To come, as for preſervations.

And every one of theſe was not in every point alike to be performed; becauſe they were for diverſe things, and likewiſe of diverſe kinds, as they had their meat-offerings, eares of corne, fine flower, firſt-fruits, firſt-borne, and tythes; and their drinke-offerings, wines, and ſo forth; but in every ſacrifice, theſe two things were to be obſerved.

Two things requiſite in every ſacrifice.

1. A change and mutation of the thing.

1. When it was ſacrificed to the Lord, it was changed from its former uſe, and there was deſtructio rei oblatæ, a deſtruction of the thing offered; as, if they were living things, they were killed; if liquid things, they were powred out; and if ſolid things, then were they bruiſed and burnt, as corne, and the like; and this is a ſufficient proofe to overthrow the ſacrifice of the Maſſe; becauſe there can be no Phyſicall mutation, no manner of deſtruction of the thing that is offered.

2. To be joyned with ſalt. Lev.2.13. Mar.9.

2. Every ſacrifice was to be ſalted with ſalt; neither ſhalt thou ſuffer the ſalt of the covenant of thy God to be lacking from thy meat-offering, but with all thine offerings thou ſhalt offer ſalt; and our Saviour, expounding the ſame, ſaith, every one ſhall be ſalted with fire; wherein you muſt rightly obſerve the alluſion; or els you may be eaſily deceived; for as when Chriſt ſaith of his Church, thy lips are like the lillies, we muſt not referre the reſemblance to the colour, becauſe her lips were like ſcarlet, Cant. 4. 5. but to the ſweetneſſe of the ſmell; ſo when Chriſt ſaith, We ſhall be ſalted with fire, the compariſon ſtandeth not in the ſeaſoning, but in the eating, drying up, and conſuming of our corruptions; becauſe that, as the ſalt conſumeth all the corruption of raw fleſh, ſo the fire of Gods Spirit drieth up all the ill humours of thoſe men, in whom he dwelleth; and they that will not be baptized with this fire of grace in this life, ſhall be ſalted with the fire of Gods wrath in the life to come.

Cant.5.13. So Num.12.10. it is ſaid, Miriam was leprous as the ſnow, that is, in regard of the colour

The two former things in Chriſt.

I need not ſtand to ſhew you, how theſe two things were moſt eminent in in the sacrifice, that Christ offered for us; for

1. He was bruised and killed, and his bloud powred forth in a most plentifull manner; and therefore a perfect destruction of the thing offered, even as our Saviour had prophesied, destroy this temple; they pulled downe every stone, and persecuted every part of him. — 1. How he was destroyed. Ioh 2.19.

2. Sal dicitur a sapiendo: quia sal sapit omnia; salt gives a taste to every thing, and it is the chiefest embleme of wisdome; and so our Saviour Christ had this salt in himselfe above measure; he was passively sensible of all the evils that were done unto him; and therefore, he might well demaund, an fuit dolor sicut dolor meus? Whether there was ever any sorrow like unto his sorrow? and he did actively perceive all that was to be perceived; and that salt of Gods Spirit, which was in him without measure, did so perfectly preserve him, that he was free from all the least staine of sinne, and in his mouth was found no guile. — 2. How he had the perfection of all salt in him. Lam.1.12. 1 Pet.2.22.

3. The end, or the extent of this act, which is the last point of the Apostles reason, sheweth for whom this our passeover was sacrificed and slaine, for us, that is, according to the words of our Nicen Creed, for us men, and for our salvation, and not for the Angels; as the Authour of the Epistle to the Hebrewes intimateth, when he tels us, that, He tooke not on him the nature of Angels, but he tooke on him the seed of Abraham: therefore he died not for the Angels, but for men; to shew, how infinitely we wretched men are bound to this good God; that he would do that for us, which he would not do for the Angels; which had as much need as we, and were his creatures as well as we. — 3. The end of our Saviours offering, or the extent of it. Heb.2.16.

But whether Christ was sacrificed for all men, good and bad, elect and reprobate, those that are damned, as well as those that shall be saved, it is not my purpose in this place to discusse; but I will referre my reader to what I have more amply, than this time will give me leave, set downe in my Delights of the Saints; where I have handled this question of set purpose, and do hold my selfe fully satisfied with that determination. — Vide the delights of the Saints.

And so much for the Apostles reason; that Christ our passeover is sacrificed for us.

2. Having throughly heard the discussion of each particular of the Apostles reason, we are now with all attention, to consider how this reason fitteth his purpose, and doth confirme that which he inforceth; that because Christ our passeover is sacrificed for us, therefore we should cleanse our selves from all filthinesse. — 2. The application of the reason to the matter inforced.

And indeed this reason is so pregnant, and so pressing, that there is no need of any reason to confirme it; yet because we are so dull of hearing, as the Apostle saith, and so dull of understanding what concernes our soules, that we do cum ratione insanire, grow irrationall in the most reasonable things; therefore I will briefly shew unto you, that the sufferings of Christ should be a sufficient argument, to move us all and every one of us, to abstaine from all and every sin. — Heb.5.11. The confirmation of the reason to prove the thing inforced.

1. Because sin was so odious a thing, so hatefull in the eyes of almighty God, as that nothing under heaven, not the most excellent of all creatures, could expiate or blot out the same, but onely the most precious blond of the Sonne of God; for it is neither gold nor silver, nor a thousand of rammes, nor ten thousand rivers of oyle, that can make satisfaction for one of the least of thy sinnes; it will cost more to redeeme thy soule than so; and therefore, why wilt thou sinne, or how darest thou to offend, when as nothing can ransome thee from sinne, but onely the most accursed death of the blessed God Christ Iesus. — 1. Reason. Psal.49.8.

2. Because Christ died for our sinnes, not to procure us liberty to live in sinne, but to free us from the bondage of sin, that we might walke in holinesse and righteousnesse all the dayes of our life; and therefore we do highly abuse the end of our redemption, and we do quite exclude the benefit of Christs passion, and deny the power of his resurrection, if, when we believe in Christ, we will live in sin. — 2. Reason.

3. Because this is against all sense and reason, to live in sinne after we are redeemed from sin? For what captive would live still in a slavish bondage, when his whole ransome is paid for him? What man would wallow in the filthy mire, when — 3. Reason.

The folly of them that will live in ſin when he is waſhed cleane from all filthineſſe? Or what merchant would ſhew himſelfe ſo mad, as to let another man carie away that commodity, which he had ſo fully paid for? But Chriſt hath bought us with a price, he hath waſhed us with his owne bloud, and he hath redeemed us from the hands of hell, from the pit wherein there is no water; and therefore, why ſhould we live under the bondage of ſin any more? Why ſhould we defile our ſelves againe? Or why ſhould we ſuffer the Divell to carie away our ſoules, when Chriſt hath ſo dearely paid for them?

4. Reaſon.

Heb. 10. 18. Rom. 6. 9.

4. Becauſe there is no more ſacrifice to be offered, that can ſatisfie God for ſin; he hath none other ſonne, and you have none other meanes to appeaſe his wrath; and Chriſt being once dead, dieth no more, ſaith the Apoſtle; therefore, if you deſpiſe this ſacrifice, and after you have waſhed your ſelves from ſin, you returne, with the ſwine, to wallow in the mire againe, there remaineth nothing for you, but a fearefull expectation of vengeance and deſtruction, ſaith the holy Scripture.

Heb. 10. 26, 27.

And therefore to conclude all, ſeeing Chriſt is ſacrificed for us, let us ſacrifice our ſelves to God, and let us kill our ſinnes, that have killed the Sonne of God, that ſo we being dead to ſinne, and living unto righteouſneſſe, we may attaine unto that life, which ſhall never die, but ſhall enjoy the moſt bleſſed fruition of the eternall God in heaven, to whom, with the Son and the Holy Ghoſt, be all glory and dominion, for ever and ever.

Amen, Amen.

IEHOVÆ LIBERATORI.

THE THREE CHIEFEST GRACES.

1 Corinth. 13. 13.

Νυνὶ δὲ μένει, πίστις, ἐλπὶς, ἀγάπη, τὰ τρία ταῦτα, μείζων δὲ τούτων ἡ ἀγάπη.

Now remaine Faith, Hope, and Charity, theſe three, and the greater of theſe is Charity.

THis little verſe, is like the great Ocean ſea, wherein are things creeping innumerable, both of ſmall and great beaſts; and therefore the fiſhermen in this ſea, cannot take all, and yet they may have a draught great inough, and ſuch a plenty of ſpirituall meate, as may ſufficiently feed us to eternall life; now remaine Faith, Hope, and Charity, &c. Pſal. 104. 25.

When I reade theſe words of the Apoſtle, and conſider the courſes of this world, I muze with my ſelfe, how I ſhall reconcile them; and I thinke the diſtinctions of Thomas, and the ſubtilty of Scotus, put both together, will ſcarce bring both theſe to one accord; for you ſee the Apoſtle ſaith, now remaine Faith, Hope, and Charity, and if you looke into the world, you ſhall ſcarce find either Faith, Hope, or Charity; for our Saviour demands the queſtion, When the Sonne of man commeth, ſhall he finde faith on the earth? and the Poet ſaith, The Text and the courſe of the world how to be reconciled. Luk. 18. 8.

Ελπὶς δὲ κὰκ ἀγαθὴ κεχρημενον ἀνδρα κομίζει; Heſiodus.

A good Hope can never aſſociate needie men; but as Statius ſaith, Statius Thebaid. l. 1.

——Spes anxia mentem
Extrahit, & longo conſumit gaudia voto;

Our hope being for things of nothing, it brings us nothing but a troubled mind, that doth waſt our joyes with deferred lookes; and the Apoſtle ſpeaking of theſe times, ſaith, The love of many ſhall waxe cold; becauſe Men ſhould be lovers of their owne ſelves, covetous, boaſters, proud, blaſphemers, diſobedient to parents, unthankefull, unholy, without naturall affection, and ſo forth; and therefore, I Mat. 24. 12. 2 Tim. 3. 1.

ſometimes thinke, he ſpake this of thoſe times wherein he lived, and not of theſe times wherein we live; for

Mat. 15. 28. The great faith in the time of Chriſt, and how little faith wee have now.

1. Then indeed we find great faith, even in the weakeſt ſexe; ô woman great is thy faith, ſaith our Saviour Chriſt, bee it unto thee, as thou beleeveſt, or even as thou wilt; but now, all the preaching in the world can ſcarce make ſome men to beleeve that there is a God, and that he is a rewarder of them that ſerve him, and a righteous judge to condemne all unrighteous men; for if they did, tum hoſpes ab hoſpite tuto, then certainely, they that eate of my bread on my table would never betray me in my garden, which was Judas his ſinne; leſt the ſame God ſhould inflict on them, the ſame puniſhment, as he did on him, to let them goe and hang themſelves, when they have hang'd, or perhaps fail'd to hang us.

The great hope of the Primitive Chriſtians.

Origen ſuper Exod. hom. 9 Spes in æternitatem animum erigit, & idcirco nulla mala exterius quæ tolerat, ſentit. Gregor in mor. How ſmall our hope is now. Cicero 3. de orat Turbine magno ſpes ſollicitæ turbibus errant Sen. in Herc. fur.

2. Then, ſicut in agone poſitis dolorem vulnerum mitigat ſpes coronæ, ita futurorum ſpes laborantibus requiem parabat; as the hope of a garland crowne and ſmall reward, did aſſwage all the paine of the wounds of the wreſtlers and fighters at the olympian games, ſo the hope of future happineſſe, of the crowne of glory, did bring reſt and contentment to all thoſe wearied Chriſtians, that endured all labours, and ſuffered all puniſhments for Chriſt his ſake, as Origen ſaith; but now we may cry out with the Orator, ô fallacem hominum ſpem, fragilemq; fortunam, quæ in medio ſpatio ſæpè franguntur & corrunt, & ante in ipſo portu obruuntur, quam portum conſpicere potuerunt; ô the deceitfull hope, and the fraile fortune of vaine men, which doe oftentimes breake and fall in the midſt of our way, and are ſwallowed downe in the deepe, before we can eſpie the port; and

The love and charity of the firſt Chriſtians.

3. Then the love of Chriſtians was ſo fervent, and the fervencie of their charity was ſo great, that they loved not themſelves, they held nothing that they had as their owne, but had all things in common, that is, for the common good of the Church; and now every one ſeeketh for nothing but his owne, every man is for himſelfe, and none for his neighbour, unleſſe it be for his ruine and deſtruction; love is ſo cold in this frigid Zone, and iniquity is ſo great in this preſent world, that envie, hatred, malice, and all uncharitableneſſe do like the waters of Noah, cover the ſuperficies of the whole earth; now they ſhall be termed fooles in print, and knaves in graine, that ſpeake and write againſt the fooleries and the vanities of this world; and wicked men are more impudent now, among Chriſtians, then ever I read they were in Nero's time, among the Pagans, to make men ridiculous upon the ſtage of this world, and conclude them as odious in the ſight of all men, before their cauſe be heard by their unpartiall Iudges: a caſe thought ſtrange by Nicodemus among the Iewes, and yet not ſtrange to be uſually practiſed among Chriſtians; ſo tempora mutantur, the times are changed; and if you diſtinguiſh the times, then, perhaps, you may eaſily reconcile this difference; now remaine Faith, Hope, and Charity, that is now, when S. Paul lived; but you ſhall ſcarce find them now in theſe daies, wherein we live; for now you know not where, nor among whom to find them; little in the Clergy, leſſe in the Laity, and leaſt of all in many that make the greateſt ſhew of them.

The iniquity of theſe times.

Ioh. 7. 51.

Little piety or vertue now on earth.

Mat. 16. 18.

And yet this diſtinction doth not give me a plenary ſatisfaction; for the Church of Chriſt muſt continue to the end of the world, the gates of hell ſhall never prevaile againſt it; and theſe three, Faith, Hope, and Charity, be qualitates conſtitutivæ, that is, qualitates formales, ſo neceſſary, that as the fire cannot be without his heate, ſo the Church of God can be no Church without theſe three divine graces; and therefore, as the Morall Philoſophers do make the foure Cardinall vertues, Iuſtice, Prudence, Temperance, and Fortitude, to be the foundation of all civill honeſtie, and like the foure corner ſtones of any perfect building; ſo the Divines make theſe three theologicall vertues, theſe three divine graces, to be the ſumme of all Chriſtian Religion, as you may ſee it in S. Auguſtine, that makes theſe three graces, to be the ſubject of that excellent Enchiridion to Laurentius, which is the Epitome, or briefe compendium of all Chriſtianity.

The foure morall vertues.

The ſumme of all Chriſtian Religion.

And

And therefore howsoever, Faith, Hope, and Charity, were in Saint Pauls time more eminent and more plentifull then they be now in our dales, yet still now, manent, they doe remaine, and they shall remaine more or lesse, little or much, so long as the world continueth, so long as the Sunne and Moone endureth. And therefore

These three graces more plentifull in the Apostles time, then they be now.

These three graces handled two waies.

I will, by Gods helpe, treat of these graces two waies,

1. Positively.
2. Comparatively.

And

1. Positively, we must also handle them two speciall waies,

1. Ioyntly.
2. Severally.

1. Positively.

1. As we are to speake of these graces joyntly, here be two words, that doe shew unto us two speciall things,

1. The time of their continuance.
2. The quality of their continuance.

1. Ioyntly.

1. The word, νυνὶ, now, doth shew them to remaine in this life, and not in the life to come; for the Apostle speaketh this by way of preoccupation, as if he should have said, though other gifts and graces should cease, as the gift of healing, of speaking with divers tongues, and the like; yet these three graces shall never cease, but they shall remaine; for Faith is the substance of things hoped for, and the foundation of things not seene; and we are saved by hope, but the hope that is seene is no hope; and Theocritus saith,

1. The time of their continuance, in this life.

Heb 11.1. Rom.8.24.

ἐλπίδες ἐν ζωῦσιν ἄν ἐλπιζοι δ' θανόντες;

Sperandum est vivu, non est spes ulla sepultis.

Men must hope while they live, and when they are dead they can hope for nothing; and Saint Paul saith, that Charity beleeveth all things, hopeth all things, and suffereth all things; and therefore this word νυνὶ, now, is emphaticall, and sheweth that, while the Church of Christ is militant here on earth, so long these graces shall remaine, and no longer; that is, they shall continue in this life, but not in the life to come.

1 Cor.13.7.

Whether these graces shall continue in heaven. Heb 11.1.

And yet Irenæus and Photion, as the Greeke annotations shew unto us, would have these three to remaine in the life to come, and so Durandus seemes to thinke; but the Apostle doth most plainely denie it, when he saith, that Faith is the evidence of things not seene; and therefore, when we see that, which we beleeve, it ceaseth to be faith; and so hope which is seene, is no hope; though I denie not but we may be said to beleeve the continuation and perpetuity of our happinesse in heaven; and for charity, it shall then be truest and most perfect, when we are exempted from all sinne, and shall have our entrance into the kingdome of glory; although Erasmus is said to have thought the contrary.

Irenæus lib.4.cont. hæreses.

Rom.8.24.

How they shall continue in heaven.

And therefore, to apply the former doctrine to our selves, and to our owne soules, seeing this life is the time appointed for us to exercise our Faith, our Hope, and our Charity; let us not be without these, or without any of these, while we live in this life; for if we have not Faith here, we shall never have faith hereafter; and if we have not Hope in this life, we shall never have the things hoped for in the life to come; and whosoever is void of love and destitute of Charity in this world, shall burne in hell for want of love in the world to come for evermore; because now is the time that these three, Faith, Hope, and Charity, should remaine, and hereafter will be the time of our condemnation, if now we have them not.

That we ought to seeke for these graces in this life.

2. The quality or manner of their continuance is set downe in the word, μένει. Which word is to be read in the plurall number manent, they doe remaine; because the Greeks doe usually put verbes singular to words neuter of the plurall number; though it skilleth not, if we read manet, doth remaine, as Laurentius Valla testifieth; because then it must be referred to each one, which must remaine as well as the other; so it comes to the same passe, and sheweth that, although they be three distinct graces, as you may see out of the 1 Thess. 1.3. where the Apostle remembreth the worke of their faith, the labour of their love, and the

2. The quality of their continuance altogether.

That these are three distinct graces. 1 Thess.1.3.

That theſe three graces be inſeparable.

patience of their hope; yet they are inſeparable and indiſſoluble the one from the other, quia hæc tria manent, becauſe theſe three doe remaine, and not this or that but all three ſaith the Apoſtle; and therefore neither of them can vaniſh but all of them will vaniſh, not one of them can be, but all of them muſt remaine inſeparable; for faith is the foundation of hope, and charity proceedeth, ἐκ πίστεως ἀνυπокρίτου, from faith unfained; and in that reſpect, as Saint John ſaith,

1 Tim. 1. 5.

1 Ioh. 2. 4.

Whoſoever ſaith, he knoweth him and keepeth not his Commandements, he is a lyar, ſo we may ſay, whoſoever ſaith, he beleeveth in God, or hath true faith in Chriſt, and hath not charity, or love both to God and man, he is a lyar, and the truth is not in him; and therefore Saint Auguſtine ſaith, that, credere in Chriſtum eſt credendo amare, & amando ad illum ire, & membrum ejus effici; to beleeve in Chriſt is by beleeving in him to love him, and by loving him to goe unto him, to be united to him, and to be made a member of him; and in his booke, de fide & operibus, of faith and workes, he teacheth plainely, that that faith, which is without good workes, is the faith of divells, and of Hypocrites, not of Chriſtians; and the reaſon hereof is fully rendred by the Schooles, Quia objectum fidei adæquatum eſt omne verbum Dei in genere; becauſe the plenary object of our faith is every word of God in generall; and therefore true faith ought to yeeld the like affection to every word of God, and to ſubſcribe unto the truth of Chriſt, quoties & quicquid & quocunq; modo loquitur, how often ſoever, and what-ſoever, or after what manner ſoever, it ſpeakes unto us, as well to doe what he commandeth, as to beleeve what he promiſeth or threatneth unto us; and ſo S. Chryſoſtome ſaith, quam primum credideris, bonis operibus eris indutus, aſſoone as ever thou ſhalt begin to beleeve in Chriſt, thou ſhalt be indued with ſuch grace, as ſhall make thee plentifull in all good workes; and this is none other doctrine then what our Saviour teacheth; for he that abideth in me, that is, by faith, and I in him, that is, by the graces of my ſpirit, the ſame bringeth forth much fruit, that is, the fruit of all good workes; and ſo S. Hierom, S. Gregory, and Saint Ambroſe have moſt plainely taught the ſame truth.

To beleeve in Chriſt what it is.

Faith without works no true faith.

The reaſon of it.

Chryſoſt. de fide & lege naturæ.

Ioh. 15. 5.

Hieron. contra Lucif. Ambroſ. de vocat. gent.

And therefore Now, Faith, Hope, and Charity doe cohere, and are tyed together by an individuall knot; becauſe it cannot be otherwiſe, but that from a true faith in Chriſt Ieſus, there ſhould ſpring, not onely an aſſured hope of obtaining all thoſe good things which Chriſt hath purchaſed for us, but alſo a moſt ſpeciall fervent love both towards God, and our neighbours for Gods ſake, as S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh.

Ob. But againſt this Stapleton doth object, that the Apoſtle ſaith, if I had all faith, and had not charity, yet were I nothing, that is, it would availe me nothing; therefore faith is ſeparable from charity, and a man may beleeve in Chriſt, when his beleefe will availe him nothing, becauſe his faith wanteth workes.

1 Cor. 13. 2.

Whether faith may be without good workes.

Sol. To this I anſwer many waies, and

1. I ſay that this ſpeech of Saint Paul is no Categoricall propoſition, but an Hypotheticall ſuppoſition, though I had all faith, or, if it were poſſible that a man had all faith and had no charity, yet all this were nothing and to no purpoſe; but Saint Paul doth not ſay, it is poſſible for a man to have faith, which is leſſe then all faith, and to have no charity; nay rather, it is impoſſible for any man to have faith, and to be without charity; becauſe true faith cannot ſubſiſt without charity, which is diſcerned from faith, τῷ λογισμῷ, & non reipſa, as Toſſanus ſaith.

S. Pauls ſpeech hypotheticall, and not categoricall.

Of what faith S. Paul ſpeaketh. 1 Cor. 13. 2.

2. I ſay that the Apoſtle doth not ſpeake in this place of the Corinthians, of juſtifying faith whereby we are ſaved; but of that gift of faith, wherewith men wrought miracles; which may be eaſily proved by theſe reaſons.

What faith may be without works 1. Reaſon,

1. Becauſe in the 12 Chapter and ninth verſe, he ſpeaketh of this faith, when he ſaith, to another is given faith by the ſame ſpirit; where you ſee the Apoſtle putteth faith, among thoſe ſpirituall gifts which are given to ſome Chriſtians, and not to all; and therefore this cannot be underſtood of the true juſtifying ſaving faith; faith; becauſe that muſt be given to all that ſhall be ſaved, when as none can be ſaved without it, and the other may be had without ſalvation, and ſalvation without it; as our Saviour ſheweth, when he tells us, that many ſhall come at the laſt day, and profeſſe that they have prophefied in his name, and done many great workes in his name, to whom he ſhall make none other anſwer, but, I know you not, depart from me, ye workers of iniquity. Mat. 7. 22, 23.

2. Becauſe the Greek Scholies or annotations, doe give us to underſtand, that the faith of miracles, and not the juſtifying faith, is to bee underſtood in this place. 2. Reaſon.

3. Becauſe Saint Chryſoſtome, Saint Ambroſe, and ſome others of the Fathers do expound it ſo. 3. Reaſon.

4. Becauſe the immediate particle, ſo that I could remove mountaines, doth teach us this very thing; for that ſeemes to be taken out of Saint Luke 17. 7, 8. where our Saviour ſpeakes of the faith of miracles, as Saint Chryſoſtome noteth; therefore the Apoſtle ſpeaketh in this place of the ſame faith. 4. Reaſon. Luk. 17. 7, 8.

Ob. But ſtill, Stapleton may urge, that the Apoſtle ſaith, ſi haberem πᾶσαν πίστιν, if I had all faith; therefore he doth not onely underſtand the faith of miracles, but alſo the juſtifying faith.

Sol. I anſwer, that ſignum univerſale non ſemper omnes ſpecies complectitur, ſed unius ſpeciei perfectionem; an univerſall ſigne doth not alwaies containe all the kinds, but oftentimes the perfection of ſome one kinde; as where the Apoſtle tells the Corinthians, that they were inriched with all knowledge, we muſt not thinke that he meant, they had all Mathematicall, Phyſicall, Aſtronomicall, or the like ſciences of art and learning, which were not neceſſary for the vulgar Chriſtians to have; but he meanes that they were indued with all divine knowledge, which was requiſite for their ſalvation; and ſo when Chriſt ſaith, that the Holy Ghoſt ſhould leade the Diſciples and followers of him, in omnem veritatem, into all truth, we muſt not thinke he meant that all Chriſtians ſhould underſtand all morall, naturall and metaphyſicall truth, but that the ſpirit of God ſhould lead them into all Chriſtian truth, which he beſt knew to be neceſſary for them; and therefore we doe often find, that univerſales limitatæ, intelligendæ ſunt ſecundum materiam ſubjectam, univerſall propoſitions limited, are to be underſtood according to the preſent matter that we treate of; and ſo, as the former ſaying, if I had all knowledge, is to be underſtood, de cognitione chariſmatica, of the gift of knowledge, and not of all naturall ſciences, or mechanicall arts, ſo this phraſe if I had all faith, is to be underſtood, de fide chariſmatica, of this gift of faith, whereby men did worke miracles, and not of that faith, which juſtifieth and ſaveth every true beleever in the ſight of God. Vniverſall ſignes not alwaies to be underſtood univerſally. 1 Cor. 1. 5. Ioh. 16. 13. Vniverſall propoſitions how to be underſtood.

Secondly, I ſay therefore that πᾶσαν πίστιν, ſhould not be tranſlated, omnem fidem, all faith, as the vulgar reads it, but rather totam fidem, this whole faith, as Beza fitly renders it; becauſe that herein is not implied all kindes of faith, but all the faith of this kinde, whereby men did worke miracles, which is the meaning of the Apoſtle in this place; if I had all this faith, whereby I could doe all miracles, and had not charity, yet all this were nothing, and would availe me nothing. How we ſhould tranſlate πᾶσαν πίστιν.

And therefore, though we doe confeſſe, that every kinde of faith hath not love and charity inſeparably annexed unto it; yet we doe conſtantly affirme, that the faith of Gods elect, or that faith which juſtifieth Gods elect, can never be ſeparated from love and charity; but whereſoever the juſtifying faith is, there is alſo love, which bringeth forth the fruits of righteouſneſſe to the praiſe and glory of God; quia inſeperabilis eſt bona vita a fide, qua per dilectionem operatur, imo vero ea ipſa eſt bona vita; becauſe a good life is inſeparable from that faith, which worketh by love, and indeed this faith is a good life, and it is never deſtitute of good workes; becauſe that to beleeve in God, is to doe the will of God, as Irenæus ſpeaketh, and even as Chriſt ſaith, this is the will of God that ye beleeve in me, ſo to beleeve in him, is nothing els, in ſome ſence, but to do the will of him. Every kinde of faith hath not love. Aug. de fide & oper. cap. 23. Irenæus l. 4. cap. 14.

But

The operations of theſe graces not to bee confounded.

But you muſt underſtand, that although theſe three be three inſeparable graces, yet ſtill we reſerve to each one of them her owne proper operation; for as we doe not confound the things themſelves, ſo no more doe we confound their effects and operations; but as the Sunne hath in it three eſpeciall things, that is,

Three things to be conſidered in the Sunne.

1. His globe,
2. His heate,
3. His brightneſſe, or, leaſt any many ſhould take exception at this, becauſe I ſpeake, more vulgi, after the common courſe, & ſol ſua natura non eſt calidus, and the Sunne of his owne nature is not hot, but cauſeth the heate that we have by his motion, as the fire hath in it

Three things in the fire.

1. His ſubſtance,
2. His heate,
3. His light,

three inſeparable, yet three diſtinct things, of three diſtinct and ſeverall properties inconfuſed, even ſo it is in theſe three graces, Faith, Hope, and Charity. For as the Sunne ſhineth, or the fire giveth light, by his brightneſſe, and not by his heate, though both be joyned together inſeparably in the ſame ſubſtance, ſo faith juſtifieth by apprehending the grace of Chriſt and not by working, through love, the will of Chriſt, though both theſe goe inſeparably together in every juſtified man; And therefore, as it followeth not, that, becauſe the body of the Sunne, or the ſubſtance of the fire, is not alone, but hath both light and heate inſeparably joyned with it; therefore it ſhineth not onely with his light, but alſo with his heate; which is moſt falſe; ſo likewiſe it followeth not, that becauſe faith is not alone, but inſeparably joyned with charity; therefore it juſtifieth not alone, but with charity alſo, as it is united with love; which is as untrue as the other; becauſe that, although they be indiſſolubly linked and tyed together in the heart of every juſtified man, yet they bee ſeverall and diſtinct graces, and they have their diſtinct properties and offices.

How faith juſtifieth us.

Non conſequentia.

And ſo you may perceive hereby that, although we ſay, fidem juſtificare ſine charitate, that, faith juſtifieth without charity, or to ſpeake more properly, that, faith juſtifieth and not charity; yet we doe conſtantly affirme, fidem juſtificantem ſine charitate eſſe non poſſe, that the juſtifying faith cannot be without charity, it cannot ſubſiſt without the workes of love; for we never make a reall ſeparation of them, nor a mentall negative excluſion of other graces from faith, as if faith exiſted alone without hope and love, but, as when of things, that cannot be ſeparated really, yet a man may conceive the one, and omit the other for the underſtanding of ſome ſpeciall effect, proper to the one, and not to the other; as in the fire, that hath in it inſeparably both heate and brightneſſe, we may conſider the brightneſſe onely and apart, to be the cauſe of our light, and not the heate; ſo in a juſtified man, which hath in him indiſſolubly Faith, Hope, and Charity, we may conceive faith alone to have this ſpeciall effect, to lay hold on Chriſt his righteouſneſſe, thereby to juſtifie us in the ſight of God, and not the reſt.

That the juſtifying faith cannot be without charity.

How of things inſeparable wee may conceive ſome one effect, and omit another.

And therefore, though we ſay that, fides ſola juſtificat, faith onely juſtifieth, yet we ſay, that, fides nunquam eſt ſolitaria, faith is never alone, but whoſoever they be that thinke they have the juſtifying faith, and want love and workes, which are the fruits of faith, they deceive themſelves, and the truth is not in them; and whoſoever ſhall ſay, we teach not workes as well as faith, or perſwade not our people to do good workes as well as to beleeve in Chriſt, they wrong themſelves and ſcandall us; they ſhew themſelves to be, either very ignorant of our doctrine, or very malicious againſt the truth; for let who will, either heare our Sermons, or els read our bookes, and I dare boldly ſay it, no Ieſuite in the world, no Catholique in the Church of Rome, doth or can more earneſtly call for good workes, or more effectually urge the neceſſity of them to be practiſed by every Chriſtian man, then we doe; onely we exclude them from the act of our juſtification;

That we urge and teach the neceſſity of good works as much as any Divines in the world Neceſſitas præſentiæ non efficientiæ.

cation; and I am very ſure, upon good grounds; that we may aſcribe all the praiſe unto our God, unto our Chriſt, and nothing to our ſelves, nor to the workes of our owne hands, and that he which glorieth, or would glory, might onely glory in the Lord, in the grace of Chriſt, and not in the beſt act of our moſt renewed will; and this is none other doctrine then what our Saviour teacheth us, videlicet, when we have done, all that is commanded us, yet then to ſay, wee are unprofitable ſervants; where you may obſerve, he doth not free us for the omitting, or from the doing of any thing that is commanded, but ſaith, that when we have done all that is commanded, we ſhould confeſſe our ſelves to be but unprofitable ſervants, not onely to God, which hath need of nothing, but alſo to our ſelves, which hereby can merit nothing; even ſo, we doe not free our people from their duties, we doe not ſuffer them to omit good workes, but we do exhort them thereunto with all our might, and we perſwade them to all diligence, to abound in the workes of love; and as S. Peter adviſeth us, 2 Epiſt. 1 Chap. ver. 5, ſo we adviſe our people, to joyne vertue to vertue, till our bodies and our ſoules be quite diſ-joyned; but withall we teach them, that, when they have done all they can, all that is commanded, in their thought; yet hereby they are not juſtified, and cannot be juſtified in the ſight of God; but they muſt ſtill ſeeke that at the hands of Chriſt; and we find this was the practiſe of the Apoſtle, who did all that he could, and all ſo well as that he knew nothing by himſelfe; yet hee doth profeſſe that hereby he is not juſtified.

Works why excluded from the act of Juſtification.

Luk. 17. 10.

That we are not freed from doing good workes.

The practiſe of Saint Paul in this point.

1 Cor. 4. 4.

And ſo we teach faith and workes, we preach truth and we preſſe goodneſſe; yet not both for the ſame end, but the firſt to informe the underſtanding, and the ſecond to reforme the will; our faith to juſtifie us in the ſight of God, and our workes to make us appeare honeſt in our converſation among men, which is one maine end of our preaching; Quia theologia eſt ſcientia affectiva, &c. principaliter ut ipſâ boni fiamus; becauſe Divinity is an affective knowledge, which intendeth principally to make us good and honeſt men; ſaith Bonaventure. And therefore this condemnes thoſe Gallants, that doe ramble after knowledge, as drunkards doe for liquor; not ſo much to nouriſh their feeble bodies, as to pleaſe their drunken appetite; that ſearch for truth, and yet ſeeke no goodneſſe; Quia quarentes verum & non bonum, non invenient ſummum bonum; becauſe they that ſeeke for truth and not for good, ſhall never attaine unto the chiefeſt good, as Hugo ſpeaketh; but I ſuppoſe we need not ſuſpect our gallant wits, that can perhaps make applauded comedies, to be divine Gnoſtickes; for, though they would faine be ſo taken, becauſe their birth and breeding tells them they ſhould be ſo, yet, if we had but a little power to catechize their proud hearts, we might ſoone find, that they have more need of milke then ſtrong meat, and that indeed, they are as deſtitute of any ſaving knowledge, as they are empty and careleſſe of any divine goodneſs; but the fault hereof can be aſcribed, neither to the Miniſters nor to the Miniſtery of Gods Word; but to their owne froward nature and moſt obſtinate diſpoſition; becauſe we teach, as the Apoſtle doth, that now remaine Faith, Hope, and Charity, theſe three, and all three together, or if you want any one, you want all. And ſo much of theſe three graces joyntly handled.

Faith and works, to what end each of them is taught.

Bonavēt in proam. in ſent. q. 3. concluſ.

Divinity what it aimeth at.

Gnoſticks that will not practiſe, reproved. Hugo de S. Victore Miſcel. l. 1. tit. 73.

Our gallants no great Gnoſticks in divinity.

Heb. 5. 12.

2. We are to ſpeake of theſe three graces ſeverally.
1. Faith. 2. Hope. 3. Charity. And

2. The three graces handled ſeverally.

1. Faith is { 1. Of divels. 2. Of men. }
2. Hope is of men alone and that { 1. Of the Reprobates. 2. Of the Elect. }
3. Charity is onely of the Elect.

1. Touching faith, the Schoolemen doe obſerve, that there are foure kindes of faith, which are theſe,

1. Of faiths

1. The

1. The hiſtoricall faith.
2. The faith to doe miracles.
3. The temporary faith.
4. The juſtifying or the ſaving faith.

} And

1. The hiſtoricall faith what it is.

1. The hiſtoricall faith is the knowledge and underſtanding of the will and truth of God, ſo farre forth as it is reveiled either

1. In the law, which teacheth us what we ſhould doe, and how we ſhould live, and behave our ſelves, both towards God and man.

2. In the Goſpell, which ſetteth downe what we ſhould beleeve, of the Incarnation, Paſſion, Reſurrection, Aſcention, and Mediation of our Saviour Chriſt; And this faith is common not onely to wicked men, as well as to the godly, but alſo unto the divels, as well as unto men; for Saint Iames ſaith, the divels doe beleeve and tremble; πιστευσαν, they doe beleeve; and this word in the originall hath divers ſignifications; as οἶδα ᾧ πεπίστευκα. I know to whom I have truſted, ſaith the Apoſtle; and Phocilides ſaith, λαῷ μὴ πίστευε; relie not upon the people; and Ariſtotle ſaith, πιστευομεν ὁ παντα, we prove all things; but πιστευειν, in the Scripture, doth moſt commonly ſignifie to aſſent unto, or to be perſwaded of, as, καρδια πιστευεται εις δικαιοσύνην; with the heart we beleeve unto righteouſneſſe; and Αβρααμ επιστευσε θεω; Abraham beleeved God, κ' μερος τι πιστευω; and I partly beleeve it, ſaith the Apoſtle; and ſo the divels doe aſſent and are fully perſwaded of the truth of many things; and the reaſon is rendred by Saint Ambroſe, quia omnia quæ credimus, vel viſu credimus vel auditu; becauſe all things that we beleeve, we beleeve, either becauſe we have ſeene them or have heard them; and the divells have both ſeene and heard very much; for Hiſtoricall faith common to the divels. Iames 2.19.

2 Tim. 1.12. The ſignification of πιστευω. Ariſtot. prior. analyt. l. 2.

Rom. 10.10.

Gal. 3.6. 1 Cor. 13.13.

Ambroſius l. 4 in luc. c. 4.

Why the divels beleeve. How faith commeth.

1. The divels ſee much.

1. They doe ſee much, by wandering up and downe with ſuch great celerity, ut momento ubiq; ſunt, that in a moment, in our conceit, they ſeeme to be in every place, & totus orbis illis locus unus eſt, and the whole globe of this world is to them but as one place, not by their ubiquity, which they have not, but by their agility, which they have in a greater meaſure then we can expreſſe; and therefore, cum dicuntur credi quæ videntur, ſeeing we are ſaid to beleeve thoſe things that we ſee, as every one will ſay, that hee will beleeve his owne eyes, it cannot otherwiſe be, but the divels ſeeing ſo much as they doe, muſt beleeve much and be perſwaded of the truth of much.

The divels have no ubiquity.

2. The divels heare much. Iob 1.6.

2. They do heare much; for they heare God himſelfe, when they ſtand before him; they heare the good angels, when they come among them; they heare the Word of God, when it is preached by us, and I feare more attentively then it is heard by many of you; and all this they cannot chooſe but beleeve to be true; becauſe they know that God is truth and cannot lie, & dicta Iehovæ, dicta pura; and the words of the Lord are pure words, even as the ſilver, which from the earth is tried and purified ſeven times in the fire; they know that, although the Angels be, mutabiles natura, changeable in reſpect of their nature, nothing being naturally immutable but God himſelfe, yet now they are immutabiles gratia, made immutable by grace, and are ſupported by the ſpirit of God, ne a veritate voluntatem averterent, leſt they ſhould avert and turne away their wills from the truth and will of God, as Iſidorus ſpeaketh; and they know that the Word of God written in the Scriptures, is the Word of truth and that there is no falſhood therein.

Titus 1.2. Word of God truth it ſelfe. Pſalm 12.7.

The Angels how immutable

Iſidorus de ſummo bono. l. 1. cap. 12. Aug. de Civit. Dei l. 12. c. 9.

And ſo from their ſeeing of ſo much, and from their hearing of ſo much, together with their owne naturall knowledge, which is ſo much, and alſo their diligent obſerving of things, ſo long, ariſeth their abundant and almoſt incredible knowledge and underſtanding, not onely in the influences of the heavens and the ſecrets of all nature, but alſo concerning God and divine myſteries; For

What the divels know & beleeve. 1. That there is a God. Aug. de cognit. vera vita. cap. 37.

1. Dæmones Deum & Pagani credunt eſſe, Divels and Pagans doe beleeve and know that there is a God, as Saint Auguſtine ſpeaketh.

2. Put on God.

2. Seeing it is the nature of God to be infinite, and becauſe there cannot bee many many infinites, nor two infinites; therefore they know there can be but one God.

3. Because all the beings in the world, depend upon that being, which is independent; therefore they must know that being to be ὑψιστον θεον, a most high, and Almighty God.

3. An Almighty God.

4. They know that in this one God-head, there are three distinct persons;

πρῶτα θεὸς, μεταπειτα λογος, καὶ πνεῦμα σὺν αὐτοις, συμφυτα δὲ παντα, καὶ εις εν ἰοντα ἀ κραταιὸς ἰωιος.

First the Father, then the Word, and then the Holy Spirit, which made all things and doe live for ever and ever.

4. That there are three persons.

5. They know Christ; for Iesus I know, said the evill spirit unto the sonnes of Sceva.

5. They know Christ. Act. 19.15.

6. They know him to be the Sonne of God; for a whole Legion of them confessed him to be the Sonne of the most high God,

6. To be the Son of God. Mat. 8.29. Mar. 5.7.

7. They know him to be God himselfe; for one of the Sybills, which were none of Gods Prophets, as Saint Augustine saith, could say, ô lignum felix in quo Deus ipse pependit.

Where God himselfe to hang you see,
You may call that a happy tree.

7. To be God. Aug. in expos. ep. ad Rom.

8. They know the Scriptures; for they could alledge them very readily unto our Saviour Christ.

8. They know the Scriptures. Mat. 4.6.

9. They know the Gospell, and they know it so well, that they call it ὁδον σωτηριας, the way of salvation.

9. The Gospell. Act. 16.17

10. They know many things to come, as the Witch of Endor could fetch up a divell, in the shape of Samuel, that could tell Saul the time of his death; and that spirit, which appeared unto Marcus Brutus, could forewarne him of his end at the fields of Philippi; and Historians are most plentifull in the relation of those predictions, which were delivered from those Oracles, whose inspirations were none otherwise, then from the suggestions of the divell.

10. Many things to come. 1 Sam. 28.19. Appian Alexandrin de bello civili Rom.

11. And besides all this, they can sometimes perceive the thoughts of our hearts, not simply, for so none knowes the same but God, but ἐκ τῶν, ex signis in corpore sequentibus, out of those signes, which they can farre more acutely and more speedily spie in our faces, then we can espie the malice or the anger of any offended person by his grimmest countenance.

11. Our thoughts, and how.

And therefore seeing the divels doe know so much, how can they chuse but they must beleeve exceeding much? Quia fides est cognitio eademq; certissima, in quantum intellectus determinatur per fidem ad aliquod cognoscibile; because faith is knowledge, and indeed the surest of all knowledge, in as much as the understanding is hereby determined and guided to some thing that is know-able, as the Schooleman speaketh.

How faith is knowledge.

And so you may see, that the divels have faith, and that the same faith is recta & vera fides ex parte objecti, a right and a true faith in respect of the object, for Saint Augustine comparing the confession of Saint Peter, Thou art Christ the Sonne of the living God, with the confession of the divell, I know thee who thou art, even the holy one of God, saith, that, although Saint Peter was commended, and the divell rebuked for the same; yet in utrisq; non falsa sed vera, non neganda sed agnoscenda, non detestanda sed approbanda est confessio, in both of them, the confession was true and not false, to be acknowledged, not to be denied, and to be approved by all, to be detested and rejected by none; and Saint Iames telling us that the divels beleeve, meanes no lesse then to shew that the faith, which they have, is a true and a right faith, in its kinde, as the place manifestly expresseth.

The faith of the divels a true faith. Mat. 16 v. 16. Mar. 1.24. Aug. de unico baptism. cap. 10. Iames 2.19.

And therefore this blameth two sorts of wicked men.

1. The worldly Atheist.
2. The leaud and lascivious liver.

} For

Two sorts of men reproved by the former distinc.

The first is so addicted to the world, that he beleeveth nothing; and you shall never perswade him to thinke, that there is a God, or a Christ, or a Divell, or a

1. The prophane Atheist.

Pſal.53.1.

Heaven or a Hell, but this foole hath ſaid in his heart there is no God, and with the Sadduces he beleeveth that there are neither Angels nor Spirits, firſt nor ſecond, good nor bad; omnia certo tramite vadunt, all doe runne juſt in a courſe, or as Claudian ſaith, incerto fluerent mortalia caſu, all fall out by hab nab; all by chance, and that is the end of all; and ſo this wicked, curſed, and Atheiſticall crew of incredulous men, pejores & tardiores ad credendum, quam ipſi dæmones, are worſe herein, and ſlower to beleeve then the very divels, as S. Auguſtine ſaith.

Seneca in Oedip.

Claud. in Ruff. Atheiſts how worſe then divels. Aug. in ep. Johan. tract. 10.

The ſecond is ſo hardned in ſinne, ſo accuſtomed to his wicked waies, and ſo delighted with his owne workes, that hee likewiſe will know nothing, beleeve nothing, and feare nothing; but as Nero, when Seneca diſſwaded him from his villanies, and exhorted him ſo to demeane and carry himſelfe, ut facta ſuperi ſemper comprobent ſua; that the Gods might approve of his workes, anſwered like a dogged Atheiſt and a wicked wretch, ſtulte, verebor eſſe cum faciam, Deos, ô foole, doſt thou thinke, that I beleeve there be Gods, when I doe ſuch things? So theſe vile and wicked men will never beleeve theſe things, when they runne on in their ſinfull waies; for if they did, they would queſtionleſſe either feare more, or ſinne leſſe then they doe; and therefore I will not onely ſay with Saint Chryſoſtome, that he, qui delinquit volens, & furit ſponte dæmon eſt; which ſinneth willingly and offendeth freely is a divell, that is, no better then a divell in the ſhape of a man, or none other then a man in the nature of a divell; which is a moſt terrible cenſure of wicked men, that were created in the image of God, but have made themſelves not onely like the divell, but alſo the very ſonnes of the divell, as our Saviour teſtifieth of the wicked Iewes, you are of your father the divell; but I will alſo add to what Saint Chryſoſtome ſaith, that herein they ſhew themſelves worſe then the divels; becauſe the divels beleeve and tremble, but theſe men either beleeve not at all; or if they beleeve, then are they ſtill the worſe; becauſe they doe not tremble, when they know the truth, and yet will lie; they beleeve that God is juſt and terrible in his judgements, and yet they will not feare to commit the greateſt wickedneſſe.

Chryſoſt. in David. cap. tom. 1.

Wicked men never beleeve the truth.

Wicked men the children of the divell.

Ioh. 8. 44.

Wicked men wherein worſe then the divels.

2. As the divels, ſo wicked men may have this hiſtoricall faith, in a very full and ample manner, as you may ſee in Agrippa, to whom Saint Paul ſaith, King Agrippa, beleeveſt thou the Prophets? I know that thou beleeveſt; ſo a great many doe know and beleeve the whole Hiſtory both of the Old and New Teſtament, both of the Law and the Goſpell, and they are very expert to diſcourſe thereof, when they have the Scriptures, with the divell, at their fingers end; and yet the feare of God is excluded out of their hearts, and godlineſſe is quite baniſhed by the wickedneſſe of their lives, which are nothing els but Acheldama's fields of blood. And ſo much for the hiſtoricall faith.

2. Act. 26. 27.

2. Wicked men may have the hiſtoricall faith.

Many men moſt skillfull in Scriptures and yet wicked.

2. The faith of miracles, what it is.

2. The faith of miracles is a gift of God, whereby many men, eſpecially in the Primitive Church, when the Goſpell was firſt to be planted, were inabled to heale the ſicke, to raiſe the dead, or to doe ſome other the like miraculous work beyond the ordinary power of nature, or the abilities of any naturall cauſes. And for this faith, we know the wicked and reprobates have had the ſame, as well as the godly, as our Saviour ſheweth, when he tells us, that many ſhall come unto him at the laſt day, ſaying, open unto us, for wee have preached in thy name, and done many great workes in thy name, but he ſhall ſay unto them, I know you not, depart from me ye workers of iniquity; and the Apoſtle tells us that Antichriſt and his falſe Prophets ſhall come with all power, and ſignes, and lying wonders; and Saint John ſaith, that the beaſt, which came out of the earth, and is therefore wholly for the things of this world, ſhould doe great wonders, ſo that hee ſhould make fire to come downe from heaven on the earth in the ſight of men; and this perhaps is not onely litterally to be underſtood, but it may be, that by the fire from heaven, we may underſtand, that this earthly beaſt, (which hath all the honours and preferments of this world in his hand, and hath two hornes for two ſwords, the ſpirituall and the temporall, ſo that nothing can paſſe but by his meanes, and through his hands) ſhall cauſe many men to quench all that ſpirituall

Mat. 7. 22.

2 Theſſ. 2. 9.

Revel. 13. 13.

The myſticall interpretation of this place of the Revelation.

zeale

zeale and heavenly fire that was in them, and for the love of this world, the preferments that this beaſt beſtoweth upon them, to fall downe unto the earth, in the ſight of men, that is, naturall men, who can eaſily diſcerne and ſee, that ſuch and ſuch Saints which were zealous and Orthodoxe in their profeſſion, are now fallen and come downe from heaven unto the earth; becauſe they love the glory of this world more then the glory of God.

The zeale of many waxing cold. Ioh. 12.43.

And indeed I could produce you ſtore of ſuch heavenly ſtarres and great lights, in the firmament of Gods Church, that have beene ſwept downe from heaven by the Dragons tayle, when they would follow Palinurus iterne, and be juſt of his faith, which is moſt powerfull to ſteere all the preferment of the Church; a moſt lamentable caſe, and ſuch as deceiveth them that dwell on the earth, that is, earthly minded men, by the meanes of theſe miracles, and wonders, and ſtrange things, to ſee ſuch fires, which are indeed but ignes fatui, elfe-fires and exhalations, to fall downe unto the earth; And ſo much for the faith of miracles.

Deſire of preferment, how it bewitcheth many.

3. The temporary faith is a beliefe in Chriſt, and a truſt in the mercy of God for a ſeaſon, as our Saviour ſheweth in the parable of the ſower, where he tells us that he, which receiveth the ſeed into ſtony places, is he that heareth the Word, and anon with joy receiveth it; yet hath he not root in himſelfe, but dureth for a while, and when tribulation or perſecution ariſeth, becauſe of the Word, by and by he his offended, and becomes like one of the children of Ephraim, that being harneſſed and carrying bowes, turned themſelves backe in the day of battell, when there was moſt need of their aſſiſtance; and this faith indeed is but initium fidei, the beginning of faith, and a taſting rather then a digeſting of the grace of God; and therefore the hypocrites and worldlings may have this faith, as the Apoſtle ſheweth in the ſixt to the Hebrewes. And ſo much for the temporary faith; I will bee as briefe in it, as it is brieſe in Gods ſervice.

3. The temporary faith, and what it is.

Mat. 13.20, 21.

Pſal. 78.9.

Heb. 6.4.

4. The juſtifying faith, is a moſt firme perpetuall appropriation of the love and mercy of God, through the merits of Ieſus Chriſt, to every penitent heart and faithfull ſoule: and this faith is onely proper to Gods Elect; becauſe they doe not onely, credere Deum, beleeve that there is a God, & credere Deo, and beleeve this God, that he is true and juſt in all his waies; but they doe alſo, credere in Deum, place all their truſt, hope, comfort, and confidence in God, and that not onely for a time, but alſo continually, and conſtantly unto the end; becauſe God, qui fecit eos bonos, faciet etiam perſeverare in bono, which hath made them good, will make them alſo to perſevere in that goodneſſe unto the end, as Saint Auguſtine ſpeaketh; and this faith neither divels nor wicked men, that are reprobates, can ever have: they can never have the true, ſaving, juſtifying faith.

4. The iuſtifying faith, what it is.

Iuſtifying faith onely proper to the elect, and why

And by this that I have ſpoken; you may briefly obſerve the differences betwixt theſe foure kindes of faith; for, though ſome Divines doe thinke the difference to be, becauſe the faith of the divels and reprobates is no true faith, but a forged and a faigned faith, whereas the faith of the Elect is a right faith, and no faigned faith; which indeed can be no true diſtinction; becauſe as we have ſhewed before, this faith in its kinde is a true faith, & quicquid eſt, dum eſt, verè eſt, and whatſoever is, while it is, is truely ſo, as it is; the Schoolemen ſay the difference is, becauſe the faith of the divels and wicked men is fides informis, a formeleſſe faith; whereas the faith of the godly is fides formata, a faith that worketh by love, which is the forme and ſoule of faith; which alſo can be no right anſwer; becauſe I cannot imagine what kinde of faith that ſhould be, which doth want its forme, quæ dat eſſe rei, which gives the being of every thing, as the Philoſopher rightly ſpeaketh; and others thinke they differ herein, that the faith of the divels and reprobate men is extorta, ab ipſa rerum evidentia credere coacti, wreſted from them, being as it were compelled, in ſpite of their hearts, to beleeve thoſe things that they would not, that they love not, from the

The ſuppoſed differences betwixt the foreſaid kinds of faith.

1.

2. Thomas 2. 2. q. 5. art. 4. & Caietan, &c.

3. Thomas 2. 2. q. 5. art. 2. Bellar. de iuſtificat. l. 1. cap. 15.

inevitable evidence of thoſe things, that are infallibly ſeene; whereas the faith of the righteous is ſpontanea & libenter elicita, a moſt free and a willing faith, that doth moſt readily yeeld unto thoſe things, that are propoſed unto it; which anſwer likewiſe to me can give no ſufficient ſatisfaction; becauſe that, as the former are compelled to beleeve, per evidentiam ſignorum, by the evidence of thoſe ſignes, which cannot be denied; ſo are the later perſwaded to beleeve, per evidentiam Spiritus Sancti, by the teſtimony of the Holy Ghoſt, which cannot bee reſiſted, and which, againſt the nature of fleſh and blood, makes them to beleeve, what otherwiſe, without the ſweet motion of this good ſpirit, they would never nor could ever doe; yet this ſeemeth to me to be the true difference, betwixt the faith of the divels and of wicked men, and the faith of Gods Elect; that the former doe indeed credere Deum, & credere Deo, beleeve that there is a God, and that this God is good and juſt, and ſo, according as he is expreſſed in the Scriptures, in reſpect of his eſſence and attributes in generall, and no further; becauſe, that, although they know and beleeve him to be gracious, mercifull, ſlow to anger, and abundant in goodneſſe and truth, yet, by reaſon of their heart that cannot repent, they cannot beleeve their owne reconciliation with God, and that he is and will be ſuch a God unto them, as he is, and hath beene unto others; they cannot be perſwaded of this thing; ſo their faith underſtandeth God aright, as he is in himſelfe, but, apprehendeth not the love and favour of God, as they ought, unto themſelves; but the godly doe not onely beleeve all this, that they beleeve; but withall, they doe credere in Deum, that is, they doe beleeve that God is, and will be moſt mercifull unto their ſinnes, and moſt loving unto themſelves, through their Saviour and Mediator Ieſus Chriſt; and therefore they doe wholy relie upon his mercy, and place their whole comfort in Gods favour.

The true difference betwixt the faith of the divels, and of the elect. Bernard. de S. Andrea Euſeb. Emyſſ. de ſymb. ſect. 2.

Rom. 2. 5.

The defects of the faith of the reprobates.

What the true faithfull men do.

Ob. But againſt this it may be objected, that although the divels do not credere in Deum, place their truſt and confidence in God, to expect mercy and favour from him; yet you ſhall finde many wicked men doe ſo, and are many times more abſolute in their aſſurance of Gods love, then many others of Gods Elect are: and therefore this ſeemeth not to be the true difference betwixt the hiſtoricall and the juſtifying faith.

The wicked hope for mercy.

Sol. I anſwer that there is a great deale of difference betwixt

1. δοξαζειν, to thinke,
2. πιστευειν, to beleeve,

and I confeſſe the wicked may thinke, and have a ſtrong opinion, that they beleeve in God; but true faith in God they have none; for as heretickes are many times more obſtinate in their errors, then the Orthodoxe are conſtant in the truth; ſo theſe men may have ſtrong deluſions, whereby they deceive their owne ſoules, in thinking that they beleeve in God, when they doe not; for it is impoſſible that a wicked man, ſo long as he continueth wicked, ſhould credere in Deum, have this faith in God; becauſe this ſaving juſtifying faith hath theſe two inſeparable effects.

That the wicked have no true faith.

Two ſpeciall effects of the true juſtifying faith.
1. To apprehend Gods love.
2. To extend our love to God.

1. To apprehend the love of God.
2. To extend their love to God.

By the firſt, they place their whole confidence in God; and

By the ſecond, they doe their beſt indeavour to pleaſe God; for when they finde in themſelves, and are perſwaded by the effects of Gods love, that God loveth them; then preſently they are inflamed with the love of God, and, as Saint John ſaith, they love him, becauſe he loved them firſt; quia gratia gratiam parit; becauſe love is moſt powerfull to beget love; and therefore Saint Gregory ſaith, that quantum credimus, tantum amamus; & tantum quiq; operatur, quantum credit; how much we beleeve, ſo much we love; and how much we love, ſo much we worke; if we have great faith, we have great love; if great love, then much workes; and if no workes, then no love; and if no love, then no faith; let men ſay what they will, this is the truth of things; quia credere in Deum eſt credendo amare, & amando in eum ire; becauſe that to beleeve in God, is by beleeving to

1 Ioh. 4. 19.

Gregor. l. 6. hom. 28. in c. 40. 47. Exech.

Marke this.

Aug. tract. 9. Iohan.

love

love him, and by loving him to be made one with him; as Saint Auguſtine ſpeaketh; and therefore, whoſoever doth not the workes of God, doth not love God, (for if you love me keepe my commandements, ſaith our Saviour Chriſt) and whoſoever doth not love God, cannot be ſaid to beleeve in God.

Ioh. 14. 15.

And this point may be thus further cleered by this parable; A man that had three ſonnes, deceaſing, ſaid, ego lego hæreditatem meam ei, qui habet annulum meum pulchrum, in quo eſt petra pretioſiſſima contenta, quæ magnam habet virtutem diverſas ſanandi infirmitates, quo dicto diſceſſit, annulum illum in domo relinquens; I bequeath and give all my lands and inheritance unto him, which ſhall find my faireſt ring, wherein is contained a moſt pretious ſtone, which hath an unſpeakeable vertue of healing all kindes of diſeaſes, which ſaid, he died, and left the ſaid ring in his houſe; then the younger Sonne, herein wiſer then the other, tantum fecit quo annulum verſus ſe haberet, laboured onely how he might have this ring; but the other coveting the inheritance, did counterfeit the like rings, and ſo did lay claime unto the lands; and therefore the caſe being brought before the Iudge, and appearing at firſt ſight, to be very difficult, the Iudge bad them prove, which was the true ring, by the foreſaid vertues; and then, finding that the counterfeit rings had no vertue, when they could do nothing; but the third ring, by reaſon of the pretious ſtone that was in it, did heale many kindes of infirmities; the Iudge gave away the inheritance unto the younger, and then puniſhed the other moſt ſeverely for their impoſture.

The parable of the Father, which gave his inheritance to that ſon of his, which had his ring.

Now, to make Application of this unto our ſelves, Iſte pater cæleſtis eſt, annulus fides, petra Chriſtus, that Father is our heavenly Father, the ring is faith, & the pretious ſtone therein contained, is our Saviour Chriſt; and he that hath the true ring, that is, the right faith, can eaſily prove the ſame by the vertue and the effects thereof; that is, he can, as Saint Iames ſaith, ſhew his faith by his workes, and ſo he ſhall be ſure to get the inheritance of his Father; but if thy ring hath no vertue, that is, if thy faith hath no workes, then is thy faith but a dead faith, and the ring is but a counterfeit ring, an hypocriticall faith, which can never deceive our heavenly Iudge, but, as Iacob ſaid unto his mother, will bring a curſe upon us inſteed of a bleſſing.

The application of the parable.

Iames 2. 18.

Iames 2. 20.

Gen. 27. 12.

And therefore S. Peter, ſpeaking of this very point, ſaith, that wee ſhould give all diligence to add unto our faith, vertue; to vertue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; to temperance, patience; and to patience, godlineſſe; and to godlineſſe, brotherly kindneſſe; and to brotherly kindneſſe, charity; becauſe God, qui fecit te ſine te, non juſtificabit te ſine te, which hath made thee, without thee, will neither juſtifie thee nor ſave thee, without thee; that is, willing, deſiring, and co-operating the ſame together with the grace of God; and the reaſon is, becauſe that when God made us he found us nothing; but when he comes to impute the righteouſneſſe of his Sonne to us, for our juſtification, he finds us reaſonable creatures, which are, though not able of our ſelves to doe the leaſt good, yet capable to be inabled by Gods grace, to doe ſo much good, as both to imbrace that juſtification, which he offereth us, and alſo to practice thoſe workes of righteouſneſſe, which he requireth of us.

2 Pet. 1. 5, 6, 7.

Aug. de verbis Apoſtoli ſerm. 15.

The difference betwixt what wee are, and what wee were, when God created us.

And yet, this gives no hold to any Pelagian ſpirit to faſten the tenent of mans free will, concurring of it ſelfe, with the grace of God, to effect any worke acceptable unto God; Quia gratia ex nolentibus volentes facit; becauſe all our willingneſſe is from God, who makes the unwilling heart moſt ready to obey his will; and that not onely externa perſuaſione, by the force of outward doctrine, either of Law or Goſpell, ſounding to the eares of men, which can never worke upon their ſoules; but alſo interna operatione, by an inward, ſweet, ſecret, and ineffable operation of his bleſſed ſpirit, which doth worke in the hearts of men, non ſolum veras revelationes, ſed etiam bonas voluntates, not onely true revelations and apprehentions of truths, but alſo good intentions and deſires of good things; and ſo, voluntas humana non libertate conſequitur gratiam, ſed gratia potius libertatem; the will of man doth not by liberty obtaine grace, but doth rather

Aug. contra 2. epiſt. Pelag. l. 1. c. 20

Idem in lib. de grat. Chriſti, cap. 24

How the ſpirit of God worketh upon our wills.

How wee muſt work with grace.

by grace receive liberty; and then, being thus made free by grace, non quaſi dormientes, we ought not to be as ſleepers, or as men that had nothing to doe; but we ſhould give all diligence to lay hold on that, which is prepared for us, and to do thoſe things which are required of us; for as nature teacheth the ſucking child to draw the breaſt, when it is put into his mouth; ſo grace teacheth a Chriſtian man to do his beſt endeavour in the ſervice of God, when his paſſive will is made active, and his heart of ſtone is become an heart of fleſh; quia non ſicut in lapidibus inſenſatis, aut in his, in quorum natura, rationem & voluntatem non condidit Deus, ſalutem noſtram operatur; becauſe God worketh not ſalvation in us, as if he wrought the ſame in ſenſleſſe ſtones, or in creatures deſtitute of reaſon and will, but he worketh the ſame in a rationall man, whom he therefore injoyneth to labour, and yet not by the ſtrength of nature, but by the helpe of grace, not by the naturall power of our owne will, freely concurring with the work of grace, but by the ſupernaturall power of our renewed will, that is, inabled by grace to do whatſoever good it doth: and thus we worke, to get what Chriſt hath merited for us, and not to merit by what we work; becauſe, as S. Auguſtine ſaith, Sic agimus & agimur, & tum benè agimus, cum a bono agimur; thus we do, and are aſſiſted to do it; and we do good onely then, when we are not onely aſſiſted, but alſo inclined, moved, and acted by the good Spirit of God, to do the ſame; as the hand of a child doth write, when the hand of his Maſter guideth the ſame.

Idem cum Pelag. de peccat. merit. & remiſſ. l. 2. c. 3.

D. Burges in cauſ. gal. p. 18.

Aug. de verb. Apoſt. ſerm. 13.

And ſo much for the firſt of theſe three graces, faith.

2. Of hope, what it is

2. Having ſpoken of faith, we are now to treat of hope; and this is a patient expectation of thoſe things, that we believe to obtaine; and it is not onely inſeparably joyned unto faith, each of them having reſpect to the other, as the two Cherubims looked one towards the other upon the Mercy-ſeat, but there is alſo ſuch great affinity betwixt hope and faith, as that oftentimes the one is put for the other, and many times we can hardly diſcerne the one from the other; yet I find that theſe three do differ the one from the other in three reſpects;

Luther. in Gal. 3. 5.

Exod. 35. 20.

The differences betwixt faith and hope threefold.

1. Of object.
2. Of order.
3. Of office.

} For

1. In reſpect of their object.

1. The object of faith is good and bad; becauſe we believe there is a hell, as well as a heaven; and that there are Divels as well as Angels; and eternall torments, as well as everlaſting happineſſe; but the object of hope is onely good; becauſe we feare that which is evill, and we hope onely for that which is good, or at leaſt that, which we ſuppoſe to be good; and beſides, faith is of things paſt, things preſent, and things to come; becauſe we believe that the world was made, and ſhall have an end, that Chriſt was dead, is in heaven, and ſhall come to judgement; but we hope onely for ſuch things as are to come; for hope that is ſeene is no hope, ſaith the Apoſtle; and things that are paſt are irrevocable, and paſt hoping for.

We hope onely for good things.

Rom. 8. 24.

2. In reſpect of their order Heb. 11. 1.

2. In reſpect of order, faith is the ground and foundation of hope, as the Apoſtle ſheweth; and therefore, faith precedeth hope; and hope doth alwaies follow after faith; and if there be no faith, there can be no hope.

3. In reſpect of their offices.

3. In reſpect of their offices, faith tels us what we muſt believe; hope tels us how we muſt with patience tarrie and wait, to expect and looke for what we do believe.

The vaine hope of wicked men.

Heb. 6. 19.

Prov. 10.

And therefore, according to the nature and quality of our faith, ſo is the quality of our hope; becauſe a true and ſound hope can never be built upon a rotten and a fained faith; and therefore, though the wicked thinke they have the true hope, as an anchor of their ſoule, and do, in that reſpect, hope and looke for heaven, and heavenly things; yet, as the wiſe man ſaith, ſpes impiorum vaneſcit, their hope is but like a vapour, that will ſoone vaniſh, and prove like the untimely birth of a woman, that periſheth before it ſeeth the Sun, or like the chaffe, that the wind ſcattereth away from off the face of the earth; for though they do both appetere &

& expectare ſalutem, wiſh for ſalvation. and alſo hope to obtaine the ſame through Chriſt; yet becauſe the hope of a wicked man, which is no member of Chriſt, can never proceed from a lively faith in Chriſt, but rather from a ſtrong conceit and vaine preſumption; therefore the hope of the wicked is but a vaine hope, and no true hope in the world; becauſe the true hope, and the true faith are inſeparably joyned together; begotten, like twins, of the ſame ſeed, and nouriſhed both by the ſame ſubſtance.

Sap 5. Spes impij tanquam lanugo eſt, quæ a vento tollitur, & tanquam ſpuma gracilis, quæ a procella diſpergitur, & tanquam fumus, quis a vento diffuſus eſt.

Fides credit, ſpes & charitas orant, ſed ſine fide eſſe non poſſunt. Aug in Enchyrid.

And therefore, ſeeing hope is the greateſt comfort of a Chriſtian, the ſureſt anchor of the ſoule, as S. Paul cals it, to ſtay the ſame from ſinking into the gulf of all deſpaire, and, as the Poet ſaith,

Hæc Dea quam multos laqueo ſua colla ligantes,
Non eſt propoſita paſſa perire nece.

This is that onely goddeſſe, which remained on earth,

——cum fugerent ſceleratas numina terras;

When all the reſt did flie to heaven, to ſhun the wickednesſe of this world, and hath ever preſerved many a man from death; and the wicked have no hope, but onely ὁμώνυμον, as a painted man is ſaid to be a man, and no otherwiſe; it is apparent, what a miſerable ſtate and condition, every wicked man doth live in; and it is no wonder that they deceive themſelves; becauſe, as Euripides ſaith, πολλ' ἐλπίδες ψεύδουσιν ἀλόγους βροτούς, raſh hopes, for the moſt part, deceive all men.

Spes in æternitatem animum erigit, & ideireo nulla mala, externa quæ tolerat, ſentit. Greg. in Moral.

The miſerable ſtate of the wicked.

Euripid. in Pruſſ. lau.

And ſo much for the ſecond of theſe three graces, hope.

3. Having ſpoken of faith and hope, we are now come to treat of charity; and that is, rectiſſima animi affectio, qua diligitur Deus propter ſe, & proximus propter Deum; the pureſt, righteſt, and the beſt affection of the ſoule, whereby we love God for his owne ſake, and our neighbours for Gods ſake, as S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh; and this grace is onely proper unto the elect; for though the bruit beaſts may have amorem, a kind of loue and liking one to another, and all other men may have dilectionem, a more rationall love, and a farre purer kind of affection among them, than any other irrationall creatures can poſſibly have; yet none can have this grace of charity, but onely thoſe that are Chriſtians, not onely in name, but in deed and verity; becauſe charity is not onely optimum amoris genus, the flower of love, the choiſeſt kind thereof; but it is alſo a ſpeciall gift and grace of Gods Spirit, and the chiefeſt fruit of faith and hope, which none but the elect and the godly have.

3. Of charity, what it is. Aug. de doctrina Chriſtiana.

Charity proper unto the elect onely.

Chryſ. Serm. de charitate.

And therefore, S. Auguſtine ſaith, that habere omnia Sacramenta, & malus eſſe poteſt, habere autem charitatem, & malus eſſe non poteſt; a man may receive all the Sacraments, and be a wicked man, yea a reprobate man; but he that hath true charity, cannot be a wicked man, cannot be a reprobate man; and S. Paul in this very Chapter ſheweth as much; for he proveth, that all things without charity are nothing, and that he which hath this, hath all things; and S. Auguſtine confirmeth the ſame, ſaying, Si deſit charitas, fruſtra habentur cætera; ſi adſit, rectè habentur omnia; if charity be wanting, all the graces we have will availe us nothing; but if charity be with us, then all the reſt are right; Quia charitas eſt, quæ vincit omnia, & ſine qua, non valent omnia; becauſe charity is that vertue, and that grace, which overcommeth all things, and without charity, with all the graces we have, we ſhall overcome nothing, but rather be overcom'd of all things: and what ſhall I ſay more? or what can any man ſay more? To write Iliads after Homer is to praiſe the ſame after S. Paul.

The praiſe and excellency of charity. Aug de laude charitatis.

1 Cor. 13 per tot.

Idem de doctrina Chriſtiana.

But to deſcend to this point more particularly, you muſt note that charity is taken two ſpeciall wayes.

Charity taken two wayes.
1. Largely.
2. Strictly.

1. Largely, for our love both to God and man;
2. Strictly, for ſome one part or office of charity, as ſpecially theſe three.
   1. To interpret things in the beſt ſenſe, when they are doubtfull.
   2. To relieve the poore members of Chriſt, when they are in neceſſity.
   3. To remit all thoſe offences that are done againſt us: for

1. To interpret all doubtfull things in the beſt ſenſe.

Piſo res perijt, diſſo ſalva remanſit.

How apt we are to believe lies of our neighbours

Sobrius eſto, & memineris diffidere: Paucis è malis ſi. dus adeſt animus. Epicarmus.

The care of the godly.

A good conſcience our beſt defence.

2. To relieve the poore.

Charity, how expreſſed by the ancients.

1. Like a child.

2. Like a naked child. Mat. 6. 3.

3. With a heart in his hand.

2 Cor 9. 7.

4. Giving honey unto a Bee.

5. To a Bee without wings.

3. To forgive injuries.

The horrible ingratitude of man.

How implacable our anger is. Mat. 5. 15.

1. To omit charity, taken in the largeſt ſenſe; when we ſee things we underſtand not, and heare of things we are not ſure of, then charity bids us, and wiſdome teacheth us, not to be haſty to believe all that we heare, quia ſtultus credit omni verbo, becauſe he is a foole that believeth every word, when as the Poet ſaith, ——fama malum, fame is but an evill relater,

Tam ficti pravi q̃, tenax quam nuncia veri;

And it doth oftener carrie about lies than truths. Yet now we are ſo farre from charity, to believe well till we find the truth, that we tranſgreſſe the rule of equity, and ſpeake evill of them that deſerve well; and what is become of our charity here? and yet I ſay not this, that honeſt men ſhould beg your favour; for I hope each one of them that knoweth the world, will ſay with the Prophet, ſuper cuſtodiam meam ſtabo; I will ſtand upon my watch, to look unto my good name, as well as I can; and if, for all this, they be traduced, they will anſwer with Plato, when his friends told him, how he was ſlandered by the wicked, at nos ſic vivemus, ut illis fides non habeatur, but we will endeavour to live ſo, that no wiſe man will believe theſe lewd fellowes: and when our conſciences do cleare us, we need not be troubled at any thing that the wicked ſpeake of us; for the want of this charity will be more dangerous unto them, that believe thoſe wicked men, than all the miſchiefe that they can do to godly men: Quia, ut malam conſcientiam non ſanat præconium, ita bonam non vulnerat convitium; becauſe that, as no flattery can heal or help an evill conſcience, ſo no detraction nor malice can much hurt an upright heart; murus aheneus eſto, nil conſcire ſibi.

2. When we ſee any poore man in need and neceſſity, then charity requires that we ſhould relieve him; and how this charity ſhould be extended towards the poore, Pierius, as I remember, ſets it downe in his Hyeroglyphicks, where the ancients painted charity like a naked child, with a heart in his hand, giving honey unto a bee that wanted wings.

1. Like a child; becauſe a charitable man ſhould be humble and meeke, like Moſes, and not churliſh and dogged, like Nabal, to give a little almes, and ill words, that do more grieve the heart of a diſtreſſed man, than ſuch a relieſe doth him good.

2. Like a naked child, becauſe the charitable man muſt not give his almes for oſtentation; but his left hand muſt not know, what his right hand doth; and therefore, I approve not thoſe that keepe a catalogue of their good deeds; for they ſhould be written in the ſands, to be forgotten, leaſt they ſhould make us proud; but the good deeds done unto us ſhould be written in marble, for ever to be remembred, leaſt we ſhould prove unthankefull.

3. With a heart in his hand; becauſe the heart and the hand of a charitable man muſt go together; and whatſoever he doth, he muſt do it with a willing mind; becauſe the Lord loveth a chearefull giver.

4. Giving honey unto a bee, not to a drone; that is, relieving thoſe poore men, that will labour, but not thoſe lazie beggars, that will take no paines; of whom the Apoſtle ſaith, They that will not worke, let them not eat.

5. To a bee without wings, that is, to ſuch as would flie, and would gather honey, if they were able; but the want of wings, that is, of ſtrength, health or other the like abilities, makes them unable to helpe themſelves; and therefore charity ſtretcheth forth her hand to relieve them.

3. When any injury is offered unto us, either in word or deed; then charity tels us, we ſhould remit it; for, though naturally we forget the ſervices and good offices that are done unto us; wiſhing them rather out of being, that have done ſuch things unto us, than that they ſhould remaine in our ſight, as continuall demonſtrations of our unthankefulneſſe; and on the other ſide, as the Poet ſaith, ſcribit in marmore læſus, if we be never ſo little offended, we will write thoſe ſmall faults in marble, and thoſe pettie treſpaſſes will never out of our indocible memories; yet our Saviour tels us, that, if we forgive not all treſpaſſes, done unto us by men, God will not forgive us our treſpaſſes, that we commit againſt him; him; and therefore, in our daily prayer, he teacheth us to ſay continually, forgive us our treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that treſpaſſe againſt us. But you muſt note there be two ſorts of men that offend us.

Two ſorts of men that offend us.

1. Some do it ſimply and ignorantly.
2. Others ſpitefully and maliciouſly.

For in throwing a ſtone at a bird, I may hit my friend, and intending to do a good office, I may perchance do that, which will be taken ill; theſe are offences of infirmities, and the errours of our love, not a love of errours; and therefore, they ought the ſooner to be remitted, the eaſier to be forgotten; becauſe we ſee they are miſtakings, and not ſinnes of malicious wickedneſſe; yea the miſtakings of our friends that love us, and not the ſpitefulneſſe of our foes, that hate us; and if we be maliciouſly wronged, yet we muſt forgive, if we would have God to forgive us: and I beſeech God to give us his grace to do the one, and to obtaine the other. And ſo much of theſe three graces poſitively conſidered.

All offences muſt be forgiven.

Object. But here, before I ſpeake of theſe three graces comparatively, it may be ſome will wonder, why the Apoſtle doth not ſay, truth remaines, as well as faith; eſpecially if we conſider, that ſometimes faith is taken for truth, and truth is that vertue, without which, men can hardly live one among another; farewell all commerce, and let us bid adieu to all charity, and abandon all love, if truth doth not remaine among us.

Why the Apoſtle ſaith not, truth remaines.

Sol. I anſwer, that although, as Zerobabel ſaith, truth is great, and will prevaile at laſt, yet it doth not alwayes appeare, but, as the Prophet ſaith, corruit in platea veritas, truth is fallen downe in the ſtreet, and for a great while, trampled under feet; and this may be made plaine unto you by this ſtory; truth for a time was in great honour, but through the envy of her enemies, ſhe was diſgraced, and at laſt baniſhed out of the City; where, ſitting upon a dunghill, ſad and diſcontented, ſhe eſpieth a chariot, attended with a great troupe, comming towards her; and ſhe preſently perceived who it was, her greateſt enemy, the ladie lie, which was clad in changeable coloured taffaty, and having her croach covered with clouds, of all the colours of the raine-bow, ſhe had impudency and hypocriſie, on the one ſide, ſlander and detraction, on the other ſide, to wait upon her, and perjury went to uſher her, whitherſoever ſhe turned; her troupe conſiſted of many more; and when ſhe came to truth, ſhe commanded her to be carried, as a captive, for her greater pomp, after her traine; at night ſhe fared well, and would want nothing, but when morning came, ſhe would be gone, and pay for nothing; affirming, ſhe had diſcharged all the reckoning over-night; and her attendants, being examined, did all juſtifie their lady; but onely truth, that confeſt indeed there was nothing paid; and for her labour, ſhe was compelled by lady lie, to pay for all: the next night, the lady did the like, but withall committed a great outrage; and being, for the ſame, brought before the Iudge, impudency and hypocriſie began to juſtifie their lady, perjury cleared her, and ſlander and detraction laid all the fault on poore truth, who now muſt ſuffer death, for that which it never did; the Iudge demands what ſhe had to ſay for her ſelfe, and ſhe could ſay nothing, but not guilty, neither had ſhe any friend, that would plead for her; at laſt ſteps up time, a grave counſellour, and an eloquent advocate, and deſires leave of the Iudge, to ſift and ſearch out the matter a little better; leaſt the innocent might ſuffer for the offendour; and time, obtaining his requeſt, began to diſpell the clouds from the ladies chariot, and then to unmask her ugly face, and take off the veiles of all her followers, and at laſt, he did fully find, the lady lie was guilty of all the villany, and poore truth, after her ſuffering, was, by the helpe of time, onely cleared; and, if it had not beene for time, ſhe had beene executed.

Truth often doth not appeare.

The ſtory of truth and the lady lie.

The attendants of the lady lie.

Truth, how handled.

Time the onely friend of truth.

And therefore, ſeeing truth is oftentimes abuſed, and baniſhed, and made to come behind lies and falſhoods, while they are believed and preferred before it; yea and ſometimes truth is executed and buried, when it cannot have time to cleare it, untill it be too late to ſave it; the Apoſtle doth not ſay, now remaineth truth;

truth; becauſe truth is often baniſhed; and becauſe indeed, he ſpeakes of thoſe graces, which give being to every Chriſtian, and without which we cannot be Chriſtians, of which ſort, truth manifeſted, is none; becauſe I can beleeve in Chriſt, hope for heaven, and love mine enemies though I be belyed; but without theſe I can be no Chriſtian.

2. The three graces handled comparatively.

2. Having ſpoken of theſe three graces poſitively, each one by it ſelfe, we are now to ſpeake of them comparatively, being conferred together; becauſe the Apoſtle ſaith, μείζων δὲ τούτων, which verbatim, word by word, is, the greater of theſe, as the vulgar reads it, and not the greateſt, as our laſt engliſh tranſlation, and Theodore Beza reads it; but it is a greeke analoge, whereby μείζων is put for μεγίστη, the comparative degree for the ſuperlative; for the greateſt of theſe is charity; but you muſt underſtand how and in what reſpects; for it is not ſimply the greateſt, but onely κατά τι, in ſome reſpects; and therefore you may obſerve that faith may be rightly ſaid to be the greateſt of theſe three graces, in theſe three reſpects.

Faith greater then charity in three reſpects.

For
1. Of cauſality.
2. Of priority.
3. Of propriety.

1. In reſpect of cauſality. 1 Ioh. 4.19.

1. Faith is the cauſe of charity; for we love him, becauſe we beleeve that hee loved us firſt, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh; and you know that, cauſa major eſt cauſato, the cauſe is ever greater then the effect; and therefore Saint Auguſtine ſaith, ſicut in radice arboris, nulla apparent pulchritudinis ſpecies; & tamen quicquid eſt pulchritudinis in arbore, ex illa procedit; ita ex humanitate, quicquid meriti, quicquid beatitudinis anima ſuſceptura eſt, ex fidei fundamento procedit; as no ſigne nor ſhew of beauty, doth appeare in the roote of a tree; and yet what beauty or faireneſſe ſoever is in the whole tree, it doth all proceed from that roote; ſo what goodneſſe, or what merit or happineſſe ſoever, the ſoule of man receiveth from the manhood, it doth all ſpring and proceed from the foundation of faith; and Saint Paul calleth faith ὑπόστασις, the ground, pillar, or foundation, that beareth up the whole frame of this ſpirituall building.

Faith the roote of all graces.

Subſiſtentia. Heb. 11.1.

2. In reſpect of priority.

2. As faith is greater then other graces, in reſpect of cauſality, (which yet you muſt underſtand, not as principall and primarie, but ſecondary and mediate, as the liver may be ſaid to feed the veines) ſo in reſpect of priority, it is before all other graces, not in regard of time, becauſe all graces are infuſed together, but in reſpect of exerciſe and orderly dependance of the one upon the other, as Alexander Hales well obſerveth; for as the fire and the light thereof, do both appeare in time together; and yet in order of nature, there is a priority betweene themſelves; and the fire is before the light, becauſe the light is cauſed by the fire; ſo faith is before other graces; becauſe all other graces doe flow from it, and depend upon it.

Alexand. Hales p. 4. q. 12. in 3. ar. 2.

All graces flow from faith.

Without faith nothing is don well.

Aug. de fide ad Petrum.

And this ſheweth, that he which ſeemes moſt vertuous, and is incredulous, wanting faith, is like a man that gallopeth ſpeedily, but erroneouſly; very faſt, but out of his way: and therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith, ſi bona videbantur opera tua, antequam crederes, currebas quidem, ſed præter viam, atq; ita errabas potius quam perveniebas; if thy workes ſeemed to be good, before thou didſt beleeve in Chriſt, thou didſt runne indeed, but beſides thy way; and ſo thou didſt but find a way to runne away from God, and the faſter thou runneſt the further thou wandereſt from thy God.

Ob. But againſt this, Bellarmine diſtinguiſheth, that a man without faith may do a good worke, quoad ſubſtantiam operis, in reſpect of the ſubſtance of the worke, as an infidell may preſerve the life of his neighbour; but this worke is not ſo good, as to merit any thing at the hands of God; becauſe it proceeded not from faith.

The beſt worke without faith, not acceptable unto God.

Sol. I anſwer, that this is moſt true; becauſe the beſt worke of the moſt faithfull man, Noah, Daniel, or Iob, can merit nothing; but the other is as falſe; Quia intentio facit bonum opus, & fides dirigit intentionem; becauſe our intention muſt muſt make the action good, and faith muſt be the guide to direct our intentions; and therefore Saint Auguſtine doth moſt rightly ſtigmatize the beſt workes of the moſt vertuous infidels, to be nothing els but ſplendida peccata, glittering ſins; for, though the morall goodneſſe of the heathens was no doubt acceptable unto God, as it bare any ſtampe of his own goodneſſe; ſo the temperance, valour, chaſtity, of Ariſtides, Cato, Scipio, Lucretia, and the like, was farre more pleaſing unto God, then the rapine, luxury, and luſt of Sardanapalus, Nero, Caligula, Meſſalina, and the like miſcreants of this world; and their vertues no queſtion procured many temporall bleſſings unto them, and what good things els I know not; yet ſeeing the law of God commands not onely the ſubſtance, but alſo the circumſtance of every acceptable act; it is moſt apparant that no action of an incredulous unbeleeving man can be free from ſinne; becauſe their perſons are unholy, their conſciences defiled, their purpoſes crooked, and their beſt intentions tending to ſome by-reſpects and ſelfe-conſiderations.

Aug. in princip. expoſ. ep. ad Rom.

The morall vertues of the heathens, how farre acceptable unto God.

And wherein vitious.

3. Faith is greater then the other graces, in reſpect of propriety; becauſe faith doth more good to the owner, then charity doth; for by faith we are ingraffed and united unto Chriſt, by faith our hearts are purified from ſinne, and without faith, it is impoſſible to pleaſe God; and therefore, as faith without charity is dead, ſo charity without faith is ſinne; and as Saint Paul here ſheweth the excellencie of charity, ſo in the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes, he ſets downe the incomparable praiſe of faith.

3. In reſpect of propriety.

Faith doth more good to the owner then charity doth.

Heb. 11. 6.

Heb. 11. per totum.

But, as faith, in theſe reſpects, excells all other graces; ſo on the other ſide, charity is greater then faith in theſe three reſpects.

Charity greater then faith in three reſpects.

For
1. Latitudinis, of extent.
2. Perſpicuitatis, of perſpicuitie.
3. Continuationis, of duration.

1. As faith is more profitable unto our ſelves that have it, ſo our charity is more beneficiall unto others that receive it; quia fidei eſt accipere bona oblata, charitatis diſtribuere bona propria; becauſe it is the propertie of faith to receive the good that is offered us, but it is the office of charity, with open hands, to give and diſtribute our owne goods; and therefore, as faith doth more good unto our ſelves, ſo doth charity more good unto our neighbours; faith being a private grace, charity publique, and in that reſpect greater then faith.

1. In reſpect of extent.

Charity doth more good then faith.

2. Charity is more perſpicuous then our faith; becauſe faith is inward in the heart, and doth exerciſe her offices within, by apprehending Gods promiſes and applying them unto our ſoules; but charity is outward in our workes, and doth practice her duties without, by extending her helpe and reliefe unto the needie; and therefore Saint Iames ſpeaking of faith, ſaith, ſhew me thy faith by thy workes, that is, by the workes of charity, which are ſeene; and Saint Paul ſaith, that the true faith worketh by love, and ſo ſheweth it ſelfe by that, which may bee ſeene; and in this reſpect alſo charity is greater then faith.

2. In reſpect of perſpicuitie.

Charity ſooner ſeene then faith.

Iames 2. 18.

Gal 5. 6.

3. It is greater in continuance, in reſpect of duration; for though now remaine, Faith, Hope, and Charity, theſe three; yet, hereafter, when we ſhall lay downe this body of fleſh, and ſhall ſee God face to face; then faith and hope ſhall be no more, we ſhall have no uſe of them, when we ſhall enjoy the things we hoped for; but our love and charity ſhall ſtill remaine and be made more perfect then ever it was; we ſhall love God for ever, and love one another without loathing, without envie, without the leaſt ſpice of uncharitableneſſe; and thus alſo, charity is greater then faith, in reſpect of duration; and ſo Saint Chryſoſtome doth expound this place, πῶς ἂν μεῖζον ἡ ἀγάπη τὰ ἐκείνα ὑπερβαίνουσα; and ſo Saint Auguſtine and divers others, ſay, charity is the greater, becauſe this continueth increaſed and perfected, when the other graces are ceaſed and departed. And ſo you ſee how charity is the greater.

3. In reſpect of continuance.

Charity continueth, and is perfected in heaven.

Chryſoſt. in 1 Cor. hom. 34. Aug. de doct. chriſt. l. 1. c. 38.

But here, by reaſon of this compariſon, and the precedency that is given unto charity, I am to meete with two ſpeciall objections.

Two objections riſing from the compariſon of theſe graces.

Ob. 1. If charity be greater then faith; then charity doth juſtifie us rather then Rhemiſt. in hunc loc. & D. Biſhop in ſimulo de iuſtificat.

then faith; or at leaſt faith cannot juſtifie us without charity.

To this we may anſwer many waies; as,

How, and in what reſpect faith juſtifieth us.

Sol. 1. That we are not juſtified, in reſpect of the greatneſſe or the goodneſſe of any vertue that is in us, whatſoever it be; for we are not juſtified by faith, by reaſon of the excellencie or worth of faith; becauſe the ſame is an invaluable grace, and a vertue of an ineſtimable worth; but becauſe it is as the hand that layeth hold on Chriſt, which doth onely juſtifie us in the ſight of God; becauſe faith, as it is a vertue or a certaine worke of the underſtanding and will, is found too weake, to make us righteous before the tribunall throne of God; but as it is an inſtrument, that layeth hold upon the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, to apply the ſame unto our ſoules, it is onely ſaid, and ſo alone found ſufficient, to juſtifie us in the ſight of God.

Not as it is a vertue, but as an inſtrument.

Sol. 2. I ſay, that this argument is but very weake; for, a Prince is better then a Peaſant; therefore he can plow better then the Peaſant; a man is better then a horſe; therefore he can runne faſter then a horſe; a piece of gold is better then a knife; therfore it will cut better then a knife, and ſo forth; theſe are non conſequentia, ſuch as every child can diſcerne the weakeneſſe thereof; becauſe the goodneſſe or meliority and betterneſſe of any thing, doth not make it any whit the better able to doe the office or the ſervice of another thing; and therefore, though charity were ſimply and in all reſpects better then faith; yet doth it not follow, that it ſhould therefore juſtifie us rather then faith; becauſe he that is beſt, cannot beſt performe the office of an inferiour.

He that is beſt, cannot beſt performe the office of another.

Sol. 3. I ſay that although charity ſhould be never ſo great, never ſo good, and never ſo excellent a grace of God; yet could it never juſtifie us in the ſight of God; for if it did, then it muſt be either

{1. Legally, 2. Evangelically.} But

That charity can no waies juſtifie us.

1. Not legally.

1. Charity cannot legally juſtifie us; becauſe it is not any one vertue, though the beſt and greateſt, but the whole fulfilling of the law, that can thus juſtifie us before God; for thou ſhalt continue in all things, that are written in the booke of the law, for to doe them; and curſed is he that continueth not in all things, ſaith the Lord; but in many things we ſinne all, ſaith the Apoſtle, & ſemel inſanivimus omnes; and therefore charity, though it ſhould be yeelded to be the greateſt of all vertues, and the beſt of all Gods graces; yet could it never legally juſtifie us in the ſight of God.

Levit. 19 37. Deut. 27. 26. Iames 2. 10. & c. 3. 2.

Ob. But you will object, that the Apoſtle ſaith, charity is the fulfilling of the law; therefore it may legally juſtifie us.

Rom. 13. 10.

Sol. I anſwer that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh this, either de charitate conſummata, of perfect charity; which, though it ought to be ſo, yet is our charity never ſo in this life; or els he ſpeaketh de impletione inchoata, of that inchoate fulfilling of the law, which all the faithfull have in deſire and in ſome meaſure, in reſpect of all the commandements of God; but this inchoate impletion of the law can never juſtifie us before God, untill we be juſtified by faith in the Sonne of God; becauſe the judgement of God is according to truth and right; and therefore God will never perfectly juſtifie us, but by a perfect righteouſneſſe, which can be none other then the righteouſneſſe of Ieſus Chriſt.

God will never perfectly juſtifie us by an imperfect righteouſnes.

Rom. 2. 2.

2. Not Evangelically.

2. Charity cannot Evangelically juſtifie us; becauſe evangelically, the greater vertue, whatſoever it be, as the greater vertue, doth not juſtifie us; but that vertue, which hath the faculty of juſtifying, and whoſe office it is to juſtifie us; and ſo, though Charity may be ſaid to juſtifie us, ſo farre forth as we can be juſt by inherent righteouſneſſe, which is the fruit of charity; yet, becauſe, this righteouſneſſe is too weake and too inſufficient to juſtifie us before the judgement ſeat of God, which requireth truth in the moſt inward parts, and will not juſtifie the leaſt ſtaine of ſinne; faith muſt here lay hold upon the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, to impute the ſame to us, that wee may with boldneſſe ſtand before the face of God, and ſay, we are ſure this righteouſneſſe will ſerve our turne, to juſtifie us;

The beſt inherent righteouſneſſe, too weake to juſtifie us.

or

or els, thou must condemne thy sonne, and find fault with thine own righteousnes.

*Ob.*2. They doe object, that when faith doth faile, yet charity doth remaine greater, surer, and perfecter in heaven, then it can be here on earth; therefore the offices of charity do still remaine; but the chiefest duty of charity is to pray for us; therefore the Saints in heaven doe most certainely pray for us, that are here on earth.

Whether the Saints pray for us.

*Sol.*1. To this Ianswer, That the duties and offices of charity are manifold, whereof some remaine in heaven, as to love and wish well to all, that love God, or that God loveth; but other offices of love and charity, whose causes and occasions are at an end and finished, shall cease in heaven, and be no more in practise, as to releeve the poore, to visit the sicke, to instruct the ignorant, and the like; and therefore, though some offices of charity doe remaine in heaven; yet that doth not prove, that this office remaineth, that they should pray for us; or, if it should; then

Some offices of charity remaine in heaven, and some not.

*Sol.*2. I answer, That the Saints should pray in generall for all the Elect, and for the promulgation of the Gospell, and the happinesse of Christ his Church, we do not denie; we will easily grant it, and as willingly beleeve it; but that they should pray for this or that man in particular, this Text will never prove it, nor any, that I could yet meet withall.

How farre the Saints in heaven doe pray for them that are on earth.

But suppose their knowledge were so great, that they knew both what we doe and what we say unto them, and that their charity were as great, to make prayers and intercessions to God for us: what is all this, to perswade us to pray to them? for we are commanded to call upon God in every place; and we have neither precept nor practise to pray to any Saint departed in any place; Indeed Celsus said, it could not be displeasing to the supreme god, if any man did make prayers and supplications unto the Daemons, as to his friends; but what was Celsus, but an heretique, and what were the Daemons but the divels? S. Augustine tells us that the Platoniques taught the same things, that because no god hath any medling with man, therefore the Daemons doe present the prayers of men unto the gods, and returne backe againe the answers of the gods unto their petitions: and shall we, that are Christians, think it any glory in us, to imitate the Gentiles? or those Christians, that being lately converted from Paganisme to Christianity, had not quite purged all heathenish drosse from their profession? by no meanes; but we ought rather to deplore their unwary oversight, when they diverted the service of their gods, into an unmeasurable devotion towards the Martyrs; for S. Augustine saith, if S. Paul were an intercessour, the other Apostles would be so likewise; and by this meanes, there should be many intercessours, which could not agree with that, which is said by S. Paul, that there is but one Mediator betwixt God & man, even the man Christ Iesus: and S. Cyril saith, if we would have the Father to grant our requests, we must pray in the name of our Saviour Christ; and therefore Epiphanius reproveth the invocation of Saints as a vile heresie; and so the Melevitane and the Aphricane Counsell have condemned the same; and if you look into S. Ambrose in his book of Isaac and blessed life, you shall find a very excellent saying, to prove that we are onely to pray to God, and to offer our prayers unto God through Iesus Christ. And there is great reason for it, that we should onely pray to God; for we may be sure, none loves us better then he doth, none is readier to heare us, none is abler to helpe us then he is; and though his Majesty is great, able to affright the mightiest Angell, if we look upon our sins; yet his lenity is as great and his humility no lesse, to intertaine the poorest worme, if we come unto him with any true repentance for our sins; and for the Saints deceased, I do not know how we can ascribe so much knowledge unto them, as to understand our wants, so much power, as to be able to helpe us, and so many other super-excellent attributes, that they must needs have, if they can heare our prayers and procure our requests, but we shall deifie them so farre, as thereby to vilifie our selves so much, that we shall be little better then plaine Idolaters, when we ascribe that especiall worship of the Creator unto his creature; and therefore we should ever only pray to God.

Origen contra Celsum. l.8.in.2.

Aug. de Civit. Dei l.8.c.18.

The heathens prayed to their Heroes departed, as Thucidides saith.

So did some Christians lately converted pray to the Martyrs.

Aug. confess. l.10. c.42.

1 Tim 2.5.

Cyrillus in Iohan. l.16 & 7.

Epiphan to.3.l.3. heresi 59.

Vide the threefold conformity. p.220.

Why we should only pray to God.

The Saints not to be prayed unto.

And ſo much for theſe three divine graces, Faith, Hope, and Charity; God worke them all in our hearts, and give us grace, that we may all beleeve in him, hope for him, and perfectly love him, that ſo we may come to live with him, in that kingdome, which he hath prepared for us, through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord, To whom with the Father and the Holy Spirit, three perſons and one onely Wiſe, Eternall, and moſt Gratious GOD, bee all Glory, and Praiſe, and Dominion, and all that is worthy to be aſcribed to him, both now and for evermore

Amen, Amen.

IEHOVÆ LIBERATORI.

THE FOOLISH BVILDERS.

MATTH. 7. 26, 27.

And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand:

And the raine descended, and the flouds came, and the wind blew upon that house, and it fell, and great was the fall of it.

OVr blessed Lord and Saviour Iesus Christ, the first and best Preacher that ever was; for he preached first in Paradise, The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpents head, and he preached in Iewrie so excellently and so heavenly, that all men wondered at the gracious words, which proceeded out of his mouth; his very enemies confessing, that never man spake so as he did; that is, so powerfully, so learnedly, so sweetly, so profitably, and so discreetly as he did, saith Hugo Cardinalis. Yet, as he had as well malicious interpreters, as religious admirers of his actions, so he had both good and bad hearers of his Sermons.

Gen. 3. 15. Hugo Cardinal. in Ioh. 7.

Christ had two sorts of hearers. 1. Good. 2. Bad.

1. The good attentively heard him, faithfully believed him, and most dutifully obeyed him.

2. The bad heard him, but they mock'd him, and believ'd him not; or if they believ'd his sayings to be true, yet they followed them not in their doings; but they heard his words and did them not.

And our Saviour decyphereth and expresseth to us the qualities of both these kinds of hearers, by this excellent simile of two sorts of builders, { 1. Wise. 2. Foolish.

Two sorts of builders. 1. Wise 2. Foolish.

{ 1. The wise built upon a rocke, and their building stood.
{ 2. The foolish built upon the sand, and their building fell.

And I have chosen to treat of the last at this time; that is, the assimilation or likening of the bad hearers to the foolish builders: But whosoever heareth these my words, &c. Wherein two things are observable.

1. Of the fooliſh builders.

1. Touching the fooliſh builders.
2. Touching the evill hearers.

For the firſt point, we muſt note theſe two things. 1. Who are the builders. 2. What is their building.

And both theſe points are to be handled 1. Literally. 2. Myſtically.

1. Literally.

1. The literall interpretation of this text is very plaine; for

1. The builder.

1. By the builder we are to underſtand, not the Maſon or Carpenter that layeth the frame, but any one that procureth any one of theſe, to make and erect an houſe for himſelfe.

2. The building.

2. In the compoſing and the building of that houſe, we are to note theſe two ſpeciall things.

1. An admirable building. 2. A lamentable ſucceſſe. } And

1. In the building we muſt conſider 1. Fundamentum. 2. Complementum. 1. The foundation 2. The perfection } thereof.

1. The foundation

1. The foundation of this building is ſaid to be the ſands; for quantity, much in ſubſtance, many in number; yet each one ſo little a graine, as not big enough to ſuſtaine a nut, much leſſe any fundamentall ſtone; and therefore, though for quality, they be moſt tractable, facile, and eaſie to be wrought upon; ſmooth to be handled, and faire to behold, of the beſt forme, without labour, without hewing; yet for uſe they are moſt unprofitable.

Foure properties of ſands.

Videlicet 1. Worthleſſe. 2. Fruitleſſe. 3. Diſcoherent. 4. Unſtable. } For ſo S. Chryſoſtome ſaith, arena eſt terra ſterilis, minuta, & grana ejus ſibi non conveniunt, ita innumerabilis eſt.

1. Worthleſſe.

1. The ſands are worth little or nothing; becauſe they ſerve to little or no uſe, as being fit neither to feed us, nor to cloath us, nor yet to preſerve us from the violence either of heat or cold.

2. Fruitleſſe.

2. They are fruitleſſe; becauſe (as the Philoſopher ſaith) tum propter defectum caloris & humoris, tum propter dominium ſiccitatis & frigoris, omnis fructus expertes ſunt; there want of heat and moyſture, and there exceſſe of cold and drineſſe makes them ſo barren, that they bring forth no increaſe, and yeeld no benefit of themſelves; whereupon the proverbe grew, that a fruitleſſe worke is like the plowing of the ſand, to no profit, after all our labour.

3. Diſcoherent.

3. They are incongruous, and can never be joyned or cemented together, to make any ſolid ſubſtance of any quantity; Quia ab omni lutea viſcoſitate abſolvuntur; becauſe of their ſmalneſſe, roundneſſe, and drineſſe, as Ariſtotle ſaith, whence the Latines called them arenæ ab ariditate, ſaith Geminianus.

Vide Geminian de exemp. l. 1. c. 99. p. 112.

4. Vnſtable.

4. For the ſame reaſon, they are unſtable and very moveable, caried away with every wind; whereupon it happeneth, that the beſt mariners and ſea-men, that can eſcape the rocks, becauſe they are permanent in the ſame place, yet are they oftentimes caſt away upon the ſands, by reaſon of the continuall removing of the ſhelves.

So you ſee the property of the foundation.

2. The perfection.

2. Though theſe ſands be thus diſcoherent and unſtable, yet with a great deale of art and paines, a man may, at ſome times, finiſh a houſe upon the ſame; yea ſuch a houſe, as (for a time) may ſeeme a glorious and a ſtately pallace. But then

2. The ſucceſſe.

2. If you marke the ſucceſſe thereof, you ſhall find, as experience hath alwaies found it, that when the raine deſcends, and the floods come, and the winds blow, that houſe will fall, as our Saviour ſaith; ſo all their labour is loſt. And ſo you ſee the literall meaning of the words. But

2. Myſtically.

2. If we treat of this text more myſtically, you muſt note

1. That, as Chriſt is principally underſtood by the wiſe builder, which built his houſe, houſe, that is, his Church, upon the rocke, that is, himſelfe; ſo by this fooliſh builder, we may primarily underſtand the Divell, which builds his ſynagogue upon the ſands, that is, the many multitudes of ſinnes, as Hugo Cardinalis ſaith; or as Dionyſius Carthuſianus thinks, we may underſtand a lewd and negligent Paſtour, which buildeth up the flocke committed to his charge, either upon the lewd errours of his owne invention, or the evill examples of his wicked converſation; for as the word, in the proper ſignification, betokeneth the making up of an houſe, ſo in the myſticall acceptation thereof, it ſignifieth to teach or to inſtruct, and the teachers are called builders, as S. Hierom ſaith; or ſecondarily, as indeed it is taken in this place, we may underſtand any man, that builds the houſe of his conſcience and conſolation, upon thoſe ſandy foundations that are not able to ſuſtaine it.

Teſt. Origen. ſuper Hier hom. 1. & Hilar. ſuper Matt. Can. 6. Hugo Card. in h. loc.

Hier. ſuper Eſa. 58.

Pſal. 118. 22. 1 Theſſ. 5. 11.

And though theſe builders are beyond number, yet they may be diſtributed into ſix ſpeciall ranks.

1. Heathens. 2. Iewes. 3. Hypocrites. 4. Worldlings. 5. Heretiques. 6. Preſumptuous ſinners. } For the heathens build upon

1. The builders.

Six ſorts of builders.

morall vertues, the Iewes upon legall works, the hypocrites upon faigned holineſſe, the worldling upon his wealth, the heretique upon his owne conceit, and the preſumptuous ſinner upon a vaine hope of mercy; and all theſe are moſt fond and fooliſh builders, as both the foundation and the ſucceſſe of their building will make it moſt apparently plaine.

2. By the houſe, though it is taken diverſe wayes in Scripture, as ſomtimes for the whole family, ſomtimes for the Church of God, ſometimes for the kingdome of heaven; yet here I take this houſe, with Arnobius, to ſignifie either the converſation of the faithfull, or the reſolution of his conſcience, which he compoſeth for his hope to reſide in, and to reſt upon it, as upon a Iacobs ſtaffe, to helpe him throughout all miſeries, untill he arrives unto his happineſſe.

2. The houſe: Acts 10. 2. Heb. 3 6. Greg ſup. 1 Reg. 17 Arnob. ſup. Pſal. 83

3. For the foundation of this houſe, (I ſpeake of that which is fooliſhly built) it is according to the multitude of the ſands, but eſpecially, anſwerable to the quality of the builders, ſixfold.

1. Vertuous actions. 2. Legall workes. 3. Faigned holineſſe. 4. Worldly wealth. 5. Erroneous opinions. 6. Vaine perſwaſions. }

3. The foundation Sixfold.

And all theſe are like the ſands, to build any houſe of comfort upon the ſame. For

1. Touching civill honeſty, I confeſſe it makes a glorious ſhew in the ſight of men; and yet, though it be a good thing, it is no great matter to be a civill honeſt man; becauſe the outward performance of the duties of the ſecond Table, will make up ſuch a one; and therefore, all this ſplendidneſſe, in the ſight of God, is but pollutio panni, as the Prophet ſpeaketh, all our righteouſneſſe is but as a menſtruous clout; becauſe all the cogitations of our hearts are prone to evill continually; and this is like the ſand to build upon it, worthleſſe, fruitleſſe, diſcoherent, and unſtable. For

1. Civill honeſty.

Eſa. 30. 22. Gen. 6. 5.

1. They are like the ſpiders web, that will make no garments for us, either to cloath us with uprightneſſe, or to hide our nakedneſſe, to preſerve us from the wrath of God; for if he ſhould but looke and obſerve, what is done amiſſe, by the beſt of us, O Lord who may abide it?

Eſa. 59. 6. Pſal. 130. 3.

2. Though the deeds of vertue may eſcape the greater puniſhments of hell; yet the beſt of natures poſſibility can never attaine unto the happineſſe of heaven, as the Prophet David ſheweth, bonitas mea non extendit uſq; ad te, my goodneſſe, though it be good, and may do good to men, yet doth it not extend to thee; that is, to benefit thee, or to purchaſe thy joy to me; and therefore, when we have done our beſt, we are but unprofitable ſervants, and our vertues are as fruitleſſe as the ſands, to build the houſe of our happineſſe upon the ſame.

Pſal. 16. 2. Luke 17. 10.

3. Though, as the Philoſopher ſaith, there may be ſome good accord and concatenation of vertues betwixt themselves, yet there can be no agreement betwixt the desires of nature and of grace; because the flesh alwaies lusteth against the spirit, as the Apostle speaketh.

Gal.5.17.

4. Though they should seeme never so faire, yet are they not able to stand before the fire of Gods triall, no more than the sands before the violence of the floods and winds; because without faith it is impossible for us to please God. Therefore, though I confesse a great deale of difference to be, betwixt the justice and moderation of Titus and Trajane, and the cruelty and rage of Caligula, Nero, and Domitian; and I yeeld these good indowments of nature to be great gifts of God; yet I must say with S. Augustine, l.4 c.3. against Iulian the Pelagian; Omnes a Dei unius religione alienos utcunq; ob virtutis opinionem admirabiles habeantur, non modo nulla remuneratione dignos, sed magis punitione, quod pura Dei dona cordis sui pollutione contaminant; that all those, which are strangers from the religion and service of the true God, howsoever they may be accounted admirable for the opinion of their vertues, yet are they not onely unworthy of any reward, but also worthy of punishment; because they have defiled the pure gifts of God, through the pollution and corruption of their owne hearts, even as unsavoury pipes do corrupt the sweetest waters; and therefore to build the house of our happinesse, upon the foundation of civill honesty, is but to build the same upon the sand.

Heb.11.6.

Aug.cont. Iulian. Pelagian.l.4.c.3.

2 Legall works.

2. Touching legall works, though they seeme farre surer, and much fairer than the former; yea the best foundation that can be found, by any man that is not a Christian, to work upon; for the Law of the Lord is an undefiled Law, converting the soule, and giving wisdome unto the simple; and therefore this foundation remaineth sure, and they are blessed (as the Prophet saith) that are undefiled in this way, and do walke in the Law of the Lord; yet I say this is too weake a foundation for us to work our happinesse upon the same; not that of it selfe it is not a foundation sure enough, and sufficiently able to sustaine an everlasting house; because the Lord saith plainly, hoc fac & vives, do this and thou shalt live; but by reason of our unskilfulnesse to work upon this foundation, and because of our insufficiency to keep this Law, when Salomon saith, the justest man falls seven times a day, and Moses saith, Cursed is every one, that continueth not in all things, that are written in the booke of the law to do them; therefore I say the righteousnesse of the Law is but like the sands to build this house upon it.

Psal.19.7.

2 Tim.2.9. Psal.119.1.

Levit.18.5. Ezek.20.11.

Pro.24.16. Deut.27.26. Gal.3.10.

1. Worthlesse, because it can never justifie us in the sight of God; for by the works of the law shall no flesh living be justified, that is, be freed from the sentence of eternall death.

Gal.2.16.

2. Fruitlesse, because it can never bring us to eternall life; and therefore when the young man came to Christ, saying, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, to inherit eternall life? and our Saviour told him that he knew the commandements, thou shalt do no murder, thou shalt not steale, and the rest, and he answered, all this have I done from my youth; and it is credible he was a very strict observer of Gods Law; for it is said that our Saviour loved him, that is, in respect of those good parts which were in him; yet he tels him, there was one thing wanting for him, the principall verbe was yet away, to go and sell all that he had, and to come and follow Christ, that is, not onely to sell all his possessions, and to give the price thereof unto the poore, which is the literall interpretation thereof, and so interpreted by most neotericks; but also, to sell his owne legall righteousnesse, and to renounce all his morall goodnesse, which he had either by nature, or by the Law, and which proud Pharisees are as loth to do, as the rich men are to part with their wealth, and to come and follow Christ; that is, in the words of my text, to build their houses upon him, and to expect salvation onely from him, which is the mysticall interpretation thereof, and which S. Paul seemes to approve, when he accounted all things but dung, that he might winne Christ, and be found in him, that is, not having his owne righteousnesse, which is of the Law, but that which is through the faith of Iesus Christ.

Mar.10.17.

Ver.19.

Ver.20.

Ver.21.

Ver.eodem.

Phil.3.8,9.

3. Though

3. Though the legall righteouſneſſe, and the fruits of grace, may ſeeme to cohere among themſelves, and to be as copartners in the purchaſe of our ſalvation; becauſe like the two Cherubins they looke one towards another, and are like Ezechiels wheeles, rota erat in rota, ſo involved, the one within the other, that the Goſpell was in the Law, and the Law is in the Goſpell; yet Saint Paul tells us plainely, there can be no co-operation of workes with grace to juſtifie us in the ſight of God; becauſe, if it be of workes, then is it not of grace, and grace ſhould be no more grace; but if it be of grace, then is it not of workes, as the Apoſtle reaſoneth. Exod. 25. 20. Ezek 1. 16. Rom. 11. 6.

4. Though the workes of righteouſneſſe be both pleaſing unto God, and profitable unto men, yet are they no more able to abide the touchſtone of perfection, then the ſands are able to remaine in one place, when the greateſt ſtormes do beate upon them; for hee chargeth his Angels with folly, and the heavens are not cleane in his ſight; and therefore væ laudabili vitæ hominis, woe to the beſt life of man, if God laid aſide his mercy, and in juſtice would diſcuſſe the ſame; becauſe the beſt acts of the beſt Saints are greatly ſtained with great defects. Therefore the Lord confuting this vanity in the Iewes, that were the Maſters and expounders of the Law, ſaith, Aske now the Prieſts concerning the Law, ſaying, if one beare holy fleſh in the skirt of his garment, and with his skirt touch bread, or pottage, or wine, or oyle, or any meate, ſhall it be holy? and the Prieſts anſwered and ſaid, no; then ſaid Haggai, if one that is uncleane by a dead body, touch any of theſe, ſhall it be uncleane, and the Prieſts anſwered, it ſhall be uncleane; Then anſwered Haggai and ſaid, ſo is this people, and ſo is this nation before me, ſaith the Lord, and ſo is every worke of their hand, and that which they offer there, is uncleane; and hereupon venerable Zanchius ſaith, utinam hæc ſententia ſemper in intimis memoriæ noſtræ arcanis inſideat; I would to God this Scripture were well ſeated alwaies in the moſt ſecret and ſureſt place of our memories: and ſo would I; for that would teach us, that all legall workes, as they are done by us, are but like the ſands to build upon. Iob 4. 18. & c. 15. 15. Haggai 2. 11, 12, 13, 14. Zanch. de iuſtific. cap. 11. p. 780.

3. For faigned holineſſe, as a painted face, a farre off, ſeemes fairer then any other, ſo doth this appeare more glorious in ſhew then any ſanctitie; ſo much, as if God himſelfe could require no more, or as if there were not any holier in heaven then they are on earth; but though this guilded Saint may deceive the whole world, yet not God, which ſeeth his heart and knoweth his very thoughts, and what he knoweth not himſelfe, that he doth but deceive himſelfe; for the Lord tells us often, that Religion conſiſteth not in words but in deeds, and not onely in abſtaining from ſome evills in our ſelves, but eſpecially in effecting good to all others, as Saint Iames ſheweth, Pure Religion before God the Father is this, to viſit the fatherleſſe and the widdowes in their adverſities, and to keepe himſelfe unſpotted of the world; and therefore, though this faigned holineſſe may ſeeme moſt glorious in the ſight of men; yet is it moſt odious in the ſight of God, and not indeed ſo good as the ſands to build upon; and therefore the greateſt ſinners are ſaid to have their portion with the hypocrites, in the lake that burneth with fire and brimſtone; and no marvell, for 3. Faigned holines Iames 1. 27.

1. If the beſt legall workes be worth nothing to purchaſe heaven, then ſurely this phantaſme is worth leſſe, by how much the ſhaddow is of leſſe value then the ſubſtance; Saint Ambroſe ſaith, the hypocrite is like the Fox, and ſo the Poet ſaith, aſtutam vapido ſervat ſub pectore vulpem; and his reaſon is, becauſe that as there is nothing good of the Fox beſides his skinne, ſo there is nothing good in any hypocrite, beſides the outward face of a formall profeſſion. In umbra eſt 1. Indigentiæ ſuæ. 2. Aſſimilatio figuris. 3. Apparentia corporis. Holcot in Sap. c. 2. v. 5. Ambroſ. in Luc. c. 9.

2. The beſt fruits of this faigned holineſſe are but like the apples of Sodome, or like the figg-tree leaves that bare no fruit, deceiving the eyes of men, and receiving nothing but a curſe from God. Mat. 21. 19.

3. There muſt needs be a greater diſproportion betwixt ſubſtances and ſhadowes, then can be betwixt any, though never ſo much unequall, ſubſtances; therfore there can be no manner of coherence betwixt theſe dumbe ſhewes and that

Heb. 12. 14. true holineſſe, without which no man ſhall ſee the face of God, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh.

4. Theſe myſts and ſhadowes muſt ſoone vaniſh, when the Sunne of righteouſneſſe doth appeare; their faces ſhall be unmasked, their vaile ſhall bee remooved, and then, as David ſaith of the worldling, ſo we may ſay of this ſanctity, I ſought it, but it could no where bee found; ſo this holineſſe is in all things like, unleſſe it be in ſome things worſe, then the ſands.

Pſal. 37. 35.

4. Worldly wealth

4. For worldly wealth, it is thought to be an immoveable rocke; the rich man ſaith, I ſhall never bee moved, the Lord hath made my hill ſo ſtrong, like the hill of Sion, which cannot bee mooved at any time; and therefore the worldlings, thinking their gold to be the onely good, deſire nothing ſo much as wealth, ſuppoſing that, as they can purchaſe the earth and buy Rome it ſelfe, as Iugurth ſaid, ſo they may merit heaven by their riches, which are their god here, and which they thinke will bring them unto God hereafter, when (as the Prophet ſaith) they will give thouſands of rammes, and ten thouſand rivers of oyle, yea and the fruits of their bodies for the ſinnes of their ſoules; But the Prophet David ſaith, it will coſt more to redeeme a ſoule then ſo, when the whole world cannot ſatisfie the juſtice of God for one ſinne; and therefore, though the rich worldling neither feares God nor loves man, but thinks his riches a ſure rocke, yet are they indeed but like the ſands, to build upon. For

Pſal. 30. 6.

Saluſt. de bello Iugurth.

Micah 6. 7.

Pſal. 49. 8.

The folly of Midas

1. What is the pureſt gold but red earth? and though fooliſh Mydas had all things turned into gold that he touched, yet all that treaſure could not ſatisfie his hunger, but he muſt needs ſtarve for want of foode, notwithſtanding all his wealth.

Pro. 10. 2.

2. The riches of this world bring no better fruits then the ſands; for the treaſures of wickedneſſe profit nothing, ſaith wiſe Salomon; Indeed they produce care and vexation to many men, as the wealth and pleaſures of Campania did more hurt unto the Carthaginians, then the higheſt Alpes and all the armies of the Romanes could poſſibly doe, as Plutarch ſaith; and therefore they are rightly compared unto thornes, by him that is the wiſeſt among the ſonnes of men; becauſe they doe continually goare and grieve the very hearts of the worldlings, with exceſſive cares and reſtleſſe cogitations: and what profit this is, or what benefit they doe make of this fruit, let the world judge: Plutarch tells us a ſtory in the life of Pirrhus, that Cyneas, the moſt excellent Orator of thoſe times, diſſuading Pirrhus to attempt warre againſt the Romanes, demanded of him what he would doe, when he had ſubdued them? the King anſwered, he would over-runne all Italy, and bring them all into his ſubjection; Cyneas askt him, what he would doe next? he anſwered, he would conquer Sicilie, he would ſpoyle Barbarie, and foradge Greece; and what then (ſaith the Orator) wilt thou doe? ô Sir, ſaith this covetous Prince, we will then eat, drinke and be merrie; & nunc quid obſtat quò minus compotemus, atq; otium inter nos traducamus? and why, ſaid the other, may we not be merry now, with leſſe paines and more eaſe, rather then to hazard our ſelves in ſuch doubtfull perills, and to undergoe ſuch inevitable labours?

Plutarch in vita Hannibalis. p. 1143

Plutarch in vita Pirrhi.

The covetouſnes and ambition of Pyrrhus.

I might anſwer with Saint Auguſtine; quia delirare videmur avaris, cum hæc loquimur, & anicularia videntur hæc verba, becauſe we ſeeme to talke nonſence, when we ſpeake againſt wealth, to a covetous worldling, and our words ſeeme like mother Hubberds tale, like an old wifes fable, when wee ſeeke to diſſuade them from theſe vanities; but I thinke they are mad, that are ſo bewitched by this Circean world, as to gather ſhaddowes, till they be gathered into their graves, and the ſoules of many of them fetched hence to hell: and therefore I would advize them all to take heed, how they build upon theſe ſands, that are ſo fruitleſſe unto their ſoules.

3. It is a common proverbe, that inter ſuperbos ſemper ſunt jurgia, there is ever ſtrife and contention among the proud and wealthie worldlings; for as the Poet ſaith,

Nec

Nec quemquam jam ferre poteſt Cæſarve priorem
Pompejusve parem———

Lucan. l. 1. p. 13. Fides Deo militat, avaritia tentatori, iſta congeris quod ſibi profit, illa quod proficiat alteri. Ambroſ.

and as they agree not among themſelves, ſo much leſſe with God, as our Saviour teſtifieth, we cannot ſerve God and Mammon, and as little with the ſervants of God; becauſe there can be no fellowſhip betwixt light and darkeneſſe, the heires of heaven and the ſlaves of this world; therefore the Apoſtle warneth us not to be companions of them, Epheſ. 5. 7, 11.

4. As the wealth of this world is, minus fructuoſa, little fruitfull; ſo it is nimis fluida, leſſe faithfull; for they doe all paſſe away like a ſhadow, Irus & eſt ſubitò qui modo Cræſus erat, and he that is to day as rich as Cræſus, may be to morrow as poore as Iob; ſo it was the burden of his ſong to whome Rome owed her ſelfe thrice at the leaſt, date obolum Beliſario, quem virtus exaltavit, malitia depreſſit & fortuna cæcavit; ô give a halfe-pennie to him, whom vertue hath exalted, malice hath ſuppreſſed, and fortune hath blinded; and therefore Saint Auguſtine ſpeaking of the beſt things of this world, ſaith, ſi quid arriſiſſet proſperum tædebat apprehendere; quia priuſquam teneretur avolabat; if any proſperity ſmiled upon me, I was loath to lay hands upon it, becauſe it fled away before I could ſcarce take hold upon it; and ſo Salomon ſaith, the riches of this world betake themſelves to their wings as the Eagle, which is a bird of no ſlow flight; ſo ſoone do they paſſe away and we are not able to overtake them; and the heathens were not ignorant hereof, when Ariſtophanes could ſay, εὐδαιμονία, ἄνηρ ἥμεξας, ἄνηρ ὥρας γεγενται καὶ ἀπόλυται; the felicity of this world, is bred and dead in a day; and ſo examples make it plaine; for Tyrus was a rich cittie, Babylon full of treaſure, and Iob a mighty man of wealth; yet all were impoveriſhed in a night, and to day Nebuchadnezzar braggs in his pallace, that he built great Babell, by the might of his power, and for the honour of his Majeſty, Dan. 4. 30. but while the word was in his mouth, the ſame houre, he was driven to eat graſſe among the beaſts; ſo Pharaoh, Senacherib, Cyrus, Alexander, and many more, (who floriſhed for a time like a greene baytree, and then preſently vaniſhed like the ſmoake,) may be ſufficient trumpeters, to proclaime the vanity of all wordly felicity; and therefore ſeeing riches promiſe fullneſſe and performe emptineſſe, they are but like the ſands to build upon.

The miſery of Beliſarius. In vita iuſtiniani. Aug. confeſſ. l. 6.

Pro. 23. 5.

πολλὰ' ὁ χρόνος ἐν ἡμέρᾳ μιᾷ μετατίθησι. Tempus multa vel intra unius diei ſpatium mutat. Zehner. adag. 77. cent. 2. ex Ariſtoph.

5. For the errors of men, though we be wonderfully pleaſed with our owne conceits, and this Opinion is that great Monarch, which rules all the Monarchies of the world, and many times moſt unjuſtly ſuppreſſeth truth, and advanceth falſehood, preferreth the unworthy, and trampleth the beſt merits under feet; yet if wee duly conſider it, wee ſhall find it moſt like unto the ſands. For

5. Lying errours.

Opinion like a great Monarch.

1. What can a congeſted heape of lying Legends, falſe miracles, uncertaine traditions, diabolicall ſuggeſtions, or any other groundleſſe opinion, produced either from the ſimplicity of fooliſh man, or the ſubtiltie of ſome wicked man, be worth for any thing, unleſſe it bee, to deceive us here and to deſtroy us hereafter?

Vani dicuntur mendacis & infidi, levia inania & pro gravibus & veris aſtuiſſimè componentes. Agellius noct. gram.

2. What fruit can errors bring us, but to abuſe our neighbours, to diſhonour God and to betray our owne ſoules into the hands of Satan? fallitur augurio ſpes mea ſæpe ſuo; this muſt be their mourneſull ſong in the burning flames.

3. Though, as the Poet ſaith,

Temporis auguſti manſit concordia diſcors,
Pax & fuit non ſponte ducum———

Lucan. pharſ. l. 1.

The two chiefetaines of the Romanes did accord a while in a diſſembled peace; ſo errours and falſehood may be conglutinated for a time, and patched together like a beggars cloake; yet when the raine deſcends and the deaw of truth doth fall amongſt them, then will it ſoone diſſolve them, and make them like the Trojan Souldiers to bathe their ſwords in their owne bowels; and ſo the ſundry ſects and divers ſorts of Heretiques and Schiſmatiques do plainely ſhew unto us, quam

The diſſonancy of heretickes.

Virgil. Æneid. l. 2.

malè

Lucan. in cod. l. Hugo Cardinal. in hunc loc.

malè concordes nimiaq; cupidine caci, how ill they doe agree among themselves: nam ut dogmata Philosophorum semper sibi contraria, sic haretici nunquam sapiunt unum, saith Hugo Cardinalis, as the manifold opinions of the Philosophers shew how contrarie they were to themselves, so hereticks never consent in the same thing; and I might instance out of him that composed the papall warre; but the Apostle tells us, they agree farre worse with God; because there can be no agreement betwixt Christ and Belial, truth and falsehood, which can no more stand together, then the Arke of God and the idoll Dagon.

2 Cor. 6. 15.

1 Sam. 5. 3, 4.

In umbra nihil firmi, solidi, & veri locum habeat. Petrus Martyr.

4. As they, qui umbras sectantur, which runne after shadowes, can have no sure abode in any place, so they that imbrace errours cannot be constant in any thing; for as the light drives away the shadowes, and chaseth them from place to place, so truth pursueth errours, and makes the hereticks many times to flie away from themselves, to runne from one absurdity to another; and as the Poets faigne of Proteus, nunc leo, nunc arbor, nunc erat hirtus aper, so will they flee from bad to worse, from worse to worst of all: And as they cannot stand before the strong winds of truth, so much lesse can they appeare before the God of truth, which (as the Apostle saith) damneth all them that beleeve not the truth, but have pleasure in unrighteousnesse: and therefore I would with all men to follow Lyrinensis rule, to teach what they have learned, and not what they have invented, & cum dicunt novè, ne dicant nova; and when they would speake newly, let them speake no new things; lest by shewing their owne wittie inventions, they broach forth such errours, as may bring them to fearefull destruction: so you see these opinions of men are like the sands of the sea, unstable grounds to build upon.

Ovid de arte amandi. l. 2. p. 331.

2 Thess. 2. 12.

6. Vaine presumption.

6. For presumption, though it settles it selfe upon the mercy of God, as upon a sure foundation, which is sure indeed, if the sinner could build well upon the same; yet, because the presumptuous offender builds with untempered morter, not well made up with the teares of true repentance, and further, separates the mercy of God from his justice, this proves to him but like the sands. For

Psal. 130. 4.

1. Whereas the mercy of God should be a speciall meanes, to induce us to repentance, and to feare God, as the Prophet sheweth, With thee there is mercy that thou maist be feared; and we, on the other side, will sinne, because God is mercifull; like the foole that will wound himselfe deepe inough; because he knoweth where there is a salve that can heale all sores, though he is not sure of any dramme thereof to fall to his share: Therefore what benefit can we expect from this good, when we doe so preposterously convert the same to such evill? and God himselfe complaineth of these men, saying, supra dorsum meum fabricaverunt peccatores, the plowers plowed upon my backe; that is, in effect, they will sinne, because I am mercifull to forgive sins; and therefore he addeth, I will cut in sunder the necks of sinners, * that is, throw downe this house of vaine hope; because it lookes not as well to my justice to feare sinne, as to my mercy to hope for pardon. And therefore the true penitent, that would be saved, must not sing of mercy alone, nor of judgement alone, but of mercy and judgement together; because (as Lorinus well observeth upon the words of the Psalmist, the eyes of the Lord are upon them that feare him, and upon such as put their trust in his mercy) there is a speciall conjunction of hope and feare in every godly man; spes semper mixta timori, as Menevensis said of King Alfred; and as the Sonne of Syrach saith, mercy and wrath come from him, and his indignation falleth downe upon sinners, and all the men of God doe tell us, that as he hath the tender indulgence of a father, so hee hath the dreadfull countenance of a Iudge, and if we walke contrary to him in our iniquity, he will walke contrary to us in fury, if we provoke him by cursing and swearing, he will send a flying roule of curses against us, if we drinke without thirst, we shall thirst without drinke, when we shall be denied a drop of water to coole our tongue, and if we burne with the fire of unlawfull lusts, we shall be burned with unquenchable fire for ever.

Pisal. 139. 3.

* Or the cords of the wicked. Concidet cervices peccatorum, vulgata editione.

Lorinus in Psal. 32. v. 18.

The conjunction of feare and hope.

Zach. 5. 1, 2, 3.

Luk. 16. 24, 25.

2. What fruit can we expect from this vaine hope, that is indeed like the untimely fruit of a woman, which perisheth before it seeth the sunne? S. Augustine tells us,

Psal. 58. 8.

us, præterit jucunditas non reditura, the ſweetneſſe of ſinne is gone aſſoone as ever the act is done, & manet anxietas non peritura, but the ſting of ſinne doth remaine for ever, all the water in the ſea will not blot out the ſtaine, and all the medicines in the world cannot cure the wound thereof; this is all the benefit we receive thereby.

3. This vaine hope, as it hath none accord with the mercy of God, ſo it is not alwayes agreeable with it ſelf; becauſe ſometimes it is bold without bluſhing, and ſometimes troubled with dreadfull feares, when the conſcience of ſinnes paſt doth work in our hearts many douotfull thoughts of judgement to come.

4. This fruitleſſe hope is but of ſhort continuance; becauſe (as Lorinus ſaith) ſpem veram alunt aſſiduæ in Deum preces, continuall prayers muſt preſerve the life of true hope; and the wicked have not called upon God, but they hope for mercy before ever they deſired pitie; and therefore their hope is never able to indure the fiery triall, nor the tempeſtuous ſtorme of Gods anger; for being like the morning deaw, it will vaniſh aſſoone as ever it ſeeth the Sun; and ſo, as the Wiſeman ſaith, ſpes impiorum peribit, though the godly man hath hope at his death, yet the hope of the wicked ſhall periſh.

Lorinus in Pſal.

Pſal. 53. 4.

Prov. 14. 32. Iob 8. 13. Prov. 10. 28.

And ſo you ſee the weake foundations of fooliſh builders, how manifold they are, and how vaine is each of them, worthleſſe, fruitleſſe, diſcoherent and unſtable, in all things like unto the ſand: and I may ſay of them all, as Cicero doth in another caſe; O fallacem hominum ſpem, fragilemq́, fortunam, & inanes noſtras contentiones, quæ in medio ſpatio ſæpe franguntur & corruunt, & ante, in ipſo curſu obruuntur, quam portum conſpicere potuerunt! O the deceitfull hope of fooliſh men, O fraile and feeble fortune, and our vaine contentions, which are broken to fitters oft times in the midſt of the way, and do fall together and ſink downe into the bottome, in the very race and courſe that we go, before we can behold the port that we deſire to arrive unto.

Cicero de orat. l. 3.

4. Having ſeene the foundation, we are now to conſider the complement or perfection of their labour; where we may obſerve

4 The perfection of their work.

For { 1. The building it ſelfe. 2. The finiſhing thereof. }

1. It is a houſe, not a cottage; therefore Chriſt doth uſe the word building; becauſe they do not figere tentoria, ſet up tents or boothes, as the fathers did; but ædificare domum, they beſtow all their art and skill to erect a ſtately pallace; and no care, no coſt, no travell, no paine is thought too much, to make the ſame as glorious as the rainebow, and as curious as the ſpiders web.

1. The building.

2. They do not onely fundare & erigere, lay the foundation and reare it up, but they do alſo ædificare & perficere, finiſh and perfect the ſame; and they will never leave it, till they end it; quia ædificare crebrò pro omni cujuſcunq́, rei perfectione ponitur; becauſe to build is utually put for the perfection of any thing, ſaith Illiricus.

2. The finiſhing of it.

Illiricus in verbo ædificare.

So you ſee the foundation and the perfection of this work.

And this ſheweth what manner of men they are; how wiſe ſoever they be in their owne conceits, how famous ſoever they be in the world, and how faire ſoever they build their houſes in the opinion of men; yet in the judgement of Chriſt, who is the wiſdome of God, they are very fooles; and that as I conceive, in theſe two reſpects.

The fooliſhneſſe of theſe builders in two reſpects.

For { 1. Becauſe they refuſe the good foundation. 2. Becauſe they relinquiſh not their weake foundation. }

1. The Prophet tels the Iewes, they had committed two evils; they had forſaken the fountaine of living waters, and digged to themſelves pits and filthy puddles, ſuch as would hold no water; ſo they did refuſe Chriſt, the holy and juſt, and chuſe Barabas, a thiefe and a murderer; and ſo S. Paul tels us of fooliſh men, that would refuſe the knowledge of the truth, whereby they might be ſaved, and believe errours, that they might be damned; which is an argument of the extreameſt folly; for were there no other foundation to build upon, then neceſſity,

1 In refuſing the good foundation. Ier. 2. 13. Mat. 27. 21, 22. 2 Theſſ. 2. 12.

que

quæ cogit ad turpia, which doth often force us where we would not, might ſomwhat excuſe them for building upon the ſands; or were they told of none other, than ignorance, quæ excuſat a tanto, might a little qualifie their offence; as it did, no doubt, unto our fore-fathers, and perhaps unto the Philoſophers, that lived in the times of darknes, and never heard ſo much as the name of Chriſt; but ſeeing there is a ſure rock, whereupon all men may ſecurely build, and we do now continually ſhew this rock unto them, and ſay, this is the way, walke in it; this is the truth, build upon it; and yet for all this, they will reject the truth, and believe fables; refuſe Chriſt, and follow Antichriſt; renounce the rocke, and build upon the ſands; this ſheweth them to be fooles indeed.

Iſa. 30. 21.

2. Perſiſting upon their bad founda-tion.

2. They are the greater fooles, that being forewarned of the danger, they do not leave to work upon the ſand, though they ſhould refuſe to build upon the rocke; quia humanum eſt errare, ſed perſeverare belluinum, becauſe it is a beaſtly thing to perſevere in ill; and it were better for them not to build at all, than to build upon the ſands, as it is ſafer for a man to do nothing, than to do wickedneſſe; or not to heare at all, than to believe errours; and therefore, well might our Saviour call them fooles, becauſe no perſwaſions can change their reſolutions; but ſicut erraverunt ab utero, as they have erred from the wombe, ſo they will continue unto their graves; and, as the Scripture ſaith, noluerunt intelligere, they will not underſtand; but as Pharaoh builded upon the ſands, untill he was drowned by the ſea, or as Salomons foole, though you bray him in a mortar, yet will he not depart from his folly; ſo will the wicked build upon theſe ſands, untill, like Iobs children, their houſe doth fall upon their heads; which is the lamentable ſucceſſe of this fooliſh building.

Pſal. 58. 3.

Exod. 14. 28. Pro. 27. 22.

Iob 1. 19.

And ſo much for the building of this houſe.

5. The ſucceſſe.

5. For the ſucceſſe of this building, our Saviour ſheweth it is moſt lamentable, καὶ ἔπεσε: and it fell: touching which wee muſt conſider theſe three ſpeciall things.

Three things obſervable.

1. The cauſe.
2. The fall.
3. The quality of this fall.

1. The cauſe of the fall, twofold.

1. The cauſe is either { 1. Privative. 2. Poſitive. } For

1. Privative.

1. The privative cauſe, and ſo indeed the primative cauſe of this fall is the want of a good foundation; for that, which was built upon the rocke, fell not; becauſe it was laid upon a ſure ground; to teach us, that the not building upon Ieſus Chriſt, the not believing in his name, and not relying upon his mercy, is the chiefeſt cauſe of all our ruine; for I dare boldly ſay it, that the committing of all ſinnes doth not ſo ſoone damne us, as the not believing in Ieſus Chriſt; and the Fathers do confeſſe it, that Iudas himſelfe did not ſinne ſo hainouſly in betraying the Sonne of God, as in deſpairing of the mercy of Chriſt; for our Saviour ſaith, whoſoever believeth in the Sonne of God, hath eternall life, and whoſoever believeth not is condemned already; becauſe he believeth not in the Sonne of God; and the Scripture is full of proofe to confirme this truth; therefore I wiſh every man to build upon this rocke, that is, to believe in Ieſus Chriſt.

The hainouſneſſe of not believing in Chriſt.

Ioh. 3. 18. & v. 36.

2. Poſitive, which is threefold.

2. The poſitive cauſe of this fall is ſaid to be { 1. Raine. 2. Flouds. 3. Winds. } Which ſome interpret promiſcuouſly of the manifold temptations, that ſhall ruſh upon the conſciences of the wicked, to preſſe them down to hell: but I am rather of their mind, that, by theſe three things, do underſtand three chiefe and ſeverall temptations. As

{ 1. Proſperity. 2. Adverſity. 3. Perſecutions. } For

1. Raine, that is, proſperity. Hugo Cardinalis in h. loc.

1. Though Hugo Cardinalis ſaith, pluvia de aere deſcendens eſt tentatio Diaboli, this raine deſcending from the ayre may fitly ſignifie the temptation of the Prince of the ayre; that is, the concupiſcence of the fleſh; quia pluvia quæ videtur videtur & mollit terram, peccata carnalia ſunt; becauſe the raine, which is ſeene and mollifieth the earth, is nothing els but our carnall ſinnes; and Dionyſius Carthuſianus ſaith, the raine ſignifieth malarum ſuggeſtionum tumultum, the ſwelling multitudes of all evill ſuggeſtions; yet I thinke rather, that by the raine we may underſtand proſperity, as where it is ſaid, he ſhall come downe like the raine into a fleece of wooll, that is, ſoftly and gently, without any noiſe; and the raine deſcending ſo, maketh the earth full of fruits; and that plenty is nothing els but the proſperity of the worldling, which beateth upon that houſe, which is built upon the ſand, and like a ſmooth Iacob will ſooner ſupplant it, then rough Eſau; for David ſtucke faſt by God in adverſity, but fell fowly in proſperity; ſo (as a Father ſaith) homo victus in Paradiſo, victor in ſtercore, Adam was vanquiſhed in Paradiſe, but Iob beeame a conquerer upon the dunghill; ſo Saint Peter could play the ſtout champion upon the cold mountaine, to draw his ſword and to defend his Maſter; but he ſhewed himſelfe a right coward by the High-Prieſts fire, when he ſware and foreſware himſelfe, that he never knew him; and ſo Saint Bernard, conſidering that, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith, hic mundus periculoſior eſt blandus quam moleſtus, this world is farre more dangerous, when it fawneth then when it frowneth, ſaith of the Church in generall, amara fuit prius in nece Martyrum, amarior in conflictu hæreticorum, ſed amariſſima in pace domeſticorum; the triall of the Church was bitter in the death of her Martyrs, yet it was bitterer in the conflicts of heretiques, but it was bittereſt of all in the peace and ſlumbering ſecurity of her owne children; becauſe proſperity lulls us more to ſleepe in ſin, then adverſity can doe by compelling us to ſinne. And therefore we ſhould take great heed unto our ſelves, when the ſoft raine of proſperity deſcends upon our houſe.

Dionyſ Carthuſ. in hunc loc.

Pſal. 72. 6.

The danger of proſperity.

Gen. 27. 36.

2 Sam. 11. 2. 4.
Gen. 3. 6.
Iob 2. 8.
Iohn 18. 18.

Mar. 14. 71.

Bernardus.

2. The floods came, that is, perſecutionum abundantia, ſaith Carthuſianus, abundance of adverſities and perſecutions, which come like a torrent ſtreame, more violently upon us, and, as the river Kiſon, ſweepes many away, that they are never ſeene againe in the land of the living; for how many have we, that ſerved God ſincerely, as it ſeemed, cum benefecerit illis, while he hedged them about with bleſſings, as the divell ſaid of Iob, and compaſſed them about with ſongs of deliverance, as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh; but in time of temptations have departed from him, and ſtarted aſide like a broken bow; or like the children of Ephraim, that being harniſhed and carrying bowes, and ſo prepared to fight in all mens judgement, yet turned their backes in the day of battell; the chiefeſt time, when they ſhould ſhew their valour; And I pray God that a great many of them, which profeſſe themſelves now very zealous in the daies of peace, in the Sunneſhine of the Goſpell, doe not prove themſelves meere Ephraimites, if perſecution or afflictions ſhould come, as a fanne to winnow them; I am no Prophet to foretell what any man will be, but an Orator, to wiſh what every one ſhould be, conſtant unto death, if we looke for the crowne of life; For

Two floods, that is, adverſity and perſecution. Dionyſ Carthuſ. in hunc loc.

Iudges 5. 21.

Iob 1. 10.

Pſal. 32. 8.

Pſal. 78. 10.

Revel. 2. 10.

We know the Church of the Old Teſtament began in blood, fraterno primi maduerunt ſanguine terram; when wicked Caine murdered his owne and onely righteous brother; and after, it was never free from blood, till the blood of Chriſt was ſhed to purge it from all ſinne; and the Church of the New Teſtament began in blood, increaſed in blood, & ſhall end in blood as the Chriſtian Poet ſaith,

Sanguine fundata eſt Eccleſia, ſanguine crevit,
Sanguine ſuccrevit, ſanguine finis erit. For

How the Church was perſecuted at all times.

The Church of Chriſt is like Noahs Arke, that never reſted but on mount Ararat, that ſhall never be free from the waves of adverſities and the great billowes of perſecutions, untill ſhe comes to the mountaine of God, which is the kingdome of heaven. And therefore if our Arke be not made of Pine trees, or Gophir wood, that is, ſuch as are able to beare out the violence of all ſtormes; or to keepe my Saviours ſimile, if our houſes bee not built upon a rocke, but upon the ſands, there is no queſtion, but theſe waves and ſtormes of afflictions and perſecutions, and theſe floods of Belial will not onely ſhake us, but overwhelme

Gen. 8. 4.

Gen. 6. 14.

Pſal. 124. 5.

Mat. 8. 25. us, that we ſhall fall, unleſſe we doe ſpeedily crie out with the Diſciples, ſave us Lord, or we periſh.

3. Windes, that is, perſecution of heretiques. Ephe. 6. 12. Winde bloweth two waies. 3. The winds will blow; that is, the perſecution of Heretiques, worſe then any other perſecution whatſoever, this being, as the Apoſtle ſaith, ſpirituall wickedneſſe in heavenly places; but we muſt note that the windes do blow two manner of waies, and both waies naught for the houſes, that are built upon the ſands.

1. Smoothly, 2. Roughly, } So the Heretiques: For

1. Smoothly. 1. As the ſmooth windes drie up all the moiſture of any thing, and you know that makes the ſands the more to diſcohere together; ſo the ſmooth flatteries and the ſweet perſwaſions of ſubtill Heretiques, like ſoft windes, do dry up all the moiſtneſſe of grace, and all the dew of truth from us, that it will make us ſoone to fall, and ſo ſlide away, like the drie ſands, betwixt the fingers of Gods preachers, that can never hold us, doe what they can; becauſe we are ſo dried up with the ſoft windes of inticing errors.

The flatteries of heretickes.

2. Roughly, The cruelty of hereticks. 2. The rough windes make the greater ſtormes, which makes the ſaying true, that no foule weather to winds, as both ſaylers at ſea, and the inhabitants of the hillie countreyes doe ſufficiently finde: ſo, no perſecution like the perſecution of Heretiques; for though they come in ſheepes cloathing, and blow ſmoothly, like ſoft windes, that are very comfortable, when they would ſeduce you; yet inwardly they are ravening wolves, and blow violently, like mighty winds, which roote out the foundation, and blow downe every houſe, that is not built upon a rocke, when they ſee they cannot perſwade us to beleeve their wicked errours:

Mat. 7. 15.

Examples of the cruelty of hereticks. I could fill your eares with examples to confirme this truth; but in the mouth of two or three witneſſes every word is ſufficiently eſtabliſhed; therefore few ſhall ſerve the turne; Georgius an Arrian Biſhop, ſeated in Alexandria in the roome of Athanaſius, was one of thoſe wolves, which ſate in the chaire of Chriſt; for he got a band of ſouldiers, by the helpe of Sebaſtianus; then he fired the towne, and dragged many Chriſtian virgins, being ſtripped ſtarke naked, unto the fire; to ſee if either ſhame or feare, modeſtie or infirmity would make them to renounce the faith of one ſubſtance; and when he ſaw the ſight of the fire could not make them to ſhrinke, he cauſed their faces to be daſhed with ſtroakes, and their countenances to be transformed with abuſes, that they could not be knowne by their moſt familiar friends; and Theodoret doth record, how thirty Biſhops of Egypt and Libia were ſlaine in the fury of this Epiſcopall perſecution; fourteene Biſhops were then baniſhed, of whom ſome died as they went, and ſome others never returned backe againe; and forty good Chriſtians in Alexandria, were ſcourged with wands, and ſo piteouſly handled, that ſome pieces of the rods ſtucke ſo deepely in their fleſh, that they could hardly be drawne out againe; and all this was, becauſe they would not communicate with this Arrian wolfe: The like cruelty was practiſed in Conſtantinople by Biſhop Macedonius, who cauſed Paulus, the true Biſhop thereof, to be baniſhed to Cucuſus, a poore towne in Cappadocia, where he was ſtrangled by the Arrians; and then he uſed no leſſe villanie, no leſſe barbarous cruelty, in compelling the Chriſtians to communicate with him, then was uſed of old to compell them to ſacrifice to the idolls of the Gentiles: and ſo late experience, in Queene Maries daies, when (as they ſay) many poore Chriſtians felt greater ſtormes and harder meaſure, under thoſe bloody Biſhops, to whom that power was delegated, then, in all likelihood, they could have found under heatheniſh tyrants) might be here alleadged to confirme this truth; but the caſe is plaine, to ſhew what crimſon blood hath lodged under thoſe candid fleeves; and no wonder; for theſe men are like Ieremies figges; if they prove good, they are exceeding good, ſpending their whole life and beſt blood in defence of truth; but if bad, they are extreame bad; eſpecially, when they are ſo powerfull, as theſe men were, to perſwade the temporall ſword to make way for their ſpirituall pride; and therefore how happy are we, whoſe

Theodoret. l. 2. c. 13.

Socrates l. 2. c. 2, 7.

The cruelty of the Biſhops in Q. Maries daies. See the booke of Martyrs.

Kings

Kings have alwaies favoured, and I pray God they may doe so still, no hereticall, but orthodoxall Bishops.

And so you see the many and various temptations of raines, flouds and winds, to beat upon the houses of poore Christians; which should make all men to take heed, where they lay their foundation, least they fall. For

2. The house that was built upon the sands fell, when these stormes came, saith our Saviour; καὶ ἔπεσε: and it fell; that is, apostated and revolted from the truth and grace of Christ; and this sheweth unto us,

2. The fall of this house.

Two things observable.

1. That there may be a falling from the religion and profession of Christ; for, as this house, built upon the sand, seemed very faire, and yet fell; so many men, that seeme good Christians, for a while, as Saul, Simon Magus, Demas, Alexander, Himenæus and Philetus, and diverse others, may most fearefully fall away from all the grace they had: there is no doubt of this; and therefore, let him that standeth take heed least he falleth, let him carefully looke unto himselfe, how he hath built his house, how he hath grounded his hope.

1. That many fall from Christ.

1 Cor. 10. 12.

2. This sheweth who they be, that may or do fall away from Christ; not they that build upon the rocke, that is, not the true Saints that are, not seemingly, but really ingrafted into Christ by a true saving faith; quia justus quasi fundamentum sempiternum, because the righteous is an everlasting foundation; and S. Chrysostome saith, Christianum, qui ædificat seipsum super Christum, nulla adversitas diruere potest; no adversity can throw downe that Christian, which builds himselfe upon Christ; for they can all say with S. Paul, Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, or famine, or nakednesse, or perill, or sword? No, no, not any of them all; for in all these things, we are not onely conquerers, but we are more than conquerers, through him that loved us; and therefore, I am perswaded (saith the Apostle) that neither death nor life, nor Angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, (and to use the words of my text) nor raine, nor winds, nor flouds, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Iesus; or to throw downe the house of our confidence, which is built upon this rock. And this is not because they are ἀπαθεῖς, without passion, or senslesse of these winds and stormes, that beat upon them; but because, as the Apostle sheweth, they are comforted and sustained by a double prop.

2. This sheweth who they be, that may or do fall away from Christ.

Rom. 8. 35.

2 Cor. 7. 17. Why the Saints cannot fall from Christ.

1. Sensu misericordiæ præsentis, with the feeling of present helpe.
2. Spe futuræ gloriæ, with the hope of future happinesse.

And specially, because (as S. Peter saith) they are kept by the power of God, through faith, unto salvation; and therefore, the true Saints, that build upon the sure rock Christ Iesus, need not feare excision from grace; because they have a sure foundation, the mercy of God, and the merits of Christ, which was done by him, to satisfie the justice of God for them.

1 Pet. 1. 5.

But, qui propriæ justitiæ innititur, licet forte videtur habere ædificium, tamen in hyeme, id est, tempore mortis, facilè ruit; they that never were the branches of the true vine, that never built upon the sure rocke, that is, never hoped to be saved by the merits of Christ, but relied upon their owne inventions, their owne righteousnesse, the workes of their owne hands, workes required not by God, but the devices of their owne heads, the vaine suppositions of their owne braine; they shall fall and quite sink; because they never were in Christ, but laid the foundation of their house and hope upon the sands.

Ferus in h. loc. Who they be that fall from Christ.

Yet, before I passe to shew the nature of their fall, you must know that they, which lay their foundation upon the rocke, must ædificare domum, that is, perficere, to perfect their work, as the word signifieth; or els, they may seem to begin to build upon Christ, and yet fall from Christ, as many of the Galathians did, who began in the spirit, and ended in the flesh, and therefore, did of the flesh reape corruption; for the Apostle tels us plainly, that upon this sure rocke, this good foundation, Iesus Christ, some build gold and precious stones, and this building shall never fall; others hay and stubble, which, in the words of my text, is

They that will not fall, must finish their building upon Christ. Gal. 3. 3, 4, 8.

1 Cor. 3. 12.

ſand, laid upon the rocke; and whatſoever is built thereon, ſhall fall, though they ſeeme to build the ſame upon Chriſt; therefore as in the legall building, if a righteous man did forſake his righteouſneſſe, he ſhould die in his ſinnes, ſaith the Prophet; ſo in the evangelicall building, if a faithfull man, that is, ſuch a one as ſeemes faithfull, or is ſo indeed for a time, builds not rightly and finally, that is, to the end, he ſhall not be ſaved; becauſe the crowne of righteouſneſſe is laid up onely for them, that can ſay with Chriſt, conſummatum eſt, that is, in S. Pauls phraſe, I have fought a good fight, and have finiſhed my courſe, I have continued faithfull unto death; and all others build upon the ſand, though they ſeeme to have begun in Chriſt; and therefore, they ſhall fall; and their fall ſhall be great, ſaith our Saviour, to ſhew the nature of their fall, which is the laſt point.

Ezek. 18.24.

2 Tim. 4.7.

3. The quality of this fall. Hugo Card. in h. loc.

3. Their fall ſhall be great, ſo is the fall of every wicked man, quia ſciens & prudens male agit, becauſe he doth wittingly and willingly offend his God; yet this fall is greater; not like Adams fall, though that was likewiſe great, as Hugo ſaith, Magna ruina peccati, ad quam reparandam Deum mori fuit neceſſe, yet not ſo termed in reſpect of this; becauſe he recovered himſelfe againe by the grace of Chriſt; but like Lucifers fall, ſicut fulgur de cœlo deſcendens, like as the lightning deſcends from heaven, ſuddenly and finally, never to aſcend thither againe: for otherwiſe, the godly men, the beſt Saints do fall, and they do often fall; the juſteſt man falleth ſeven times a day, and this fall is great; becauſe it is a fall from grace, to ſinne, towards hell; yet not ſo great, but that they riſe againe by the grace of repentance, and riſe as often as they fall, els could they not often fall, if they did not often riſe; but the wicked are ſaid to fall, though but once, yet ſo to fall totally and finally from God, that they never riſe up againe.

Hugo in h. loc. Prov. 24.16.

The difference betwixt the fals or ſinnes of the Saints, and of the wicked. 1 Ioh. 3.9.

Therefore well might our Saviour ſay, the houſe of the faithfull man fell not, that is, from God; or, as S. Iohn ſaith, He that is borne of God ſinneth not, or falleth not, that is, totally, with a full conſent of heart, and delight in ſinne; or finally, that is, not to riſe againe by unfaigned repentance for every ſinne, for every fall; thus he never fell, either from God, or into ſinne; and that the houſe of the wicked man fell, and the fall thereof was great; becauſe he meanes not onely his fall to ſinne, which is often; but that totall and finall fall from God, never to riſe againe; and therefore muſt needs be a great fall, Nam ſi lapſus ille timendus eſt, quo anima cadit a gratia in culpam, quanto magis timendus eſt iſte, quando a prima morte cadet in ſecundam? For if that fall is to be feared, whereby the ſoule doth fall from grace to ſinne, then how much more fearefull is this fall, which throweth both body and ſoule from the firſt death into the ſecond, ſaith Didacus Stella.

Didacus Stella in h. loc. Luca.

What the former doctrine teacheth us.

And therefore the conſideration hereof ſhould teach every one, that hath any care of his owne ſalvation, to take heed how he builds; not upon the ſands, which I have ſhewed you, but upon the ſure rock, that will not faile you; that is, the doctrine of Chriſt and true religion, as ſome expound theſe words; quia petram vocat ſtabilitatem ſuæ doctrinæ, becauſe the ſtability of our Chriſtian Religion is like a rocke; or faith in Chriſt, as diverſe of the Fathers teſtifie, and Ferus, that ſaith, fide deficiente, omnia cadunt; fide manente, ſi ceciderit, non collidetur; when our faith doth faile, all things fall; but if our faith abide, though we fall, yet are we not caſt away: or as others do expound it, and I do chiefly approve it, upon Chriſt himſelfe; for ſo the Prophet David ſaith, the Lord is my rocke; and Saint Paul likewiſe ſaith, Chriſt is that rocke; and that eſpecially in three reſpects.

Ferus in h. loc. Pſal. 18.2. 1 Cor. 10.4.

Chriſt compared to a rock in three reſpects. 1. Of our originall Col. 1.16. Ioh. 1.16.

For
1. Exciſionis, of our originall.
2. Nutritionis, of our nouriſhment.
3. Protectionis, of our protection.

1. He is the rocke from whence every godly man is hewen; all come from him; for by him all things were made, and if we have any good in us, it is all hewen out of him; for of his fulneſſe we have all received, and grace for grace.

2. As

2. As the Iſraelites ſucked honey out of the ſtone, and oyle out of the hard rock, and when Moſes ſtroke the rocke, the waters flowed out, that they dranke of the ſame as out of a river; ſo Chriſt is that rocke which feeds us; for if we be hungry, he is the bread of life; if we be thirſty, he is the fountaine of living waters, that will nouriſh us to eternall life. 2. Of our nouriſhment. Deut.32.13. Pſal.105.40. Ioh.6.35.

3. He is the rocke of our protection, to defend us from all ſtormes, from the violence of the raine, flouds and winds; for as the high hils are a refuge for the wild goats, and the ſtoney rockes for the conies, ſo is Chriſt to all thoſe, that will build on him, as the Prophet ſheweth; this man ſhall be an hiding place from the wind, and as a refuge from the tempeſt. And thus much ſhall ſerve for the deſcription of them that build upon the ſands. 3. Of our protection. Pſal.104.18. Eſa.32.2.

2. Having heard of the fooliſh builders, ſuch as Vetruvius never ſpake of, and having ſeene their lamentable ſucceſſe; we are now to ſpeake of the evill hearers; and they are here deſcribed two wayes. 2. Of the evill hearers, deſcribed two wayes.

1. From their poſitive good. 2. From their privative evill. } And

1. Their poſitive good is twofold. 1. They heare. 2. They heare the words of Chriſt. 1. From their poſitive good, which is twofold.

For both theſe are good, and both points of great wiſdome; and yet they are fooles, for want of the third point, to doe what they heare.

1. They heare, (ſaith our Saviour) and that's well, becauſe the eares are the doores, by which knowledge entreth into our ſoules; and therefore the Centurion auditu invenit, quod non viſu, did find that by hearing, which he could never find by his ſight; for there is a threefold booke to know God. 1. They heare. Thom.1.2.a.9.

1. Nature. 2. Scripture. 3. Glory. } For A threefold booke to know God.

1. As Athenagoras ſaith, Univerſus mundus nihil aliud eſt, quam Deus explicatus; the whole world is nothing els but an explication of God; ſo the inviſible things of God are made viſible by his workes; but becauſe the miſt of ſinne darkneth our carnall eyes, that we cannot ſee the brightneſſe of his glory, while we are in this vale of miſery; therefore inſtead of ſeeing God through them, we do many times worſhip them for God: and of thoſe, that applied themſelves to ſearch after the knowledge of God, there were but few that did perſevere in the right courſe, but either they fell off from their deſigne, or ſtrucken with ſome gyddineſſe, they did ſtumble on the threſhold, or turning aſide to vaine delights, they did wrap themſelves in a thouſand errours; whereupon aroſe thoſe monſtrous gods, and illuding vizards, which were worſhipped by the Heathens, who, wanting an able Maſter to inſtruct them, did follow the cuſtome of their countries, which commanded them to adore thoſe gods, that their family or city, wherein they lived, did uſe to worſhip; and becauſe Euripides affirmed God to be whatſoever is, ſaying, 1. Nature. The errours and idolatries of the Gentiles.

ὁρᾷς τ' ὑφ' ὃν δ' ἄπειρον αἰθέρα, καὶ γῆν πέριξ ἔχουσα ὑγρὰς ἐν ἀγκωλαῖς τοῦτον νόμιζε Ζῆνα, τον δ' ὑγρὸν Θεόν.

Which I find very fitly thus tranſlated.

Seeſt thou the ayres uncompaſt height about?
Seeſt thou the greatneſſe of the earth throughout?
And what ſhe doth in watry armes incloſe?
Count all that God, and do it Iove ſuppoſe.

Therefore, they made any thing that is, to be their gods, as not onely the Sun, the Moone, and the Starres, and all the hoſt of heaven, but alſo the fire, the ſea, the earth, the foure-footed beaſts, and all creeping things: ſo vaine did they become in their imaginations, as to meaſure God by themſelves, and to make the Creatour of all things to become like unto his owne creatures. Therefore Acts 7. Rom.1.

2. God pitying this our blindneſſe, he gave us the holy Scriptures, as helpes 2. Scripture.

and spectacles unto our eyes, that we might the better see the light of truth, & ut unde morbus irrepsit, inde remedium intraret, and that, as S. Bernard saith, life might enter in at the same gate, where death had crept in before, and that we might get salvation by hearing of the words of God, as we got destruction by listening to the voice of the Serpent. And then Bern. in Cant. Serm. 38.

3. Because all this is but a sight in ænigmate, as in a glasse, darkely, he promiseth that we shall more perfectly know him, when we shall see him face to face, and know him as he is, in the kingdome of heaven.

3. Glory. 1 Cor. 13. 12. 1 Ioh. 3. 2.

And these men heare, saith our Saviour, which is the onely way to know God, while we are here; nay more than this, because there are many kinds of hearing, and many things may be heard, which may do no good, perhaps evill; therefore

2. They heare the words of Christ.

2. They heare my words, (saith he) to shew that he speakes not of the Gentiles, that heard the Philosophers, and the Heathen Oracles, nor of the Iewes, that heard Moses Law, though it was good to heare the former, and farre better to heare the latter, to heare Moses and the Prophets, as Abraham intimateth unto Dives; but he speaks of the hearers of the best Master, of the best learning, of the doctrine of Christ; for they heare my words, saith he, that is, my Gospell, which is the glad tidings of salvation; therefore he speakes of Christians, yea such Christians as heare it zealously, and with a great deale of care and devotion, as the originall word doth shew unto us.

Luke 16. 29.

Luke 2. 10.

And yet for all this, they are but fooles, saith our Saviour Christ; because they do not what they heare: therefore all their hearing is but like the building upon the sand, from whence their hope must needs fall; for I may well compare the assurance of mans salvation in heaven, to the evidence of his inheritance here on earth; for as that must have, if it be good, writings, seales, witnesses; so must this; the writings are the Words of God, the seales are the Sacraments of Christ, and the witnesses are our good workes: therefore, as thine indentures, though they have seales, yet will they availe thee nothing, if thou hast no witnesses; so the hearing of Christs Words, and the receiving of his Sacraments, will benefit thee but little, if thy good workes do not testifie thee to be the servant of Christ; thou hast his coat without his badge, and sittest at his Table without thy wedding garment; for as Christ said of himselfe, opera quæ ego facio, ipsa testantur de me; so I may say of all Christians, the workes that we do will testifie what we are; and there can be no better witnesses.

The assurance of our salvation three wayes confirmed.

No evidence good without witnesses.

Good works the best testimony to assure us of eternall life. Ioh. 10. 25.

Indeed knowledge is a goodly garland, and a faire flower to looke upon, the best in the garden to delight the eares; yet as beautifull Rachel being barren, said unto her husband, give me children or I die; so our knowledge, if it be sterilous, and void of good works, will say at last, give me the fruits of a godly life, or I shall perish and die eternally; for God gave not his lawes and commandements unto men, onely to be taught and talked of, (for so he might have delivered them unto parots, that would have prated of them night and day) but he gave them to be kept, and commanded us to do what he taught us; and in that respect, all the covenants and promises of blessing s are made to the doers, and not the knowers of Gods will; for not the hearers of the Law, but the doers of the Law shall be justified, saith the Apostle; and if you know these things, happy are you, if you doe them, saith our Saviour. Therefore the Poet saith well,

Gen. 30. 1. S. Ward. in quad. concione.

Why God gave his Law.

Rom. 2. 13.

Ioh. 13. 17.

Tu rectè vivis, si curas esse quod audis;

Thou livest right, if thou doest what thou heares; and Christ, to shew the miserable estate of them that are onely hearers and talkers of Gods Word, and not doers, curseth the fig-tree that had no fruit, though his leaves were never so faire; and he saith, that many Prophets which had great knowledge, and had taught many men to know Christ, should be excluded out of heaven, with a nescio vos, I know you not, because they were workers of iniquity; and S. Paul, that had abundance of revelations shewed unto him, and spake with languages more than all the Apostles, and preached incessantly the Word of God; yet did he watch,

Mat. 21. 19.

Luke 13. 27.

watch, and faſt, and pray, and do all other good that he could poſſibly doe; leaſt after all his preaching unto others, he himſelfe ſhould bea caſt-away; for our Saviour, at the laſt day, will condemne the wicked into everlaſting fire, not ſo much becauſe they have not heard his words, as becauſe they have not done his works, they have not fed the hungry, clothed the naked, &c. And therefore, if any man would have any certaine evidence of his ſalvation, let him make his election ſure, διὰ καλῶν ἔργων, by good workes, as the Vulgar reads it; and as Theodore Beza confeſſeth, he ſaw it in two Greek Manuſcripts; for hereby we are ſure that we know him, if we keepe his commandements; becauſe that, as we judge of the corporall health, not by the words of the mouth, or the colour of the outward countenance, but by the urine, that proceeds from within, and the pulſe of the arme, where the bloud worketh; ſo judgement muſt be given of our ſpirituall ſoundneſſe, and the uprightneſſe of our hearts, not by words; for ſo Saul will be found among the Prophets, and hypocrites will have as good words, as the beſt profeſſours; but by the fruits of works, and the actions of our lives; and therefore I counſell every man to ſay with Ulyſſes in Euripides, I will have my tombe honoured before my death, and with Titus Veſpaſian, when he paſſed over a day, wherein he did not ſome notable good, diem perdidi, I have loſt this day; and ſo let him fill every day full of all good works, that in the end he may ſay with the bleſſed Apoſtle S. Paul, I have fought a good fight, I have finiſhed my courſe, I have kept the faith; and this good fight well maintained, this godly courſe well finiſhed, and this ſtrong faith well preſerved, will be three moſt excellent ſupporters to hold up the aſſurance of his ſalvation, and to make his life comfortable, and his death happy, whenſoever he ſhall leave this life.

1 Cor. 9.27.

Mat. 25.42.

2 Pet. 1.10. Good workes the evidence of Gods graces.

1 Ioh. 2.3.

How we judge of the ſick.

2 Tim. 4.7.

And as to do the will of God, is the onely thing that makes us happy, ſo it is the chiefeſt meanes that we can uſe to make others happy; for arguments are but darke, and the beſt demonſtrations are but dull inſtruments to perſwade ſimple men, that are like ſheep, rather following the example of others, than driven by any precept of art; but the perſwaſion of a good life, and the force of an unblameable converſation, is an unanſwerable ſyllogiſme to confirme the ſimple, and to convert the very Pagans to imbrace the truth: and the reaſon is, quia ſapientis eſt ſapientes judicare; as blind men cannot judge of colours, ſo the ignorant man cannot diſcerne the ſubtilties of the learned; therefore, as the Emperour Iovinian ſaid to the Arrian and Orthodoxe Biſhops, I cannot judge of your doctrine, but I can judge of your life, and I can ſee which is moſt peaceable and innocent; or, as that Martyr, in the Book of Martyrs, anſwered to Biſhop Bonner, I cannot diſpute to defend the truth, but I can die for the profeſſion of my faith; ſo ſimple men are not able to be judges of our doctrines, we may preach many falſe points, and they (like blind men) ſwallow all theſe gudgins; but the light of nature tels them, for the moſt part, what is good, and what is evill.

Our good workes the beſt meanes to convert others.

A true ſaying of Iuſtinian.

So you ſee how manifold is the uſe of good works, both in reſpect of our ſelves, to aſſure us of our ſalvation, and of our neighbours, to confirme them in the ſincerity of our profeſſion. And yet there be two cankered wormes that do ſtill corrupt the root of this doctrine.

Two enemies of good works.

1. The ſupine profeſſours.
2. The ſolifidians.

} For

1. Careleſſe profeſſours.

1. The ſlothfull perſon ſaith, If I periſh I periſh; if God hath decreed my ſalvation, I cannot be damned; and if he hath decreed my damnation, do what I can, I cannot change his decree; for his councell ſhall ſtand, and his will ſhall be done; and therefore, my ſoule ſhall ſleepe in ſecurity, and my life I will paſſe over with careleſneſſe; and ſuch a one was Ludovicus the Lantgrave; but at length, being ſicke, he ſent for his Phyſitian, who, knowing this his mind, anſwered, if you be ordained to live longer, my Phyſick will be needleſſe; and if your time be come to die, my Phyſick will be as bootleſſe; therefore I will give you none: O but, ſaid Ludovicus, God bringeth his ends to paſſe by meanes; and therefore, I pray you, do your beſt; well then, ſaid the Phyſitian, if God appointed meanes for the cure of your body, do you think your ſoule can be ſaved without meanes? By no meanes: for as in the warre of Midian, the ſword of the Lord and of Gideon went together; ſo in the caſe of our ſoules, we muſt ſo caſt our care upon God, as not to be our ſelves altogether careleſſe of our eſtate, we muſt not ſo relie upon Gods ſecret election, as to neglect the outward meanes of our ſalvation.

The deſperate arguing of Ludovicus.

Iudg.7.21.

2. The Solifidian ſaith, To him that worketh not, but believeth in him that juſtifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteouſneſſe; becauſe Chriſt hath done for us in his life, whatſoever we ſhould have done, and he hath ſuffered for us at his death, whatſoever we ſhould have ſuffered; and therefore there remaineth nothing for us to do, but onely to believe in him, and we ſhall be ſaved. But O man, thou doſt corrupt the Apoſtles meaning; for when he ſaith, faith is counted for righteouſneſſe, to him that worketh not, he doth not meane, to him that worketh not at all; but to him that worketh not for his juſtification; becauſe works have no worke in this action, but they muſt herein hold downe their heads, and be aſhamed to ſhew their faces; but otherwiſe, we muſt worke to juſtifie our faith, and we are ſo farre from being juſtified, if we be without works, that we are ſaid to be in our ſinnes, to be dead, and to be without all faith; becauſe faith worketh by love, and without workes faith is dead.

2. The Solifidian. Rom.4.5.

Gal.5.6. Iam 2.20. Sam Ward in quæd. conciones.

Therefore, ſeeing it is moſt true, which a moderne Divine of our Church ſaith, one apple of the tree of life is of better reliſh, and hath more worth, than twenty of the tree of knowledge; and ſeeing they are bleſſed that heare the word of God and keepe it, and their houſe ſhall not fall, which heare theſe ſayings of Chriſt, and do them; and that it is our duty, not ſo much to preach the faith of Chriſt, as to perſwade obedience to that faith, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, *Rom.*1.5. (which makes all Preachers to ſay, Scripturarum cupimus verba in opera vertere, & non diſcere ſancta, ſed facere, they deſire you would turne the words of the Scriptures into workes, and not onely to ſay, but eſpecially to do all holy things) I will pray to God, firſt for my ſelfe, that he would give me grace to doe his will, and to relieve the poore to the uttermoſt of my poore ability, and if I have not meanes, that my heart may pitie him, and wiſh him helpe, when my hands are not able to ſupport him; and then to do my beſt to teach all others to do the like, not to make religion a lip-labour, but to abound in all the works of godlineſſe; and touching others, I will pray for them, as for my ſelfe, that Chriſt may not ſay unto us at the laſt day, ite maledicti, go ye accurſed into everlaſting fire; becauſe I was hungry, and you fed me not, I was naked, and you cloathed me not, &c. but that we may rather heare him ſay to us, as he doth to thoſe on his right hand, venite benedicti, come you bleſſed, receive the kingdome prepared for you from the beginning of the world. Amen.

The Authours wiſh for himſelfe and others.

Amen.

IEHOVÆ LIBERATORI.

THE VVEEPING VVOMAN.

John 20. 11.

Μαρία δὲ εἱστήκει πρὸς τὸ μνημεῖον κλαίουσα.

But Mary ſtood without at the Sepulcher weeping.

THis part of the Chapter, from the 11 verſe to the 19.v. containeth three ſpeciall things.

1. The lamentation of Mary.
2. The apparition of the Angels.
3. The manifeſtation of Chriſt.

1. The lamentation of Mary is chiefely ſet dowre in theſe words, and then amplified in he treſt. And theſe words may be expounded { 1. Literally. 2. Miſtically. }

The words expounded two waies.

1. In the literall expoſition of theſe words, we muſt obſerve theſe two points;

1. The coherence, in the word, but.
2. The ſubſtance of them in the other words.

1. The literall ſence. Two points obſervable.

For

1. There is no word, no ſyllable, no title of holy Scripture, but it may afford us a great deale of matter, worthy our beſt obſervations; and therefore this word, δὲ but; muſt not be paſſed over in ſilence, when the Holy Ghoſt hath not ſet it downe for nothing; for Saint Peter, and Saint Iohn, and others came to viſit the Sepulcher of Chriſt; and when they ſaw it, they went away againe unto their owne home; but Mary ſtayed ſtill and remained there: and therefore ſhe found the benefit of her diligence, and the reward of her perſeverance; the Angels to comfort her, and her Saviour, whom ſhe ſought, to appeare unto her. And this affordeth us theſe inſtructions.

1. The coherence

1. How to behave our ſelves in Gods ſervice; not to thinke it ſufficient to imitate others doings, but to do what we ought to do, though none els ſhould doe the ſame; for ſo Ioſhuah, when he called all Iſrael together, ſaid, doe you what ſeemeth good in your eyes, I and my houſe will ſerve the Lord; and reaſon good he ſhould doe ſo; becauſe it would not excuſe him at the laſt day to anſwer, I have

1. Leſſon, to doe what we ought, and not what others doe.

Ioſhuah 24.15.

have done as all others did; And therefore ſeeing we are to live by the precepts of God, and not by the examples of men, we ſhould ſet God alwaies before our eyes, and let his Word be our guide to direct us to all duties.

2. Leſſon, that the number of Chriſt his ſervants is but ſmall. Gen. 7. 1. c. 19. 15. Iudges 7. 7.

2. This ſheweth us, that of many, which will runne to Chriſt, there bee but few that will ſtay with Chriſt; for as then, many came to the Sepulcher, and yet none ſtaied but onely Mary; none was found righteous in the Old world, but onely Noah; none in Sodome but onely Lot; and of all the many multitudes that came out of Egypt, none entered into the land of promiſe, ſave Caleb and Ioſhuah; and of the 30000 ſouldiers that came to Gideon, none ſtayed with him but 300 men; ſo now the Church of God, the family of Chriſt is like Zoar, it is but a little one, and the company of them that truly ſerve God, are but very few; the minor part, for the moſt part, in every houſe, in every place; for the wicked are like evill weeds that grow apace, or like peble ſtones, ſo plentifull, that a man may ſoone find inough of them in any company; but the godly are like fine ſweet flowers, that will not thrive but in well manured gardens; or like diamonds, ſcarce, as Salomons curious workes, a lillie upon a pillar, and a lillie upon a pillar, rare and few; Quia magna plenitudo hominum, ſed magna ſolitudo bonorum.

The number of the wicked very many.

3. Leſſon, that there are diverſities of gifts, and divers degrees of graces. Mat. 25. 15.

3. This confirmeth what the the Apoſtle ſaith, that although there be but one ſpirit, which giveth all good things; yet there be divers degrees of gifts, and great diverſities of Gods graces; for the Apoſtles had the grace to come to ſee the Sepulcher, but Mary onely had the grace to ſtay untill ſhe ſaw her Saviour Chriſt; and ſo it is with us; for ſome have five talents, ſome two, and ſome but one; and they that have the feweſt or the meaneſt gifts, cannot have more or better, though they would never ſo faine, though they labour never ſo much; becauſe as the Apoſtle ſaith, it is not in him that runneth, nor in him that willeth, but in God that ſheweth mercy, and diſpoſeth of his gifts as pleaſeth him.

Rom. 9. 16.

Ob. But then you will ſay, it is to no purpoſe for me to ſeeke for more, if it be not in my power to attaine unto any.

Sol. I anſwer that thou muſt uſe what he gave thee, and improve what thou haſt, and God will never call thee to an account for what thou never receiveſt; for if there be firſt a willing minde, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not, ſaith the Apoſtle; and therefore our duty is, to uſe with diligence, what we have, and not to repine that wee have no more.

2 Cor. 8. 12.

4. Leſſon, that we ought to perſevere unto the end

4. This teacheth us to perſevere in grace, if we would injoy the fruits of grace; for they that came, and went away, went without the ſight of Chriſt; but ſhe that came and ſtaid, found that which ſhe came for; and ſo it will be with us; we muſt wait with patience, if we deſire to reape the fruit of our hopes, and looke to obtaine the end of our deſires; becauſe it is not inough for us venire ad Chriſtum, to come unto Chriſt, but we muſt alſo manere in Chriſto, abide in Chriſt, if we would be happy; and therefore he that ſaid in Saint Matthew, which is the firſt of all the Evangelicall writers, come unto me, ſaid alſo in Saint Iohn, which is the laſt Apoſtle that wrote unto us, abide in me: And ſo Anna, the good woman, departed not from the Temple day nor night; and the Prophet David ſaith, the bleſſed man muſt be like thoſe trees, whoſe leaves ſhall not wither, and holy men muſt be like holly trees, which do alwaies continue greene unto the end; for the Saints muſt not be like Mandrabulus, that offered unto Iuno the firſt yeere a ſheepe of gold, but the ſecond yeere a ſheepe of ſilver, and the third yeere a ſheepe of braſſe; nor like that man in the Legend, which being promiſed to proſper and to be inriched, if he would pray to God thrice every day; when his wealth began to be increaſed, he deſired a diſpenſation, that he might doe it but twice; and when hee became wealthy indeed, hee thought once a day was ſufficient; and then he forgat to pray at all, when he had all that he deſired; but they muſt be like King Therons courſers, that, as Pindarus ſaith, were never weary of running; and their zeale muſt be like the fire, which the Veſtall virgins kept in

Mat. 11 28.

Iohn 15. 4. Luk. 2. 37.

Pſal. 1. 4.

The ſervice of Mandrabulus.

The Legendarie rich man.

in Rome, or the ſacrificing fire upon Gods altar, that was ever to burne and never to be put out; they muſt perſevere unto the end, if they will be ſaved, as our Saviour ſaith.

Plutarch in Numa. Levit. 6.13. Mat. 24.13.

And yet moſt of us are as mutable as the Moone; we change every moneth; nay every day and every houre we alter our determinations; nam hodie volumus, cras nolumus; for this day we will ſerve God preciſely, and to morrow we will ſerve him not at all, ſaith Drexelius: nay, aliud manè aliud placet veſperi. we are zealous in the morning, and many times key-cold before the evening; being never the ſame, ſeldome our ſelves; but like a cloud, that is caried away with every winde, ſo we rowle Syſiphus ſtone, and we fill Danaus tunne, while in the ſelfe-ſame houre, we will and nill the ſelfe ſame thing. And therefore our reſolutions to ſerve God, are not like an inexpugnable tower, ſited upon the ſide of an inacceſſible hill, and founded upon the face of an inconcuſſible rocke; but they are like a houſe of clay, builded upon the ſands, which every blaſt of winde or raging ſtorme will ſoone caſt downe.

How unconſtant we are in all our actions.

Drexelius heliotrop. l. 4. c. 5. §. 2. & 3. Iames 1.6.

And this made King Saul, that he could not ſtay for the Prophet Samuel one little houre, but he muſt preſently ſacrifice, becauſe Samuel came not preſently unto him; ſo the Diſciples will inſtantly be gone, if they doe not inſtantly finde their maſter Chriſt; and ſo moſt of us; when we pray to God, and ſeeke for any thing from God, we are like that wanton wench that danced before unwiſe Herod, and ſaid, volo ut protinus des mihi, I will that thou giveſt me by and by; ſo we muſt have our deſires granted forthwith, or we will deſire them no longer, we will pray no more, we can proceed no further; And therefore, as Samuel told Saul unto his face, that he had done fooliſhly, becauſe he was ſo haſty; ſo I beleeve theſe Diſciples did not wiſely, becauſe they returned ſo quickly; and we ſhall doe moſt fooliſhly, if we continue not in our prayers and ſervice to God unto the end; for if the viſion come not, tarrie thou; quia veniens veniet & non tardabit; becauſe it will come in its appointed time, ſaith the Prophet; And therefore Chriſt, though he was diverſly perſwaded to come downe from the tree, and not to ſtay the end of his torments, when they cried unto him, if thou beeſt the Sonne of God, deſcend from the Croſſe, and we will beleeve in thee; yet, as Saint Chryſoſtome well obſerveth, ideo de cruce non deſcenderet, quia filius Dei erat. he would not therefore deſcend from the Croſſe, becauſe he was the Sonne of God; but he would expect the end of his ſufferings, till he might ſay, all is finiſhed, that all we might receive the fruits of his Paſſion; becauſe the Sonnes of God muſt never give over waiting upon God untill the end. And therefore, as King Ioakim was held in priſon, 37. yeeres, and yet after all that while was reſtored both to his liberty and to his kingdome; becauſe he waited patiently and prayed moſt conſtantly unto the Lord all this time; ſo ſhould we never deſiſt our prayers, and never give over to ſerve our God, untill he hath mercy upon us; but, as the Sonne of Syrach ſaith, ſuſtine ſuſtentationes Dei, when thou commeſt to ſerve the Lord, prepare thy ſoule for temptation, ſet thy heart aright, and conſtantly endure, and cleave unto him, and depart not away, that thou maiſt bee increaſed at thy laſt end. And ſo much for the coherence of theſe words.

1 Sam. 13.9.

How ſoone wee are weary of well doing.

Mar. 6.25.

1 Sam. 13.13.

Hab. 2.3.

The conſtancy of Chriſt.

Mat. 27.42.

Chryſoſt. ſuper Mat. cap 27.

Ioh. 19.30.

Baruch c. 4 v. 21. & 27.

Eccleſ. 2.1, 2, 3.

2. The ſubſtance of this Text containeth theſe two ſpeciall parts;

2. The ſubſtance of the Text containeth two parts.

1. Qua & qualis fuit; who and what manner of woman this was.
2. Quid fecit, what ſhee did; ſtood without the Sepulcher weeping.

1. That you may the better know this woman, you muſt underſtand that this Mary was
1. A great woman.
2. A great ſinner.
3. A great penitent.

1. Who this Mary was.

1. She was a noble woman, and one of the blood-royall of the Tribe of Iudah, and as they ſay, daughter unto one Syrus and Eucharia, and ſiſter unto Lazarus and Martha: and ſhe was called Mary Magdalene, a Magdalo caſtro, from Magdalen

1. A noble woman

Whence ſhe was called Mary Magdalen.

Magdalene caſtle; for when the inheritance of Syrus was to be divided amongſt his children, Lazarus had all the poſſeſſions that were in Ieruſalem, Martha had Bethanie, where Lazarus was raiſed out of his grave, and Mary had the caſtle of Magdalen, which was neere unto Naim: and from that ſhe was called Mary Magdalen.

2. A great ſinner. Iuvenal. Satyra 8. p. 76. Palengen. Iuvenal. Ibid. Sat. 8. Ne collapſa ruant ſubductis tecta columnis.

2. You heare ſhe was a noble woman, a great Lady no doubt; but the Poet tells us, ——Nobilitas ſola eſt atq; unica virtus:

——Hac nobilis Hector

Alcides q; fuit;

Vertue onely is the true nobility, and they that are not ſo, are nothing; becauſe, as the ſame Poet ſaith, —Miſerum eſt aliorum incumbere fama, it is but a poore ſhift and a miſerable thing, to depend upon the glory of another; and we find that the parents blood, ſtain'd with the childrens vices, is not ſo good as Nebuchadnezzars Image, which was of gold and clay mixt together. And therefore that we may know this woman the better, we muſt know what ſhe was by her behaviour; becauſe vertues come not by deſcent of blood, nor are retained by eminency of perſonage, but by excellency of cariage; and we find that this woman was once very vitiouſly given; in plaine termes, σπαταλῶσα γύνη; a wanton woman, given to luxurie, and remaining in luſt; an unchaſt Lady, an adultereſſe; and as ſome write, proſtibulum, a notable, enormous, publique publican; or a common curtezan, whoſe head-ſtrong affections (which Nazianzen calls, ἵπποις θερμῶς καὶ δυσκάθηποις; fiery horſes, horſes hard to be ſit on) did carry her to the ſuburbs of hell; ſo neere, that ſeven divels had gotten hold upon her, to hurrie her headlong, like Quintus Curtius, into the bottomeleſſe gulph, where there is nothing els but weeping and wailing and gnaſhing of teeth; And, what is ſuch a woman, but as the Poet ſaith, θηρῶν ἁπάντων ἀγριωτέρα κακὴ γυνή, a wicked woman, worſe then all wild beaſts: or as another ſaith, ὀδὸς πέφυκεν ἀσπίδων, καὶ θηρίων πολὺ κακῶν; the very poyſon of aſpes, and the ſtore-houſe of all evill.

Dan. 2. 32, 33.

χήρα σπαταλῶσα.

1 Tim. 5. 6.

Inter diverſarum ſententiarum annexas ſeveras. Theognidis. μετὰ κακῶν πέφυκε φῶτος γυνή. Plenum malorum eſt omne muliebre.

But is it not a wonder, that ſo great a woman ſhould be ſo great a ſinner, and ſo noble a perſonage ſhould be of ſo baſe a cariage?

Mat. 25. 29.

I anſwer, that greatneſſe may lawfully challeng goodneſſe from thoſe, that are great; for to whom much is given, of them much ſhall be required; that is, to whom God hath beſtowed great honours, high places, and much dignity, of them he expecteth much thankefullneſſe and great ſervice; and good reaſon, that eminent perſons ſhould produce excellent vertues; and yet commonly it is not ſo; for great ones thinke they may ſinne by authority, and their authority is ſufficient to keepe them without reproofe; and oftentimes ſo they doe; for it is recorded by Flavius Vopiſcus, that all the names of the good Emperours might eaſily be ingraven in uno annulo, in one little ring; and I thinke Platinas good Popes, eſpecially if we beleeve Iohn Bale, would ſcarce double the number of the good Emperors, if you begin to number them after the time of Pope Gregory, which was the worſt of all that went before him, and the beſt of all them that came after him; ſo few were good of ſo many of them; and the Sonne of Syrach ſaith, all, that is, of the Kings of Iſrael and Iuda, except David, Ezechias and Ioſias were defective and forſooke the law of the moſt high; and therefore Saint Paul tells us plainely, that not many wiſe men after the fleſh, not many mighty, not many noble are called; ſome there be that be very zealous, but not many; And the reaſon hereof may be twofold.

How few great ones are good.

Iohannes Bale de vitis Paparum.

Eccleſ 49. 4.

1 Cor. 1. 26.

Why many of the nobler ſort are not called. 1. Reaſon.

1. Becauſe they have power to doe what they liſt; they have wealth to oppreſſe, to be proud, to be drunke, to corrupt thoſe that will, and ſo forth; and they have friends to excuſe them, to defend them, when they doe ſpill the bloed and ſucke the life of innocents; ſo they have the meanes to ſin, when the poore man hath not the power to offend.

2. Reaſon.

2. Others have not the power to hinder them; and none dares reproove them; whereas, if a poore man ſinne, he is preſently reprehended, and perhaps reſtrained from his ſinne, that hee may bee reuued by grace; but the great men are ſo

so farre from being reprooved, that they are often times flattered and applauded in their evill deeds: Nay more then this, wee see their servants so bold upon their masters greatnesse, that they will presume to practice those horrid things, kill, sweare, swagger, and abuse both men and women, which many others dare not doe: and the boldest reprovers of meane mens sinnes, are many times afraid to reprove these feareless sinners; so miserable is the glittering state of graceless great ones; so powerfull to sin, and so linked in sin, that they know not how to get out, nor we, how to bring them out, except we bring our selves into danger; but for my part, let my tongue for ever cleave to the roofe of my mouth, if ever it feares to crie shame on those greatest men, that will, without shame, dishonour God, or suffer their attendants to do the same without reproofe; I wish them alwaies to remember what the Psalmist saith; who so leadeth a godly life he shall be my servant, he that is wicked shall not live in my house, and he that telleth lies shall not tarry in my sight; for it is most certaine, that he, which feareth God, will prove to be the best servant.

The servants of great men how they doe presume to sin under their masters wings.

The miserable estate of great men.

See Psal. 101. 7. and reade it often over.

3. As this woman was a great sinner, so she is now a great penitent; and indeed, she was not before so sinfull, as she is now sorrowfull for her sins; and so all the examples of Gods Saints do teach us, that great sins must be greatly sorrowed for, and our repentance must be in weight and measure, according to the height and measure of our transgressions; for as Manasses made the streets of Ierusalem flow with blood, so he made the prison of Babylon swimme with teares; and as Saint Peter denied his master most cowardly, so he went out and wept most bitterly; and therefore, let not those that have rob'd Churches, and devoured Lord-ships, and beene the undoing of many many poore men, thinke that a small satisfaction will be sufficient for such hainous transgressions; for you must either repent in measure, or he will punish you in measure, & juxta numerum criminum erit numerus plagarum, and the number of your stripes shall be, according to the number of your sins. And so much for the woman, who and what she was.

3. A great penitent.

That we must be greatly penitent, for great sins.

Mat. 26. 70, 72, 73. 75.

2. For the action of this woman, what she did, the Evangelist saith, shee stood by the Sepulcher weeping: wherein we may observe

1. Her posture, stetit, she stood.
2. Her place, juxta Sepulchrum, by the Sepulcher.
3. Her demeanure, plorans, weeping.

2. The action of this woman, wherein three things are observable.

1. Stetit, she stood; the most Expositors upon the first Psalme tell us, there be three sorts of sinners, and three degrees of sinning.

1. Her posture.

Three degrees of sinning.

1. Walkers. 2. Standers. 3. Sitters in sin.

The first is bad, the second worse, the third worst of all. So there be three degrees of grace; first, an upright conversation, when, with Enoch, we doe walke with God; second, a constant perseverance, when, as the Apostle adviseth us, we doe stand fast in the faith; and thirdly, a perpetuall delight and complacencie; when we set up our rest and take our chiefest pleasure and contentment in the love and service of God; and this woman had attained to the two first degrees, but to the last, as yet, she had not fully atchieved; because she stood without the Sepulcher, and had not yet enjoyed the presence of Christ; so before we come into our graves, and have the fruition of the sight of God, we shall not place our whole delight in his love, but we shall be oftentimes distracted with the vaine delights and pleasures of this world.

Three degrees of grace.

Perfection not to be had in this life.

2. The place where she stood was, juxta Sepulchrum, by the Sepulcher; where you may observe these two points.

2. Her place, where two things are to be observed.

1. That the Sepulcher of Moses was hid from the children of Israel, and no man knoweth the place of his buriall to this very day: and yet the divell, when Michael strove with him about the body of Moses, (as Saint Iude testifieth) would faine have revealed it unto the people, that so he might induce them to Idolatry, to runne in pilgrimage unto his tombe, and to adore such a saviour, as their god; but the Sepulcher of Christ was made knowne both to men and women; for they saw it, and went into it, as Saint Iohn witnesseth; And yet the divell laboured

1. Observation, Deut. 34. 6.

Why the divell would reveale the burying place of Moses.

Ioh. 20. 6. & 8.

what he could, with armed ſouldiers to keepe all men from it; that ſo he might hinder us to beleeve the Reſurrection of our Saviour Chriſt; but God would not ſuffer the one to be reveiled, nor the other to be concealed from us; and the reaſon is, becauſe God is deſirous to conceale all things from us, whoſe knowledge may be hurtfull to us; ſo he would not have Adam to eate of the tree of knowledge; becauſe he knew, the knowledge that he ſhould get thereby, would undo him; ſo he will not have us to know the myſteries of his ſecret counſells, of Election, Reprobation and the like; becauſe he knoweth, that the knowledge of theſe things will not a little hurt us, in abating our zeale and increaſing many needleſſe queſtions and contentions amongſt us; and ſo he would not ſuffer the place of Moſes buriall to be made knowne to any; becauſe he knew, that the knowledge thereof would produce nothing, but iniquity and miſery unto all that knew it; And on the other ſide, God is moſt ready and willing to reveale thoſe things to us, whoſe knowledge may be profitable for us; ſo he would have us to know his revealed will; becauſe this knowledge makes us happy; and the ignorance thereof will deſtroy us, when, as our Saviour ſaith, wee doe erre, becauſe wee know not the Scriptures; and ſo he would have us to know the place of Chriſt his buriall, and would not ſuffer the malice of the divell, nor all the power of the Iewes, to keepe off the followers of Chriſt from looking into his Sepulchre; becauſe he ſaw that the ſight thereof might prove an argument of a ſingular uſe, to induce them the ſooner to beleeve the Reſurrection of Chriſt.

Why God reveaſeth ſome things, and concealeth other things from us.

Deut. 34.6.

What we ſhould labour to know, and what wee ſhould forbeare to know. Mat. 22.29.

And therefore this ſhould teach us, to ſearch the Scriptures, that we may know the will of God; and yet ſapere ad ſobrietatem, to be wiſe unto ſobriety; leaſt too much curioſity may drowne us, with Ariſtotle, in this bottomeleſſe ſea, or burne us, with Plinie, in mount Veſuvius; becauſe as Moſes ſaith, the ſecret things belong unto the Lord our God, and thoſe things, that are revealed, belong unto us and our children.

Iohn 5 39.

Deut. 29.29.

2. Obſervation.

2. In that ſhe ſtood by the Sepulcher, it did put her in minde of her mortality; for the word μνῆμα or μνημεῖον, a monument, which the Evangeliſt uſeth in this place, is derived of μνημονευω, to remember; becauſe it puts us in minde of our owne ſtate and condition: and therefore the Chriſtians of the primitive Church did uſe to viſit the monuments of the Saints, to ſhew that they were not annihilated or reduced to nothing, but tranſlated to a better place, and to put themſelves in minde of their owne death; even as King Philip was wont, to have a boy to cry every morning at his chamber doore, Philippe, memento te hominem eſſe, ô Philip, remember that thou art a man; becauſe this ſhould put him in mind of his mortality, and mortality of the contempt of all earthly vanities; for when we die, what good will all theſe things doe unto us? and therefore this makes us to purchaſe and build, and to put no end unto our deſires, as if we ſhould live for ever; becauſe we doe not thinke that we are ſo neere our death; for he might eaſily be perſwaded to deſpiſe all things, that could fully be induced to beleeve that he muſt preſently leave all things: and therefore Eſau ſaid right in the theſi; loe, I die, and what good will my birth-right doe unto me? becauſe death deprives us of all worldly things, and ſuffereth us to tranſport nothing with us, but our winding ſheete.

Paſor in verbo μιμνησκομαι. p. 590.

That we ought alwaies to be mindfull of our mortality.

King Philips practiſe.

The cauſe of our inſatiable deſires.

Gen. 25.32.

But if our meditations would make a right uſe of our Saviours Sepulcher, then ſhould we remember theſe thirteene particulars.

Thirteene things memorable in the Sepulcher of Chriſt.

1. That there was in it, Myrrhe, which is the embleme of mortality.
2. Aloes, which is bitter.
3. The linnen clothes, which were cleane.
4. The handkercher, which did cover his face.
5. That it was hewen out of a rocke, which was very firme.
6. That a great ſtone was rolled to the doore of the Sepulcher.
7. That it was ſigned with the ſeale of the High-Prieſt.
8. That it was a new tombe, wherein never any one was laid before.
9. That it had a watch to keepe it, leaſt the body of Chriſt ſhould be ſtollen away.
10. That

10. That it was in a garden of all ſweet and pleaſant flowers. Ammin.ſ.3.nu.13 c.3.§.3.

11. That it was in mount Calvarie, where Chriſt did ſuffer.

12. That it was nigh unto Hieruſalem, which is the viſion of peace.

13. That it was Ioſephs tombe, which ſignifieth increaſe or augmentation.

For all this is to teach us

1. That we ſhould mortifie our members, luſts, and all paſſions, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh. Col.3.5.

2. That the bitterneſſe of repentance and contrition ſhould be as ſalt, to ſeaſon all our tranſgreſſions.

3. That our ſoules and bodies ſhould be as pure, as the whiteſt clothes.

4. That we ſhould cover our faces with humility, leaſt with the Phariſee we become proud of our owne good workes. What the foreſaid obſervations ſhould teach us.

5. That our faith be as ſurely built upon Chriſt, as upon a rocke, leaſt in the time of temptation we fall away, and ſtart a ſide like a broken bow.

6. That our purpoſe and reſolution to ſerve God be like a great ſtone upon the doore of our ſoule, that nothing may enter into our heart, to diſturbe our pious thoughts.

7. That our mindes be indued with the grace of Chriſt, which is the true ſeale of the great High-Prieſt.

8. That we lodge no ſinne in our breaſts, before we entertaine the body of Chriſt.

9. That we watch and ward, night and day, and as the Wiſeman ſaith, omni cuſtodia, cuſtodire corda noſtra, above all watch, to watch our hearts, leaſt the malicious Diſciples of the divell ſhould ſteale away the grace of God from us. Pro.4.23.

10. That our hearts and mindes ſhould be as incloſed gardens, full of all good fruites and pleaſant flowers; as the red-roſe of patience, the lillie of innocencie, and the like; that our ſoules may ſay, let my beloved come into his garden and eate his pleaſant fruit. Cant.4.16.

11. That we ſhould ever be mindfull of the Paſſion of Chriſt; becauſe his death is the onely thing that freeth our ſoules from all ſinnes, as Saint Auguſtine ſpeaketh, and the Apoſtle before him, ſaying, the blood of Ieſus Chriſt cleanſeth us from all our ſins. Death of Chriſt cleanſeth us from all ſin. 1 Ioh.1.7.

12. That we ſhould live in peace with all men here on earth, and long to bee with the Prince of peace in heaven.

13. That we ſhould increaſe in grace, and grow, not as ſower ale in ſummer, worſe and worſe; but as good wine well kept, better and better, from one vertue unto another, untill our ſoules be filled with all goodneſſe; this is to bury the body of Chriſt in Ioſephs tombe; when his graces are ſowed in a fruitfull heart, that brings increaſe, of ſome thirty, of ſome ſixtie, and of ſome a hundred fold. That we ſhould increaſe in goodneſſe.

And thus, as the Prophet ſaith, erit ſepulchrum ejus glorioſum, we ſhall beautifie the tombe of Chriſt, and make his Sepulcher glorious: and to make this uſe of it in monte proprio, at our owne home, will be more availeable to us, then to runne in pilgrimage to ſee the ſame in mount Calvary. How the tombe of Chriſt is truly beautified.

3. The demeanure of this woman is ſet downe in this word plorans, weeping; where we may conſider, 3. Her demeanure, wherein two things are to be conſidered.

1. The analogy of this act, { 1. With the name of the woman. 2. With the place where ſhe ſtood. } 1 The analogie of this act.

2. The nature and quality of this act, { 1. Simply conſidered. 2. Circumſtantially diſcuſſed. }

1. This womans name was Mary, which ſignifieth bitterneſſe; and ſo this act was bitter; for Saint Peter went out and wept bitterly: to teach us, that as her name and her nature did ſo well agree; ſo ſhould we be, what we are called to be; for thou art called to be a Chriſtian; and to be a Chriſtian is to lead a juſt and a godly life; and therefore thou ſhouldſt not live like a Pagan, and be more unjuſt then a Iew; for, quid prodeſt tibi nomen uſurpare alienum, & vocari quod non es? what 1. With the name of the woman. That our names ſhould put us in mind of a godly life.

Laodiceans whence so called.

art thou the better to borrow a strange name, or to be called what thou art not? for the people of Laodicea were so called of λαος and δικαιος, a righteous people, whereas in very deed there were none so unrighteous as they; and therefore their name availed them nothing; because they were not what they seem'd to be; and therefore S. Chrysostome bids every one aut esse quod apparet, aut apparere quod est, either to be what he seemes, or to seeme as he is.

2. With the place where she standeth.

2. This act doth well agree with the place where this woman standeth; for teares are the fittest visiters of Sepulchers; because we should keepe a decorum in all things, as to laugh with them that laugh, to weepe with them that weepe, and so, to doe all things according as the times, places, and occasions doe require: and therefore, as it is an hysteron proteron, a most unseemely thing for the children of the Bride-chamber to fast, mourne, and lament; or for the sonnes of a dying Father, to feast, sing, and rejoyce; so it is most unfitting to doe any thing, contrary to the nature of the persons, times and places, which and wherein wee doe it; because, as the Wiseman saith, except to sin, there is a time for all things els; and, as that may be most lawfull for Kings and Princes, which is most unfitting for Priests and Bishops, quia in alijs nugæ, in ipsis sunt blasphemiæ, as Saint Bernard saith; so those recreations may be very fitting at Christmas, which is the time of rejoycing and feasting, that are most unfitting for Lent, which is the appointed time for fasting and praying; and therefore I could most heartily wish, that our playes and pleasures in Lent might be abridged, and not suffered to swell, as they doe, in many places, in the time of pennance and prayers; that the piety and devotion of our Church might be reduced to the pristine discipline of the Primitive Christians; and I doe verily thinke, the two late fearefull examples, the one on Wednesday last, in Hebdomada Panosa, as Saint Bernard calls it, and the other the weeke before, (when one of their tumblers broke his neck outright, and the other, shewing his tricks upon the rope, was very like to hang himselfe, if a Gentleman had not suddenly cut the rope) in Salisbury court, do call and cry for the same thing.

All things ought to be done in their season.

Eccl. 3. 1.

Priests and Bishops bound to live more strictly then any others. Mat. 24. 38.

And yet our Saviour noted this, as a great folly in the Old world; when their danger was most imminent, and the Arke preparing for the flood, then to be, like Belshazzar, feasting with his Princes, when his enemies were at his gates, most jocond and joviall, to marry wives, and to plant vineyards; as if God had made that time to be the onely time of their jollity; and our Saviour saith, it will be thus at the end of the world, when men shall be, as they were in the daies of Noah, that is, eating and drinking, marrying and playing, and doing all other things, that many men doe now adaies, untill the judgement of God swept them all away; for as Demodocus said of the Milesians, they were no fooles, but they did the same things that fooles did; so I doe not say, we are the men that God threatneth; but many of us * do the same things that God threatneth. Beloved, it is a fearefull thing when God saith to any Nation, as he did unto the Ninivites; yet forty daies and Ninivie shall be destroyed; and yet it is a great deale more fearefull and more lamentable, to infatuate men so, as not to know the times of their visitation, which makes them sing with the foole, when they goe to the gallowes; because the one is the signe of Gods anger, which by repentance may be prevented, the other of destruction, which cannot be avoided. And therefore Christ wept over Ierusalem, when he saw it insensible of those imminent miseries, that did inviron it round about. And this should teach us to pray to God for grace, that we may know the times and the seasons; to be heartily penitent when God threatneth us, and to be truly thankefull when he blesseth us.

The danger of misapplying times Mat. 24. 38.

* Even all the children of this world.

Ionah 3. 4.

Luk. 19. 41.

2. The quality of this act considered two waies.

2. For the nature and quality of the action of this woman, we find it like unto the woman her selfe, to consist both of

{1. Body and 2. Soule, } { Heavenly, Earthly, } { Good and Bad. } For

1. In

1. In some things she was reprooveable, and so she was reprooved by our Saviour Christ. And
2. In some things she was commendable, and so she was comforted and incouraged by Christ.

But, before we descend into these particulars, we will first speake of the quality of this action, in it selfe, simply considered; and then, as it may be circumstantially discussed, wherein we shall find it good or evill. For

The action of this woman considered.

1. Simply in it selfe

1. Teares are the messengers of the mind, and the sorrowes of the heart can by no better meanes be expressed, then by the teares of the eyes; for, dum bene res habent, ne lacryma quidem extorqueri potest; while things goe well with us, we cannot wring one teare out of our eyes; sed adversa fortuna facilè rivulos emittit, but a few crosses will make them flow like fountaines out of our hearts; and the more silent we are in our teares, the more insufferable is our griefe; quia curæ leves loquuntur, ingentes stupent, because light cares, like empty vessells, do make the greater sound, and the greater griefes doe amaze us: and therefore Saint Ambrose observeth Saint Peters sorrow to be very great, because he wept bitterly, but said nothing; so here, this woman stood wailing and weeping, and saying nothing.

Adversity the mother of teares.

Great griefes amaze us.

But as our griefe and sorrow is twofold, so our teares are likewise twofold,

1. Evill
2. Good.

} For

Two kindes of teares.

1. As there is a worldly joy for wealth, honours, and the like things of this world, so there is a carnall mourning and weeping for the losse of these things; and of these mourners and rejoycers, the world is full; when every one is so apt to grieve for a little worldly losse; and this sorrow is but the beginning of sorrowes; but this was not the sorrow of Mary Magdalen; and therefore it is besides my Text to prosecute the same any further.

1. Evill.

2. There is another mourning and weeping, which is good, and the end thereof is joy, as our Saviour saith; when all teares shall be wiped away from our eyes.

2. Good.

And we find three sorts of these good teares

1. Of devotion.
2. Of compassion.
3. Of contrition.

Three sorts of good teares. Antonin. p 4. tit. 7. c 6 §. 3.

1. Of devotion; so David did water his couch with his teares.

1. Of devotion. Psal. 6 6.

2. Of compassion; so Ieremy wished that his head were full of water, and his eyes a fountaine of teares, that he might weepe day and night for the slaine of the daughter of Sion; and so Samuel wept for Saul; and what man is he, saith Antoninus, that should have many brethren, and see one of them blind, another lame, a third slandered, a fourth leprous, and all infected or afflicted with some grievous plague or other, and would not weepe and waile for the miseries of his distressed brethren? and yet such is our case; for we are all brethren; and there is none of us all but is poysoned with some sinne, or plagued with some punishment; and therefore how can the bowells of compassion be in that man, qui plangit corpus a quo recessit anima, & non plangit animam a qua recessit Deus; which bewaileth the body, that is deprived of the soule, and will not bewaile the soule, that is divorced from God, saith Saint Augustine.

2. Of compassion. Ier. 9. 1, 2. Vide Iob 30. 25. & Psal. 35. 13. Antoninus quo supra.

The miseries of our brethren should make us to compassionate them.

3. Of contrition; so Saint Peter, when he had denied his master, went out and wept bitterly; and so David, after he had offended with Vriahs wife; and so Manasses and others.

3. Of contrition. Mat. 26. 75.

And answerable to these three kinds of teares, we read that our Saviour wept three severall times.

Destruct. vitiorū. p. 4. c. 53.

Our Saviour wept thrice.

1. At the raising of Lazarus, as for many other respects, so likewise for this, that hereby there was a prolongation of his present miseries, and a dilation of his entrance into eternall joyes; which is a speciall cause of weeping and wailing, as the Prophet sheweth, hei mihi quia incolatus meus prolongatus est; and therefore by the waters of Babylon wee sate downe and wept, when wee remembred thee, ô Sion; wee should weepe in this world, when we thinke of heaven, that wee

1. When he raised Lazarus.

Psal. 137. 1.

are ſo long detained from that happy place.

2. Over the city of Hieruſalem.

2. When he beheld the city of Hieruſalem, and thereupon conſidered, how they ſhould be deſtroyed: becauſe he deſireth not the death of a ſinner, but lamenteth to ſee the deſtruction of his creatures.

3. In the garden of Gethſemane.

3. In the garden, when he offered up prayers, with ſtrong cries and teares unto God; that is, for our ſinnes, to blot them out by theſe teares, which could be pardoned by no other meanes.

Et Ariſtides in Epicedio. καὶ ὁ τῶν Σιμωνίδου δάκρυων. Qualis Symonidis hanc mororem digne lugebat.

And if we conſider it well, we ſhall finde this womans teares to reliſh of all theſe three ſorts of teares, and each ſort was like the teares of Symonides, whereof Catullus ſaith,

Paulum quidlibet allocutionis,
Mœſtius lachrymis Simonideis. } For

Maries teares threefold.
1. Of devotion.
2. Of compaſſion.

1. She did exceedingly weepe and waile for her Saviours abſence, which was her devotion.

2. She was ſorrowfull for his mother and for his friends, which had loſt him as well as ſhe; which was her compaſſion, to weepe with them that weepe, and to be ſorrie with them that are ſad.

3. Of contrition.

3. She knew our ſinnes were the cauſe of his death; they betrayed him, they ſcourged him, they nailed him to the croſſe, they laid him in his grave, they ſent him to hell, and they brought all the miſeries, that he ſuffered, upon his head; and therefore, ſhe doth the rather weepe and lament, both his ſufferings, and his abſence; becauſe ſhe was a great cauſe thereof her ſelfe; her ſinnes were the procurers of his death, and the greatneſſe of her ſinnes did cauſe the greatneſſe of her ſorrow; the multitude of her tranſgreſſions extracted the immeaſurable flouds of her teares; ſhe was not afraid, to waſh away the paintings and the patches of her face with bitter teares: and this was her contrition: καὶ Θεὸν λύπη; a ſorrow towards God, that ever ſhe had ſo hainouſly offended his Majeſty; for we read of a certaine bird or fowle, that hath the face and viſage of a man, and yet is moſt fierce and cruell againſt man, and doth moſt greedily covet to ſucke the blood, and eat the fleſh of man; but when he hath killed any man, and fed himſelfe therewith unto the full, and being drie, doth go to the brook to quench his thirſt, and then looking into the cleare water, doth behold his owne countenance, and conſidering what he hath done, deſtroyed a creature of his owne likeneſſe, that ſo lively repreſented his very image,

Holenb in lib. Sapient. The fowle that reſembleth a man

——quamvis non omnibus una,
Nec diverſa tamen——

Though not in all things the ſame, yet not much different in any thing; he doth preſently returne into the wilderneſſe, and there conſumes himſelfe in diſpleaſure, and will neither eat nor drinke, untill he dieth; becauſe he hath been the death of ſuch a one, as did ſo perfectly beare in his face, his owne feature.

Who is meant by that fowle.

And this fowle may ſignifie every fooliſh man, which, by his ſinnes, hath deſtroyed the image of God: and therefore, when he commeth to the chryſtall fountaine of Gods Word, that ſets before our eyes the things that we have done, defiled his created image, that was in us, and murdered his eternall Image, that was ſent unto us; we ſhould returne into the wilderneſſe, to depart from the delights of this world, and there be ſolitary and ſorrowfull by weeping and wailing, untill we have conſumed thoſe luſts, and killed thoſe ſinnes, that have put to death the Lord of life.

Pſal. 50. 21.

2 Reg. 5. The powerfull effects of the teares of contrition.

For this water of contrition is like the river Iordan, wherein Naaman, waſhing himſelfe ſeven times, was made wholly cleane; or rather like the red ſea, wherein Pharaoh and all his hoſt were ſoone drowned; that is, the Divell and all vices are ſoone ſmoothered, in the teares of a repentant ſinner; and therefore the Prophet David ſaith, contribulaſti capita draconum in aquis, thou haſt broken the heads of the dragons in the waters; that is, the capitall ſinnes of the red dragon the Divell, thou haſt bruiſed and battered to pieces in the teares of true repentance; this flood of teares being like the river Bracho in Sicilia, wherein, if

The property of the river Bracho.

the

the blackeſt ſheepe be bathed, they will preſently become white, ſaith mine Authour; I am ſure, if we bathe our ſcarlet ſins in theſe teares, that do ſpring from faith in Chriſt his bloud, they will become as white as ſnow: and then, as Pharaohs daughter, when ſhe deſcended into the river, did find a babe among the flagges; ſo when we deſcend into this fountaine, we ſhall find that ſweet babe, Chriſt Ieſus, which ſhall wipe away all teares from our eyes; and God will comfort us with the conſolation of his Spirit, even as the Prophet ſaith, According to the multitude of the ſorrowes, that I had in my heart, thy comforts have refreſhed my ſoule: a moſt excellent ſaying for every penitent ſinner; the more ſorrowes he hath for his ſinnes, the more comforts he ſhall have from God; and if thou haſt no ſorrow for thy ſinnes, thou canſt have no comfort from God; becauſe, as the Prophet ſaith, Chriſt was ſent into the world to preach the Goſpell unto the poore, and to comfort all that do mourne in Sion; and therefore, no mourning in the Church, no comfort from Chriſt.

Rev. 7. 17.

Quanto eſt quiſq; ſanctior, & deificis rijs ſanctiùs plenior, tanto ſit ejus fletus in orando uberior. Aug.

Eſa. 61.

But there be three ſpeciall impediments, that doe hinder theſe three ſorts of teares.

Three impediments of theſe three ſorts of teares. Deſtruct. vitiorum P. 4. c. 53.

1. The teares of devotion are ſtopped by the inordinate love, and exceſſive deſire of earthly things; for as Cain, which ſignifieth poſſeſſion, killed Abel, which ſignifieth mourning; ſo the love of this world choaketh up all the deſires of heavenly things; and this is figured by the pits, that the ſervants of Abraham digged, and the Philiſtines filled them up with earth; that is, the Divels do fill up our hearts, and all thoſe wells of piety and devotion, which the Miniſters of God had digged by the preaching of his Word, with the love of earthly vanities, honours, riches, and the like.

1. Worldly love.

2. The teares of compaſſion are ſtopped, by the impiety and uncharitableneſſe of our hearts; that we have no true pitie nor any ſympathizing affections towards our brethren; a ſtrange thing, that we can behold a man in miſery, and yet be touched with no pitie, and be moved with no compaſſion! S. Paul ſaith, who is weake, and I burne not? And Iob ſaith, I did weepe over him that was afflicted, & anima mea compatiebatur pauperi, and my ſoul did ſuffer together with the poore; but as the mouth of the well of Haran was ſtopped with a great ſtone; and therefore no water could be drawne up, before that ſtone was rolled away; ſo God muſt take away that great and cold ſtone of uncharitableneſſe, from the doore of our hearts, before the teares of compaſſion can be wrung out of any of us; or, as Moſes ſtruck the ſtony rocke, and the waters flowed forth, ſo he muſt ſtrike our ſtony hearts with croſſes and afflictions, and then we ſhall weepe with them that weepe.

2. Vncharitable hearts.

2 Cor. 11. 29.

Iob 30. 25.

Gen. 29. 2.

Pſal. 78. 20.

3. The teares of contrition are ſtopped, as by many other things, ſo ſpecially by the ignorance of our lamentable and moſt miſerable eſtate; for if thou kneweſt (ſaith Chriſt unto Ieruſalem) the things that pertained unto thy peace, that is, in what wofull caſe thou art, by reaſon of thy ſinnes, and the puniſhments that thou muſt ſuffer for thy ſinnes, for not making thy peace with God, thou wouldſt weep.

3. Ignorance of our ſtate. Luke 19. 42.

Teares to be prayed for.

And therefore, ſeeing we have ſo many impediments, to hinder us to ſhed forth theſe teares, and to ſtop theſe channels of ſweeter waters, we ought to pray to God for grace, that we might, with this Mary, weepe, both for our ſelves and others. For as Achſa the daughter of Caleb, and wife to Othoniel, riding upon an aſſe, asked of her father a bleſſing, which was, ſprings of water; and he gave her both the upper ſprings, and the neather ſprings; ſo the ſoule of man, daughter unto God by creation, and ſpouſe of Chriſt by faith, riding upon the paſſions of the fleſh, which is the aſſe that we are to bridle; if ſhe begs of God theſe ſprings of water, then will he preſently give her, both the teares of contrition and compaſſion, which are the neather ſprings, and alſo the teares of devotion, de dilatione patriæ, to long for heaven, which are the upper ſprings, that will make the drie grounds of our hearts to become very fruitfull.

Iudg. 1. 13. 14. 15.

The myſtery of Achſa diſcloſed.

And ſo much for the action of this woman, ſimply conſidered in it ſelfe.

2. As this Mary ſtooped, to looke more narrowly into the ſepulcher, ſo we are now to descend more particularly, to examine her actions, not as she was before her conversion, but as she is now, after she became a true follower of our Saviour Christ. And the Apostle saith, the woman was the first in transgression; the divell made choice of her, to be his first instrument and engine, to wheele all the world round about; and ever since, he sought to effect many evills by the helpe of women: Samson he overthrew by Dalila; Salomon by King Pharaohs daughter and the rest of them, that turned away his heart from God; Ahab by Iesabel, who though he was bad inough of himselfe, yet, as the Scripture saith, he was made farre worse by her; and heresies, though they be fathered by men, that begat them; yet were most of them furthered by women, that nurced them; Simon Magus had his Helena; Apelles, Philumena; Montanus, Prisca; Donatus, Lucilla; Priscillinus, Galla; Arrius, the sister of Constantine; and Nicolas the Deacon, a whole flocke of such companions, that bred and nourished his wicked errours; because Evahs desire, of knowing more then God would have her to know, hath so infected many of this sexe, that, (as one saith) of all the creatures, that ever God created, there be no such ensnaring and attractive loadstarres to superstition and idolatry, as are women; and the story both of Gentiles, Iewes and Christians, doth make it plaine.

2. Circumstantially considered, as it was.
1 Good.
2. Bad.
1 Tim. 2. 14.

What mischiefes the divell effected by women.

Heretiques countenanced by women.

Women most prone to superstition.

Ier. 24. 3.

Yet as the Prophet Ieremy spake of the figges, the bad were very bad, and the good were very good; so, though hell it selfe can scarce affoord more damnable creatures then wicked women; as Iesabell, that dissembling and hypocriticall woman, that painted harlot, is made the mother of all wickednesse; yet heaven it selfe can scarce affoord more excellent creatures, then good and godly women, as Mary Θεοτοκος, the mother of God, who no doubt, is next in honour, unto our God Christ himselfe; and the Spirit of God, for the comfort of all good women, hath beene pleased to record the memoriall of many excellent Matrons; as, Sarah, Rebecca, Debora, Bathsheba, Iudith, Susanna, Mary, Loys, Tabitha, Priscilla, and the like, whose praise is in the Gospell; among whom I find this woman, in my Text, to deserve to be numbered in the first ranke; for, to take a view of some of her graces.

The commendation of good women.

1. The vertues & graces of this woman.

1. Her humility.

1. Her humility was very great; for it is observed of her, that she never came to Christ, but she presently fell at his feet; as

1. In the house of Simon the Leaper, Luk. 7. 38.
2. When she besought him for her brother Lazarus, Iohn 11. 31.
3. When she heard him preach, Luk. 10. 34.
4. When she annointed his feet, Iohn 12. 3.
5. After his Resurrection, Mat. 28. 9.

She ever kneeled downe unto him; to condemne the Camelion knees of those that will not bow to the presence of God; because pride is an ougly weed, bred in a dunghill; and it is pittie it should be ever transplanted into any better soyle; and humility is a flower of Paradise, and fit to adorne the bosome of a Queene; and they are the noblest Ladies that are humblest, and the proud ought, like sluts, to be despised.

2. Her love.

2. Her love was very great; for our Saviour himselfe, that knew her heart best, gives her this testimony, quod dilexit multum, that she loved much; and her actions doe sufficiently shew the sincerity of her affections; for

3. Her service.

3. Her service was no lesse then her love; for she bought ointment, before his Passion, to annoint him; and I pray you marke

Note two things.

1. What it was.
2. How she did it.

For

1. What it was. Mat. 26. 7.

1. It was spikenard, saith the Text; and every Evangelist hath a severall attribute to honour it; for Saint Matthew calls it, μυρον βαρύτιμον; an ointment of greater honour, or an ointment of greater price, then other ointments used to be; so Suidas useth the word βαρυτιμον: Saint Marke calleth it, ἀλαβαστρον μυρου νάρδου πιστικῆς πολυτελους, an alablaster box of very sumptuous ointment; So Plutarch useth the word πολυτελης: and Saint John calleth it, μυρον πολυτιμον, a very honorable

Mar. 14. 3.

Ioh. 12. 3.

rable ointment; so Athenæus useth the word πολυτιμον; so it was a very pretious gift; she spared no cost to bestow on Christ; and so Iudas doth confesse, and he gives praise inough to this ointment, saying, that it might have beene sold for 300 pence, whereas he sold his master but for thirty pieces of silver; And this her bounty may serve to condemne the base niggardize of our professors, that will bestow no ointment upon the mysticall body of Christ, but that, which our good fore-fathers have most freely given, they would most maliciously transferre to other abuses; thinking all waste, that commeth not to their bagges; so Iudas is not yet hang'd, while this Iscariot brood is yet alive; but Crœsus was most bountifull to the Oracle of Apollo, making an oblation of 3000 choice cattell, and 117 plates of gold, a Lyon of gold, that weighed 10 talents; and besides he gave two stately bookes, the one of gold, weighing eight talents, and the other of silver; foure silver tuns, two drinking cups, the one of gold, the other of silver, of a hideous greatnesse, containing 600 amphoras; and many other gifts of no small price, saith Herodotus, did Crœsus bestow upon Delphos; as silver rings, with the shape of a woman three cubits high, together with the chaines, girdles and bracelets of his Queene: and here you see, this woman, to her power, is no lesse bountifull to our Saviour Christ; so true Religion and false religion will spare to bestow no cost on God, which hath given us all that we have; and therefore it is an argument of Atheisme and no religion, to give nothing to the honour of our God. But

I oh. 12. 5.

The bounty of this woman condemneth our nigardize.

The bounty of Crœsus to the Oracle of Apollo.

Herodotus in l. 1. Clio p. 13.

2. How she did use it.

2. How did this woman use this ointment? not only bestow the cost, and let another performe the worke, like those that have a will to doe good, when they die, but others shall be executors to doe it; but she powred it forth with her owne hands; and when she had done that, she washed his feet with her teares, and then wiped them with the haires of her head; an act never heard of before, and never done by any but by her; nunquid deerat sudarium? What? was her ointment so pretious and she so poore, that she could not bring a napkin or handkercher, to wipe his feet, saith Saint Hierom? no, not so; for she was a noble woman rich inough, as I shewed to you before; but, nihil dignius capillis, nothing is wont to be accounted more dainty with women then their haire, the comeliest ornament that they have; yet she, to shew her love to Christ, makes none account of all this, but wipes his feet with the haires of her head: and so she useth the allurements of sinne, to be the instruments to expresse her repentance; and as the people spread their garments under Christ his feet, so shee doth account her best ornaments but base trifles that shee may winne her Saviour Christ.

That we ought to be the executors of our own wills.

Haire how comely for women.

Luk. 7. 38.

4. As her love and service to Christ, while he lived, was very great, so her griefe and sorrow for the losse of him, being dead, is as great; for she weepes, and cries, and laments exceedingly for the losse of him, whom her soule loved; she feared not the disfiguring of her face, with bitter teares. And

4. Her sorrow for the losse of Christ Labor ungendi pectoris, dolor lugendi crevit Originem.

5. To give you a taste of her continuall sorrowing for the losse of Christ, and the abandoning of all joy till she found him againe; I pray you marke, how her diligent seeking after Christ is exemplified with these particulars.

5. Her diligent seeking after Christ.

1. Very early, betimes in the morning, she came to the Sepulcher, while it was yet darke, whilest by course of nature she should have beene in her bed fast asleepe; but she tooke from nature to give unto grace; and therefore her eyes, like the morning watch, did all that night watch for the morning, that she might seeke him early, whom she loved so earnestly.

1. Early.

2. Very painefully, for she ranne to and fro, from her house to the Sepulcher, and from the Sepulcher back againe to her house, to tell his Disciples that the stone was rolled away; and then againe unto the Sepulcher, to see if she could heare any newes or tidings of him, as Baronius well observeth; she thought no paines inough to seeke him.

2. Painefully.

Vide Baron. annal. to. 1. anno Christi 34. cap. 184.

3. With great diligence, and carefull inquisition, to aske of every one that she saw, whether they could shew her any certainty of Christ; for first, she asked the

3. With great diligence.

two

Ioh. 20. 13. Simplex & sancta mulier Christum requirebat a Christo, sic errando non erravit.

two Angels, that sate where the body of Iesus had laine, if they knew where her Lord was laid; then seeing Iesus himselfe, and thinking him to be the gardiner, she speakes most humbly unto him, and intreats him heartily, (thereby to woe him, and to win him the sooner to tell her) saying, Lord, or good Sir, if thou hast borne him hence, I pray thee tell me, where thou hast laid him, where I may find him.

4. Without feare. Iohn 3. & c. 19. 38.

4. Without feare, not like Nicodemus, that came to see Christ by night, nor like Ioseph of Arimathea, that did secretly, for feare of the Iewes, come unto Pilate to beg the body of Iesus, nor yet like these Apostles, that came indeed to seeke Christ, but durst not stay, for feare of the officers; but she without all feare, goes to the Sepulcher, staies at the Sepulcher, and inquires of every one she seeth for Christ. An excellent woman; the weaker sexe, but stronger in affection and more zealous in her devotion then the rest.

5. With great courage. Ioh. 20. 15.

5. Without respect of her owne strength, she saith, that if she should but know where he was laid, she would take the dead corps and carry it away; yea, though commonly her sexe abhorres the sight of dead corses; and this, in all likelihood, was farre heavier, then a womans strength was able to beare away; yet, quia verus amor nihil sibi judicat impossibile, because true love thinkes nothing impossible for it, she saith, she would take it away.

Origines & Bernard in festo M. Magdalena. p. 190.

So here you see virtutem cumulatam, a heape of graces in this vertuous woman; and every grace in a high degree of perfection; for she is not luke-warme nor indifferent in any thing; but she is most zealous and vehement in every thing she doth; a vehement lover, a vehement sorrower, and a vehement seeker after Christ; and so in all things els; quicquid vult, valde vult, she followeth the counsell of the Wiseman, whatsoever she doth, she doth it with all her might; because God loveth not any luke-warme professors, but wisheth, that we were either hot or cold, either true Zelots or right Demasses, and not to be like Ephraim, as a cake baked on the one side, and quite dow on the other, or like the Poets Meremaid, whereof Horace saith,

That God hateth luke-warme professors. Revel. 3. 15. Hos. 7. 8.

Horatius de arte Poetica.

Desinit in piscem mulier formosa superne,

That lovely face of a beautifull woman, doth carry the unseemely tayle of an ougly fish; because God requireth all in every thing, that we give to him; as all our hearts, all our soules, all our strength: and therefore this woman seeketh him, lamenteth him, and doth all she doth with all diligence.

Origines to. 2. hom. 10. in diversis. p. 458.

And this should teach us, as Origen saith, sequi hujus mulieris affectum, ut veniamus ad effectum, to follow the steps of this woman, that we may come to the same effects; for it is a good rule, to imitate the Saints in good things; and therefore, to excite Ascanius to all noble undertakings, the Poet saith,

We ought to imitate the good examples of the Saints.

Te pater Æneas & avunculus excitet Hector;

Let thy father Æneas and thy uncle Hector stirre thee on; and so the Divine saith; if you would learne faith and confidence in God, thinke upon Abraham the Father of the Faithfull; if you desire to lead a chast and a pure life, thinke upon Ioseph, the patterne of chastity; if you would meekely sustaine the insupportable afflictions of the minde, and the tormenting diseases of the body, thinke upon holy Iob, whose patience we are advised continually to remember; And so whatsoever vertue, grace or goodnesse, you desire to imitate, you may find a samplar in your predecessors, which, as Lucretius saith, —Sicut cursores, vitai lampada tradunt; have resigned the torches of their life, as lampes and lights for us to walke thereby; for, though the Wise men of the East had but one starre to guide them to Bethlem, where our Saviour lay in his cradle; yet we have all the assembly of Gods Saints, the glorious company of Martyrs, and the holy Church throughout all the world, as so many millions of starres to inlighten our way to the kingdome of heaven, where Christ sitteth on his throne of glory.

James 5. 10.

What great helps we have to further us to heaven.

Among whom, this blessed woman may be as a loadstone, to draw us unto goodnesse: and from this one example of one woman we may learne these many instructions; Disce diligere Deum Christum, disce plorare Dei absentiam, & desiderare

What the example of this woman teacheth.

rare præsentiam: disce quærere & investigare, nulla adversa formidare, & nullam consolationem extra Christum capere; as, to observe our lessons more particularly.

1. Learne how to love Christ, and spare to bestow no cost on Christ; but, as the elders cast their crownes to the ground, and this woman took her haire, the braveſt ornament of her head, to wipe our Saviours feet; ſo ſhould we throw down all the chiefeſt things that we have, at the foot-ſtoole of God, to do our Saviour ſervice. 1. To love Christ. Rev. 4.10.

2. When Christ is taken from us, we ſhould bewaile our miſerable eſtate, and never joy in any thing, till we find him againe; quia hoc ſummum malum, & ſerijs lachrymis dignum, amittere Deum Christum; becauſe no loſſe can be comparable to the Loſſe of Christ; and we were better to leeſe the whole world, than to leeſe him alone; and therefore the Poet ſaith, 2. To bewaile the loſſe of Christ. Defuit quem conderet, ſed non defuit quem ploraret, &c. Magus plorabat, quò magus ille deerat, Origen.

Omnia ſi perdas, Chriſtum ſervare memento,
Quo ſemel amiſſo, poſtea nullus eris.

Object. But here you will object and ſay, how can Christ be loſt? Is he not in heaven, on the right hand of God, making interceſſion for us? And therefore how can he be taken from us?

Sol. I anſwer, that Christ may be loſt and taken from us two ſpeciall wayes.

For { 1. Really, by apoſtaſie. 2. Seemingly, by temptation. } Christ loſt 1. Realiter. 2. Apparenter.

1. Some loſe him really and finally, when after they were inlightened, and had taſted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghoſt, and have taſted of the good Word of God, and of the powers of the world to come, they do fall away from all that grace, which they had received, and return againe, with the dog, unto his vomit, and with the ſow, to wallow in the mire, and then tread under feet the Sonne of God, and count the bloud of the covenant, wherewith they are ſanctified, an unholy thing, and do deſpight unto the Spirit of grace. 1. Really by apoſtaſie Heb 6.4,5. 2 Pet. 2.22. Heb. 10.29.

2. Others loſe him for a time, (as this woman loſt him while he was in his grave) when, for the greatneſſe of their ſinnes, and for the triall of their faith, he hideth his face from them, and they are troubled; becauſe, with the Church in the Canticles, they have ſought him, but yet find him not; that is, not the comfortable preſence of his Spirit. 2. Seemingly, by temptation. Pſal. 104.29. Cant 3.1.

And, though this ſpirituall deſertion of the Saints be no wayes comparable, to that fearefull dereliction of the wicked; becauſe, as the Apoſtle ſaith, there being no more ſacrifice for ſinne, it is impoſſible to renew ſuch faithleſſe apoſtata's unto repentance; but theſe latter are onely left for a time, that they may the more clearely ſee their owne wants, and the more earneſtly ſeeke for Gods help; yet this deſertion is ſo dolefull unto them, that they can take no joy nor pleaſure in any earthly thing, till they do perceive the gracious preſence of God againe. Heb. 6.6. Why God ſeemes to leave his children.

But if you would know, how Chriſt is loſt unto his Saints, that you may take heed of thoſe wayes; I anſwer, that we loſe him here, even as Ioſeph and Mary loſt him in Hieruſalem, Luk. 2.44

Foure wayes, For { 1. By negligence and ſecurity. 2. By ignorance and blindneſſe. 3. By perſwaſions and opinions. 4. By the conſideration of friends and acquaintance. } Christ is loſt foure wayes Dieterius ſuper Evang. Luc. c. 2.

1. While we ſleepe, the grace of God doth waxe cold in us, and Satan doth ſow tares unknowne to us; and as Ioſeph went with Christ into the Temple, but through negligence to looke after him, he went homewards without him; So many come to the Church, to heare Christ; but when they have done their ſervice, they leave him ſtill in the Temple, and returne home without him, when they reſolve not to doe what they heare. Mat. 13.25. 1. By negligence.

2. As Ioſeph and Mary knew not, that Christ was left behind them, but thought that he was gone before; ſo many times, we do loſe Christ by our ignorance 2. By ignorance.

rance and blindneſſe in many ſpirituall points; becauſe it is not enough to believe in Chriſt, but we ought alſo to know what to believe; and therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith, quod creditur non ignoratur, that no man ſhould be ignorant of what he believeth; becauſe thoſe men, qui ea, quæ Dei ſunt, neſciunt, a Domino neſciuntur, which do not know the things of God, ſhall not be knowne by God, as S. Gregory ſaith.

Iſa. 53. 11. Aug. in g. oct. & nouo ſerm. q. 113. to. 4. pag. 825. d. Greg. p. 1. Cur. Paſtor. c. 1. To. 2. pag. 3227. d.

3. By opinion.

3. Opinion loſt Chriſt to many men; for Arrius thought he had him, though he denied his deity; and S. Paul himſelfe, before his illumination, thought he did God good ſervice, when he perſecuted the Saints of God; and ſo many others thinke they doe very well, when they doe oppreſſe the godly: but hereby they doe loſe Chriſt, and all Chriſtian piety; becauſe, as the Chriſtian Poet ſaith,

Opinion muſt not be the ground of our faith.

Non eſt credulitas, non eſt temerarius error
Vera fides; verbo nititur illa Dei.

Faith, goodneſſe, and true godlineſſe are not to be meaſured by the wilfull opinion of fooliſh men, but by the powerfull demonſtration of Gods Word: and therefore, as the Emperour Marcus Antoninus was wont to ſay in another caſe, ſo I ſay in this, ejice opinionem, & ſalvus eris, thou muſt caſt away thine opinion, if thou wilt be ſafe.

4. By our friends and acquaintance.

4. To thinke of friends, and kinsfolks, and acquaintance, more than Chriſt, makes us to loſe Chriſt; for they thought, Chriſt was among their friends, and they followed them, ſo they loſt him; and therefore, recedant a nobis, qui dicunt, nolumus eſſe meliores quam patres noſtri, let them depart from us, which ſay, we will not be better than our fathers, ſaith S. Bernard; and the reaſon is rendred by S. Hierom, Quia nec parentum, nec majorum error ſequendus eſt, ſed authoritas Scripturarum, & Dei docentis imperium; becauſe we muſt not follow the errours of our Fathers and anceſtours, but the authority of the Scriptures, and the command of God our teacher.

Bern. Ep. 91. pag. 849. The tenents of our friends muſt not be the rule of our faith. Hieron. in Hierem. c. 9. To. 4 p. 286. d.

And theſe are the wayes and meanes whereby many men do loſe their Saviour Chriſt. And therefore

3. To ſeek Chriſt diligently till we find him.

3. When we perceive the want of Chriſts preſence, we ſhould never give over ſeeking him, till we find him; yet I confeſſe, it is very hard ſometimes to find him; for here you may ſee, with what great difficulty this good woman Mary found him; quia anxia venit, anxia redijt, & poſt multos dolores invenit Chriſtum; becauſe ſhe came ſad, ſhe returned ſorrowfull, and with a great deale of griefe ſhe found Chriſt; and ſo it is not eaſie for us to find out the truth; and ſometimes it is long ere we find it; for not onely this Mary found him not by and by, but alſo a better Mary, the mother of Chriſt, when ſhe had once loſt him, was three dayes in ſeeking and ſearching after him, before ſhe could find him; ſo hard it is to find Chriſt, when we have loſt him.

That it is a hard thing to find out the truth and Chriſt after wee have loſt him.

But how hard ſoever it be to find him, and how long ſoever it be, before we find him; we ſhould, with this woman, never give over ſeeking, and never think any paines too great, till we find him; becauſe we were better loſe our lives, than loſe the life of grace.

2. The frailties and infirmities of this woman.

2. You have heard of the manifold good of this good woman; and yet ſhe was not ſo good, but that ſhe had ſome ill commixt with theſe good things; for her wine was mingled with water, and her beſt vertues were tainted with ſome defects, and thoſe defects and vices, like her vertues, were morbus cumulatus, a congealed heap of undigeſted humours; for, to take a more particular view of them,

1. Errour. Hieron. ad Hedib. queſt. 5. Non credentes ſuſcitatum, credidêrunt ſublatum. Aug.

1. Though it was piety in her, ſaith S. Hierom, quod deſiderabat eum, that ſhe longed for him; yet it was infirmity in her to ſay, tulerunt eum, they tooke him away; for herein ſhe did belie the ſouldiers that watched him; and we muſt not belie the Divell; for they tooke none of him away, but he raiſed himſelfe from his grave; and therefore this was an errour in this woman.

2. Errour. Mat. 5. 4.

2. Though our Saviour ſaith, bleſſed are they that mourne, yet her mourning was not altogether bleſſed herein.

1. Quia

1. Quia non rectus, becauſe it was not in all things right.
2. Quia ſuperſtitioſus, becauſe in ſome things it was ſuperſtitious.

For ſhe weeps, becauſe ſhe finds not Chriſt in his grave; whereas ſhe ſhould rather rejoyce, that he was riſen out of his grave.

3. Though ſhe was very deſirous to find Chriſt, yet præpoſtero reditu peccavit, in her too ſpeedy returne the firſt time, from the ſepulcher, ſhe did offend, ſaith Rollock; becauſe ſhe might have learned of the Angels, how things were, and perhaps where her Saviour had beene, if ſhe had not ſo ſuddenly departed from the grave. And

3. Error.

4. All this doth ſufficiently prove, that ſhe was either incredulous, or at leaſt oblivious of her Saviours words; for Chriſt told them, how he muſt ſuffer and be raiſed againe the third day; and this incredulity or oblivion of hers was indeed the cauſe of all other errours; and ſo, Ignorantia ex ignorantiâ in ignorantiam præcipitat; ignorance doth caſt us from one ignorance to another, like a blind man, the more he goeth, the further he is, commonly, out of his way. And therefore, cum facilis eſt oblivio boni, ſeeing the beſt men may ſoone forget good things, it is requiſite that we ſhould often preach unto them, though it were but to put them in minde of thoſe things, which they know; leaſt the oblivion and forgetfulneſſe of what they know, cauſe them to erre in what they never knew.

4. Errour.

Our incredulity the cauſe of many errours.

That we ought often to preach, though it were but the ſame Sermons.

And ſo you ſee, that although this Mary was a bleſſed woman, yet in theſe very acts of bleſſedneſſe, ſhe was not free from all faults; to teach us, that we muſt not looke for perfection, while we are in this vale of miſery, in the land of imperfection; and therefore, let no man deceive himſelfe; for we are but men, liable to many frailties; and when Abraham, David, Noah, Daniel, and Iob, and all the beſt men that ever lived, excepting Chriſt himſelfe, in whoſe mouth was found no guile, were ſubject to the like paſſions that we are, (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of Eliás) and were overtaken with many infirmities; we ſhould deteſt the contagious poyſon of Pelagius, who taught, that a man may by nature merit grace, and by grace attaine to ſuch perfection, as to be free from all weakneſſe; and when they pray for the forgiveneſſe of their ſinnes, it is rather a complement of humility, than any ſound verity; for we doe find, that no prerogative of greatneſſe, no profeſſion of holineſſe, no difference of ſexe, no priviledge of age, can exempt any one from common infirmities; but, as the curtezan Lais ſaid, Philoſophers did ſometimes knocke at her gates, as well as others; ſo the beſt men, and the holieſt women are many times overtaken with humane frailties: therefore when the ſeers are fallen blind, the guides have loſt their way, the charmers are ſtung by the ſerpents, and the Saints of God do faile in the common rules of wiſdome and godlineſſe, this ſhould be a warning for us all, to looke well unto our ſelves, and to take ſpeciall care unto our wayes, that we do not fall; for when the okes of Baſhan, and the cedars of Libanus do ſhake and tremble, what ſhall become of the ſhrubs of Cades? Surely the greene wood muſt needs warpe and ſhrink, when the beſt ſeaſoned timber cannot hold out; and ſlender treſſels cannot chuſe but bend, when the ſtrongeſt pillars do ſo ſoone bow under their burdens.

Iam. 5. 17. The errour of Pelagius.

No priviledge can exempt us from common infirmities.

The fals of others, what it ſhould teach us.

And ſo much for the vertues and the frailties of this woman.

Now you muſt underſtand, that, as the actions of this woman were thus mixed, of a double nature, ſo our Saviour dealeth with her in a double manner; for

Two things obſervable.

1. He reproveth her for her errours;
2. He comforteth her for her goodneſſe.

} For

1. He ſaith unto her, Mulier, quid ploras? Woman, why weepeſt thou? Whom doſt thou ſeeke? As if he ſhould ſay, thou haſt no reaſon to weepe; becauſe he that thou ſeekeſt among the dead, is alive; and therefore thou doſt not well, to weepe and waile as thou doeſt, and to ſeeke the living among the dead. And this teacheth us

1. Chriſt reproveth her errours, and what we learn thereby.

1. That although Chriſt will not breake the bruiſed reed, nor quench the

1. Leſſon.

Chriſt cannot abide evill in his deereſt followers. Heb 3. 2.

ſmoaking flaxe, but will rather kindle and cheriſh the leaſt ſparke of grace, that he ſeeth in his ſervants, then reject it; yet he is of ſo pure ſight, that his eyes cannot endure to ſee the leaſt ill in his deereſt ſervants; but he will ſharply reproove it, and many times ſeverely puniſh them for it; for Moſes was faithfull in all Gods houſe, and God loved him moſt deerely, knowing him by his name, and talking with him face to face, ſo familiarly, as one friend talketh with another; yet becauſe he ſtroke the rocke twice, at the waters of Meribah, and thereby ſeemed to miſtruſt the truth and power of God, to bring forth water out of the ſtony rocke, or becauſe, as the Prophet David expreſſeth the ſame ſin, he ſpake, not wickedly, not contemptuouſly, but unadviſedly with his lips; God was angry with him, reproved him, and puniſhed him, ſo that he utterly denied him, though he did earneſtly ſeeke it, to enter into the land of promiſe; but he muſt die in the wilderneſſe; becauſe he did, though but thus ſmally in mans ſight, diſhonour God before the people.

Moſes puniſhed for a ſmall fin, in our appearance,

Pſal. 106. 33.

1 Pet. 4. 17.

And therefore if judgement begins thus at the houſe of God, and this be done in a greene tree, in ſo good a man, for ſo ſmall a fault, what ſhall become of us, that ſpeake blaſphemouſly with our lippes, and drinke iniquity like water? Let us not deceive our ſelves; for God hateth ſin, and the leaſt ſin in his deereſt ſervant; for if Coniah were as the ſignet upon his right hand, yet if he ſin, he would cut him off; nay if Chriſt himſelfe, the Son of God, had had but the leaſt ſtaine of ſin in him, God would never have accepted him, as a ſufficient ſacrifice for our ſins.

God cannot endure the leaſt ſin in his deereſt ſervants. Ier. 22. 24.

2. Leſſon. The reſurrection of Chriſt the chiefeſt cauſe of our joy.

2. In that Chriſt ſaith now, unto this woman, quid ploras, why doſt thou weepe? it ſheweth that the Reſurrection of Chriſt is the chiefeſt thing, and that onely thing indeed, which ſhould wipe away all teares from our eyes. And it is worth the noting, that this was the firſt word, which Chriſt ſpake after his reſurrection; and it is an exceeding comfort unto us all; for what he ſpake to her, he ſpeakes to every one of us, why weepeſt thou? as if he ſhould ſay, though God highly hateth the leaſt ſin; yet now, ſeeing I have ſuffered for your ſins, and am riſen againe for your juſtification, you have no cauſe to weepe, but rather to rejoyce and be glad, & plus gaudere propter reſurrectionem glorioſam, quam dolere propter mortem ignominioſam; and truly, if we did but rightly conſider our own ſtate, this is the only cauſe we have of joy; and we have none other cauſe of joy but this.

The firſt word that Chriſt ſpake after his Reſurrection.

Pſal. 98. 40.

And therefore, ſeeing this is the day that the Lord hath made, this is the time of our Saviours triumph, the time wherein we celebrate the Reſurrection of Chriſt, let us rejoyce and be glad in it; But let our joy be ſpirituall, not in drinking and revelling, chambering and wantonneſſe, which is a grieving of Gods ſpirit, but in lifting up our hearts, and ſinging ſpirituall ſongs to God, which is a joy unto the Angels that are in heaven.

Our joy ſhould be ſpirituall.

3. Leſſon. Doe our beſt meanes to reduce all men to the truth.

3. In our Saviours reprehention of this woman, ſaying, why weepeſt thou? we ſee the love of Chriſt to her; that he was not willing to ſuffer her, to goe on in her errour; but he deſireth alwaies that we ſhould underſtand the truth; and ſo ſhould we, never ſuffer (if we can helpe it) the deviation of men, but doe our beſt to reduce them unto the right way.

2. Chriſt comforteth this woman.

2. Chriſt doth not only powre wine into the wound, and reprove this woman for what ſhe doth amiſſe; but he doth alſo powre oyle into the ſame, to rejoyce her ſoule and comfort her heart, for what ſhe doth well; when he ſaith, Mary; for, this is a word of comfort, that, although he takes no notice of the wicked, hee knoweth them not, yet he knoweth his owne ſervants and calleth them all by their names, as he did this woman, Mary; and behold what effects it wrought in her. For

The effects of Chriſt his calling.

1. Her converſion.

1. Converſa eſt retrorſum, ſhe turned her ſelfe to him; whereupon you may obſerve, that the calling of Chriſt is the onely meanes, that worketh our converſion to God.

2. Her knowledge of him. Sequius irritant animos demiſſa per aures, quæ ſunt oculis commiſſa fidelibus Horat.

2. She knew him, non ex vultu ſed ex auditu, not by his ſight, but by his voice; a ſtrange thing; quum magis eſt oculatus teſtis unus, quam auriti decem, when as one eye witneſſe is worth ten eare-witneſſes; and yet agnoſcit ex voce, quem ex facie agnoſcere non potuit, this woman knoweth his voice, when ſhe did not know his face. But the reaſon is rendered by Divines.

1. Vel

1. Vel quod in forma hortulani Christus apparuit,
2. Vel quod in propria specie, præ mœrore, non agnovit.

Either becauſe he appeared unto her in the forme and ſhape of a gardiner; or elſe becauſe ſhe was ſo oppreſſed with ſorrow, that the abundance of her griefe and teares had ſo dimmed her eyes and dulled her ſences, that ſhe could not know him.

1. Not by his face and why.

But for the firſt reaſon, that Chriſt did aſſume upon him any other ſhape then his own, it might favour the errour of the Manichees, that Chriſt had no true body; becauſe no true ſhape; and therfore S. Hierom ſaith, ſhe knew him not, non quod juxta Manichæum formam vultusq; mutaſſet, ut pro voluntate diverſus variusq; videretur, ſed quod Maria ſtupefacta hortulanum putaret; not becauſe he changed his countenance, as Manichæus thought, but becauſe Mary being amazed, ſuppoſed him to be the gardiner.

1. Reaſon rejected

Hieron. ad Hedibiam quæſt. 5.

And ſo indeed, the true cauſe, why ſhe knew not Chriſt by his face and countenance was her amazedneſſe, and the detention of her eyes by the divine vertue, that ſhe might not know him. To teach us, that till God openeth the eyes of our underſtanding, to make us know him, God ſeemes to every man as he is affected towards God; to Mary he ſeemes like a gardiner; to the two Diſciples that walke towards Emaus, like a traveller; to the wicked, even ſuch a one as themſelves, ſaith the Prophet; to a ſinnefull man going on in ſin, a God all of mercy; and to a wicked man in deſpaire, going out of the world, a God all of juſtice; ſo the Manna was to the children of Iſrael, to every mans taſte according as he was affected towards it. And therefore we ought earneſtly to pray to God, to illuminate our underſtanding, that we may know God as he is indeed, and not as we conceit him for to be.

2. Reaſon approoved.

Ideo non intelligunt, quia non credunt: quia intellectus adjuvat, ſed non generat fidem. Aug. Pſal. 50. 21.

2. She knew Chriſt by his voice; becauſe it was the ordinance of God, that we ſhould learne to know God out of his Word; there he reveales himſelfe, and there he ſends us to learne him, ſaying, Search the Scriptures, for they teſtifie of me, and faith commeth by hearing; and therefore, if you deſire to know Chriſt, heare his Word; heare his voice in the preaching of the Goſpell.

2. But by his voice, and why?

Gerardus in harm. c. 4. p. 114. Iohn 5. 39. Rom. 10. 17. Iohn 20. 25.

But as Thomas ſaid, I will not beleeve, except I ſee the print of the nailes; ſo I feare we have many Thomaſſes in the Church of Chriſt, that will beleeve little more then they ſee; ſcarce that there is a God, unleſſe they ſee him painted, like an old man, or the Paſſion of Chriſt, except they ſee him crucified in a painted table; or that there are Angels, except we ſee them ſpreading their wings upon the walls; a ſeeing religion, led more by the eyes then by the eares, by the ſight then by any other ſence; yet our Saviour ſaith, bleſſed are they that have not ſeene & yet have beleeved, Ioh. 20. 29. and God ſaith, when he delivered his law unto his people, they ſaw no ſigne but heard a voice; and therefore if thou wilt paint him, pinge vocem; paint a voice; for he comes to us, as he did to Elias, in a ſtill voice; and here we may ſee how powerfull is his voice, and how mighty in operation is the word of Chriſt? for he ſpake but one word, Mary; & ecce quanta virtus unius vocis? omnes tenebras erroris diſſipavit, & fontem lachrymarum areſcere fecit; and behold how it ſcattered all the miſts of errors, and dried up all the ſprings of teares, filling her with joy and gladneſſe. And therefore ô ſweet Ieſu, ô deere Saviour, dic verbum, do but ſpeake the word, ſpeake but one word unto me, and thy ſervant ſhall be healed; for as in the beginning, he ſpake the word, let there be light, and it was ſo; he commanded and it ſtood faſt; ſo now, if thou wilt be pleaſed but to ſpeake the word, we ſhall be happy.

Deut. 4. 12.

The Word of God is the onely thing that teacheth us to know God.

And yet I do not ſo approve of them that are, like thoſe fooliſh women, whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth, ever hearing and never doing any thing but heare, except it be to talke and prate againſt authorities; The doing religion is the beſt religion; for this hearing religion, whoſe eares have ſhouldered out, both the tongues of prayers and the hands of practiſe out of Gods Church, is no waies acceptable unto God; And therefore I will ſhew you a more excellent way: and that is the way of doing; for this doing religion is that beſt way, which brings us both to the knowledge of God here, and the fruition of God hereafter; for not the hearers of the law, but the doers

2 Tim. 3. 7.

Men ſam ponunt panes cibos q; aſſerunt, & Deum quem in expoſitione Scripturarum non cognoverunt, in fractione panis cognoſcunt.

Iames 1.27.

of the law shall be justified; and S. Iames saith, that pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherlesse and widowes in their affliction, and to keepe himselfe unspotted from the world; and therefore S. Gregory, and venerable Bede, and both out of S. Augustine, as I take it, do observe that the two Disciples going to Emaus, knew him neither by the sight of his face, nor the hearing of his voice, but by the doing of his will; dignatus est cognosci dum pascitur, they began to know him, when they began to feed him; therefore the blessing of God is to light on them, that heare the Word of God and keepe it.

Gregor. in Evangel. hom. 23. Aug. quæst evangelicar. l. 2. q. 51.

3. Her obedience to Christ.

3. When Christ said Mary, she presently answered Rabboni, that is, Master, and so she obeyed his voice, and yeelded her selfe unto his will; so did Abraham, Moses, Samuel, David, the Prophets, the Apostles, and all other true Saints presently answer unto the calling of God; and so should we; for if we answer him, when he calleth us, then will he answer us, when we call on him, he will heare us, when we pray unto him, and he will grant our requests, when we desire any thing for Christ his sake; for whatsoever ye ask the Father in my name he will give it you, saith our Saviour Christ. And so much for the literall exposition of these words.

Our obedience to God is the onely thing that pleaseth God. Iohn 14.13.

2. The mysticall sence of these words.

2. These words mystically understood, do shew the state of the militant Church of Christ here on earth; for Mary, which in Syriach, signifieth Stella Maris, and in Hebrew bitternesse, sheweth, that although, in the sight of God, the Church is like a glorious starre, that should be the Septentrio to every one, that saileth in the sea of this world; yet her state is bitter; her entertainement cold; and the most part of her time, she shall have just cause to spend in weeping and wailing, either justly for the sins she committeth against God, or frequently for the wrongs she suffereth at the hands of men; for in the world, you shall have tribulation, saith our Saviour.

Iohn 16.33.

And truly, if it were not, that we found the verity and truth of Esaias prophesie fulfilled in your royall Majesty, to make Kings her nurcing fathers and Queenes her nurcing mothers, our Church might now stand with Mary weeping and wailing, for the want of many favours, which we do enjoy, through your most Gratious clemency.

Isay 49.23.

But for this, you have the blessings of heaven to attend you, in your own sacred Person, in your royall Queene, in your happy Of-spring, in the hearts and hearty prayers of all your Clergie, and in the love and loyalty of all you Subjects, as much, and I beleeve, more then any King in Christendome; and if any one of us be otherwise minded, I wish that soule might be cut off from among his people.

And this mutuall happinesse makes us all the more happy; that, while other nations round about us, have the swords of their enemies round about their eares, and are uncertaine either of estate, life, or liberty; yet we do enjoy the triumphs of peace, the preaching of Christ, and blessings more then I can expresse.

O happy are the people that are in such a case, that have the Lord for their God. O that men would therefore praise the Lord for his goodnesse, and shew the wonders that he doth for the children of men.

And therefore, praise the Lord, ô my soule, and all that is within me praise his holy name, and all ye that love the Lord, blesse ye the Lord, praise him and magnifie him for ever, and let every thing that hath breath praise the Lord, through Iesus Christ our Lord, To whom with the Father and the blessed Spirit, be ascribed, as is most due, all possible thanks and praise, &c. Amen.

IEHOVÆ LIBERATORI.

THE DOVE-LIKE WINGS.

PSAL. 55. 6.

O what I had wings like a Dove, then would I flie away, and be at rest.

THis Psalme seemes to be penned by the Prophet David, when he fled from Keylah into the wilderneſſe, from the face of Saul; and he complaineth here of two great adverſities, that like two violent waves, had welnigh overwhelmed him.

When this Psalme was penned.

1. The tyranny and the cruelty of his maſter, whoſe life he had ſaved, and whoſe daughter he had married.

Two especiall things that troubled David.

2. The ingratitude and perfidiouſneſſe of his friends, whom in their neceſſities he had many times pleaſured, and to whom now in his extremities he had committed himſelfe.

Two heavy burdens, quorum unumquodq; ad ſubigendum navigium ſufficit, whereof the leaſt is able to ſinke a ſhip, as S. Chryſoſtome ſpeakes in another caſe; for what is ſo diſheartening to a faithfull ſervant, as a reſpectleſſe maſter, that forgets all his labours? Much more a cruell, that will render him evill for good: and what accident can befall a man ſo ſad, as to meet with unthankefull friends, which was a ſinne moſt hatefull among the Heathens? Much more with treacherous, that will betray him into the hands of his enemies: yet David meets with both theſe in this one place: And therefore hee prayeth for defence and deliverance, Ver. 1, 2, 3. And he ſheweth the neceſſity of his prayer, from the greatneſſe of his danger, which he expreſſeth two wayes.

The neceſſity of Davids prayer.

1. From the objects.
2. From the effects.

1. From the objects, Ver. 3.

1 King. 19.2. Acts 8.3.

- 1. Propter vocem inimici, because the enemy cried so, that is, breathed out such proud threatnings against his life, as Iesabel did against Elias, and Saul did against the Primitive Church.
- 2. Propter pressuram aut fremitum, because the ungodly came on so fast, that is, so violently and irresistably; the word signifieth that fury, whereby we do most plainely shew our hatred against any one, as Forsterus saith.

And:

1. From the objects, as:
   - 1. Devolvunt super me, they do rush upon me, with such eagernesse, that they are minded to do me some mischiefe; and as the Poet saith, in me turba ruunt, they do in all hostile manner devise all plots to destroy me.
   - 2. In ira adversantur mihi, or, as the vulgar Latine reads it, molesti erant mihi, which the vulgar English renders excellently well, they are so maliciously set against me, they persecute me with implacable hatred; quia improbus a nullo flectitur obsequio, because a froward heart can never be won with any service.

   Whereupon he addeth.

Forsterus in Lexico. Declinaverunt in me. Vulg. Edit.

2. From the effects, Ver. 4, 5.

2. From the effects, that this, their rage and cruelty wrought in him; Cor meum contremiscit; my heart is disquieted within me, and the feare of death is fallen upon me; for though the Saints of God do beare all things patiently, because they are accompanied with a good conscience, and are assured of Gods assistance; yet contrary to the opinion of the Stoicks, who think these things cannot happen to a wise and a just man, they are not ἀναθεῖς, so stony without affections, and so destitute of all passions, as to be touched with no sense, or moved with no griefe, but when danger is neare at hand, they will give place to feare and trembling.

Musculus in h. loc. Mollerus in h. loc.

And therefore the Prophet breaketh forth into these fearefull words, he breatheth out this fervent prayer, Quis dabit mihi pennas sicut columbæ? O that I had wings like a Dove!

The words shew two things. 1. The greatnesse of his danger. Psal. 46.1.

Which speech, at first sight, doth shew these two things.

1. That his dangers were so great, and his perils so dangerous, that he could no wayes be delivered, unlesse he were divinely helped, and, as it were, miraculously snatched out of their hands, by him, who is a present helpe in trouble.

2. The lamentable state of the wicked. How miserable a thing it is to live among wicked men. Vide Moller. in h. loc.

2. That the state of this people was so wretched, and their condition so miserable, as that it was safer for him to live among the wild beasts, than among such treacherous and perfidious men; and no wonder; for Sophocles saith, nullum est atrocius vulnus, quam defectio amici; there cannot be a more cruell wound, than the failing and falling away of friends; and Antisthenes was wont to say, χρεῖττον εἰς κόρακας ἢ εἰς κόλακας; it is better to fall among ravens, that pick out our eyes, than among flatterers, that destroy our soules; and therefore, what can we think of these men, that spake friendly unto their neighbours, but imagined mischiefe in their hearts? Or in what case was David, whose hard hap it was to fall into the hands of these men, whose mouthes were full of fraud, and their right hand the right hand of blood? The wise man saith, It is better to be with a lion, or a dragon, (and that is not very good) than to dwell with a contentious woman: And S. Basil, who fled into the wildernes, to shun the vanities of this world, saith, he was safer among the wild beasts, than he could be among wicked men; because they onely sought to teare his body, these to destroy his soule; they onely with their teeth and pawes; these, with their hearts, with their hands, with their tongues, and with all kind of machinations: therefore king Boco, in his oration to the people of Rome, saith, that where the good are timerous and fearefull, and the evill bold and impudent; the innocent despised, and the seditious commended; the poore, proud; and the rich, tyrants; the young dissolute, and the old old lascivious, and so forth; let every one beware that he be no inhabitant there; because either the ire of the gods, or the fury of these wicked men will soone fall upon him; and Gregory Nazianzene, in his Oration to those trembling Cittizens, that so much feared the iniquities of those times, wherein they lived, saith, to like purpose, εἴτε ὡς κυφωτέρας ἢ ταχυτέρας, εἴτε ὡς τὸ πνεῦμα σκιαγραφοῦσά ὡμὸν τὸ δεινὰ φεύγουσιν; ut ita quam longissime abesset: and so our Kingly Prophet, considering how dangerous it was for him, both in respect of body and soule, to live among such godlesse desperate men, he saith, quis dabit mihi pennas sicut columbæ; ô that I had wings like a Dove.

Psal. 55.22.

Dial. of Princes, p. 393.

And as Hugo Cardinalis and others doe observe, these words may be interpreted three speciall waies.

The words of the Text three waies interpreted.

1. Literally of King David.
2. Prophetically of our Saviour Christ.
3. Mystically of every Christian soule.

1. Literally of the Prophet David.

1. I say these words, hystorically considered, are the words of David, persecuted by his enemies and praying to God to be delivered from them: And therefore

Two things observed.

1. It is lawfull for the Saints to flie and shunne the furie of their persecuting foes.
2. The onely way to be freed from them, and especially to overcome our enemies is by earnest and hearty prayers unto God: For

1. That it is lawfull for us to flie from our enemies

1. It is proper to every creature, when great dangers are most imminent to thinke and meditate upon their flight, thereby to save and preserve themselves; because the horror of insupportable dangers, and the inbred love of their own happinesse, do most naturally induce both men and beasts, to shun the one, and to provide for the safety of the other, & si non datur copia fugiendi, votis tamen exequitur, quod corpori denegatur; and if they have not a power to flie, yet they have a desire to wish it, saith Musculus.

Musculus super hunc Psal. Heb. 3. 5.

And therefore Moses the man of God, that was faithfull in all his house, did flie from the face of Pharaoh; David, that was a man according to Gods owne heart, and a man stout and valiant inough, not fearing the strength of death, as appeareth by that bold adventure, for a little kid, to wrastle a fall both with a savage Beare and a roaring Lion; though he saith not, laboro ut ulciscar, I would faine be avenged of mine enemies; yet he wisheth, that he had wings, that he might flie from them; and so he fled many times; as, into the desart of Ziph, into the wilderneſse of Maon, of Engeddi, of Paran, and from Absolon, into the plaines of the wilderneſse. So Elias, that desired death at the hands of God, did flie from the rage of Iesabell; 1 Reg. 19. 3, 4. So Saint Paul, that desired to be dissolved, that he might be with Christ, did often flie from his persecutors; so Christ himselfe, which longed for death, as the hart longeth for the water brookes, did sometimes shunne and decline the fury of his foes; and so he advised his Disciples, when they were persecuted in one Citie to flie into another, Mat. 10. 23. and therefore that cannot be justly condemned in Gods servants, which was unblameably used by such holy Saints. Indeed some praise those souldiers, that when the field is wonne, and their day is lost, will rather despaire of health and dispatch their owne lives, then yeeld themselves into their enemies hands, and, as Cato Vticensis said of Cæsar, sustinere vultum tyranni, to abide the lookes of a tyrant, or to endure the reproach of a runne-away, or the best terme you please to give him, that will forsake the field, untill he be either caried into his grave, or doth carry away the crowne of victory.

1 Sam. 23. 14, 15. v. 24. c. 24. 2. c. 25. 1 2 Sam. 15. 14, 28. 1 Reg. 19. 3, 4. Act. 2. 2 Cor. 12. Mat. 14. 13. Luk. 5. 16. Ioh. 11. 54. Mar. 1. 35.

Whether in a battell we were alwaies best to fight it out or to flie.

But I like better of Demosthenes answer, when he was accused by the Athenians for his cowardly flight, that vir fugiens denuo pugnabit, he that flies away, upon good cause, may afterwards fight upon better termes: and he may winne the field to morrow, that hath lost the same to day; neither is flight alwaies an argument of cowardize, when as Alexander, Hannibal, Mithridates, Iulius Cæsar, Pompey and many more, whom all the world knew to want no courage,

The answer of Demosthenes.

The best souldiers have sometimes fled.

Fortis ire retrò non iuſſus in ſeram periculum: Cauto meâ, procedere: ſi quid obſtet acre.
Iul. Scaliger Epidorp. 4. 1. p. 110.

and to feare no death, have, in great dangers, thought upon retrait, and then betaken themſelves to flight; and not amiſſe; for, as he that ſayles in a tempeſt, and thinkes it more glorious, to ſtrugle and ſtrive with the windes and waves, to the loſſe of his life, then with a little trouble to retire ſafely into ſome ſhore, may well be thought to be a mad man; ſo he that will raſhly expoſe himſelfe to death, rather then by a faire flight to ſave his life, may juſtly be adjudged drunke with the deſire of vaine-glory. Therefore David in his dangers ſaid, ô that I had wings like a Dove, that I might flie away and bee at reſt: and it is reported of John Hus, that he attempted to flie from the Councell of Conſtance, and the like is recorded of Hierom of Prage; but they were intercepted by their enemies; yet was their endeavour juſt, to flie from them, which, as Saint Hierom ſaith, in the like caſe, ad occidendum inſtructi erant, non ad docendum, knew how to kill, not to teach, and to uſe their power, as wicked witches, or as Saluſt ſaith, of ſome powerfull Romanes, to deſtroy not to ſave, to oppreſſe the good, whom they hated, and not to advance the vertuous, whom they never loved: Nolo enim ille mihi imperet, qui me opprimere poteſt, docere non poteſt; for no wiſe man would willingly obey him, that will afflict him, but cannot inſtruct him, as S. Auguſtine ſaith.

In Eccleſia Primitivâ fugiebant ſancti, ſed à gemibus incredulis & impijs, quod aliquod ſolatij adferebat fugientibus, hic a populo Dei, quod multi erat miſerium. Maſenius in hunc Pſalm.

2. When we ſee, that we have enemies, either too many for us in number, or too mighty for us in power, and we ſee no way for us to eſcape them, or eſpecially to overcome them, then muſt we, with David, betake our ſelves unto our prayers; for this is ultimum refugium, the laſt refuge, the beſt meanes, and the onely way to ſhunne them and to ſubdue them; and we may truſt to it; for this ſtopped the mouthes of the Lions, when Daniel was ſhut among them; this quenched the flames of fire, when the three children were caſt into the fiery fornace; this unlocked the doores of the priſon, when Ioſeph, Saint Peter, Saint Paul, and many others of Gods Saints were faſt bound in miſery and iron; and this is the victory that overcomes all our adverſaries, even our prayers; and therefore, as the Prophet David, being invironed with the bulls of Baſan, that came about him like bees on every ſide, had no better ſword nor ſhield, to defend himſelf and offend them, then, I will pray yet againſt their wickedneſſe; ſo, if we have any ſecret foes, that under their white robes, doe harbour bloody hearts, and by an unrighteous tongue, to accuſe us falſly unto the King, to draw our ſoules neere unto death, and our life unto the hell beneath, and to lay to our charge the things, that we ſhall never know; or any open enemies, that malitiouſly labour to trample us under feet, to ruine our ſtate, to poyſon our reputation, and to make us odious in the thoughts of all good men, which is three times worſe then death it ſelfe; we can have no better way, nor ſurer helpe to preſerve our ſoules from ſinne, and our bodies from deſtruction, then to pray unto the Lord to deliver us from them: and this prayer is like the red-ſea, a wall of defence unto the godly, and a grievous gulfe to devoure the wicked, or like that fiery furnace, that did miraculouſly ſave the three children, and moſt fearefully devoured the malicious officers. And this ſhould be both a comfort unto the juſt, and a terrour unto the ſpitefull, to thinke that, when they have the eares of Kings and Princes open, to their unjuſt and envious accuſations, the faithfull ſervants of Chriſt have the eares of God open, to heare their humble and their zealous prayers, that doe perhaps even then, like faithfull Orators, plead for their authors in the higheſt heavens, and lay to their enemies ſuch objections, as they can never anſwer, when their wicked adverſaries doe feareleſly wound their good name here on earth.

2. Thus prayer is the chiefeſt meanes to helpe us to eſcape and to overcome all our enemies.

Dan. 6. 22. Chap. 3. 27. Gen. 41. 14. Act. 12. 10. & c. 16. 25, 26.

Eccleſ. 51. 6.

Exod. 14. 22. & v. 28. Dan. 3. 22.

2. Lorinus citeth Ruffin, Saint Hillarie, Saint Hierom, Saint Ambroſe, Haymo, Dionyſius, Valentia, and others that do underſtand theſe words prophetically to be applyed to Chriſt, the Sonne of David, perſecuted and purſued to an accurſed death, by moſt ſinfull wicked men; and therefore moſt heartily wiſhing to make an end of our redemption, and to ſuffer death for our ſinnes; and the more ſpeedily to die, to riſe againe, and to aſcend unto his Father, to make continuall interceſſion for us, that we, with him, might be at reſt; for Chriſt ſpeaking

2. The words prophetically expounded of Chriſt.

Lorinus in hunc Pſalm. Ambroſ. de fuga ſeculi. c. 5. & ſer. 6.

of

of his Paſſion, ſaith, I have a baptiſme to be baptized with, and how am I ſtraitned till that be ended and accompliſhed? and a little before his death, he ſaith, deſiderio deſideravi, with a longing deſire have I deſired to come to this; therefore he deſireth wings to flie for haſt unto it, yea the wings of a Dove, that he might moſt ſpeedily finiſh it, that ſo we might the ſooner enter into his reſt; ſo ſtrong was his affection, ſo great was his love, and ſo violent were his wiſhes to doe us good, not like thoſe curriſh natures, from whoſe hearts you may aſſoone wring the drops of blood, as wreſt the leaſt crummes of curteſie from their hands, but as a moſt tender-hearted father, he is more ready to give, then we to take, and more deſirous to undergo the moſt cruell death for us ſinners, then we are to accept of eternall life for our owne ſelves.

Luk. 12.50.

Luk. 22.15.

The unſpeakable love and affection of Chriſt to do us good.

But I am here fallen into an Ocean, where I may wade deepe and ſayle farre; and truly if my time were not ſo ſhort, I would not ſo ſoone part with this point; becauſe it ſheweth ſuch abundance of love from Chriſt, and yeeldeth ſuch a deale of comfort to all Chriſtians; but, as the painter that drew the mourners for Iphigenia, drew a vaile over Agamemnons face, becauſe the greatneſſe of her fathers griefe could not fully be expreſſed by the beſt artiſt; and therefore hee thought it better to leave it, to the higheſt conſiderations of the beholders, then to expreſſe it by the too meane conceptions of the craſts-man; ſo this being ſo great a worke, I will rather leave it to your holieſt meditations, then in ſo ſhort a ſpace, attempt to expreſſe it in few words.

Better to ſay nothing, then to ſay too too little where we ſhould ſay much.

3. The words morally applied unto our ſelves.

3. Theſe words myſtically underſtood, may be ſaid to be the voice of every Chriſtian man or woman, groaning under the miſeries of this wretched wicked world, and longing to be delivered out of their loathſome priſons, that they may raigne with Chriſt in everlaſting happineſſe; ſo I brought home my Text unto our ſelves; it is my voice, and thy voice, and the voice of every man, that is wearied under the burden of his ſinnes, and ſo vexed with the vanities of this life, that he ſaith, ô that I had wings like a Dove, that I might flie away and be at reſt; for our Saviour ſpeaking of our entertainement in this world, what welcome it would make us, ſaith, preſſuram ſuſtinebitis, you ſhall have tribulation, you ſhall paſſe through fire and waters, and you ſhall be hated of all men, little or much, for my names ſake; Quia non rete accipitri tenditur neq; milvo, qui malè faciunt nobis; illis qui nil faciunt tenditur; for as the net is not laid for the hawkes and kites, that doe hurt us and are called birds of prey, becauſe they devoure other fowles; but for the poore Partridges and the harmeles Doves, that do no hurt unto us, we do alwaies lie in waite, and ſeeke to take them by all meanes; ſo the rich and mighty men, that doe moſt of the miſchiefe, are never looked after, they may doe what they liſt, as the Pſalmiſt ſaith; but the poore and needy, the juſt and innocent, they ſhall be ſhifted, and ſifted like wheat: and therefore the godly, when they are troubled, and the floods of Beliall doe make them afraid, tanquam avis e cavea liberari cupiunt, they deſire as a bird, to be looſened out of their cage; and to that end they ſay, quis dabit mihi pennas, ô that we had wings like a Dove, that wee might fly away and be at reſt.

Iohn 16.33.

Pſal 66.11.

Mat. 10.22.

Terentius in Phormione.

Pſal 73.7.

Luk. 22.31.

Auguſt. de operibus monachorum.

So you ſee, theſe words are the fervent deſire of a godly man, or the bemoaning ſong of a mourneſull ſoule, left here on earth, both deſolate and diſconſolate; and therefore longing and praying, that either Chriſt would deſcend by his ſpirit, to releeve and comfort her, or els give her wings like a Dove, that ſhe might aſcend, and flee to him to be at reſt; and they doe principally containe theſe three parts.

The parts of the Text eſpecially three.

For
1. The perſon, of whom he wiſheth theſe wings, quis dabit?
2. The matter, that he wiſheth, wings like a dove,
3. The end, why he wiſheth them, to flee away and be at reſt.

1. Though in our vulgar Engliſh we read it, ô that I had wings like a Dove; yet in the vulgar latine it is, quis dabit mihi pennas? who ſhall give me wings? as noting the party that could beſtow them: and this manner of ſpeaking is not unuſuall in the Scriptures, as when the Iſraelites murmured againſt Moſes, they ſaid,

Of the manner of ſpeech the Prophet uſeth.

Exod. 16.3.

Deut.28.67. said, quis det mortui eſſemus? O that we had died in Egypt; & quis dabit veſperum? I would to God it were even; and Gaal the ſonne of Ebed ſaid, quis det populum hunc in manum meam? I would to God this people were under my Iudg.9.29. hand; and Iob ſaith, quis det Deum loqui? O that God would ſpeake; and a-
Iob 11. & 6.13. gaine, quis det ut tacendo taceatis? O that you would hold your peace; and a-& 6.16. gaine, quis det ut eveniat poſtulatio mea? O that I might have my wiſh; and when
2 Sam.18.33. David lamented the death of Abſolon, he ſaith, quis det mihi ut pro te moriar? I would to God I had died for thee; and the Prophet Ieremy ſaith, quis dabit capiti
Ier.9.1. meo aquam? O that my head were full of waters; & ſo in many other places of the Scriptures, this kind of phraſe, after the Hebrew faſhion, is moſt commonly uſed.

Mollerus in h. Pſal. And therefore, non dubitantis, ſed optantis vox eſt, ſaith Mollerus; it is not the voice of doubting, but of wiſhing, and hath in it the aſſurance of obtaining: yet ſeeing the phraſe and forme of ſpeech is both interrogative and optative, it ſheweth us theſe two ſpeciall points.

Two things to be obſerved. { 1. The perſon, who is the giver of theſe wings. 2. The manner, how we may obtaine theſe wings. } For

1. Who is the giver of theſe wings. 1. If any man would know, who is he that can give wings unto a man, to inable him to flie up into the heavens like a bird?

Pſal.136.4. I anſwer, that this being a thing beyond the power of nature, Ariſtotle and all the Schoole of Athens could never reſolve the queſtion: But the Prophet that made the demaund, can make the reſolution; that none can do this but he, qui facit mirabilia magna ſolus, which onely doth great wonders; he alone, and none other, can give us wings like a dove, to flie away and be at reſt; for as Chryſ. in Pſal.94. 16. S. Chryſoſtome, commenting upon the words of the Pſalmiſt, Who ſhall riſe with me againſt the wicked? ſaith, it is all one, as if he had ſaid, I have ſurveyed heaven and earth, and I have looked over all the creatures, and conſidered all their diſpoſitions; and I find them all both unable and unwilling to take my part againſt the wicked and unrighteous men; and therefore, O my God, either thou muſt bee my helper, or els I ſhall periſh in my troubles; ſo here, the Prophet demaunding, who ſhould give him wings like a Dove, intimateth, that he, which gave wings unto the woman, that is, the Church, to flie into the wilderneſſe, to eſcape the terrour of the Dragon, muſt give wings unto all her children, that is, all true Chriſtians, to flie away, and to be at reſt.

Rev.12.4.

What the former doctrine teacheth. That we can eſcape no danger but by the helpe of God. Eccl.9.11. 1 Sam.19.49. Acts 12.4. Pſal.46.9. Pſal.124.3. Pſal.104.29. A conſequent to confute Pelagius. Iam.1.19. Gregorius.

And therefore this ſhould teach us true humility, and humility in the trueſt ſenſe; when we conſider, theſe wings to eſcape temporall dangers, are, non innatæ, ſed datæ deſuper, not our owne naturall ſtrength, but the ſupernaturall aid and aſſiſtance of almighty God; for the race is not to the ſwift, nor the battell to the ſtrong, nor bread to the wiſe, nor yet riches to men of underſtanding; but God delivereth Goliah, the giant, into the hands of David the ſhepheard; he delivereth S. Peter from foure quaternions of ſouldiers, and S. Paul out of the mouth of the Lion; He breaketh the bow, and knappeth the ſpeare in ſunder, and burneth the chariots in the fire; and he onely muſt deliver us, or we ſhall never be able to eſcape the leaſt danger; for if the Lord himſelfe had not beene on our ſide, when men roſe up againſt us, they had ſwallowed us up quicke, when they were ſo wrathfully diſpleaſed at us: and if we cannot withſtand the hands of our enemies, that are without us, and are but men as we are, whoſe breath is in their noſtrils, and when that goeth forth, they are turned againe to their duſt; then how ſhall we reſiſt the temptations of Satan, that is ſo ſtrong and ſo ſubtill an enemy? Or how ſhall we ſubdue the ſtrength and power of ſinne, that is within us, and doth continually reſide in every faculty of our ſoule, unleſſe our God doth give us wings to eſcape them, and the helpe of his grace to ſuppreſſe them? Let Pelagius, and others of his ſchollers, magnifie the abilities of nature as they pleaſe, I will diſclaime what is mine; and ſeeing, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Every good giving, and every perfect gift is from above, I will ſay with S. Gregory; incaſſum laborat, qui alibunde virtutes acquirendas putat, quam a Domino virtutum; he laboureth in vaine to get vertues, that thinks he may find them any where, but from the God of all vertues; vertues; and much more vainely doth he labour to get graces, which hopes to obtaine them any where, or to procure them by any meanes, than by the favour of the God of all graces; and I will pray with S. Augustine, that when the tempter shall be present, God would give me sufficient and effectuall grace to preserve me from assenting, and when the tempter shall be absent, I may want time and place to commit any sinne; that so, when I have a will to offend, I may want ability, and when I have ability, I may want opportunity; which is either the withholding of mine enemies from assaulting me, or the giving of wings unto me to flie away from them; without one of which I am sure to be a prey unto their teeth?

A good prayer of S. Augustine.

So you see God is the sole Authour, and the onely giver of all graces, and not onely so, but also the inlarger and the disposer of all good; blessings, if duly considered, no lesse good, nor lesse worthy to be commended, than the former; for as good to have no wings, as to have our wings tyed; so, as good no vertue, as good no grace, as to have Gods graces like that talent, which the slothfull servant tyed up in a napkin, or to have our vertues buried in our hearts, like the fire in the flint, without any shew thereof in our lives and conversations; for

That the grace, rightly to use Gods graces, is a most speciall grace.

Luke 19.20.

As water standing, turnes to putrefaction,
So vertue is no vertue, but in action, saith divine Du Bartas;

Sylvester in translatione Du Bartas de operibus sex dierum.

And therefore our good God doth mercifully, not onely bestow his graces upon his servants, but he doth also bestow that grace, (without which all other graces are to no purpose) whereby they shall rightly imploy all Gods blessings, and direct them all to those ends, for which they are bestowed; which grace indeed is the most necessary of all graces.

2. The means how we may obtaine these graces, is prayer.

2. As this phrase is interrogative, to shew from whence we may have these wings, so it is likewise optative; to teach us how we may obtaine them, that is, by seeking, praying, or wishing for them, saying, O that I had wings like a dove; and I say, wishing for them, quia semper petitur quod semper optatur, because a Christian wish is no lesse than a pious prayer; & desiderium vehemens clamor magnus, and the more vehement our desires be, the more earnest are our prayers: and therefore, a godly man, when he walks alone, or is, perhaps, in the midst of company, doth, by his silent wishes, send up many fervent prayers to God; and God will say to him, as he said to Moses, Quid clamas ad me? Why dost thou thus cry to me? (When his tongue spake never a word) and he will answer, I have heard the voice of thy desires, not of thy mouth, which was silent, but of thy heart, that sent forth so many sighes and groanes into my presence; quia voces apud aures Dei non faciunt verba oris, sed desideria cordis; because the lowd words of a lifted-up voice do not make so shrill a sound in the eares of God, as the fervent desires of an humble heart; as S. Gregory saith.

August. in l. de vita innocentia. Of internall prayers.

Exod. 14.15.

Greg. in Moral.

And yet mentall prayer is not sufficient, when we have time, and place, and liberty to use the vocall; for as God made heart and tongue, body and soule, so he will be served and prayed unto alwell by the gesture of the body, as by the affections of the soule; that is, as well by our outward words, as by our inward thoughts; and therefore the Prophet David in this place, doth not onely wish with his heart, but also prayeth with his mouth, saying, O that I had wings like a dove; and so all the Saints of God use to do, continually pray unto their God; this is their daily exercise; this is their chiefest practice; especially if any trouble lieth upon them; and no marvell; because there can be no better way in the world, and I know none other way, to obtaine any good from God, than a zealous, faithfull, and a constant prayer; and if this be denied, I know not what other advocate will be heard, or what other meanes we can use, to perswade our God to send us helpe: but O Lord our God, wilt thou give leave to dust and ashes to plead this case with thee, and to aske thee how thou canst be just and true, if thou wilt deny the faithfull prayers of thy penitent servants? For thou thy selfe hast commanded them, to call upon thee in the time of their trouble, and thou hast promised, that thou wilt heare them; thou hast said, aske, and you shall have, seeke, and Mentall prayers not alwaies sufficient.

Nothing so powerfull to obtaine any thing, as prayer.

Psal. 50.15. Mat. 7.7.

John 16. 23. and you ſhall find, knocke, and it ſhall be opened unto you, and whatſoever you ſhall aske the Father in my name, it ſhall be given you; and therefore, when the Saints do pray unto thee, and call upon thee according to thy precept, for thoſe things that they want, and have great need of, and thou wilt not hear them according to thy promiſe; then, I pray thee, where is thy truth, where is thy juſtice? May not they ſay, thou haſt deceived us; becauſe we prayed unto thee, and are denied; we truſted in thee, and are confounded; but, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Let God be true, and every man a lyar; becauſe we may faile in our prayers, but he never failes of his promiſe; and therefore Salomon ſaith, deſiderium ſuum juſtis dabitur, the deſire of the righteous ſhall be granted; and I could never remember any one, that continued in his prayers for any thing, that was not an open diſhonour to God, or did not imply a contradiction to the truth of God, and was denied; and therefore, as David being in troubles, prayed to God for wings, to flie away for his ſafety, ſo let this incourage all men to do as God commandeth them, to call upon God in the dayes of their trouble; and as none of our forefathers, that hoped in God, were at any time confounded, ſo all they that do now truſt in him, ſhall never be aſhamed; becauſe yeſterday and to day, he is the ſame for ever, and his mercy endureth from generation to generation, upon them that feare him and keepe his commandements.

Rom. 3. 4.

Pro. 10. 24.

Heb. 13. 8. Pſal. 86. 5, 15. Pſal. 103. 17, 18.

And ſo much for the perſon, of whom the Prophet wiſheth theſe wings.

2. The matter that the Prophet wiſheth two things to be conſidered.

2. Touching the matter that hee wiſheth, wee muſt conſider theſe two things.

1. The ſubſtance of his wiſh, that is, wings. } And
2. The quality of theſe wings, like a Dove. }

1. The ſubſtance of the Prophets wiſh, wings.

1. For the ſubſtance of mens wiſhes, the Poet ſaith,

——————Non omnibus idem eſt
Quod placet——————

But, as Ovid ſaith,

——hic ſpinas colligit, ille roſas,

This man gathereth thornes, when the other lookes after roſes, and that which is one mans meat, is another mans poyſon; for the deſires of mens hearts are almoſt, if not altogether, as various as their voices, or their faces, whereof you ſhall heare not many, and ſee as few, without ſome ſpeciall difference; and if all men had their wiſhes, I think, but few would wiſh for wings: But

How diverſe men wiſh for diverſe things, as

Some would wiſh for wealth, and, as the Poet ſaith, quærenda pecunia primum, they would ſeeke it in the firſt place, and in the firſt time, and with their beſt endeavours: and when they had wearied themſelves in riſing early, & going late to bed, and eating the bread of carefulneſſe, to gather wealth, we may well ſay of them with Naſo,

Some wiſh wealth

μακάριος ὃς τὸ δοῦναι μᾶλλον ἢ λαβεῖν ἔχει χρῆναι δ' ὅτος ἐστὶ καὶ τῶν κτήσει. Menand.

Et cum poſſideant plurima, plura petunt;

Ovid Faſt. l. 1.

The more riches the worldlings have, the more they ſtill thirſt after it.

Others would wiſh for honour, as Court-like Saul ſaid unto Samuel, honour me, I pray thee, before this people; whereas honour ought not ſo much to be ſought for by any one, as given by the beholders to them that deſerve it; quia Cato petere non debuit, ſed ob ejus virtutem, cives non petenti dare debuerunt; becauſe Cato ought not to be vertuous, thereby to hunt after praiſe, but the Citizens and people, among whom he lived, ought, for his vertues ſake, to give him all the praiſe they could, though he ſought it not; even as Iuſtin ſaith of the ancient Kings, quos ad faſtigium honoris non ambitio popularis, ſed ſpectata inter bonos moderatio provehebat, whom not their owne ambition or popular applauſe, but their approved life and unblameable vertues, commended of all good men, brought them unto the height of honour, which will follow good men at the heeles, though they ſhould kicke it from them.

Some wiſh honour.

1 Sam. 15. 30.

Aug. de civit. Dei. l. 5.

Juſtin. hiſt. l. 1. in init. p. 1. Licet & ut decet honorem ſ. expetere & minimum & parum. Ariſt. Ethic. l. 4. c. 7.

Others wiſh for wiſdome, to be as wiſe as Salomon, as ſubtill as Scotus, and as knowing as Berengarius, of whom it was ſaid, quod intellexit omnia intelligibilia, he knew all knowable things; that they might excell their fellowes ſo farre

Some wiſh wiſdome.

as

as the wiſeſt men exceed fooles, or rationall men the bruit beaſts; and this wiſh can no waies be reproved, if they meane the divine, and not the worldly wiſedome; Quia hac nihil eſt optabilius, nihil præſtantius, nihil homine dignius; becauſe nothing in the world can be more excellent for man then this wiſedome, which wil bring him unto God; but the humane worldly wiſdom, which the crafty politicians doe ſearch after, is the onely ſnare to catch them, and the chiefeſt impediment that will hinder them unto heaven; and therefore Chriſt thanketh his Father, that he hideth his myſteries of true wiſedome from theſe wiſe and prudent men, qui non veram & laudabilem ſapientiam intelligunt, ſed iſtam, quæ ſecularis doctrina præſtatur; which underſtand not that true praiſe-able and moſt profitable wiſedome of God, but that ſubtle and tortuous underſtanding, which is only gotten by ſecular learning & our carnall craft, as Chryſoſtome ſaith; and which the Gloſſe deſcribes to be, cor machinationibus tegere; ſenſum verbis velare; quæ falſa ſunt, vera oſtendere; quæ vera ſunt, falſa demonſtrare; obſequentibus præcipere, honorum culmina quærere, adepta temporalis gloriæ vanitate gaudere, irrogata ab alijs mala multiplicius reddere; quum vires ſuppeditant nullis reſiſtentibus cedere; quum virtutis poſſibilitas deeſt, quicquid per malitiam explere non valent, hoc in pacifica bonitate ſimulare; which I am loth to engliſh, to teach men to become worldly wiſe, which have their hearts and thoughts ſo propenſe unto it.

Cicero offic. l. 1. & de natura deorum. l. 2.

Two ſorts of wiſdome.

Mat. 11. 25.

Chryſoſt. in Mat. 10. 3. hom. 39. p. 240. c.

Gloſſa in 1. Chronicor. Juſtorum ſapientia eſt, nil præoſtentationem fingere, ſenſum verbu aperire, vera ut ſunt diligere, falſa devitare, bona gratis exhibere, mala libentius tolerare quam facere, nullam iniuriæ ultionẽ quærere, pro veritate communiam luctum putare, &c. Gregor. moral. l. 10 c. 29.

And ſo of others, quot homines tot ſententiæ, how many fancies ſo many wiſhes; and as the Poet ſaith, velle ſuum cuiq; eſt, every man hath his wiſh; and if it were granted, that every man ſhould obtaine his wiſh, I feare few men would wiſh for wings; ſaying, ô that I had wings! but they would thinke a thouſand things might be better named, that might be of better uſe unto them.

The Saints wiſh for wings.

But if your patience will goe with me a little further, I hope I ſhall make it plaine unto you, that there is neither gold nor ſilver, honour nor preferment, nor any other thing under heaven, that ought ſo much to be deſired and longed after, as theſe wings, which the Prophet David prayed for; for albeit Plato defined man to be animal bipes implume, a two footed creature wanting feathers, whereat Diogenes laughed, and ſcorned his definition, with his ecce hominem platonicum, behold Plato's man, when he threw downe his implumed cock, whoſe feathers he had plucked for that purpoſe; yet we find that every devout man is animal bipes bipenne; as well two winged as two footted; that is, two winged in regard of his ſoule, and two footed in reſpect of his body; for mons Dei mons excelſus, the hill of God is a high hill, ſaith Tremelius; and therefore, vel ſcalis vel alis opus eſt, either the body muſt have a ladder, to climbe up with Acetius, that would not walke the ordinary way, or the ſoule muſt have wings, like a bird, to flie away, and to be at reſt.

Laertius in vita Diogenis. l. 6.

Mons Dei mons pinguis vulgata editione Pſal. 35.

The neceſſity of our wings.

Yea the learned doe obſerve not onely animam eſſe alatam, that the ſoule is winged, as Philo ſaith, but alſo to be alis plenam, full of wings, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith; for though among other winged creatures, the more imperfect have the more wings (as we ſee certaine inſect flies to have ſome foure and ſome ſixe wings, and the nobler fowles but onely two, as Plinie well obſerveth) yet with the ſoule of man it is farre otherwiſe, and the more wings it hath, the more excellent it is, and the more able to flie away and to be at reſt.

Aug. in hunc Pſal.

D. Rawlins ſuper hunc v.

But then, ſeeing the ſoule muſt have wings, or the body can never aſcend up to heaven, we muſt inquire, what are theſe wings, which are able to carrie us hence from earth to heaven, from labour and miſery to reſt and happineſſe; and Saint Auguſtine will tell us, that penna ſunt virtutes, theſe wings are our vertues; or rather, leaſt we ſhould underſtand them of morall vertues, which at the beſt were found too weake to carry any man to heaven, as the beſt Moraliſts among the Heathen can beare me witneſſe; πτέρυγες περιστερᾶς χαρίσματα ἁγίου πνεύματος; theſe wings are the graces of Gods bleſſed ſpirit, as Suidas ſaith; theſe are the wings that the Prophet wiſheth; rare wings, and an unvaluable wiſh without queſtion; and although the originall reads alam a wing, yet the ſingular number is put for the plurall, ſaith Mollerus; becauſe one wing will not availe any thing

What bee the wings of the ſoule.

Aug. in Pſal.

Mollerus in hunc Pſalm.

Esay 6.2. Revel 4.8.

without another; therefore he desireth wings, and not a wing; and he desireth not onely one paire of wings, as birds have, nor three paire of wings as the Seraphims have; but he wisheth for wings indefinitely, the more the better, all wings, all vertues, and all the graces of Gods spirit, if it were possible for him to obtaine them, that he might the swifter flie away and the sooner be at rest.

And, least your ignorance to know the best, or your slothfullnesse to seeke all those wings, that are able to carrie you throughout all difficulties, should prejudice your journey towards heaven; I hope it will not be amisse to let you understand some of the surest wings, that can best support us in our flight to that kingdome: and, as Iacob said to Isaac of his venison, the Lord thy God brought it to me, so I find most of these gathered to my hands, and preferred before all other wings, by some of our best Divines.

Gen. 27.20.

D. Rawlins in his Sermon on this Text.

1. Vega saith, one paire of wings is {1. Præteritorum dolor, 2. Futurorum cautio,} that is, a godly sorrow for sinnes past, and a carefull prevention of sinnes to come; two excellent wings to flie to God; because, as the Seraphims covered their feet with two of their wings, so may we cover all the nakednesse of our soules with these two parts of true repentance.

Vega in Apoc. 6.12
1. Paire.
1. Sorrow.
2. Care.
Esay 6.2.

Parisiensis serm. in ascens. Domini.
2. Paire.
1. Contempt of the world.
2. Love of heaven.

2. Gulielmus Parisiensis saith, another paire of wings is {1. Contemptus mundi, 2. Amor cœli,} that is, the contempt of all worldly vanities, and the love of heavenly felicities: two wings not much inferiour to the best; because the contempt of earthly things is the first step to the joyes of heaven; and the love to any thing is, in some sort, a kind of enjoying of the thing loved; quia animus est ubi amat, non ubi animat; for that the heart and soule are rather where they love, if their love be love indeed, then where they live; nothing in the world being so transporting and so metamorphosing a thing, as is true vehement love.

Gerson. serm 38.
3. Paire.
1. Hope.
2. Feare.

3. Iohannes Gerson, that best Chancelor of Paris saith, another paire of wings is, {1. Spes favoris, 2. Timor judicis,} that is, hope of Gods mercy and favour, and feare of Gods wrath and justice; two other wings of most excellent use; because as wings do keepe the birds from falling to the ground; so the hope of Gods favour preserveth the true penitent man from falling into despaire for sinnes past, and the feare of punishment keepeth the true carefull man from falling into sins to come; and as the Wiseman saith, timor Domini expellit peccatum, the feare of the Lords displeasure is the best governour of the cittie of our soule, to drive out all seditious and rebellious affections, and to keepe out all those deadly sinnes, that like implacable enemies doe seeke to enter in, to destroy both body and soule.

Ficinus in l. de Christiana religione in præfat. sub init.
4. Paire.
1. The understanding.
2. The will: that is,
1. Knowledge.
2. Zeale.

4. Marsilius Ficinus saith, another paire of wings is {1. Intellectus voluntatem dirigens, 2. Voluntas intellectum provocans,} that is, knowledge to direct the will, and devotion to provoke the soule to good, which is the zeale of the Saints to godlinesse; two very necessary wings, and necessary to goe together; because knowledge without devotion, or unsanctified understanding, not seasoned with the graces of Gods spirit, is but learned impiety, inabling us, with Iulian, Porphorie, Lucian, Aretine and the like, that had great wits and little grace, to be the better instruments of iniquity, and more apt to doe those greater villanies, which ignorant idiots and dull heads, either could never invent, or durst never effect; quia non nisi ex magnis ingenijs magni errores, for great heresies never sprang but from great Clerks, and were never defended, but by such, as were in favour with great Potentates; on the other side, devotion without knowledge is but blind zeale, that runs furiously and falls dangerously; and therefore rather to be pitied by wise men then followed by any man; because the blind leading the blind will bring both to fall into the ditch.

What a miserable thing is an unsanctified knowledge.

Ignorant zeale to be pitied.

Lorinus in hunc loc.
5. Paire.

5. Cæsarius Arelatensis, as Lorinus cites him, saith another paire of wings is

1. Eleemosynarum

{1. Eleemosynarum largitio, 2. Injuriarum condonatio,} that is, almes-deeds unto the poore, and remission of all trespasses to offendors; two able wings indeed to mount up very high; quia nihil plus valet curationi, quam eleemozinarum largitio, because there is nothing more availeable to heale our soules from sinne, then the large and plentifull store of almes-deeds, unto the poore distressed members of Christ, saith Rabanus: and therefore, si vis esse fœnerator optimus, da quod non potes retinere, & recipies quod non poteris amittere, if thou wilt be an excellent usurer and the greatest gainer, give that, which thou canst not keepe, and thou shalt have that which thou canst not loose, give a little temporall goods unto the poore, and thou shalt have eternall happinesse in heaven, which is the best exchange in the world, as Saint Augustine saith; and of the other wing our Saviour saith; forgive, and it shall be forgiven unto you, but if you doe not forgive, neither will your Father, which is in heaven, forgive your trespasses.

1. Almes deeds, 2. Forgiving offences.

Rabanus in Mat. c. 12.

Who is the best Usurer.

Mat. 6. 14. Mark. 11. 26.

6. Elias Cretensis, and so likewise Petrus Blesensis, that had the little Archdeaconrie of great London, doe say, that another paire of wings is

{1. Action. 2. Contemplation} which two things must needs be two wings of great use; because as Seneca saith, natura nos ad utrumq; genuit, & contemplationi rerum & actioni; nature hath begotten us to this end, to doe what we ought and to contemplate what we doe; or rather first to meditate and thinke upon what we should doe, and then to performe and put in practice, whatsoever our contemplation tells us is our duty to do; ut honestas magis ornemus, turpes vero abscondamus, that so, by this meanes of divine contemplation, we may approve the good and reject all bad actions, as Bias saith; and by the performance of those actions, which are approved good, we may escape the censure of slothfull and unprofitable servants.

Elias Cretensis in orat. 18. Nazianz. seu Pet. Blesensis serm. 51. Seneca de vita beata. c. 31.

6. Paire. 1. Action. 2 Contemplation.

Bias apud Stobæ. ser. 22.

7. Climacus by the Dove understands the active life; quia omnis virtus in actione consistit; because every vertue doth consist in action, as Cicero saith, and by the wings of this Dove, he understands {1. Contemplation, 2. Humility,} Contemplation, as a looking-glasse to behold our deeds, and Humility, when we have beheld them, to say as our Saviour teacheth us, that we are but unprofitable servants; without which humility it is unpossible for us to ascend to heaven; because the penitent Publican is the onely man that shall be justified, when the proud Pharisee shall be condemned.

Climacus grad. 4. Cicero offic. l. 1.

7. Paire. 1. Contemplation. 2. Humility.

Luk. 17. 10.

Chap. 18. 14.

8. Hugo de S. Victore saith, another paire of wings is gemina charitas, the twofold charity, viz. {1. In Deum, 2. In proximum} that is, our love to God, and our love towards our neighbour: and surely it is no question, but these two wings are able inough to carry us up to heaven; because God is love, and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him; and this is the summe of all the old Commandements of the law, to love God with all our hearts, and our neighbours as our selves; and the new Commandement of the Gospell is, to love one another as Christ hath commanded us; and if we doe this, then, as the bird is covered with her wings, so this love will cover all the nakednesse of our soules, and as the Apostle saith, it will cover the multitude of our sins.

Hugo de S. Victore instit. Monachor. serm. 97.

8. Paire. 1. Love to God. 2. Love to man.

1 Joh. 4. 16. Mat. 22. 37. Joh. 13. 34.

James 5. 20.

But yet you must note, that hæc charitas non qualiscunq; est, every charity will not serve your turne, as Saint Augustine saith; for otherwise the wicked may be said to have these wings; because they love God, cum benefecerit illis, when he hedgeth them about with blessings; though notwithstanding, that love is but a kind of remisse generall love, as I have shewed els where more at large; and they love one another with a politique and a worldly love, which by reflection redounds onely unto themselves, when they love others but for their owne sakes, and not for the merit of their vertues; as when a master loves his servant, not for the good of his servant, but for the good service he receiveth from him; which sad

Aug. præfat. in Psal. 140.

That there is a twofold love both to God and man.

The usuall love of masters to their servants.

succeſſe, if it falls to any mans lot, to come to his maſter with a ſmooth face, and to part from him with gray haires, and yet with as little wooll on his backe as a new ſhorne ſheepe, let patience bee his purge; and though it be bitter for a while, yet when theſe wings be growen, that he can flie away, it will then cleanſe all the dreggs of diſcontent, that he received from the fruitleſſe love of his ſelfe-loving maſter, that hath a love indeed, but like Saint Iames his faith, without life; and therefore, amor iſte tartareus eſt, this love is wicked, this charity is vile, and theſe wings are like Iccarus his wings, artificiall not naturall, melting and mouldring away when they come to the fiery triall, and ſuffering us to fall into hell when we thinke our ſelves neereſt unto heaven; quia viſcum habet iſte amor, quo deijciat in profundum, non pennas quibus levet in altum; becauſe this baſe and baſtard kind of love, either to God or men, is mingled with birdlime, whereby we are intangled and catched, and then plucked down to the bottomeleſſe pit, and they are not the true wings that are able to carry us up to heaven.

1 Pet. 4. 12.

Iddem quo ſup.

1. Our love to God how it ought to be. Mat. 22 37.

But our love to God, if it be right, muſt be { 1. Toto corde. 2. Tota anima. 3. Toto intellectu. }

1. With all our heart, that is, ſtrongly. 2. With all our ſoule, that is, ſweetly. And 3. With all our underſtanding, that is, wiſely; ſtrongly without reſiſtance, ſweetly without loathing, and wiſely without errour; that ſo nothing might hinder us, nothing moleſt us, nothing might make us wander out of our way to honour God.

2. Our love to our neighbour how it ought to be.

And our love to our neighbours, which is as the left wing, muſt be

{ 1. Sincere without hypocriſie. 2. Permanent without wavering. 3. Religious without impiety. } And our loves thus qualified, both towards God and man, are no doubt moſt excellent wings, to tranſport us over all the miſeries of this world, and to inable us to flie away and be at reſt.

Others, by theſe wings do underſtand, { 1. Meditation, 2. Prayer, } that is, meditation, to conſider what we want, and prayer to obtaine what we need.

Others expound theſe wings to ſignifie { 1. The Old Teſtament. 2. The New Teſtament. } that is,

Aug. de civit. Dei, l. 8. c. 8. in fine.

The Law and the Goſpell, faith and workes; & ſic alij atq; alij aliud atq; aliud opinati ſunt; and ſo I might run over all the vertues and the graces of a Chriſtian; becauſe all are wings and all are good; and as I ſaid before, we are not onely to labour for one paire of wings, for ſome few vertues, or ſome ſpeciall graces; but for many, the more the better, for all if we can, when we have reſpect unto all Gods lawes and to performe every precept; that ſo, being filled with all grace, and fullfilling all righteouſneſſe, we may the ſooner flie away and be at reſt. And ſo much for the ſubſtance of the Prophets wiſh, that he had wings.

2. For the quality of theſe wings:

2. For the quality of theſe things; becauſe all feathered fowles cannot reach ſo high as heaven; and all wings cannot preſerve us from the violence of the winds; therefore the Prophet wiſheth not ſimply for wings, but ſpecially for wings like a Dove; ſaying, ô that I had wings like a Dove; for there be divers ſorts of wings; as

That there be divers ſorts of wings

Gerſon meditat. 10. de aſcen. Domini.

1. Of the luke-warme profeſſors.

1. Some have wings, ſicut cicadæ, quæ erigit ſe per ſaltum non per volatum, like the graſhopper, that hath wings indeed to hop from flower to flower, but not to flie to the top of any tree; and theſe men that have ſuch wings, are like the Laodiceans, ſoone hot and ſoone cold, and ſo neither hot nor cold, neither right worldlings, nor true Chriſtians; but ſuch as could willingly goe from the Sermon into heaven, ſo they might doe it at one jumpe, as the Iſraelites were very ready to paſſe from Egypt into Canan, ſo they might have leaped over the wilderneſſe, as they walked through the red ſea, in an inſtant, without any further temptations; but, as theſe fell away at Maſſa, and could not endure the tedious journeys of the deſarts; ſo the other, in the time of temptations, ſtart aſide like a broken bow, and cannot abide to goe to heaven by flying, that is, with the Exod. 14. 22. & c. 17. 2, 7.

Pſal. 78. 57.

Church

Church of Smyrna, by a conſtant courſe of well-doing, and being like King Therons courſers, that were never weary of running, as Pyndarus ſaith.

2. Some have wings, ſicut Struthionis, qui eſt animal amphibolicum, like the Oſtridge, that is halfe a beaſt, and halfe a bird; and therefore, by reaſon of the weightineſſe of his body, he cannot flie aloft; yet by reaſon of his wings he flickereth ſo faſt, that he can eaſily outgoe any other beaſt; and therefore Iob ſaith, ſhee ſcorneth the horſe and his rider; and they that have ſuch wings are thoſe men, that will Deo militare & ſeculo; ſerve God and Mammon, follow the world, and yet hope for heaven; and ſo play the Saints in the Church, the divels in the Commonwealth, and the hypocrites in all places: and though theſe wings can never inable them to flie up to heaven, yet herein they have the advantage of all downe-right worldlings, that they deceive moſt men under this vizard of piety.

2. Of hypocritical Chriſtians.

Lorinus in hunc Pſalm. Thom. 1. 2. q. 102. ar. 6.

Iob 39. 18.

2 Tim. 2. 4.

Mat. 6. 24.

3. Some have wings ſicut aquilæ, quæ ponit inter ſydera nidum, like the Eagle, that layeth her neſt in the clouds, as the Prophet ſpeaketh; or, ſicut Pavonis, qui dum plumas jactanter oſtentat, poſteriora turpiter nudat; like the proud Peacock, that whiles he diſpreads his gaudy plumes, he diſplaiſe the ouglineſſe of his hinder parts, ſaith Fulgentius; and they that have ſuch wings, are the ſonnes of pride, eſpecially thoſe that are ſpiritually proud of their own righteouſneſſe, and of the gifts that God hath given them; which ſwelling pride doth make theſe Lucifers, to diſdaine their inferiors, know no equals, and envie their betters in any grace; and it makes their wings juſt like the Peacocks pleaſant to others, but unprofitable to themſelves; becauſe God reſiſteth the proud: and as the divell, for diſplaying theſe wings, and ſaying, ego ſimilis ero altiſſimo, I will be like unto the moſt higheſt, was degraded from his dignity and caſt downe to hell, which is the pit moſt loweſt, and there chained in everlaſting darkneſſe for ever; ſo ſhall all the children of pride be caſt downe with Lucifer into the bottomeleſſe pit; and therefore, though theſe wings of pride, and confidence in our owne righteouſneſſe be farre more glorious in ſhew, then the faire wings of the graſhoppers, or the ougly wings of the dung-flies; that is, then the civill carriage and morall vertues of the heathens and meere naturall men, or the leand behaviour of drunkards, adulterers and the like; yet they are more odious in the ſight of God, and more dangerous for themſelves, then any of the other; for our Saviour tells us plainely, that the Publicans and Harlots ſhould enter into the kingdome of heaven before theſe prond Phariſees.

Abdias verſe 4.

Fulgentius in mythol.

3 Of proud Phariſees.

1 Pet. 5. 5.

The fearefull ſtate of phariſaicall Chriſtians.

Mat. 21. 31.

4. Some have wings, ſicut Corvi, qui deglutit animal um cadavera, like the Crowes or Ravens, that feed upon the carcates of dead beaſts; and they that have ſuch wings are the gluttonous and luxurious men, whoſe god is their bellie, whoſe glory is their ſhame, and whoſe end is fearefull damnation, when with Dives, after they have fared daintily every day, they ſhall be puniſhed moſt lamentably for ever and ever.

Lorinus in hunc Pſalm.
Gen. 8 7.
Phil 3. 19.
4 Of glutonous, drunken, and luxurious men.

5. Some have wings, ſicut Milvi, qui ſurſum volat, ut prædam in terra commodius deſpiciat, like the Kite, which flies aloft unto the heavens, that he may the more eaſily catch his prey here on earth; and they that have ſuch wings are thoſe covetous wretches and moſt greedie cormorants, that with the Scribes and Phariſees, do make great ſhewe of holineſſe to deceive the ſimple, and as our Saviour ſaith, to devoure widdowes houſes under this mantle of piety; and it is ſtrange to ſee how ſome of them will lift up their eyes to heaven, as if with Saint Paul, they were wrapt up into the third heaven; and yet, if we ſhould ask them with the Prophet, are your hearts ſet upon righteouſneſſe, we might anſwer with the Apoſtle, repleti omni injuſtitia, they are filled with all wickedneſſe, and there is no feare of God before their eyes.

5. Of covetous wretches.

Mat. 23. 14.

2 Cor. 12. 2.

Pſal. 58 1.

Rom. 1. 29. & 3. 18.

6. Some have wings, ſicut Veſpertilionis, qui crepuſculum deſiderat, ut in ambitu volet, like the Bat, which looketh for the twilight, that he may flie about his round; and they that have ſuch wings are thoſe adulterous and laſcivious men, whereof Salomon ſpeaketh Pro. Chap. 7. ver. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. and thoſe faint-hearted Nicodemuſſes, that came to Chriſt by night for feare of the Iewes; thoſe

6. Of adulterous and laſcivious men.

Prov. 7. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13.

The practice of neutralists.

Micropsukes, pusillanimous spirits, that dare not speake the truth in publique, for feare of those Iewes and Iewish priests, that seeke to crucifie Christ and all Christian Religion; and such are those Luke-warme professors and neutralists, that are neither hot nor cold, neither true Protestants nor professed Catholiques; but as Plinius lib.35.c.9. Erasmus is painted with one halfe in heaven, the other in hell; or, as the picture, which was so ambiguously drawne by Polygnotus Thasius, that the beholders knew not, whether he had painted him climing upward or descending downward; so they behave themselves after such a fashion, that we know not what to make of them, whether they walke in light or in darkenesse, whether they be with us or against us; but I thinke this coldnesse of their zeale to be an Index of their wit, and a betrayer of their heart, to stand in such a posture, as may with the weather-cocke turne, when the wind turneth.

I could reckon many other such wings, that be all too weake to preserve us from the winds, and to carry us up to heaven; and therefore the Prophet wisheth no such wings, though they should be never so glorious in shew, never so usefull in the world; but of all wings, he wisheth for the wings of a Dove, saying, ô that I had the wings of a Dove! and reason good; for the Dove was the most acceptable of all fowles, among all nations.

The Dove most acceptable among all nations.

1. Among the Gentiles.
2. Among the Iewes.

For

1. Among the Gentiles. Diodor. Sicul. hist. 43. Comentator in metamor pag.70 ut citatur.ibid. Diodorus Siculus saith, that Semiramis the daughter of Dirce, to whom the Syrians erected a Temple, neere the cittie of Ascalon, being cast out by her mother into the desart, where abundance of Doves were, she was miraculously fed and preserved by them; and therefore she was called Semiramis, which in the Syrian tongue signifieth Columba, a Dove; and for this cause, saith he, these birds are sacred among that nation, and they worship them as their goddesses; and Herodotus writes, that Iupiter Dodonæus; which was the most antient Oracle in all Greece, did give his answers unto the people, under the forme and shape of a Dove.

Plinius lib.10.c.37 Neither is it unknowne to the meanely learned in the writings of the Gentiles, how many benefits they ascribed to the Dove, and how excellent were her properties above all other fowles; for Hirtius and Brutus in the siege of Mutina, tied epistles and letters about the necks of certaine Doves, that very faithfully carried them to and fro betwixt the towne and the campe, to give notice to each party, what they ought to do; and so Doves were sent out of the towne of Leyden, when it was besieged, for the bringing backe of intelligence, by the advice and direction of Dousa, whereof Heinsius saith,

D. Hakewill in apolog. pro provident. Dei l.3.c.8. p.258.

——Qui falleret hostem
Dousa virum nequit mittere, misit avem:

and when Æneas was to passe into the Elisian fields,

Virgilius Eritbræi. l.6 p.350.

——Geminæ tum forte columbæ
Ipsa sub ora viri cœlo venere volantes, & viridi sedere solo;

two Doves appeared unto him, and they were his guides to direct him to that grove; ubi pinguem dives opacat ramus humum, where the golden bough doth overshadow the most rich and fertill soyle. And it would be too long for me, to speake of all the benefits and properties, that Poets, Historians, and Naturalists have ascribed and set downe of this fowle.

2. Among the Iewes. Gen.8.11. 2. The Iewes had the Dove likewise in great esteeme, and not without good cause; for Moses saith, that when the whole world was drowned with the deluge, the Dove brought the olive branch in her bill, as the Herauld that proclaimed the conditions of peace: and God himselfe sheweth how well he likes this bird, when he accepteth it for his sacrifice of every woman, that was to bring, at her purification, a paire of turtle Doves or two young pigeons; and when our Saviour was baptized, the Holy Ghost descended and lighted upon him like a Dove; and therefore, as the Lambe signifieth the Sonne of God, which is the true Lambe, that was slaine from the beginning of the world; so the Dove is the Embleme of the Levit.12.2,8. Luk.2.24. Mat.3.16. Ioh.1.29.& 36.

the Spirit of God, which is the true Dove without any gall or bitterneſſe: and Ephreem ſaith, that when the veile of the Temple was rent, at the paſſion of Chriſt, a Dove was ſeene to flie out of the Temple; to ſhew, that now the Spirit of God was pleaſed, to include his graces no longer among this onely nation of the Iewes, and perhaps would ſtay no longer among that curſed people, which had ſo cruelly murdered the Sonne of God, but would now flie unto the Gentiles, which ſhould ever after be partakers of the Holy Ghoſt, as well as they.

Vide Levin. in Pſal. 67 Ephreem, in Serm. de paſſ.

And therefore, the Dove, being ſo acceptable a bird both to Iewes and Gentiles, both to God and man, the Prophet David, lacking wings, wiſheth that he had the wings of a Dove; and that, as I find, for three ſpeciall reſpects.

The Saints like doves in three reſpects.

1. Of aſſimilation, that he might be qualified like a Dove.
2. Of manifeſtation, that he might appeare like a Dove.
3. Of properation, that he might be as ready to do his duty, as the Dove is ſwift in her flight.

1 Like qualified. Sap. 1 4. Mat. 10. 16.

1. The wiſe man ſaith, in malevolam animam non introibit ſapientia, wiſdome entreth not into a wicked ſoule; and our Saviour biddeth us to be, as wiſe as ſerpents, Ut antiquo ſerpenti reſiſtamus, that we might be the better able to reſiſt the ſubtilty of that old ſerpent the Divell; and therefore, if we would be as wiſe as ſerpents, we ſhould be as innocent as Doves; and we muſt not onely reſemble the Dove, in this one grace and vertue of innocency; but we muſt be like Doves, in reſpect of all or moſt of the Dove-like properties: Aquinas nameth ſeven things, wherein we ſhould imitate the Dove: For, ſaith he,

Thom. Aquin. de proprietatibus columbæ.

The properties of the Dove.

1. Felle caret, ſhe hath no gall, ſhe wants all bitterneſſe.
2. Roſtro non lædit, ſhe bites not, ſhe hurts not with her bill.
3. Optimum granum eligit, ſhe chuſeth the beſt corne, the wheat ſhe loveth beſt.
4. Gemitum pro cantu habet, her ſong conſiſteth of ſighing and mourning.
5. Iuxta flumina aquarum ſedet, ſhe maketh her reſidence by the flouds of waters, by the rivers ſide.
6. Innocentia valet, ſhe excels in innocency, ſhe is moſt harmleſſe of all fowles.
7. Volatu præſtat, ſhe exceeds all in ſwiftneſſe of flight.

And Ulyſſes Androvandus doth in theſe three verſes ſet downe the ſame, and the like properties, more at large, ſaying.

Ulyſſes Androvandus in Ornithologia.

Grex, viſus, pulli, fel, oſcula, pugna, lapilli,
Grana, latex, nidus, turris, gemitus, color & pes,
Nuncia, ſimplicitas, fimus, ova, venus, fuga, cervix.

Which are thus expounded by Lorinus, that they flie by flocks, they ſharpen their ſight with blood, they nouriſh other brood than their owne, they are without gall, they uſe to kiſſe each other, their fight ſeemes to be with their wings ſpread, or as if they were without wings, they eat and ſwallow downe little ſtones, and in their livers certaine precious ſtones are purged, they feed upon graine not fleſh, they will remaine by the fulleſt flouds of water, that they may behold the ſhadow of the kite comming towards them, they build in a rocke, they ſigh when they ſeeme to meditate, they are of a white and leaden colour, they have feathered feet, they are the meſſengers of peace, and the very embleme of all quietneſſe and concord, they ſignifie the Holy Ghoſt, they excell in ſimplicity, their dung is hot, and maketh hot the ſoyle where it is, their egges are of the ſame quality, they bring forth a fruitfull brood, they are moſt ſwift in their flight, and their necks appeare golden-like; all which properties, how they are applied to us, and how we ſhould be like the Doves in all theſe things, they are moſt fully expreſſed and ſet downe by Hugo Cardinalis in Pſal. 67.

Gregatim volant, ſanguine viſum acuunt, pullos alienos nutriunt, oſcula inter ſe figunt, felle eſt, oſculo uitur, pugnat ſublatis alis, lapillos comedit, & in ejus jecore lapides quidam pretioſi expurgantur, veſcitur granis non carne, reſidet ſuper fluenta pleniſſima, & ibi præſcit accipitris umbram, nidificat in petra, gemitu meditari videtur, colore plumbeo & candido eſt, pedes habet pennigeros, pacem annuntiat, deſignat Spiritum Sanctum, ſimplicitate pollet, ſtercus calidum, & fimus excalefactivum, ejuſdem qualitatis emittit ova, prolem fœcundam generat, velocem init fugam, & cervix aurea apparet. Lorinus in Pſal. 67.

But the time will not give me leave to run them over, neither need I, when it is ſo eaſie for any ſcholler to make application.

And yet, as we ought to be like children, and to walke like children, yet not in

The Saints ſhould be wiſe.

all things like children; as, not like children in underſtanding; ſo, though in theſe reſpects we ſhould imitate the Dove, yet in all things we may not be like the Dove, as we may not be like Ephraim, that was velut columba ſine corde, as a Dove deceived without a heart, Hoſea 7.11. ſo ſimple, as to be inſnared by every ſubtill enemy; and therefore, to the innocency of a Dove, our Saviour adviſeth us, and we have reaſon to follow his counſell, to joyne the wiſdome of a ſerpent; becauſe innocency without wiſdome is but a ſweet prey, ſoone caught, and as eaſily devoured, by iniquity; and therefore, S. Paul was not behind in this point, when, by claiming the priviledge of a Romane, he eſcaped to be ſcourged by his enemies; and the next day, being brought before the councell, and perceiving the quality and diſpoſition of the company, that the one part were Saddu-

Acts 22.25. & c.23 6.

ces, and the other Phariſes, he did moſt wiſely ſave his owne life, by dividing the multitude; and ſo they do rather deſerve commendation, than reproofe, that being innocent, and retaining ſtill their candor, can wiſely ſave themſelves from this froward generation.

2. Beautifull to others, by their good examples.

2. Though the wings of a Dove, that is, the graces of Gods Spirit be not given for oſtentation, yet the good workes of the faithfull, and the holineſſe of the Saints do make ſuch a faire ſhew in this wicked world, that the Prophet David, ſpeaking of them, ſaith, though ye have lien among the pots, that is, ſeeme black, like ſcullions, by reaſon of your ſinnes or afflictions, that have filled your hearts with griefe, your eyes with teares, and your faces with confuſion; yet ye ſhall be

Pſal 68.13.

like the wings of a Dove, that is covered with ſilver wings, and her feathers like gold; that is, you ſhall ſeeme moſt glorious and beautifull in the ſight of God and all good men; and, as John Baptiſt, even while he lived on earth, and did ſeeme contemptible in the ſight of Herod, was notwithſtanding, Magnus coram Do-

Luke 1.15. Phil.2.15.

mino, great in the ſight of the Lord; ſo ſhall all the true ſervants of God, ſhine in the midſt of a crooked and a froward generation.

3. Swift in their flight, and their haſt to ſerve God here, and to be with God in heaven. Pſal.139.8.

3. Quia properanti etiam celeritas mora eſt, becauſe all haſt ſeemes but ſlackneſſe to him, that would go in poſt haſt; therefore the good man, that longeth to be with God, contents not himſelfe with feet to walk, or with legs to run, but he muſt have wings to flie unto him; and yet all kind of wings will not ſerve the turne; but he muſt have either the wings of the morning, which in an inſtant flieth from Eaſt to Weſt, and filleth all the whole Hemiſphere of heaven with her brightneſſe; or the wings of the wind, that bloweth where it liſteth, and flieth throughout the vaſt region of the ayre in a moment; or the wings of an Eagle, which is ſaid to be powerfull in flight; or, as here, he muſt have the wings of a

Pſal.18.10. Ioh.3.8.

Dove, which is ſo admirably ſwift, ut eam accipiter aſſequi non poteſt, that ſhe can infinitely out-flie the hawke, as Pelican ſaith; and therefore they ſay, that, Pellicanus & Emanuel Sa. de permiſcuate Columbæ.

Niſi in aere plaudat alis, at q. ita curſus rectitudinem & feſtinantiam ipſa impediat, tuta ſit a rapina accipitris; if ſhe did not hinder the ſwiftneſſe of her flight, by the clapping of her wings, through too much feare, ſhe might be ſafe from all the danger of the hawke, ſaith Plinie; and ſo moſt Writers doe conclude, that, although the Dove hath many excellent properties; for Clemens Alexandrinus writes that the Doves are very chaſt, and Martiall affirmeth their fleſh maketh chaſt, and Porphirie, of the abſtinence of living creatures, ſpeaketh much in the commendation of the Doves, and ſo many others ſet downe many things in the praiſe of theſe fowles, as I ſhewed to you before; yet the chiefeſt qualities of theſe birds ſeeme to be their native innocency, and the ſwiftneſſe of their flight; For,

Plin. l.10.cap.37. Clemens Alexandrinus ſtrom.l 2. Martial l 13 & Porphyr. de abſtinentia animal. l. 3.

Mat 10.16.

Of the firſt, our Saviour ſaith, be as innocent as doves, as knowing the Doves to be the beſt patterne for innocency: And

Of the ſwiftneſſe of the Dove.

Of the ſecond, not onely Plinie the Naturaliſt, that knew beſt the properties of things, but alſo the Poets, that laboured moſt to expreſſe, with all elegancy, the nature of things, do moſt highly commend the ſwiftneſſe of the Dove; for Ovid, willing to ſhew the ſwift courſe of Arethuſe and Alpheus, ſaith,

Ovid. Metam. l. 5. p.103. in folio.

Sic ego currebam, ſic me feruis ille premebat,

Ut

Vt fugere accipitrem, penna trepidante, columbæ;
Vt ſolet accipiter trepidas urgere columbas;
As trembling Doves the eager Hawkes eſchue,
As eager Hawkes the trembling Doves purſue,
I fled, he followed——

And Virgil, ſhewing the great haſt and ſpeed of Mneſteus to get into the ſea, ſaith, Virgilius Eneidor. l. 5. p. 220.

Qualis ſpelunca ſubitò commota columba
Fertur in arva volans——

Hee fled as faſt as a pigeon; and how faſt that is, he ſheweth, when hee ſaith, Idem eod. lib.

Radit iter liquidum, celeres neq; commovet alas.
Not ſeene to move her nimble wings,
Her waies to end ſhe quickly brings.

And therefore the Prophet, willing to make ſuch haſt to goe to God, wiſheth that he had wings like a Dove; and ſo all the godly are of the ſame mind and filled with the ſame deſires; for as before the comming of Chriſt, they cried unto him, ô utinam diſrumperes cœlos & deſcenderes; ô that thou wouldſt break through the heavens and deſcend unto us, to be incarnate for us; ſo now after his Aſcention and his going up to heaven, they wiſh they had wings like a Dove, to flie to him; and they cry continually, how long tarieſt thou holy and true, before thou come to fetch us? ô God make ſpeed to ſave us, ô Lord make haſt to helpe us, that we may, with all ſpeed come to thee. And ſo much for the matter that the Prophet wiſheth, wings like a Dove. The deſires of the Saints to bee with God. Eſay 64.1. Revel. 6.10.

3. Touching the end, why he wiſheth theſe wings, it is here expreſſed to be twofold, { 1. To flie away. 2. To be at reſt. } For 3. The end why the prophet wiſheth for wings, twofold.

1. Though the Prophet was in a wonderfull ſtrait, encompaſſed with many enemies, and endangered by malicious adverſaries; yet ſuch is the ſweetneſſe of his diſpoſition and the greatneſſe of his piety, that he ſeekes not a ſword, in impatiency, to diſpatch himſelfe, nor the teeth of a Tyger to deſtroy his enemies; but he deſires the wings of a Dove, to flie away and to be at reſt; Nam fugere cupit, non nocere; for he ſeekes not vengeance on them, but deliverance from them, to defend himſelfe, and no waies to offend them, ſaith Saint Baſil; and this is plainely ſhewed from the nature of wings; becauſe their uſe and office is, not to fight or to deſtroy, but eſpecially 1. To flie away. Baſilius in Pſal. 33 & Nyſſen de virgin & pudic. conſtug.

{ 1. To protect us from harme. 2. To flie away with us whether we would be. } For A twofold uſe of wings.

Of the 1 our Saviour ſaith, he would have gathered the Iſraelites, as the hen gathereth her chickens under her wings; and the Prophet David prayeth to God, that he would keepe him under the ſhadow of his wings; therefore wings being a ſpeciall meanes of protection, the Prophet prayeth not for fire out of heaven, to conſume his enemies, as the furious Diſciples would have don, though therein they knew not what they did; neither doth he preſently curſe theſe accurſed people, as many of us uſe to doe to the Saints of God, though we have no juſt cauſe for the ſame; but he prayeth for wings, to be delivered and protected from them, that they might never prevaile againſt him; and this, any one may doe, without any offence to God, or any injury unto man. 1 Vſe of wings. Luk. 12. 34. Pſal. 36. 7. Luk. 9. 54. Ver. 55.

Of the 2. I told you before, it is many times lawfull to flie, when we cannot otherwiſe, either preſerve our owne lives, or eſcape the malice of our foes. 2. Vſe of wings.

And yet, we muſt not ſolely underſtand this of materiall wings; and therefore our flight muſt not alwaies be underſtood to be corporall, but we muſt flie, not onely from temporall but alſo from ſpirituall dangers, not onely from the world into heaven, but alſo from all worldly things to ſpirituall things; from all ſinnes, from all luſts and concupiſcences, from vices unto vertues, and from the deſire of That our flight muſt be ſpirituall.

vengeance, to desire repentance to be given unto our enemies: and then, ut Deus in cœlo dicitur, & tamen est in terris, ita nos in terra versantes, conversationem habemus in cœlis, as God is said to be in heaven, and yet is here on earth, so we living on earth, have notwithstanding our conversations in heaven, as Saint Chrysostome saith, quia super pennas virtutum ascendimus usq; ad cœlum; because the wings of vertue, and especially of the graces of Gods spirit, Faith, Hope, Charity, Patience, Humility, and the like, will soone and easily carry us up to heaven.

Chrysost. hom. 16. in epist. ad Hebr.

That our thoughts should be alwaies on heavenly things.

The difference betwixt the good and the bad.

Hieron. in Esay c. 14. v. 15. Vide Exod. 15. 5. & Zach. 5. 7. Boetius de consol. l. 4. met. 4.

And therefore this should teach us to despise this world, and to be alwaies mounting up to God, as Saint Ambrose saith; for this is found to be the difference betwixt all good men and bad, impius ad infernum detrahitur, & demergitur in profundum quasi lapis; the wicked falls into the bottome like a stone; & sedet iniquitas super talentum plumbi; and iniquity sitteth upon a talent of lead, which is able to presse downe any thing to the most bottomelesse pit, as Saint Hierom saith, but the godly doe mount up to heaven like a bird; and therefore Boetius saith,

Sunt pennæ volucres mihi,
Quæ celsa conscendant poli;
Quas sibi cum velox mens induit
Terras perosa despicit.

I can ascend by my swift wings unto the highest pole that is,
My mind indued with these, doth highly hate all earthly blisse;

The divell a cunning and malicious fowler.

But if we do set our hearts and affections to love this world and the vanities therof and will lye wallowing in the pleasures of it; then, as the bird that sitteth upon the perch may soone be catcht, so the divell, being a cunning fowler, that hath many snares to intrap us, and many baits to allure us unto his snares, will easily take us, if he find us sitting upon our lees, or glued unto the vanities of this world; and therefore, cum aves sumus, dejici in terras non debemus; seeing we are birds, and must have wings like birds, we should not cast downe our selves upon the earth, but rather flie unto the heavens, that we may escape all those nets, that are laid in every corner of the earth, as Saint Antonie saw it in his vision, to insnare all those silly soules, that doe settle their affections here on these earthly vanities; or if we doe not this, we may be sure, if Satan can but once catch us, then he will clip our wings, and as the Romanes painted νίκην ἀπτερον, victory without wings, a prettie conceipt, that she might never flie away from them unto their enemies; so the divell will make our soule to become ψυχην ἀπτερον, a soule destitute of all graces, a most malicious part, that she may never be able to flie from hence, from him to God: and therefore, my deere brethren, let us ever exercise our selves in well-doing; and then, ut avis volans non timet retia, as the bird that is alwaies flying, needeth not at any time to be affraid of the fowler, so that man, which is alwaies praying, hearing, reading, meditating, or doing any other good worke of piety, charity and religion, needs not much feare the very divels; because, as Saint Hierom saith, quandocunq; venit, semper inveniet te occupatum; whensoever he doth come to thee, he shall find thee alwaies busied in Gods service.

Pighius in Themide.

That we should alwaies exercise our selves in well-doing.

2. To be at rest.

2. The finis ultimus, that is, the maine end, why the Prophet desireth these wings, is to be at rest; for that were but a small comfort to any one to be alwaies flying, and yet never to come to the end of his journey; this were with Sisyphus to rowle a restlesse stone, and as the Poets faine, with Danaus daughters, to fill the fatall tunne, whereout the waters still as fast did runne; a perpetuall punishment and no comfort: therefore the end of all is, that he might end in rest; this is his last desire, and this is the chiefest desire of every one, of every thing; for why doth any man labour and take paines in his youth, but that he may have rest in age? why doth the prentice binde himselfe to serve, but that at last he may be free? why doth the Souldier hazard his life in warre, but that he may end his life in peace? quia finis belli pax, because the end of warre is peace; or why doth any man doe any thing, but for the hope of the content and rest that he expects thereby? and Rest is the desire of all things.

Saint

Saint Paul tells us, that the earneſt expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifeſtation of the ſonnes of God, that they may be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the children of God: becauſe now the whole creature travelleth in paine, and is made ſubject unto vanity, by reaſon of our ſinnes; and therefore not onely we, which are more ſenſible of our labours, but alſo they with us, by the inſtinct of nature, do expect and long for an end of their travels, and at laſt to come to be at reſt. Rom. 8. 19. 21.

And therefore, no wonder that the laſt period of the Prophets wiſh is to be at reſt; eſpecially if you conſider what an excellent thing is reſt. Let the wearied traveller, or the painefull labourer, or the diſeaſed ſicke man tell me what a ſweet and a pleaſant thing is a little reſt: and what ſhall we ſay then of everlaſting reſt, whereof the beſt in this life is but the meaneſt ſhadow? What an excellent thing is reſt.

But here in the Prophets wiſh, we muſt obſerve both { 1. The Method, and 2. The Matter. } Two things to be obſerved.

1. In the method here is { 1. I will flie. 2. I would reſt. } For the worke or labour muſt be done firſt, and then the reſt or reward is to follow after; ſo God himſelfe did make the world in ſix dayes, & tum requievit die ſeptimo, and then he reſted the ſeventh day; and Chriſt the Sonne of God, following the example of his Father, did firſt finiſh the worke of our redemption, and then he entred into his reſt; and ſo all that will be the ſonnes of God muſt walk in the ſame ſteps; firſt to labour in his vineyard, and to take paines in our vocations, every man in that calling, whereto God hath called him; and then we ſhall have our penny, we ſhall enter into our reſt; or if we take our reſt here, when we ſhould labour, and ſpend our dayes in eaſe and pleaſures, when we ſhould worke the workes of him that ſent us while it is day, we may well feare we ſhall labour in ſorrow and paine in hell, when we ſhould look for peace and reſt in heaven; quia fruſtra ſperas requiem, niſi poſt laborem; becauſe they deceive themſelves that looke for reſt with God, before they have finiſhed their taske, and ended their work here in this world; and therefore S. Paul never durſt ſay, he looked for the crowne of righteouſneſſe, untill he had ſaid, he had fought a good fight, he had finiſhed his courſe, he had kept the faith; and I would to God that all of us would do ſo, to do our duties here, and we ſhall be ſure of our reſt hereafter. 1. The method of the Prophets wiſh. Gen. 2. 2. Heb. 4. 10. Mat. 20. 1, 2. Verſ. 10. Ieh. 9. 4. 2 Tim. 4. 7.

2. For the matter the Prophet wiſheth, it is reſt, and that is meta motus, the end of motion; or, privatio motus in illo, de cujus aptitudine eſt, ut moveatur, non tamen eſt motus, as Avicen ſaith; reſt is a ceſſation or privation of all moving, and a moſt ſetled quietneſſe in a contented being, without any manner of motion or diſturbance: a moſt excellent thing; to be deſired of all, above all the treaſures of this world. 2. The matter or ſubſtance of the Prophets chiefeſt wiſh, reſt. What reſt is.

But we find that a primo mobili ad ultimum punctum terræ, from the higheſt ſphere, to the loweſt bottome of hell, there is no true reſt to be found by any thing in any place; for though there may be ſome intermiſſion of labour, as Ariſtotle ſaith, becauſe that, according to the old Verſe, Ariſt. Ethic. l. 4. c. 8

Quod caret alterna requie, durabile non eſt; Ovid. in Epiſt.

It is impoſſible for that naturall thing to laſt, which is not ſometimes refreſhed with ſome kind of reſt; yet if we looke upon all theſe glorious creatures, we ſhall find that they neither have true reſt in themſelves, nor can they bring the ſame to us; and therefore, Salomon, when he had viewed and ſurveyed all the pleaſures, and all the places under the Sun, and had well conſidered them all, he doth poſitively and peremptorily conclude, that all was but vanity and vexation of ſpirit; that is, vanity in themſelves, and bringing vexation unto us; and what peace or reſt can a vexed mind and a diſturbed heart enjoy? The ſpirit of a man can beare his infirmities, but a wounded ſpirit, or a diſcontented ſoule, who can beare? Or where ſhall a man find helpe to be eaſed from the ſame? Fugiat a domo in civitatem, a civitate in agrum, & ab agro revertat in domum, in lectum; tamen ibi hoſtem inveniet in ſinu, a quo fugiebat in urbem; he may flie from his houſe No true reſt to be found in this world. Eccleſ. 2. 11, 12. Prov. 18. 14. The miſerable ſtate of a diſcontented man.

houſe into the city, and from the city into the field, and thence returne into his houſe againe, and get him cloſe into his bed; yet there he ſhall find his enemy in his boſome, whom he ſought to ſhun from place to place; ſuch is the ſtate of a diſcontented man; he may change his place, and forſake his countrey, but never eaſe his wretched mind; and although all men are not alike troubled in the height of griefe and diſcontent, but ſome, with Ionas, can ſleepe in a ſtorme, and ſeeme to be at reſt, notwithſtanding all the troubles of this world; yet there are none ſo ſecure, but at ſome times or other they ſhall be awaked, and find their ſhip toſſed with a tempeſt, and themſelves vexed about ſome vanities; becauſe God hath not made this world to be the place of our reſt, but of our labour, where we muſt work unto wearineſſe, and be contented with all the diſcontents that can befall us: and therefore, they are fooles that think to find reſt there, where all things are in continuall motion, or to enjoy peace and content in thoſe things, which can bring nothing els but griefe and vexation of ſpirit.

Ionas 1.5.

That we ought to be contented with all the diſcontents of the world.

And this not onely Salomon teſtifieth unto us, but alſo every man that liveth, doth moſt plainely ſee and find it by his owne experience, it may be to his coſt, that it is impoſſible for him to attaine unto any reſt or content, in any thing, or in all the things of this world; becauſe, as the Poet ſaith,

Mille parit luctus mortalibus una voluptas;

Every pleaſure and delight, that we have or can have in this world, is ſeaſoned, and powdered, and environed about with a thouſand woes, and with a thouſand ſad and bitter diſcontents: and if you aske of the dayes that are paſt, and inquire of all the wiſeſt and of the greateſt men of this world, that ſeemed to have the world at will, and enjoy all that either their eyes have ſeene, or their hearts could deſire; they will all juſtifie this truth, and teſtifie unto you, that there is no reſt under the cope of heaven.

That the Saints ſhall have true reſt.

Senec. in Herc. fur. act. 4.

And yet, as Seneca ſaith, Detur aliquando otium,

Quieſq; feſſis.——

Heb. 4.9.

Or, as the Apoſtle ſaith, There remaineth a reſt for the people of God; and, without all queſtion, they ſhall be happy, when they ſhall be filled with the fulneſſe of peace, and God ſhall wipe away all teares from their eyes, and root out all ſorrow and diſcontent from their hearts; But ſeeing, as the Poet ſaith, Antholog. ſacr. Iac. Billij.

Inſtant terrenis infeſta pericula rebus;

All terrene things are full of dangers; the Divell having poyſoned all things under heaven through our ſinnes; therefore ——In ſolo eſt mens tuta Deo,

That true reſt is onely to be found in God.

The ſoule of man can have no true reſt in any place, but onely in God; and not ſtrange; for ſeeing all things do naturally deſire their own proper places, as, omnia levia ſurſum, & omnia gravia deorſum, all light things to aſcend upward, and all heavy things to deſcend downward; and they can never reſt, but are ſtill ſtrugling in motion and continuall agitation, untill they come, each one of them, εἰς τὸν τοπον τὸν ἴδιον, into his owne proper place, as the Holy Ghoſt ſpeakes of Iudas in another caſe; and ſeeing that the ſeat and proper place of man is in the boſome of God, we being the off-ſpring of God, as the very Heathen could teſtifie, and ſo θείας κοινωνοὶ φυσεως, partakers of the divine nature, as S. Peter ſaith; it is impoſſible that man ſhould have any true reſt or tranquillity, untill he returne to God: and therefore S. Auguſtine conſidering how we do labour, and worke, and wearie our ſelves in the wayes of this world, Riſing up early, and going late to bed, and eating the bread of carefulneſſe; and yet never attaining to any true reſt or content, but as Thriuerus ſaith, ſicuti natura nuſquam patitur vacuum, ita neq; animus quietem; as nature doth no where admit of vacuity, ſo can the mind of man receive no true reſt and felicity, but is ever hammering, forging, inventing ſome plots and practices, and diſturbed about ſome one thing or other, while it breathes; he breaketh out into this patheticall ſpeech to God; ſaying, feciſti nos Domine propter te, & irrequietum eſt cor noſtrum, donec revertatur ad te; thou haſt made us O God for thy ſelfe, and we are ſprung from thee, when Acts 1.25. God the reſting place of man.

2 Pet. 1.4.

Pſal. 127.3.

Aug. Confeſſ. lib. 1.

when thou didst breath into our nostrils the breath of life; therefore our hearts, like the prodigall child, can never be satisfied with any true food of happinesse and content, untill we returne againe to thee; and our Saviour, observing how the Iewes wearied themselves in the pursuit of worldly vanities, and were exceedingly laden under the burden of the Mosaicall ceremonies, which they endeavoured to observe, and observed not the end for which they were ordained, he bids them come to him, which was the substance of all those shadowes; and they should find rest unto their soules; which out of him could find no more rest, than Noahs Dove could find place for the sole of her foot, untill she had returned into the ark againe, from whence she had departed.

Luke 15.16, 17.

Mat.11.28. Ver. 29.

Gen.8,9.

And therefore, to conclude all in a word, I must say with the Poet,

Est nihil hic inter carnalia vota quietum;

There is no true rest in all this world; it is onely to be found with God; and if, with David, we do wish for rest, then must we long to be with God; and we shall never go to heaven hereafter, unlesse we come to Christ here in this life, and learn of him to be meeke and lowly in heart; because he is the way, the truth, and the life; he is the gate of heaven, he is our peace, and hath purchased rest and peace for us; and they that will not come to him, may be assured, that the Lord will sweare in his wrath, they shall never enter into his rest, they shall never come into that kingdome, which the Lord hath prepared for them that love him.

Christ the onely way to bring us to God, and so to rest.

Heb.3.18. & 4.3.

And therefore, this doth greatly blame, both the proud Pharisees, and the Pharisaicall justiciaries, that, with the foolish Israelites, will commit two evils, to forsake the fountaine of living waters, and to digge unto themselves pitts and filthy puddles, that will hold no water; that is, to relie upon their owne righteousnesse, the fruitlesse workes of their owne hands, and neglect the invaluable righteousnesse of Iesus Christ; and likewise those wicked worldlings, (the children of this generation) that had rather follow after the lusts of their owne flesh, and hunt after the vanities of this life, riches, honours, and the like, which doe, and can doe nothing else, but continually vexe their soules in this world, and perpetually binde them to all endlesse torments in the world to come; than to come unto their Saviour Christ, that doth so mercifully call them, so freely offer his grace unto them, and so bountifully promise rest and peace unto their consciences here, and everlasting rest and happinesse unto their soules and bodies in heaven for evermore.

Ier.2.13.

But because it is not in the power of any naturall man to do any divine good, without the speciall grace of God; therefore let us all in all humility pray unto him, for the helpe and assistance of his blessed Spirit, that, as he hath given us his onely Sonne, which is the Sonne of his love, to be our Mediatour and Redeemer, to save us from our sinnes, and to clothe us with his righteousnesse, to deliver us from the power of Satan, and to bring us into his glorious kingdome; so he would illuminate our understandings, that we may see and know the riches of his grace, he would rectifie our wils, that we may leave and loath all those pleasures that are displeasing unto him, and love to follow after grace and goodnesse, and all vertuous actions, that tend to his glory, the discharging of our owne duties, and the good of all our neighbours, and he would kindle in us the zeale of his glory, and inflame all our affections towards himselfe, that we might love him with all our hearts, and with all our soules, and with all our strength; and that we might both testifie and justifie this our love to him, and our desire of his honour, by our lives and conversations, unto the whole world, even before all the sonnes of men.

O good God, graunt all this unto us, and whatsoever else thou, in thy wisdome, knowest to bee best for us, better than wee can either deserve them, them, or desire them, for the love of thy deareſt Sonne Ieſus Chriſt, in whom thou art well pleaſed, and to whom, with thee, O bleſſed Father, and thy holy Spirit, our bleſſed Comforter, three perſons, and one immortall, inviſible, indiviſible, and onely wiſe God, be aſcribed and given, as is moſt due, for all thy mercies, and favours, and loving kindneſſes, that thou haſt cantinually, and moſt graciouſly ſhewed unto us, all poſſible thanks, and praiſe, and power, and glory, and dominion, and all that is worthy to be aſcribed unto thee, both now and for ever. Amen. And let every thing that can, ſay, Amen.

***

IEHOVÆ LIBERATORI.

THE RESOLVTION OF PILATE.

A SERMON PREACHED at PAULES Crosse, the XIII. of June, MDCXIV.

By GR. WILLIAMS, Master of Arts, and Parson of S. Bennet Sherbogge

LONDON

ECCLES. 27. 12.

A wise man continueth in his wisedome like the Sunne, but a foole is changed as the Moone.

IAMES 1.6.

He that wavereth is like a wave of the sea, driven with the winde and tossed.

LONDON,
Printed by George Miller, for Philemon Stephens and Christopher Meredith, at the golden Lyon in PAULES Church-yard. 1635.

TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE, RIGHT vertuous, and most truly Religious, PHILIP, Lord HERBERT of Sherland, Earle of Montgomery, Knight of the Noble Order of the Garter, and the Lady SVSAN, his most loving, and Right Noble wife, all true happineſſe in this life, and eternall glory in the life to come, through Ieſus Chriſt.

Right Honourable,

I Have preſumed to preſent theſe my undigeſted labours, (which I confeſſe are but an Embryo, an imperfect and a formeleſſe iſſue; I having not time Lambere fœtum, ſo much as to cloath this, though my firſt borne child) unto your Honours view, as the ſignes of my unfained love, and that humble duty and ſervice, which I owe, and am ready at all times to performe unto your Honours. I confeſſe that to dedicate a Sermon unto you, is but with Chærilus, to preſent a few harſh verſes unto Alexander; Yet ſeeing this ſmall offering proceedeth from a dutifull, willing, and free affectionate heart; I moſt humbly beſeech you, not to diſdain to accept this litle mite; but that the ſame mind may be in you, which was in Chriſt Ieſus, who was well pleaſed with the widdowes mite, (though the gift was but very ſmall) becauſe ſhe caſt in all that ſhee had: And although there is no proportion betweene ſuch a mite, ſuch a nothing as this, and the great love and duty, which I owe unto your Honours; yet ſeeing the Moraliſt tells me, that where onely the quality of the affection, and not the quantity of the preſent, is to bee attended, Modicum non differt à magno, it skils not whether the preſent be great or ſmall: therefore I hope, that theſe teſtimonies of my love ſhall be accepted through your vertues, and that my boldneſſe, in offering ſo ſmall a mite to ſo great perſonages, ſhall be excuſed by the true love and unfained affection which I doe, and ever ſhall, beare unto your Honours. And ſo I will ever reſt at your ſervice, and continue my prayers to God for you, that he, which bleſſed you hitherto, would bleſſe you ever hereafter, with all the bleſsings of this life, and in the end with everlaſting life, which the Lord hath promiſed to them that love him.

Your Honours moſt humble

Chaplain and ſervant, in all duty to be commanded,

GR. WILLIAMS.

To the Reader.

GEntle, and Christian Reader, I must say with the Poet, that Scribimus indocti doctiq; and the common Apologie of both sorts is, the earnest desire of friends to be the cause thereof: but I must say, that, not the desire of friends, (for that they should not have prevailed, to thrust me to all mens mouthes to be censured) but the malice of foes (being busie, like bees about mine eares, and buzzing lies, and hard speeches in other mens eares) have caused me to thrust my selfe a little further into the midst of the flame; that so I might, either quit my selfe, and passe untouched, like the Salamander, through the midst of the fire, or else, by their having of better advantage, I might be wholy devoured, and most justly blamed for what I preached: for this Sermon was no sooner preached, but it was much traduced by the prejudicate and malitious hearers, to many of my friends and others, which heard it not; herein these men doing, but as they use, though not as they ought, when as charities precept is, to speake well of all, and civilities rule, not to backbite the absent; and therefore I thought it fit, that what I preached, might be printed, that they, which heard it not, might reade it, and thereby be satisfied of what I spake: I confesse that I have added a litle more then I spake, the shortnes of the time causing me then, to overpasse more then half the matter that I had collected; but I will assure you that I omitted not, in my printing, the least sentence that there I delivered: so that now, you may know both what I spake, and what I purposed to speake. But herein I would not willingly submit my selfe to all mens judgements: for some are ignorant & cannot judge; & ideo grave judicium est ignorantis, and the ignoranter man, the severer judge: others are too rash, and are ready to censure it before they reade it, or at least doe reade by starts, and judge by parcels, and so must needs be partiall in their judgement: and others are malicious, maligning other mens credits and depraving other mens labours: and I know many about this citie, that can heare all, but ſpeake well of none: and therefore to ſtand to ſuch judges were but to condemne my ſelfe; yet ſeeing herein I ſaid nothing but the truth, and that the truth is alwaies great and will prevaile, the curteous Reader will accept it as it is; for, to borrow the words of Lyrinenſis, I have delivered what I received, and not that which I deviſed, which hath been publiquely taught, and not privately maintained, & cum dixerim novè non dixi nova. And if any will ſpeake againſt me, it may be ſome other harpie will light upon his booke, if he hath any; and if none, I will ſay with the Poet of Bilbilis, carpere vel noli noſtra vel ede tua, either blame not this, or doe a better; if not, then as in ſpeaking, ſo in printing, I deſire not ſo much to pleaſe idle curious men, as to ſpeake the truth for the glory of God, and the good of his Church: and ſeeing this is my deſire, I hope, that although it ſhould happen otherwiſe with men, yet God will eſteeme of this my widdowes mite, non ex eventu rerum ſed ex affectu, according to the deſire of my heart, which is, that all of us may joyne together with one heart, and one mouth, to glorifie God even the Father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt:

Thine in the Lord

GR. VVILLIAMS.

THE RESOLVTION OF PILATE.

IOHN 19. 22.

Ο γέγραφα, γέγραφα.

Quod ſcripſi, ſcripſi:

What I have written, I have written.

Ententia brevis, materia uberrima: My Text is ſhort and ſweet, and full of matter, ſo that plenty it ſelfe doth make me poore, and cauſe me rather to want time, or voice to ſpeake, then abundance of matter to be ſpoken: but ſeeing the time confines me, ſo that I cannot ſpeake all of a little in my Text, as I would; I will therefore doe what I can to ſpeake a little of all therein contained, as I may.

The coherence and occaſion of the words is plaine inough: When Pilate had written upon the Croſſe αἰτίαν, ſaith S. Matthew, the cauſe of Chriſts death, quia Ieſus Nazarenus Rex Iudæorum, becauſe he was Ieſus of Nazareth King of the Iewes; the Iewes would have him to alter the ſame, and not to write King of the Iewes, but that he ſaid he was King of the Iewes; To whom Pilate anſwered with the words of my Text, Quod ſcripſi, ſcripſi, What I have written, I have written. Wherein, as the words are but three, ſo the parts are but three that I have chiefly obſerved; The coherence.

The 1. Word implieth ſomewhat that was written, which I find to be a Title, compoſed by Pilate, and impoſed on Chriſt above his head, and upon his Croſſe. The parts of the Text.

2. Word ſheweth the quality of that Title, that it was ſcriptus, written; and I find it to be written in Hebrew, Greeke and Latine, and that to ſhew the cauſe of Chriſt his death.

3. Word ſheweth the irrevocability of this Title, which I find to remaine the ſame for ever immutable, like the lawes of the Medes and Perſians; for Quod ſcripſi, ſcripſi; what I have written, I have written, and will not alter it.

1. Part.

The 1. part, which is ἐπιγραφὴ τῆς αἰτίας, inscriptio criminis, the inscription of his cause, as Saint Luke and Saint Marke calleth it, or τίτλον, his Title, as Saint Iohn calleth it, is included in the first word ὃ, That, which I have written; and what is that? somewhat it must needs be, or scripsi, scripsi, will needs prove imperfect; and therefore it behooveth us to know, what it is that was written; and if we doe but looke backe, we shall presently find the antecedent to this relative, to be Iesus Nazarenus Rex Iudæorum; Iesus of Nazareth, King of the Iewes; wherein ye may observe, how Pilate deciphereth the cause, and describeth the person of this crucified man.

Christ deciphered two waies.

1. From his names
2. From his office, King of the Iewes.

1. His names are two. 1. Iesus. 2. Nazarenus.

1. Name Iesus.

The 1. is his proper name, that was given him at his circumcision.

The 2. is his surname, given him from the place of his habitation, as Scipio Africanus, because he overcame Africke, so Iesus was called Nazarenus, because he dwelt at Nazareth.

Gods name ineffable. Dionys. de divinis nominibus.

De 1. Deus Optimus Max. nomine infinitam Majestatem exæquante nominari nequit, saith Dionysius: Almighty God cannot be named with any name, that doth fully expresse the infinite Majesty of God; For as the little mouth of man (saith Gregory Nazianzene) cannot comprehend the whole ayre all at once; so the little mouth of man cannot define the whole essence of God by any word; and therefore, as God is ineffable, so the Iewes, being taught by Moses and the Prophets, (saith Eusebius) did give him an ineffable name, which was nomen Tetragrãmaton, quod quomodo proferendum sit nondum constat; that name composed of foure letters, which no man could tell how to pronounce it rightly; and therefore it was not lawfull for the vulgar people, nor for any, save the Priests only, to pronounce the same, saith Paulus Burgensis.

Nazian. orat. 36.

Euseb. lib. 11. c. 8. de præparat. Evangel.

Paulus Burgensis in 3. Exod.

But now, the love of God hath appeared greater towards us, then ever it did unto the Iewes; for being incarnate, and made in all things like unto his brethren, sinne onely excepted, he was contented to take also Nomen effabile & cantabile, an effable, and a prayseable name, a name that every one might name and say, Iesus: & ut oleum effusum nomen suum; and this most excellent name of Iesus, is like oyle powred out, the more a man powreth, the more fragrant it smelleth; For before he was called Iesus, In Iudæa notus est Deus, in Iewry was God knowne, his name was great in Israel; but now, we may say with the same Prophet, quam admirabile est nomen tuum in universa terra; how wonderfull is thy name in all the world? Seeing therefore, that the more this oyle is powred, and the more often it is stirred, the more sweetly it smelleth; Nec vidisse satis est, juvat usq; morari; quia bonum est esse hic: it is a sweet dwelling place: let us consider, before wee passe any further, that Saint Bernard saith, nullum nomen reperietis, quod non aut pietatis gratiam, aut potentiam sonet majestatis; the names of Christ are all names, that shew, either the grace of his piety, or the power of his majesty; and this name Iesus is the greatest name of mercy, pittie, and piety, that ever was given by God, or heard by men: nam cum nomino Iesum, hominem mihi propono mitem & humilem corde, &c. for when I name Iesus, saith Saint Bernard, I propose to my selfe a man, that is humble and meeke in heart, bountifull, sober, chast, mercifull, and one eminent in all kind of purity and integrity, and the very same man also to be God Almighty, who both healeth me by his examples, and strengtheneth me by his helpe; all these offer themselves unto me, when I doe but heare this name Iesus sound in mine eares.

Barn. in cant. ser. 15

Idem quo supra.

Two things observed.

But to descend a little more particularly, let us observe

1. The signification
2. The Excellencie of this name Iesus.

1. The signification of the name Iesus. Le Gionensis l. de nominibus Dei.

1. For the understanding of the first; it is questioned, whether Iesus be the same as Iehovah, as Iacobus Valentinus and others affirme, or the same as Iosuah, as Ludovicus Legionensis affirmeth.

The

The 1. we denie; not onely becauſe they are not written with the ſame letters, as thoſe that are moſt skillfull in the Hebrew have obſerved, Iehovah being written with Iod, he, vau, he; and Ieſua, written with jod, ſin, vau, ain; but alſo becauſe they doe not ſignifie the ſame thing; for Iehovah, though indeed it cannot properly be expounded by any other word, as Burgenſis ſheweth; yet from the letters, whereof it is compoſed, and from hajah, whereof it is derived, it is gathered, that it ſignifieth eſſe, ſive eſſentia, an eternall being, I am that I am; but Ieſua derived of Iaſa, ſignifieth ſalus ſeu ſalvator, ſalvation or a Saviour.

Ieſus not the ſame as Iehovah.

Paulus Burgenſis in 3. Exod.

And to the ſecond, Galatinus anſwereth, that Ieſua and Iehoſuah is not the ſame; for that Iehoſuah ſignifieth, Deus ſalvabit, God will ſave vs; but Ieſuah ſignifieth, Deus ſalvator, God our Saviour, or ſalvation, in the abſtract; as all other names, Magis Deo conveniunt in abſtracto, quàm concreto, as Dionyſius noteth, are more agreeable unto God in the abſtract, then the concrete; as it is a more proper ſpeech to ſay, that God is wiſedome, rather then to ſay God is wiſe; for theſe names are communicable unto men in the concrete, but they are only proper unto God in the abſtract.

Ieſus not the ſame with Ioſuah. Galatinus l. 3. c. 12.

Dionyſ. de divin. nominibus.

Abſtract names moſt proper to God. Daneus Pſagog. part. 1. de attrib. Dei c. 6. Zanch. l. 1. c. 9, 10. de natura Dei. Act. 4. 12. Cicero orat. 4. in Verrem.

And hereby you ſee that Ieſua ſignifieth the ſame as σωτὴρ doth, that is, ſalvator, a Saviour; and Cicero ſaith, σωτὴρ, hoc quantum eſt? ita magnum eſt, ut uno latino verbo exprimi non poſſet; this word σωτὴρ, that is, a Saviour, what a great word is it? ſo great, that no one latine word is able to expreſſe the force of it; and I am ſure the tongue of men and Angels are not able to expreſſe the greatneſſe of thoſe benefits and bleſſings that are procured for us by this Ieſus our Saviour: The reaſon is, becauſe there is no σωτηρία, no ſalvation in any other, no name under heaven, whereby men may be ſaved, but by the name of Ieſus.

Act. 4. 12.

Euſeb. de demonſtrat. evangelica. c. 2. Aug. contra Iuſt. l. 12. c. 36.

Ob. I, but you will ſay, others were called Ieſus, and ſo were Saviours, before this Ieſus came; as Ieſus the Sonne of Nave, Ieſus the Sonne of Syrach, and Ieſus the Sonne of Ioſodech; therefore he onely is not the alone Saviour.

Sol. I anſw. 1. Theſe were but pettie Saviours of ſome few bodies, from a temporal death; but this Ieſus ſaveth all, both bodies and ſoules, from eternall deſtruction.

2. I ſay thoſe were but types of this, the ſhadowes of this ſubſtance, and ſo farre Saviours, as they repreſented the ſalvation purchaſed by this Saviour; ſo Ieſus the Sonne of Nave ſignified his power, Ieſus Syrach his wiſedome, Ieſus Ioſodech his goodneſſe: but he onely is the true Saviour. And therefore the Angel ſaid, he ſhould be called Ieſus, becauſe he ſhould ſave his people from their ſins; and ſo we ſee, that both his name and his nature do well agree, to ſhew him to be the onely true Saviour of men: which he did 1. By ſuffering all that ſhould be impoſed upon him. 2. By performing all that could be required of man; that by the firſt, there might be a remiſſion of ſins; and by the ſecond, there might be an imputation of righteouſneſſe, whereby, as by two ſpeciall wings, we might flie from the ſnare of the fowler, and ſo eſcape hell, which we had deſerved, and attaine unto heaven, from whence we were excluded.

Mat. 1. 21.

How Ieſus ſaved us.

And therefore, though others have invented many other fountaines to waſh away their ſinnes, and many other meanes to cloath them with righteouſneſſe, as the ſacrament of pennance, the Prieſts abſolution, workes of ſatisfaction, and ſuch others, to be as a ſecond plank after ſhipwrack; yet ſeeing he hath troden the Winepreſſe alone, and of all other there was none with him, and that he will not give his glory unto another, and that this is the greateſt glory, the ſalvation of our ſoules, that his office is to ſave us, that his very name doth ſignifie the ſame, and that there is none other name, either of works or merits, or any ſuch, but onely this name of Ieſus, proper onely to himſelfe, whereby we may be ſaved; I will aſcribe no part of my Salvation, either to my ſelfe, or to any elſe, but will reſt wholy upon Chriſt, as upon a ſole and perfect Ieſus, a Saviour, both of body and ſoule: and if this Ieſus be not my ſufficient Saviour, or if he hath not wholy and ſoly, fully, and freely, ſaved and delivered me from all my ſinnes, and paid all the full price of my redemption; then let my body be damned, and my ſoule never be glorified; for this is the faith, which I doe profeſſe, and this is the hope, whereon I doe

Invented fountaines that hold no living waters.

Eſay 63. 3.

Eſay 42. 8.

The Authors reſolution.

Ioh.3.15.

Rom.5.5.

2. The excellency of the name Ieſus.

do wholly rely; and therefore, if this vaniſheth, my ſoule periſheth; but ſeeing our Saviour ſaith ſo plainely, he that believeth in me ſhall never periſh, but ſhall have life everlaſting; we may all and every one of us believe in him without feare, and hope in him without doubting, and that hope maketh not aſhamed, ſaith the Apoſtle.

De 2. which is, touching the excellency of this name of Ieſus; Barradius ſetteth downe twenty ſeverall reaſons, that do ſhew the excellency hereof; he that will, let him looke in his 1. Tom. lib. 9. cap. 7. he ſhall find them there at large. Venerable Bede doth obſerve many great myſteries from the ſix letters, whereof the name Iesvs is compoſed; among the reſt, he ſaith, that it maketh the number of 888. whereas the name of Antichriſt is 666 being numerus rerum caducarum, the number of fading vanities, that in ſix dayes were all created; to ſhow that Antichriſt ſhould hunt after earthly dignities, and this worlds vanities; but the name of Chriſt containeth 888. eight being the number of the circumciſion of the Iewes, of the reſurrection of Chriſt, of them that were ſaved in the Arke, and of thoſe, that ſhall be ſaved eternally in heaven: to ſhew that although Antichriſt cannot attaine to 7. which is the Sabbath of reſt; yet all they that believe in Ieſus, which exceeding 7. doth amount unto 8. ſhall keep their everlaſting Sabbath in heaven without ending. And Rev.13.18. The myſtery of the numerall letters of the name Ieſus.

Aug. de civit. Dei. l.16.c 26. Hierom. in Ezek 40

Lucas Tudenſis l.2 c.16.

Lucas Tudenſis collecteth many other myſteries from the very letters of this name; For he ſaith, that this word Ieſus comprehends in it the very name Iehovah, which is the chiefeſt name of God; becauſe out of theſe three terminations of the word Ieſus, when we decline it, Ieſus, Ieſum, Ieſu, (for it hath no more,) if you take the three laſt letters of the accuſative caſe, it will make up the word ſum, I am, which is the expoſition of that great name Iehovah; and if you take Ie from ſum, the ſame is a name of God; and ſum ſignifieth I am; to ſhew, that Ieſum is as much, as Deus ſum, I am God.

The myſtery of the Trinity comprehended in the name Ieſus,

And againe he ſaith, that this word Ieſus hath in it three vowels, i. e. u. and one conſonant s. the three vowels note to us, the Trinity of perſons, and the conſonant decyphereth the humanity of Chriſt, which conſiſteth both of body and ſoule, and therefore is expreſſed by the doubling of this letter s. the one to ſhew his ſoul, and the other to denotate his body: and beſides he ſaith, that if you take the two firſt letters of Ieſus, Ie, that is one name of God; and if you take away I, from before the e, and the ſ. that followeth the e, then e. u. will make eu, which is another name of God; and the ſame e. u. read backward, maketh ue, which is a third name of God; to ſhew, that in the one God, there is God the Father, and God the Son, and God the Holy Ghoſt; and yet not three Gods, but one God; and, becauſe this great name of God might be pronounced of us to our comfort, without danger, the wiſdome of God added a double s unto this name, to ſignifie a Saviour; the firſt ſ that ſtandeth betwixt the two ſyllables, ſheweth Chriſt to be the Mediatour betwixt God and man, and the latter s ſheweth the humanity of Chriſt, that this Mediatour is the Man Chriſt Ieſus.

So the whole Summe of our faith, and the myſtery of our redemption is cloſely couched in this word Ieſus.

But theſe are ſpeculations too nice and ſubtill for me to commend to thoſe, that may be good, and yet are ſimple Chriſtians.

Abulenſis in Exod. 20. Catharinus in Phil. 2. Bern Ser 1. de circumciſ. Bernardin tom. 4. Ser. 1. Ber. Ser 10. par. ver. Serm. Damaſ. l. 3. c. 12. de fide orthod. Nazian. orat. 63. & Thom parte 1. q. 31. art. 11.

And Abulenſis, Ambroſius Catharinus, S. Bernard, Bernardinus, S. Gregory, and diverſe others do affirme, that this name Ieſus is nomen ſupra omne nomen, a name above all names. Yea above all the names of God, as Cornelius a Lapide goeth about to prove; and that not onely becauſe it comprehendeth in it all the other names of the Meſſias, as S. Bernard obſerveth, but alſo becauſe it ſignifieth Deum Redemptorem, God our Redeemer; for that our redemption is the greateſt benefit that we have from God; and therefore, though (to ſpeake abſolutely) the name Iehovah be the greateſt name in the world, and the moſt agreeable unto God, as diverſe do obſerve; and therefore, when the Apoſtle ſaith, that God gave him a name abou every name; the meaning is, that he gave him a name ſuper

ſuper omne nomen datum, above every name that is given, either to men or Angels, as the Apoſtle intimateth in the firſt to the Hebrewes, and explaneth by the like ſpeech, in 1 Cor. 15. 25. where he ſaith, the Father hath put all things under his feet, and yet he ſaith, hereby it is manifeſt, that he is excepted, that did put all things under him: ſo when it is ſaid, God gave him a name above all names, it is as manifeſt his owne name is excepted, which gave him this name, as Muſculus well obſerveth, and every man may well believe. Yet the name of Ieſus is more excellent, and moſt comfortable, quoad nos, in reſpect of us and our ſtate now: for the firſt is nomen Majeſtatis & timoris, a name of feare and Majeſty; but the ſecond is nomen humilitatis & amoris, a name of love and humility; the firſt ſheweth him to be an eternall being, and a giver of being unto all his creatures; but the ſecond ſaveth us, that had made our ſelves in a miſerable being, ſo that it had been farre better for us, never to be, than to be in ſuch a miſerable eſtate, as either we were all in by nature, or they all ſhall be, that ſhall not be ſaved. Hereupon S. Bernard dilateth his meditations upon this name Ieſus, ſaying; this name Ieſus is unto us, both light, food and phyſick.

The precious effects of the meditation upon this name Ieſus.

1. Light; becauſe God, in the light of this name, did call us into the fellowſhip of his moſt admirable light; which made S. Paul ſay, that we, which were once darkneſſe, were now light in the Lord, Eph. 5. 8.

2. Food; becauſe nothing doth ſo much refreſh our wearied ſenſes, ſo much ſtrengthen vertues in us, ſo much quicken our good behaviour, and ſo much nouriſh our chaſt affections, as this bleſſed name Ieſus; nam aridus eſt omnis animæ cibus, ſi non oleo iſto infunditur; inſipidus eſt, ſi non hoc ſale conditur; for all the food of the ſoule is but drie, unleſſe it be moyſtened with this oyle, it is but unſavoury, unleſſe it be ſeaſoned with this ſalt: and therefore, ſaith he, ſi ſcribas, non ſapit mihi, niſi legero ibi Ieſum; ſi diſputes aut conferas, non ſapit mihi, niſi ſonuerit ibi Ieſus; quia Ieſus mel in ore, in aure melos, in corde jubilus.

Bern ſuper Cant. Serm. 15.

3. Phyſicke, becauſe if any one be ſorrowfull and heavy hearted, let him but think of Ieſus in his heart, and ſpeake unto him with his mouth, and behold, at the very riſing of this glorious light, all the clouds of care will be removed, quoniam hoc electuarium habet anima reconditum in vaſculo hujus vocabuli Ieſus; for that the ſoule of man hath this electuary laid up ſafe in the caſket of this one word Ieſus, which certainly is ſo ſoveraigne, that it will cure thee of any plague whatſoever.

And therefore it is apparent, that in reſpect of us now, poore miſerable wretches, this ſweet name of Ieſus is the moſt excellent, the moſt comfortable, and the ſweeteſt name that ever we heard; and is that nomen ſuper omne nomen, whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, the name which is * above all names, that at the name of Ieſus every knee ſhould bow, both of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth. And in the Primitive Church, ſo it was, that all Chriſtians did ſhew ſome ſpeciall outward reverence, at the name of Ieſus; as Abulenſis and S. Gregory, and others do affirme: and (I am ſure) the Canons of the Church of England doth command the ſame to be obſerved by every man: And yet now beloved, ſuch is the miſery of our time, that not onely this reverent reſpect of his name is not regarded, and they held ſuperſtitious that uſe it, but this ſweet and bleſſed name is moſt fearefully prophaned, and daily blaſphemed by the wicked brood and curſed crew of damned men; and therefore I would to God, that they would remember, that he will not hold him guiltleſſe that taketh his name in vaine; which we do, either by unreverent hearing of it through our eares, or idly ſwearing by it with our tongues; in both which reſpects, we are to uſe all reverence unto all the names of God; and therefore likewiſe unto this ſweeteſt name Ieſus. To whom I will ever ſay with S. Bernard, O bone Ieſu, eſto mihi Ieſus, & dic animæ meæ, Ieſus tuus ego ſum: O thou ſweet Saviour, be to me a Saviour; and ſay unto my ſoule, I am thy Ieſus.

Phil. 2. 9, 10.
* Hoc eſt, ſicut antè dixi, ſuper omne nomen datum; non ſuper omnia nomina Dei.
Abulenſis in Exod. 20
Greg. 6. decretal. de immunitate Eccleſiarum.
See M. Page his anſwer to M. PRYNNE, p. 58. & 81.
Can. 18.
Exod. 20. 7. Gods name abuſed two wayes.

De 2. He is deſcribed a cognomine. Nazarenus; touching which, we find no ſmall queſtion, quomodo Ieſus Nazarenus, how he was a Nazarite; for we find finde that there were two ſorts of Nazarites.

{1. Reſpectu loci, in reſpect of the place.
{2. Reſpectu morum, in reſpect of their manners.

2. Of his firname. Two things to be conſidered.

1. Thing. Beda de nominibus locorum in Actis.

1. In reſpect of the place, they were called Nazarites, that dwelt in Nazareth, which was Viculus in Galilæa juxta montem Thabor, a village in Galile, neare mount Tabor; and

2. Thing. Num. 6.

2. In reſpect of their manners, they were called Nazarites, that vowed to obſerve thoſe rites and orders, which wee read in the Law of the Nazarites.

1. Chriſt was not born in Nazareth. Mica. 5.2. Mat. 2.6. Ioh. 7.42.

But the Meſſias was not to be borne in Nazareth; for thou Bethleem in the land of Iuda, art not the leaſt among the Princes of Iuda; for out of thee ſhall come the Captaine, that ſhall governe my people Iſrael: And ſo the Iewes reaſon in the ſeventh of Iohn, that the Meſſias ſhould come from the city of David, and not from Nazareth; and ſo S. Luke ſheweth plainely the performance of this truth, that while Ioſeph and Mary were in Bethleem, the daies were accompliſhed, that ſhe ſhould be delivered; and there ſhe brought forth her firſt begotten ſonne: and therefore it ſeemeth he cannot be called a Nazarite in reſpect of the place.

Luke 2. 6, 7.

2. Chriſt did not obſerve the rules of the Nazarites. Numb 6.

2. It is apparent, that he did not obſerve thoſe rules and rites, which Moſes ſetteth downe in the law of the Nazarites; for he drank wine, and went unto the dead, &c. which the Nazarites could not do; and therefore it ſeemeth doubtfull how, or in what reſpect, he was called a Nazarite.

That Chriſt was a true Nazarite.

To which I ſay, that in very deed, he was a Nazarite in both reſpects, if we truly underſtand the manner how he was ſo. For,

1. Reſpect, Luke 2.

1. In reſpect of the place; he was conceived in Nazareth a city of Galile, though he was borne in Bethleem a city of Iuda; and after his returne from Ægypt, he dwelt in Nazareth, untill he was thirty yeares old, and was baptized of Iohn Baptiſt in Iordan; and therefore in reſpect of his dwelling at Nazareth, S. Matthew ſaith that he was called a Nazarite: and ſo the high Prieſts underſtand it alſo in the ſeventh of Iohn; and therefore, as the city of Nazareth, is written with Tſade, ſo Pilate, to ſhew in what reſpect he calleth him a Nazarite, writ Nazarenus with Tſade in the title upon the croſſe, as Pagninus affirmeth.

Luke 2.51.

Mat. 2. Ioh. 7.42.

2. Reſpect.

2. In reſpect of his life and behaviour, he was a true Nazarite, though not according to the outward rites, yet according to the true inward and ſpirituall ſignification of thoſe rites; for thoſe Moſaicall Nazarites were called Nazarei, with Zain, from the word Naſar, which ſignifieth ſeparare & abſtinere, (as S. Hierom affirmeth) to be ſeparated and abſtemious; becauſe thoſe Nazarites vowed abſtinency and ſanctity unto God: but our Saviour Chriſt was ſingulariter ſanctus, (as Beda ſaith) vel perfectiſſimè ſanctus (as S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh) he is ſingularly and moſt perfectly holy; he abſtained from all ſin, and in his mouth was found no guile; quia talis decebat ut nobis eſſet Pontifex, ſanctus, ſegregatus a peccatoribus, ſaith the Apoſtle; for ſuch a high Prieſt it behoved us to have, that was holy, ſeparate from ſinners; and therefore S. Hierom ſaith, that, intelligi poteſt, Chriſtum dictum Nazaræum ſenſu myſtico; quia Scriptura docent Meſſiam Sanctum eſſe; and ſo ſaith Paulus Burgenſis, it may be underſtood, that Chriſt was called a Nazarite, in a myſticall and ſpirituall ſenſe; becauſe the Scriptures teach, that the Meſſias ſhould be holy and pure.

To be Nazarites, what in ſignified.

Beda l. 1. c. 2. f. 63 in Luc. Aug. to. 8. Heb. 7.

Hierom. in c. 1. Mat. Burgenſis in addit. Pſal. 132.

And ſo Chriſt in very deed was a Nazarite; becauſe he was holy and ſeparate from ſinners: and, becauſe it behoved him to be ſo called of men by this name, he obtained the ſame from the City of Nazareth, ſaith Euſebius Ceſarienſis: and becauſe Nazareth written with Tſade, ſignifieth florem, a flower, as S. Hierom witneſſeth; and Nazarenus written with Zain, ſignifieth Sanctitatem, holineſſe, as both S. Hierom and Euſebius affirm; then is it moſt certaine, that, ſeeing our Saviour is a true Nazarite in both reſpects; he is that Flos de radice Ieſſe, that flower of the root of Ieſſe; that Roſe of the field, and that Lillie of the vallie, and

Euſeb. de præparat. Evang. c. 1. Hieron. in c. 11. Eſa. Hieron. in Ep. ad Pomach. Cant. 2. 1.

and that holy one of Iſrael, a true Nazarite ; not onely in reſpect of the outward rites, but in reſpect of his inward holineſſe, and righteouſneſſe, which made him a Nazarite, not of the law but of the Goſpell, not of the letter but of the ſpirit; as Saint Auguſtine ſheweth. Aug.to.8.in Pſal.

And therefore it behoveth us all to be true Nazarites, that is, holy and upright, and godly Chriſtians ; Nam quid prodeſt nomen uſurpare alienum, & vocari quod non es? What availeth it thee to borrow a ſtrange name, and to be called what thou art not ? Quia ille fruſtra Chriſtiani nomen ſortitur, qui minimè Chriſtum imitatur, ſaith Saint Auguſtine ; He beares the name of a Chriſtian in vaine, that doth not imitate Chriſt in his life and converſation ; and therefore Saint Chryſoſtome ſaith of ſuch men, that they ſhould aut eſſe quod apparent, aut apparere quod ſunt, either to be what they ſeeme, or to ſeeme as they are. That we ought all to be true Nazarites, holy and upright.

And yet ſuch are the moſt of us ; that, although we be Chriſtians in name, and according to the outward rites, yet are we little better then Divels in nature, Divels in the ſhape of men, or men in the nature of Divels : for as Adonizedek King of Ieruſalem had a name, that ſignified the Lord of juſtice ; yet was he a cruell tyrant, and a moſt grievous idolater ; and Bethel, in Ieroboams time, had a name that ſignified the houſe of God ; and yet indeed it was Bethaven, the houſe of vanity ; and the Laodiceans, of λαος and δικαιος, had a name, that ſignified a juſt people, but they were luke warme in their profeſſion, neither hot nor cold in the zeale of God ; and Theotecnus had a name ſignifying a child of God ; and yet did he perſecute all the true children of God : even ſo in theſe our daies we have too too many, that will borrow the outward names of Chriſtians, but inwardly they have the hearts of infidels ; and in their converſations they live farre worſe then Pagans ; they ſay they are Iewes and are not, being Nazarites in the rites, and not in the right ſenſe, as they ſhould be ; Chriſtians in name, but reprobates in deed, profeſſing Chriſt, but ſerving Beliall, Saints in ſhew, with the Bible in their hands, and the Word of God in their mouth ; and yet Divels in deed, with cruelty in their practiſe, and the workes of darkeneſſe in all their waies ; and as Saint Bernard ſaith, they are oves habitu, vulpes actu, & crudelitate Lupi ; Sheep in ſhew, foxes in deed, and Wolves in cruelty : and howſoever they ſeeme to be, and would have you beleeve that they are the members of Chriſts body, and the lovers of Chriſts members ; yet decipimur ſpecie recti, we are deceived in them. That we are not what we are called. Euſeb.l.9.c.9. Eccleſ.hiſtor. Iosh.10.1. 1 King.13. Rev.3.14. Rev.3.9.

Fallit enim vitium ſpecie virtutis & umbra ;

For if ever you ſhould fall into their hands, you ſhould find them to be a generation of vipers ; ſuch as are ready to ſucke out the very bloud of the Saints of God, and to teare them in peeces like ravening Wolves : and all this their wickedneſſe, muſt latitare ſub ſpecie virtutis, lie hid, under the mantle of vertue : and ſo with the Hyænaes voice, and the Syrenes note of melody, they will ſucke the bloud of innocents ; and yet all muſt go masked under the cloake of Religion. Mat.3.7.

But, as the fall of Lucifer was the more unpardonable ; becauſe it was from heaven ; and the ſinne of Adam was the more intollerable ; becauſe it was committed in Paradiſe ; and the idolatry of the foure and twenty men the more hainous ; becauſe it was done at the dore of the Temple of the Lord ; ſo is the ſinne of theſe men the more abominable ; becauſe that ſub nomine Chriſti, Chriſtum crucifigunt, under the name of Chriſt, they doe crucifie Chriſt againe by their wicked deeds, and under the names of Chriſtians, they doe commit the ſins both of Iewes and Gentiles ; for what haſt thou to doe, to take my lawes in thy mouth, whereas thou hateſt to be reformed? Surely, this will be ſo farre from profiting you any thing, as that it will be a witneſſe againſt you in the latter day ; when you ſhall roare and crie at the gates of heaven, and ſay, Lord open unto us, for we have propheſied in thy name, we have profeſſed thy Goſpell, we have received thy Sacraments, and were eſteemed as Chriſtians ; & Chriſt will anſwer with a neſcio vos, I know you not ; and therefore, ite maledicti, depart from me, yee workers of iniquity ; and goe yee curſed into everlaſting fire ; for, ex ore tuo, ſerve Rev.12.7. Gen.3.6. Circumſtances aggravate ſins. Pſal.50.16. Mat.13.33.

nequam, O wicked ſervant, out of thine owne mouth will I condemne thee; for did you profeſſe my name, and not performe my will? then O generation of vipers, how ſhould yee eſcape the judgement of Hell? ſeeing you have ſo often heard, that, Non auditores, ſed factores legis juſtificabuntur, nec eandem profitentes, ſed eidem obedientes glorificabuntur; not the hearers of the law, but the doers of the law ſhall be juſtified, neither yet the profeſſors, but the performers of the ſame ſhall be glorified? For they are not Iewes, that are Iewes outward in the letter; they are not Nazarites, that are ſo outward in the ceremony; but they are Iewes, which are ſo within, in the ſpirit, not in the letter; and they are true Nazarites and faithfull Chriſtians, that are ſo, not in oſtentation onely, but in their life and converſation, whoſe praiſe is of God, and not of man.

Mat.3.7.

Rom.2.13.

Rom.2.29.

Outward profeſſion makes not true Chriſtians.

And thus much of his names.

2. Chriſt deſcribed from his office.

2. He is deſcribed ab officio, from his office, King of the Iewes, wherin is noted:

1. His regality, he is a King;
2. His Subjects, he is King of the Iewes.

1. Chriſt is King.

De 1. He is a King, and that from his birth, ſimul filius, ſimul Cæſar; where is he that is borne King of the Iewes? ſay the Wiſemen; and they offered him gold; ad oſtendendam regiam dignitatem; to ſhew that he was a King, ſaith Saint Chryſoſtome; and ſo he was at his death, maugre all his enemies, Ieſus of Nazareth the King of the Iewes; to ſhew, that per mortem non perdidit, ſed confirmavit potius imperium, ſaith Beda, he did rather ſtrengthen, then weaken his title by his death; and therefore, though Rex fieri noluit, he refuſed to be made a King, when the Iewes would have elected him; becauſe his Kingdome was not of this world; yet, to ſhew that this man which was Dominus Angelorum, the Lord of Angels, was alſo Rex Iudæorum, King of the Iewes (as Beda ſpeaketh) when he rid to Ieruſalem, he willingly ſuffered himſelfe to be intituled King of the Iewes; to ſhew (ſaith Saint Bernard) that licet Regnum ejus non ſit de hoc mundo, tamen Rex eſt in hoc mundo, though his Kingdome was not of this world; yet was he a King, while he was in this world: and therefore David, ſpeaking of this King, ſaith, Thy throne O God is for ever and ever, the Scepter of thy kingdome is a Scepter of righteouſneſſe, thou haſt loved righteouſneſſe and hated iniquitie, wherefore God, even thy God, hath annointed thee with the oyle of gladneſſe above thy fellowes: Wherein the Prophet proveth him to be a King, and ſheweth alſo the difference betweene him and all other Kings whatſoever.

Chryſoſt. in c.2. Mat.

Beda l.5. in c.19. Luc.

Bernard. ſer.2. in Epiphan.

Pſal.44.8.

The difference betwixt the Kingly office of Chriſt & all other kings whatſoever, threefold

1. In reſpect of the Eternity.
2. In reſpect of the Quality.
3. In reſpect of the Preheminency.

For

1. In reſpect of eternity.

1. As for other Kings, they that were are gone, and they that are, within ſo many daies, they ſhall not be; for death ſpareth none, ſceptra ligonibus æquat; Conſtantinus Imperator, & famulus meus ſaith Nazianzene, Oſſa Agamemnonis & Therſitis; high and low, rich and poore, mingled together without difference; ſtatutum eſt omnibus, they muſt all die: but Chriſt hath a prerogative above them all; for he was Rex a Seculo, King from the beginning, yea before all beginnings; and hee ſhall be in ſecula ſeculorum, a King without ending; nam tu idem es, for he is the ſame for ever, & glorioſum imperium ſine fine manet; and his kingdome remaineth glorious without ending; for thy Throne O God is for ever and ever; and therefore he is called Rex æternus, an everlaſting King.

Heb.9.29.

Ioh.1.1.

Pſal.45.7.

The madneſſe of men to leeſe an everlaſting kingdome for a little momentany pleaſure.

O then what madneſſe is it in us, aut quæ major eſt inſania, or what greater madneſſe can there be, quam pro momentanea delectatione perdere æterna gaudia ſempiterni regni, & noſmetipſos obligare ad æterna ſupplicia, as Saint Auguſtine ſpeaketh, then for a momentary pleaſure, to leeſe the joyes of an everlaſting kingdome, and to binde our ſelves unto eternall puniſhment? who would be ſo mad, for an earthly and temporall kingdome, yea though it were the whole world, to leeſe an everlaſting kingdome in heaven, and to oblige his owne ſoule

to

to be tormented in hell for ever? And if we ſhould not doe it to gaine a Kingdome, nay to gaine the whole world; Oh then, why ſhould we doe it for things of nothing? why ſhould we leeſe our ſoules, and leeſe an everlaſting kingdome for the momentary pleaſure of a little ſcurvy ſin?

Mat.16.16.

2. As for other Kings, many times they are very unrighteous, both in themſelves, and in their governement; Quicquid delirant reges, plectuntur Achivi; the Commons ſmart for the Kings offence; and when the Fathers eate the grapes, the childrens teeth are ſet on edge; or if it be that they prove, & boni viri, & boni Reges, both honeſt men, and righteous Kings, both wiſe as Serpents, that they might be able to governe well, and innocent as Doves, that they might doe it with all uprightneſſe; yet can they goe no further then policy, civility, and an outward ſhew of piety; but this King loveth righteouſneſſe and hateth iniquity in himſelfe, iniquity being not found in his mouth, and he doth, Parcere ſubjectis, & debellare ſuperbos, ſpare the dutifull, and ſubdue the proud; and as the Scripture ſaith, in all ſubjects, he lifteth up the poore out of the duſt, and puniſheth the wrong doer, he exalteth the humble and meeke, and the proud he ſends empty away. And this he doth not onely in reſpect of the outward ſhew, but he requireth truth in the inward parts; and therefore the Prophet rightly ſaith, the ſcepter of thy kingdome is a ſcepter of righteouſneſſe; hereby alſo noting that he is a ſpirituall King, and that his kingdome is not of this world; non quod hoc etiam non poſſideat, ſed quod in cœlo habet imperium, ſaith Saint Chryſoſtome; not becauſe he is not alſo King of this world, but becauſe he beareth rule in heaven, and governeth the ſame after a ſpirituall manner.

2. In reſpect of the quality.

Exek.18.2.

Mat.10.16.

1 Pet.2.22.

Pſal.50.6.

Pſal.45.8.

Chryſo.82 in 18. Joh.

3. As for other Kings, they have ſome power to governe; but it is data deſuper; he gives it them from above; nullam enim habuiſſent niſi ab illo rege accepiſſent, ſaith Fulgentius; at ſibi data eſt omnis potestas, but all power is given to this King; and Saint Ambroſe ſaith, his Will is his power, he being able to doe what he will doe: They have ſome wiſedome to governe, but they have it given from his ſpirit; but he is the wiſedome of God, and in him is hid all the treaſures of Wiſedome and knowledge: his enemies confeſſe it; Never man ſpake as this man doth: Chriſtus ergo factus eſt ſapientia; and therefore he is their wiſedome and their underſtanding, and if they have not this, they have none at all: They have ſome particular kingdomes, but it is by his aſſignement; for by him Kings doe raigne, and he ſetteth up one, and hurleth downe another, taking David from the ſheepefold, to feed his people Iſrael, and numbering the daies of Baltazar, that he ſhould raigne no longer in his kingdome; but he is, Rex univerſæ terræ, & ſuper omnes nationes mundi, King of the whole earth, and over all the nations of the world; omnibus eſt Rex, omnibus eſt judex, omnibus Deus & Dominus, ſaith Tertullian; He is King over all, he is judge of all, and he is the God and Lord of all; therefore though others be reges gentium, kings of the nations; yet he is Rex regum, & dominus dominantium, King of Kings, and Lord of Lords: this is his name for ever; for of him alone, and of none other, ſaith Tertullian, may be ſaid the ſaying of the Pſalmiſt, dominabitur a mari uſq; ad mare, & a flumine uſq; ad terminos terræ, he ſhall raigne from ſea to ſea, and from the floud unto the worlds end: and Euſebius doth excellently handle this point. l.1. Eccleſiaſt. hiſtor. And therefore well ſaith the Prophet, that he was unctus præ conſortibus, annointed above his fellowes.

3. In reſpect of preheminencie.

Fulgen. ſer. de Epiphan. Amb. in 5. Lu.

Col.2.3. Luk 11.49. Col.2.3. Ioh.7.46. 1 Cor.1.30.

Pro.8.16.

Tertul. l. contra Iudæos.

Revel.19.16.

Idem l.5. contra Marcionem. Pſal.72.8. Euſeb. l.1. c.1. Eccleſ. hiſtor. Pſal.45.8.

You ſee then that Chriſt is a King, a ſpirituall King, and a King of Kings, that ruleth all his creatures, univerſaliter per potentiam, univerſally by his power, ſedit enim ſuper ſcalam, for he ſitteth upon the top of Iacobs ladder, and beholding all things that are done on the earth, he diſpoſeth all things wiſely; and this is regnum naturæ vel regnum potentiæ, the kingdome of nature, which he ruleth by his power, and which he governeth by his providence, feeding the ravens that call upon him; and he ruleth his elect only, ſpecialiter, per gratiam, ſpecially by grace, & by his ſpeciall grace, Luctantes ventos tempeſtateſq; ſonoras Imperio premit, ac vinclis & carcere frenat; ſubduing the rage and untamed affections of our

How Chriſt ruleth all things in his kingdome.

Virgil. lib.1. Æneid.

How Christ ruleth his Church, our flesh, and cooling the concupiscence of our nature by his holy Spirit, and making us to obey his precepts, and to walk in the waies of all godlinesse; and this he doth, leni spiritu, non dura manu, rather by an inward sweet influence, than any outward extreme violence; and this is regnum Ecclesiæ, vel regnum gratiæ, the kingdome of his Church, which he guideth by his grace, and preserveth by his Spirit, untill he brings them to everlasting life in their owne countrey, which is regnum cœlorum; ubi nullus timor, quia nulla pericula; non dolor ullus, quia non malum ullum; sed ubiq; alta quies, ubiq; alma pax, ubiq; sancta gaudia, ubiq; bona omnia, quia ubiq; Deus omnia, saith S. Augustine; The kingdome of heaven, where there shall be no feare, because there is no danger; no griefe, because there is no evill; but every where there shall be sweet rest, and pleasant peace, all holy joyes, and all good things; because every where, God shall be all in all: and all we shall also be made Kings and Priests unto God in this kingdome for evermore: and therefore, O sweet God, adveniat regnum, let this kingdome come; and, we beseech thee to heare us good Lord.

The happinesse of heaven,

What the former doctrine teacheth

Well therefore, dicite gentibus, tell it out among the nations, quod Christus Rex, that Christ is King: and seeing Christ is King,

1. Lesson. 1. Exultent justi, let the righteous rejoyce; for he will defend them as with a shield; and

2. Lesson. 2. Seeing Christ is King, contremiscat populus, let the people tremble; for he will rule them with a rod of iron, and those that are stubborne, he will breake in pieces like a potters vessell.

2. Of Christ his subjects. Aug. de civit. l. 16. c. 3. De 2. His subjects are said to be the Iewes; for he is Rex Iudæorum, King of the Iewes: A people that were the posterity of Abraham, of whom they were called Hebrewes, quasi Abrahæi, and by corruption Hebræi; or els of Heber, they were called Heberæi, & una detracta litera, Hebræi, by taking one letter away, they were called Hebrewes, as S. Augustine sheweth; and they were called Israelites, of Israel, the sonne of Isaac, the father of the twelve Patriarchs, that (before his wrastling with the Angell) was called Iacob; and afterwards S. Ambrose thinketh they were called Iewes, of Iudas Macchabeus; but I find they were called Iewes long before, as you may see, 2 King. 16. 6. and therefore I think rather, with S. Augustine, that they were called Iewes, of Iudah, the sonne of Iacob: Quia ex ea tribu semper reges habuerunt usq; ad Herodem; because they had their Kings alwaies out of that Tribe, untill the time of Herod; according to the Prophecy of Iacob, that the Scepter should not depart from Iuda, untill Shilo came, and these were the people, of whom our Saviour Christ is said to be King.

Whence the Israelites had their names.

Aug. to. 8. p. 337.

Gen. 49. 10.

At quid magnum erat esse Regem Iudæorum? What great matter was it to be King of the Iewes, saith S. Augustine: for what were the people of the Iewes, but (as we find) the Three things observable in the Iewes.

1. Smallest in number,
2. The worst in condition, } of all other.
3. And then in slavery and subjection unto the Romans.

Prov. 14. 28. 1 Smallest in number.

1. The glory of a King (saith King Salomon) consisteth in the multitude of his subjects; at tota terra Iudæorum a Dan usq; ad Beersabe vix centum sexaginta milium in longum spatio tenditur; the whole countrey of Iewrie, where the Iewes dwelt, lying between Dan and Beersabe, was scarce an hundred and threescore mile long, as S. Hierome writeth. The Iewes therefore were but a handfull in comparison of other nations.

Hieron. Ep. ad Dard.

2 Worst in condition.

2. Yet if they had beene good, that might have made amends for all; for that, as a little gold is better than a great deale of drosse; so better to be a King of a City of Christians, than of a world of infidels; therefore I may say as true as Salomon, that the glory and the happinesse of a King, consisteth in the goodnesse of his subjects: But the Iewes, of all other, were most unconstant in their religion, most wicked in their conversation, and most rebellious in their subjection; for though they had the oracles of God, yet ever and anon they would fall away to Baalim and Asteroth,

The goodnesse of subjects the greatest glory of a king

Rom. 3. 2. Iudg. 2. 13.

Aſteroth, the gods of the Gentiles; though they had a law more holy than any nation, yet the Prophet will tell you, that bloud touched bloud, and all cruelty was committed in their lives and converſations; and though they were never well untill they had a King; yet when they had a King, they would quite caſt him off, before the third generation; and therefore Moſes ſaith, that they provoked God with their vanities, and offered unto Divels, and not unto God, and that their wine was the wine of Dragons, and the cruell gall of Aſpes: and Aaron tels you the ſame too; for he had occaſion to try them, and he ſaith, that this people were even ſet on miſchiefe, and if you will, briefly take a view of them.

Deut. 6. 8. Hoſ. 4. 2.

Deut. 32.

Exod. 32. 22. The waywardnes of the Iewes.

In the 19 of the Acts you may ſee the folly and blindneſſe of this people; for there they be at the towne-houſe, ſome crying one thing, and ſome another, and the major part of them knew not why they came together; and therefore Moſes ſaid truly, that it was a fond and a gyddy-headed people, a people void of wiſdome, and a people deſtitute of all underſtanding.

Acts 19. 1. Their blindnes.

Deut. 32. 28.

In the 22 of the Acts, you may ſee their brutiſhneſſe; for there, upon a word ſpoken by S. Paul, you ſhall ſee them cry, and caſting off their clothes, and throwing duſt into the ayre, as if they were mad men.

2. Their brutiſhneſſe. Acts 22.

In the 16 of Numbers, you may ſee the ſpite, the madneſſe, and the malice of this people; for there they challenge Moſes and Aaron for Corah his death, and ſay, you have perſecuted and killed the people of God; yet never did Moſes once touch them, but God himſelfe from heaven, by viſible judgements ſhewed them to be as they were, not the people of God, but the ſonnes of Belial; and yet in deſpite of Moſes, if for ought they like him not, they will preſently canonize Corah and his complices to be the Saints of God.

3. Their ſpight. Num. 16.

And, to be briefe, you may read in every booke almoſt, of the murmuring and rebellion of this people againſt Moſes and Aaron, Samuel, David, Rehoboam, and all the reſt.

4. Their murmuring and rebellion againſt their governours.

And beſides all this, that which is worſe than all this, it is almoſt impoſſible how any nation could be more ungratefull towards God, more averſe unto his precepts, and more apt to fall into idolatry, than this nation was; for, as our Saviour ſaith of Corazin and Bethſaida, if theſe things had beene done in Tyrus and Sydon which have beene done in you, they would have repented long agone in ſackcloth and aſhes; So I think, if any other nation of the world had ſeene the great wonders of God in Egypt, wonders that the world never ſaw the like, and had heard the voice of God himſelfe, as this people did in the wilderneſſe, and ſhould be ſo miraculouſly aſſiſted againſt all their enemies, and ſo graciouſly planted in ſo ſweet and ſo pleaſant a land, that flowed with milke and honey, and had received ſo many other exceeding extraordinary favours from God, as the Iewes did, it could not be, that they ſhould ever prove, ſo ſuddenly, ſo extremely, and ſo commonly, ſo ungratefull, and ſo ungracious towards God, as this people was; as you may eaſily ſee, both in the Pſalmes of David, and in all the writings of the Prophets; who did continually ſet downe, to their perpetuall ſhame, both the great benefits and bleſſings of God to them, and their great rebellion and wickedneſſe towards God. And therefore, what great matter was it to be Rex Iudæorum, King of the Iewes? And

5. Their diſobedience to God, and proneneſſe to fall away to all kind of Idolatry. Mat. 11. 21.

3. If to all this you add, that they were then ſubject unto the Romans; for they had no king but Cæſar; and therefore now to be king of the Iewes, were but to be an underling unto Cæſar.

Ioh. 19.

This therefore is not all the glory of Chriſt, that is here underſtood by Rex Iudæorum, King of the Iewes, that he ſhould be the temporall King of theſe Iewes; for he had told Pilate plainely, that his kingdome was not of this world; & multi antea reges nati erant Iudæorum; and there were many before him, that were borne Kings of the Iewes; and yet the wiſe men of the Eaſt never came to enquire for any of them; but when this King was borne, then preſently we ſee how earneſtly they deſired to know, Where is he that is borne King of the Iewes? but men of other nations, yea wiſe men, as the Scripture cals them, yea Kings of Chriſt not an ordinary, but a ſpeciall King of the Iewes. Ioh. 19. Aug. to. 8. in Pſal.

Mat. 2.

Cypr ser. de baptis. Chrys. Hom. 6. in Mat. 2.

other countreyes, as S. Cyprian delivereth it, from the tradition of the Church; or reguli, petty kings at least, as S. Chrysostome thinketh; and the Prophet noteth no lesse, The Kings of Tharsish and of the Isles shall bring presents, the Kings of Sheba, and Saba shall bring gifts; these (I say) would never have done this with such devotion and diligence, Nisi eum, quem dixerunt Regem Iudæorum, agnoscerent etiam Regem seculorum; Vnlesse they had known and believed him, whom they called King of the Iewes, to be also King of all ages; or him, whom they called Rex Iudæorum, to be Creator & Dominus Angelorum, the Creatour and Lord of Angels, as Fulgentius speaketh: And therefore Pilate, to shew that he meant he was some extraordinary King, writes, οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ βασιλεὺς τῶν Ἰουδαίων: Hic est ille Rex Iudæorum, this is that King of the Iewes, as all the Evangelists note: THAT KING, κατ' ἐξοχήν, which was prophesied and expected long before.

Aug. to. 10. ser. 3. in Epiph.

Ioh. 19.

That Christ is the King of all nations.

Is he therefore King of the Iewes onely, and not of the Gentiles also? Yes: he is King of the Gentiles also; for he is King of the Iewes, non carne, sed spiritu; non sensu literali, sed mystico, saith S. Augustine: Not onely that come of Abraham, according to the flesh, but of those also, and most especially of those, that are of the faith of Abraham.

Why Christ is called King of the Iewes

1 Reason. Rom. 1. 3.

Yet is hee specially said to bee King of the Iewes, and not of the Gentiles.

First, Becausse he came of them, κατὰ σάρκα, as concerning the flesh, saith the Apostle.

2 Reason. Mat. 15. 24.

Secondly, Becausse he came chiefly to save the lost sheep of the house of Israel, as himselfe doth testifie.

3. Reason. Esa 69. 20.

Thirdly, Becausse salvation was to come unto the Gentiles out of Sion, as it was prophesied long before.

4. Reason. Rom. 11. 17.

Fourthly, Becausse the wild Olive was to come to the Olive, and not the Olive to the wild Olive tree; that so we, which were the wild Olive, might be made partakers of the Olive tree, and injoy the inheritance of the sonnes of Abraham, though we were not propagati per carnem, sed inserti per fidem, as S. Augustine speaketh, sprung out of the loynes of Abraham, but ingrafted by faith unto the root of Abraham.

Aug. to. 8 in Psal.

And therefore, though the Magi were Gentiles, and Pilate a Gentile; yet cum illi stellam viderunt in cœlo, & ille titulum fixit in ligno, when they saw his starre in heaven, and he fixt his Title upon the Crosse, the former did seek for him, and the latter did acknowledge him by the name of Rex Iudæorum, King of the Iewes, and not of the Gentiles, saith S. Augustine.

Idem Ibid quo supra.

And thus you see the particulars of the Title of this crucified man, Iesus of Nazareth King of the Iewes: From whence we may observe three especiall things worth the noting.

Three things observable from the title of Christ.

1. One, in respect of the Writer of this Title.
2. Another, in respect of the title it selfe, that was written.
3. And a third, in respect of the person, for whom this title was written.

1. In respect of the writer.

1. In respect of the Writer of this Title, which was Pilate, (for it was done either by himselfe, or by his command and direction) you may note two especiall things.

Two things to be considered.

1. His Vertues.
2. His Vices.

1. Pilates vertues seen in three things.

1. His Vertues do appeare three waves.

1. In searching the truth.

1. In the diligent searching out of the truth, in out Saviours cause.
2. In the great desire he had, to save our Saviours life.
3. In setting down the cause of our Saviours death.

Caietan. in 5. Ioh.

De 1. A Iudge faileth to doe justice in judgement, (saith Cajetan) Vel ex ignorantia intellectus, vel ex pravitate voluntatis, either, through ignorance of understanding, understanding, or corruption of the will; and Saint Augustine saith, that ignorantia Iudicis, the ignorance of the Iudge is many times calamitas innocentis, the calamity of the innocent; and therefore Pilate doth most carefully search out the truth of his accusations, saying; What accusation bring you against this man? And when they had answered, if he were not an evill doer, we would not have delivered him unto thee; then he said, take ye him, and judge him after your owne law; as if he should have said, if you will not tell me the faults, that ye lay against him, that I may know, whether they be true or not, I will never condemne him; for I will not beleeve you, that are his accusers; and therefore either take him away from me, or tell me what accusation yee bring against him; so carefull was he to know, and to heare his accusation; and when he heard it, he was also as carefull in the examining of it, that he found him thereby altogether unworthy of death: And this may serve;

Aug. in. 3. f. 246.

Ioh 18.29.

Ver. 30.
Ver. 31.

How Iudges should be carefull to examine the truth of things.

To shew how carefully should all Iudges examine all poore mens causes, that thereby they might know the truth of every matter; quia ad prudentiam judicis pertinet, bene & subtiliter examinare actorem, reum, & testem, ut inveniatur veritas, saith the Canonist; It pertaineth unto the office and wisedome of every Iudge, to examine carefully and wisely, both the accuser, the accused, and the witnesses, that the truth may be found out in every matter; quia grave & satis indecens est, ut in re dubia certa detur sententia, saith Saint Gregory; It is a most hainous and a very unfit thing, that a judge should give a certaine sentence in an uncertaine matter.

Greg. c. grave. 11. q. 3.

How God prescribeth us an example herein.

And therefore we read of God himselfe, that although Sodome was a sinke of the filthiest sinnes, a cage of the uncleanest birds, and a den of the wickeddest theeves, that ever the world could breed; yet he will not rashly come upon her, he will not presently bend his bow, nor presently pronounce his sentence against her; but first he will goe downe and see, whether they had done according to the crie that was come unto him, and if not, that he might know.

Gen. 18.19.

He might indeed, (and who could stop him) use martiall lawes against them, so soone as they had offended him; he might (and who might once controll him) like Draco, write his lawes in bloud, upon these sinfull wretches, so soone as they had offended him; he might (and then who could avoid him) send his judgements among them, whiles the sinne was in their hearts, as he did to Nebuchadnezzar, while the words were in his mouth; but herein you may see, not onely the tender mercy of the God of mercy, that never spoyleth before he spareth, but also the sweet and good proceeding of the God of all just proceedings; he never condemneth before he citeth, heareth, and examineth the cause.

Dan. 4.31.

God doth things for our example.

And this he doth, not because he knoweth not, who knoweth all our workes, which are laid in store with him, and sealed up among his treasures; but he doth it for our example, that we should not rashly judge of any man, nor be too credulous in beleeving every flying and lying speeches, that come unto our eares: For Moses saith, that before Idolaters should be put to death, they should seeke, and make search, and inquire diligently; and all this was, that the truth might be found out; and the example of David, being too credulous to beleeve wicked Ziba against the good Mephibosheth, may sufficiently shew, how prejudiciall it is unto judgement, to condemne a man before his cause be heard; and therefore Seneca saith, that qui parte statuit inaudita altera, aequum licet statuerit, ipse haud aequus est; He that giveth sentence, in any thing, or against any man, when he heareth one mans tale, before he heareth the other mans answer; though he should decree the matter justly; yet is he unjust; because he decreed it rashly; for that the law judgeth no man before he be heard: And therefore this is an apparent vertue in Pilate, that he is so diligent in the seeking and searching, in hearing and examining the cause of our Saviours accusation; and I would to God all our Iudges would be as good as Pilate, in examining the cause of all poore men, when they are falsly accused by great men.

Deut. 32.34.

Deut. 13.14.

How prejudiciall it is, to condemne a man before his cause be heard.

2 Sam. 16.4.

Iob. 7.51.

His ſecond vertue was, in the great deſire he had to ſave our Saviours life, as S. Peter ſheweth, which may be proved divers waies:

a. In his deſire to ſave Chriſt. Act. 3. 13. Which deſire appeareth.

1. Way.

Janſ. in 27. Matt. & 18. Ioh. Barrad. to. 4. l. 7. c. 5.

1. In propoſing, whether they would have Chriſt or Barabas, thinking ſaith Ianſen: that they would not chooſe this wicked murderer of life, before this innocent man, that was the ſaver of life; at non caret myſterio; but herein lyeth a myſtery; becauſe we ſee hereby, how Peccator homo liberatur, Deus homo innocens, crucifigitur, ſinnefull man is delivered, and the innocent man, God and man, is condemned: Iſaack is eſcaped, and the Ramme held in a buſh, is ſacrificed; to ſhew this ſame thing; how wicked man ſhould be ſaved, and be let freely goe, and Chriſt held by the head in a buſh, whileſt the buſh was on his head, when he was crowned with a crowne of thornes, ſhould be nayled unto the Croſſe, and ſo held in the buſh: Quid eſt enim hærere cornibus, niſi crucifigi? for what is it, to be held by the hornes, but to be faſtned upon the Croſſe, and there bee offered as a ſacrifice for the ſinnes of wicked men? ſaith Saint Auguſtine.

Orig. hom. 8. in Gen

Aug. in Pſal. 30.

2. Way.

Luke 23. 15.

2. His deſire to ſave him appeared, in the ſending of him to Herod, that his innocency might be approved by Herod alſo; and therefore he ſaith, I find no cauſe of death in him, nor yet Herod; as if hee ſhould ſay, Herod could find no cauſe to condemne him, and therefore why ſhould I doe it?

3. Way.

Aug. in Pſal. 63.

3. His deſire to ſave him appeared, in the whipping of Chriſt, as if that might ſuffice them, and be a ſufficient puniſhment for none offence; Flagellavit enim (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) non ad Chriſtum perſequendum, ſed ad eorum animos emolliendum, ut ſe occidere velle deſinerent; He whipt our Saviour, not with any deſire to perſecute him, but in hope, that this would have ſatisfied them, and made them leave their earneſt crie to crucifie him.

4. Way.

Mat. 27. 24.

4. His deſire to ſave him appeared, in the waſhing of his hands, that is, to ſhew the innocency of Chriſt, and himſelfe to be free from the bloud of Chriſt, and ſaying, I am innocent from the bloud of this juſt one; as if this ſhould make them leave of, to condemne an innocent man; and therefore wee may cry out, O dimentiam inſanabilem; O implacable madneſſe, that none of theſe might appeaſe their minds, untill they had imbrued their hands in the bloud of Chriſt, and ſo brought the ſame upon themſelves and their children.

3. In ſetting downe the cauſe of Chriſt his death. Mar 15. 26.

Chryſoſt in Matth. Theophi. in 19. Ioh.

The third vertue of Pilate was, in ſhewing the cauſe of his death, when hee was condemned; for many times we find, that men are puniſhed and cenſured, and they know not why they are accuſed, they know not by whom they are accuſed; and they are condemned, they know not for what, but Stat pro ratione voluntas, the Iudge decreed it ſo, and ſo it muſt be, they muſt ſpeake no longer; but Pilate ſheweth himſelfe more juſt, for he ſets downe the cauſe of his condemnation, not for any evill doing, as the theeves were; but for being Ieſus of Nazareth King of the Iewes: I might add another vertue, of his conſtancy, and reſolution, in not altering the cauſe of his death; but I ſhall ſpeake of this hereafter; and ſo I might ſhew you alſo many other things that were exceeding good in Pilate.

2. Pilates vices fourefold. Tuſc. q. l. 5.

But if we looke a little further, and take a better view of all the reſt of his actions and proceedings, then ſhall we ſee, that as Archimedes tombe was overgrowne with thornes, when Cicero came to viſit it: ſo ſhall we finde theſe vertues, and theſe good things of Pilate, to be corrupted and ſpoyled with heapes of vices, and eſpecially of

1. Injuſtice.
2. Timiditie.
3. Hypocriſie.
4. Infidelity.

1. Pilates injuſtice ſeene five waies.

1. Of Injuſtice; for there were five ſpeciall arguments, whereby Pilate was perſwaded and aſſured of the innocency of Chriſt; for he knew,

1. By the betrayer.

1. That his betrayer was wicked, and that for three reaſons.

1. Becauſe

1. Because he betrayed his owne Master; for Iezabel could say, Had Zimri peace that slew his Master? 1. Reason. 2 Reg. 9. 31.

And therefore he had done well, if he had served him, as M. Brutus did with a servant, that did accuse his master, for hiding his owne money from the searchers, at the taking of Patarea; and his mother, willing to save her sonne, cried, that she had hid it; the servant, not required to speake, affirmed, she said not true; for it was his master, that did hide it; whereat Brutus pittying the young man in silence, and the mother in compassion, sent them away unhurt, with the money which was hid, and hanged the servant, that had betrayed, and would have hanged his master; and thus Pilate should have dealt with Iudas, or with any servant, that would betray his master, as Iudas did. Appian. Alexand. de bello civili. l. 4. p. 274.

2. Because Iudas himselfe did confesse his fault, restored the price, and hanged himselfe; all which did most clearely shew both the malice of the Iewes, and the unjustice of Pilate, Quos nec confessio peccati, nec restitutio pretij, nec operatio proprij suspendij emolliri potuit, saith Ludolphus; whom neither the confession of his sinne, nor the restoring of the price, nor the execution of his owne vengeance, could any waies mollifie and assure them of the iniquity of the fact. 2. Reason. By the confession of Iudas. Ludolph. de vita Christi.

3. Because the fruit of his iniquity was, with the price of Christs blood, to buy a field of bloud; to shew us, that Ager figulorum est merces proditorum, accursed is the reward of betrayers: Pharnaces, that was most deere unto his father Mithridates of all his sonnes, whom he had many times declared to be his successor in his kingdome, laid waite for his father, to betray him into the hands of his enemies; and when his father found out the treason, and learned the conspirators, and was perswaded by Menophanes to grant a pardon unto his sonne; yet still he persisted in his treacherous minde, corrupted the fugitives and the army, by the promises of many benefits, to forsake the King; which moved him, to become the author of his owne death, rather then he would fall into the hands of his despightfull enemies; but Pharnaces scaped not the hands of vengeance, when Asander, his private enemie, drove him out of Asia, and afterwards killed him, and so lost both himselfe and his kingdome, which C. Cæsar gave to Mithridates of Pergamo, that had holpen him well in Egypt; and Perpenna, that was so much honoured of Sertorius, and so loved, that when the tables of his testament were unsealed, he was found to be made his heire, when he had most treacherously killed him at the banquet, to which he had invited him, was generally hated of all men, and presently after, most shamefully vanquished, and most justly put to death like a base traitor; and so I could cite you many more, that were served themselves even as they had served others. 3. Reason. Mat. 27. 8. Betrayers punished. Appian de bello Rom. cum Mithr. sub fine. Appian de bel. civil. l. 2. p. 6.

2. He knew that his accusers were malitious; for he was accused before Annas, Caiphas, and Pilate; and at each time we find sundry accusations, and sundry accusers; for before Annas and Caiphas he was accused of two things, videlicet, that he was 2. By the accusers. Ludol. de vita Christi.

1. Seductor hominum.
2. Doctor falsæ doctrinæ.

That is,

1. A deceiver of the people, and
2. A teacher of false doctrine: and to prove this, They sought many false witnesses, but could finde none, saith the Evangelist: And before Pilate, he was accused by the Priests themselves of three other things, to be a man Mat. 26. 59. 60.

1. Subvertentem Gentem.
2. Prohibentem tributum Cæsari.
3. Dicentem se regem & Christum esse.

His accusation fivefold.

1. Perverting the whole Nation.
2. Denying tribute unto Cæsar.
3. Saying that he was Christ and King:

So Fama crescit eundo, Their accusations are like Skoggens crow, the further they goe, the more lyes they faine, and the more malitious they shew themselves How falsely they accused him.

to

to be; nay let them ease the inhabitants of Crete, from that well deserved infamy, which the Apostle, from their owne Poets, layeth upon them, Κρῆτες ἀεὶ ψεῦσται, the Cretians are alwaies lyers; yea let ψεύδων ἄνακτες, the very kings of lies, give the mastery unto these men; for were they not the children of him, that hath beene a lyer from the beginning, and is the father of all lies, they could never have invented such lies against the truth it selfe; for he came to seeke the lost sheepe of the house of Israel; he bad them give unto Cæsar, what was Cæsars; yea he gave it himselfe for himselfe and his Disciples; and he told them plainely, that his kingdome was not of this world; and yet they frame these false accusations against him; but herein, beside many else, we find two grievous crimes.

1 Tit.1.12.

Ioh.8.

Mat.15.24. Mat.22.2. Ioh.18,36.

Two maine errors in his accusations 1. Not the same accusations.

1. Here are not the same accusations, as were before alleadged against him; for they knew, that the teaching of false doctrine was not then a cause with the Romanes, as now it is, to put any man to death: and therefore they faine these three last, that they might kill him for the two first.

Aug.10.8.in Psal.

2. Not the same accusers. Mat.26.65,66,&c.18,1. Ioh.18,30.

2. Here are not the same accusers; for here Annas and Caiphas that before were Iudices examinis, the judges of his examination, are now become his accusers before Pilate, that was sanguinis judex, the judge to condemne him; that so their greatnesse and authority might add some strength unto their testimony.

3. By the witnesses Mat.27.18.

3. He knew, that both the witnesses were false; for the High-Priests sought false Witnesses, saith the Text; and he knew, that for envie the High-Priests had delivered him, saith the Evangelist.

4. By his owne conscience.

4. He knew, that his owne conscience was sufficiently perswaded of his innocency; for having carefully examined him, he found him to be innocent; Ergo timuit occidere innocentem, and he was afraid to condemne an innocent; and he found him to be the Son of God; Ergo, magis timuit occidere Dei virtutem, and he was the more afraid to put to death the Sonne of God; and he found him to be a King, though not an earthly King, but, such a King, as by whom all earthly Kings doe raigne; and therefore he said, Shall I crucifie your King?

Ludol. de vita Christi.

Ioh.19.15.

5. By the testimony of his wife. Mat.27.19. Heb.11.

5. He knew, that his owne wife perswaded him to have nothing to doe with that just man.

All these were a cloud of witnesses, to assure him of the innocency of Christ; and therefore all of them doe shew his great injustice, that as Cornelius Cotta Salinator, and Manius Acilius, were openly condemned of bribery, yet contrary to all law and all justice, were most unjustly released by the Romane Iudges; so he notwithstanding all these, would crucifie the Lord of life.

Appian de bello civili l.1.p.15.

Ob. But it may be, some will object, that a Iudge should doe nothing upon his owne private knowledge, sed juxta allegata & probata, but according to what is alleadged and proved; and therefore that Pilate may be excused.

Thom.22a q.67. art.2.& q.64,ar.6. Rayn.in summa.

Resp. Indeed our Saviour saith, that they, which delivered him to Pilate, majus peccatum habuerunt, had the greater sinne; yet hee doth not hereby excuse Pilate from all sinne; and therefore though Thomas, Rayner. and almost all the Canonists say, that si aliquis, quem scit Iudex innocentem, falsis testimonijs convincitur & occidatur, if a man, whom the Iudge knoweth to be innocent, be convinced by false witnesses, and so lose his life; yet that the Iudge is blamelesse herein; quia bonus judex nihil ex arbitrio suo facit, sed juxta leges & jura pronunciata; because a good Iudge is to doe nothing of himselfe, but according to the lawes and the things that are proved; yet by this one example it is most apparent, that as Guliel. and Lyra and others doe affirme, it is not lawfull for any Iudge to condemne any man, according to the allegations alleadged and proved, if hee knowes himselfe, that the same accusations are false; but he should suffer him to go free without either condemning him, or sending him to any other Iudge, and let his accusers appeale if they will; quia scriptum est, because it is written, Innocentem & justum non condemnabis, thou shalt not condemne the innocent; and therefore hereby we may see the injustice of Pilate for condemning him, whom his own conscience by so many arguments could testifie, that he was unjustly condemned.

Ex Ambros.3.4.9. iudices.

Lyra in Exod.23.

Vide destructorium viriorum. p.8.c.12.

Exod.23.7.

2. We

2. We may ſee his timidity, and too much fearfulneſſe; for when they ſaid, if thou let this man go, thou ſhalt be no friend to Cæſar, timebat calumniam, ſaith Theophylact, ne accuſaretur quod rebellem abſolviſſet, he feared that ſaying and calumny, leaſt he ſhould be accuſed before Cæſar, that he had freed a rebellious fellow; and ſo, for feare of that accuſation, he delivered him to be crucified.

2. Pilates timidity Ioh 19.12 Theophi in Ioh. 19.

And therefore, hereby we ſee he failed in the courage of a Iudge, which ſhould be without the feare of any; for Iethro putteth this as the chiefe property of Iudges, that they ſhould be men of courage; and the ſonne of Syrach doth wiſely forbid every man to deſire to be a Iudge, Niſi valeat virtute irrumpere iniquitates, ne forte extimeſcat faciem potentis; unleſſe he be able moſt valiantly and ſtrongly to breake in pieces the bands of iniquity; leaſt, fearing the perſon of the mighty, he ſhould commit an offence againſt his uprightneſſe.

That a Iudge ſhould not be timerous. Exod. 18.21.

Eccleſ. 7.6.

And we do often find, that the want of courage, and the feare of offending great men, is the cauſe that many Iudges, how juſt ſoever they judge betweene poore men and poore men, yet are they moſt unjuſt and partiall, when they heare the cauſes between the poore and the rich; for the rich mans wealth, and his greatneſſe, makes the judge afraid to give ſentence againſt him; ideo facile dives corrumpit judicium, (ſaith Iſiodorus) & pauper contra veritatem opprimitur; the rich man can eaſily pervert judgement, and cauſe the poore man to be oppreſſed againſt all truth, and contrary to all equity and honeſty.

The timidity of the Iudge a cauſe of much evill. Iſidor l. 4. de ſummo bono.

And Innocentius doth moſt excellently ſhew the ſame in his book de vilitate conditionis humana, of the baſeneſſe and vileneſſe of mans conditions, How the feare of great men, makes Iudges ſo much to wrong the poore men; for as Pilate ſeeing Chriſt, like a poore contemptible fellow, thought, that although he ſhould condemne him, yet there could come no great danger unto him; for alas poore man, he hath no man (thought he) that will dare to offer to revenge his wrongs; but he ſaw the high Prieſts were great men, and ſuch as could be even with him, and do him no little miſchiefe, if he ſhould not yeeld unto their deſire, whether it were right or wrong; & ideo tradidit eum illis; and therefore he gave him unto them, to do with him what they would; even ſo, when Iudges ſee, the poore men can do nothing for them, if ſentence ſhould be given with them; nor any hurt unto them, if ſentence ſhould be given againſt them; but that the rich men can be even with them, and not onely make them no good cheare, which before they were wont to have often in their houſes; but alſo do ſome ſhrewd turne unto them, at ſome time or other, if the cauſe goes againſt them; and can well reward them, and moſt daintily feaſt them, if the matter goes on their ſide; therefore not caring for the poore, but fearing the rich, you may eaſily know on which ſide the ſentence is moſt likely to go, and which party is moſt likely to ſpeed.

Innocent. l. de vilit. condit. humana.

Theophylact. qua ſupra.

And leaſt you ſhould think I lay this ſin on Iudges only, I find it hath alſo crept into the Preachers of the Goſpell; and this timidity makes them, if not to flatter, whereby the great man delights to go on in ſinne, quum non ſolum non metuitur reprehenſor, ſed etiam laudatur operator, when not onely he feareth not reprehenſion, but he ſeeth alſo his fact hath commendation, as S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh; yet at leaſtwiſe to be afraid to reprove them, when they ſee that reproofs are ſo harſh unto them, and ſo cleane againſt the haire; the minds of great men being exaſperated hereby, to do miſchiefe unto thoſe that reprove them: as we may ſee in Charidemus the Athenian, whom Darius, impatient of all truth, commanded to be ſlaine; and ſo Caliſthines by Alexander, Iohn Baptiſt by Herod, and Steven by the Iewes; and therefore for feare of danger more or leſſe, men are afraid to tell the truth.

Timidity a great fault in Preachers Aug. ſup. Pſal. 9.

Q. Curtius l. 8.

Mat. 14.10. Acts 7.57.

But to this I ſay, that, although we may endeavour to be as wiſe as ſerpents, and uſe windings in our reproofs, to go the ſafeſt way, and not the neareſt way, to do as Nathan did to David, not poſitively, but by implication to cenſure his owne errour in the perſon of another, and not alwaies to diſcover our full extent, leaſt

Mat. 10.16. 2 Sam. 12. That we may be wary in the manner of reprehending.

leaſt we ſhould wrong our ſelves, and do no benefit unto them: Yet, if this will not ſerve to reclaime them, then are we to be as bold as lions, and to ſay, feri, ſed audi, as Themiſtocles ſaid to a Lacedemonian, heare me, and ſtrike me; do what thou wilt unto me, ſo thou heare me, and amend thy ſelfe; for we muſt tell you of your ſinnes, without either feare or flattery, though we die for the ſame.

Preachers ought not to be ſilent for feare of danger.

And therefore, to our ſelves that are Preachers; Ile ſay no more, but that it is not in our owne power to chuſe, whether we ſpeake or hold our peace for feare of danger; Quia nobis ſi taceamus damnum eſt; becauſe, if we, for feare of any, ſhould conceale what is expedient to be told them; it is our deſtruction, ſaith S. Clement: And to thoſe that are Iudges, Ile ſay no more of this crime, but wiſh them to remember what S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh, that, qui non vult rectè judicare, ille rectè judicabitur; He that, for feare of the mighty, will not judge rightly here, ſhall have a Iudge hereafter, that will rightly judge him, without feare.

Clem. l. 1. recognit.

Aug. to. 8. 179. d, 2.

3. Pilates hypocriſie.

3. Herein we may ſee his hypocriſie, in that he would waſh his hands, and pronounce himſelfe innocent from the bloud of this juſt man; and yet with thoſe hands, that he waſhed, to deliver him to the Iewes to be crucified; Et ijſdem labijs Ieſum mittere ad crucem, quibus pronunciaverat innocentem, ſaith Pope Leo, and with the ſame lips, that he profeſt our Saviours innocency, there, and at the ſame time, to pronounce the ſentence of his condemnation: O wicked and polluted mouth, that now wilt ſend him to be crucified, whom even now thou thy ſelfe haſt juſtified: and O wicked man, that wilt waſh thine hands to make them cleane, and yet preſently to imbrue them in the bloud of Chriſt: What greater hypocriſie can there be?

Leo Papa Ser. 3. de paſſ. dom.

That many imitate Pilate.

And yet I pray God that we have not too too many, which, like Pilate, would juſtifie themſelves, and waſh their hands, as though they were cleare themſelves from all fault; and yet under that pretence of uprightneſſe, to do all wrongs and injuſtice unto the poore; and that will make long ſpeeches to juſtifie themſelves, and yet in a ſhort ſpeech to condemne the juſt.

2 Cor. 3. 13.

O what is this, but (with Moſes) to put a veile over our faces, to hide them from the eyes of men, when as we cannot hide them from the eyes of God: and therefore, though men could not eſpie this our hypocriticall dealings, yet the time ſhall come, that the veile of this hypocriſie ſhall be taken away by the comming of Chriſt; and then ſhall theſe our wicked deeds be manifeſted both to men and Angels: for I will ſhew the nations thy ſhame, ſaith the Lord.

Nah 3. 5.

4. Pilates infidelity.

4. Herein we may ſee his infidelity, that he ſhould confeſſe with his mouth, and write with his pen, and yet not believe with his heart, that he was Ieſus of Nazareth, King of the Iewes: to ſhew indeed, that there may be many like Chriſtians, outwardly in words, but infidels inwardly in their hearts. And therefore I would to God that every man would facere quod credit, & credere quod dicit, do what he ſaith he believes, and believe with his heart, what he profeſſeth with his mouth.

What the former doctrine of Pilates vertues and vices teacheth us. Two leſſons.

And thus you ſee both the virtues and the vices of Pilate; out of which two things, we may learn two leſſons for our own inſtructions.

1. That evill men may have many good things in them.

1. That the very Heathens had many good things in them.

2. That the commixtion of vices doth ſo ſpoyle this good, as that it availes them nothing.

Ariſt. lib. 1. de partibus animal. ut citatur a venerab. Beda in axiomat. p. 163.

Some good things in the Divell.

De 1. Nihil naturale, immo nulla res adeo vilis & parva in natura, qua non liceat ſpectare aliquid divinum & admiratione dignum; there is no naturall thing, nor indeed any thing ſo baſe and little in nature, wherein we may not conſider and ſee ſome vertue and goodneſſe in it; yea ſome divine ſpark, that is worthy of admiration, ſaith the worthieſt of all the Naturaliſts; for we ſee ſome vertue or other in the ſmalleſt herbe, (ſaith the Prince of Phyſitians) and we find, that the Divell himſelfe hath yet ſome things in him that are good, as their naturall ſubſtances, their naturall qualities, their knowledge and agility, and ſuch like: for theſe theſe are the works of God; and whatſoever he made, they not onely were, but they are exceeding good; and ſometimes alſo they do both ſpeake [a] and do [b] the things that are good, howſoever it doth alwaies proceed from them to an evill intent: and therefore no man is ſo wicked, nor ſo very a Divell, but he hath ſome good things in him, yea many times [c] ſpeciales Dei gratias, ſome ſpeciall gifts of God, that are not common unto all men; as Baalam had a divine gift of Propheſie, Saul had a mighty courage, for he fought againſt all his enemies on every ſide, againſt Moab, and againſt the children of Ammon, and againſt Edom, and againſt the kings of Zoba, and againſt the Philiſtims, and whitherſoever he turned himſelfe, he vexed them: and therefore David ſaith, that, from the bloud of the ſlaine, and from the fat of the mighty, the ſword of Saul returned not empty; he was ſwifter than the eagles, and ſtronger than the lions; Achitophel was a great Councellour; for the counſell of Achitophel, which he counſelled in thoſe dayes, was as if a man had inquired at the oracle of God; ſo was all the councell of Achitophel both with David and with Abſolom; and Pilate was a diligent ſearcher out of the truth, in our Saviours cauſe.

Gen. 1. 31.
a Mat. 8. 29.
b Tertul. de præſcript. Sozom. l. 1. 14. Iren. l. 2. c. 5.
c Cal. l. 2. c. 3. § 4. inſt.

1 Sam. 14. 47.

2 Sam. 1. 22, 23.
2 Sam. 16. 23.

De 2. But in the ſecond place, we ſee that their vices did ſpoyle all their vertues; for Baalam loved the wages of iniquity; Saul was diſobedient unto the Lord; Achitophels councell was againſt the Lord; and Pilate put to death the Lord of life; and therefore are they numbred among the wicked, and their vertues, like the untimely fruit of a woman, that periſheth before it ſeeth the Sun, or like the graſſe upon the houſe top, that withereth before it be plucked up.

2. Vices corrupt all goodneſſe.
Num. 23. 24.
1 Sam 10. 9.
Ioh. 19.

Pſal 58. 7.
Pſal. 129. 6.

O conſider this ye that forget God, and yet are proud of ſome good things that you ſee in your ſelves; for have not the Heathens ſo? and have not the Divels ſome good things in them? and therefore if thou ſhouldſt have no good in thee, pejor es quam Dæmon, thou art worſe then a Divell, ſaith S. Auguſtine: yet ſeeſt thou not that many men of great gifts do periſh? Iudas preached, Baalam propheſied, Magus was baptized; and yet they are periſhed; and what was the cauſe of this, that men of ſuch good parts ſhould periſh, but that their ſinnes, like Pilates, did ſpoyle their vertues?

Aug tract. 10. in Ep. Ioh.
Num 23.

Acts 8. 13.

And therefore, though we had never ſo many good things in us, and were courteous, gentle, affable, ſuch as are thought to be enough in a Gentleman; though we had all humane learning, ſo that we could diſpute in all Arts and Sciences, ſuch as are thought to be the eſſentiall parts of an underſtanding man; yea, though we had all the Scriptures ad unguem, at our fingers ends, and could ſay all the Epiſtles of Saint Paul by heart, as Peter Martyr is reported to be able to have done; and could diſcourſe of the ſame both ſubtilly and wiſely, and could write thereof as many bookes as Origen, and as learnedly as S. Auguſtine; and in briefe, though we had whatſoever els, that ſhould ſeem to be good; yet as a little colloquintida ſpoileth all the whole meſſe of pottage; ſo ſinne is able to ſpoyle all our vertues, and to make us odious in the ſight of God, unleſſe we do warily avoid, that we continue not in the ſame; for though you keepe the royall law, and faile but in one point, you are guilty of all, ſaith the Apoſtle; though a man had all good vertues and properties in him, and is ſubject but to one vice; yet that one vice is able to ſpoyle all his vertues; for our good things will not helpe us, when ſinne doth but once accuſe us: and therefore every man ſhould be rather ſorry for his ſinnes, than any wayes proud of his vertues.

That it is not enough for us to have ſome good parts in us, unleſſe we be free from all vices.

2 Reg. 4. 39, 40.

Sin ſpoyleth all our vertues.
Iam. 2. 10.

2. In reſpect of the title it ſelfe, that was written, you may obſerve two things.

2. In reſpect of the title. Two ſpeciall things are to be obſerved.

{1. Who is crucified.
{2. Who are the crucifiers.

1. Who is crucified.

De 1. Ieſus Nazarenus Rex, Ieſus of Nazareth the King, is crucified: And

1. By Ieſus we may underſtand the Prieſts and Preachers of the Goſpell, for they teach us ὁδὸν σωτηρίας, the way of eternall ſalvation.

1. Jeſus.

Acts 16. 17.

2. By Nazarenus, may be underſtood all true Chriſtians; for they be Sanctis

2. Nazarenus.

Acts 26.18. Rom.15.16.

& separati, that is, sanctified by the blood of Christ, and the Holy Ghost, λαὸς περιούσιος, they are a selected people out of this world, which have vowed in Baptisme to abstaine, not from wine and such like, as the Rechabites and the legall Nazarites did, but from the vanities of the world, the suggestions of the Divell, and the concupiscence of the flesh, which are greater abstinences, and are farre more acceptable unto God, than the other was.

Isa.35.2. λαὸς εἰς περιποίησιν. 1 Pet.2.9.

3. Rex:

3. By Rex the King, may be understood Reges terræ, the Kings of the earth, which do govern Gods people next under Christ.

Who be most persecuted and crucified in this world.

Who then be crucified, but Priests, Kings and Christians? For

1. Priests. Mat.10.16.

1. Of the Priests, our Saviour saith, Ecce ego mitto vos, Behold I send you as sheepe in the midst of Wolves: You therefore, of all others, shall be sure to be persecuted from place to place, and to be hated of all men for my names sake: others may have some friends, but you shall be hated of all; *Mat.*10.22.

2. Christians. Mat.16.24.

2. Of all Christians, our Saviour saith, they must take up their Crosse and follow him; that is, they must tread in the same steps, they must suffer the same reproaches, and according to the measure of their abilities, they must be partakers of his sufferings, that they may rejoyce with him in glory.

3. Kings.

3. Of Kings, the very Heathens can tell us, what cares and troubles are wrapped within their Crownes; for though Vulgus in doctum, & multorum illa capitum bellua, persuasum habet, magnos principes in suis regnis velut in amœnissimo quodam paradiso vivere, ubi dijs hominibus q; plaudentibus, omnia quæ ad delicias pertinent suppeditantur; the vulgar sort think the life of Princes to be the bravest life in the world; yet if we look, not into their titular honours, largenesse of Empire, millions of subjects, faire pallaces, multitude of attendants, rich treasures, and other glistering shewes; but into the heavy burden, and thorny cares of government, whereof the diadems of Kings are composed, and wherein the suppressing of vice, the exalting of vertue, the equall administration of justice, the defence of the poore and the oppressed, and the diligent over-watching, that neither in themselves, nor in others the lawes be infringed, are the chiefe and inseparable companions of Empires, and annexed to crownes, upon no lesse perill, than the privation of all those worthy Epithetes which are due to good Princes here, and of the eternall reward that is promised hereafter; then shall we say, that this kingly charge, outwardly glorious, begun with cares, continued with feares, and oft times ended with sorrowes, being rightly considered, did not without cause make Seleucus, with many sighs, to bewaile the miseries of Kings; and to cry out, with him in Valerius, saying. O nobilem magis quam fœlicem pannum, quem, si quis penitus cognoscat, quanis multis sollicitudinibus & periculis sit refertus, ne humi jacentem capere vellet: And therefore, though homo natus ad laborem, man is born to labour, and that great travels are created for all men, and a heavy yoke upon all the sonnes of Adam; yet of them all, these three sorts of men are most subject to afflictions and persecutions.

Vide the Table-book for Princes in init.

The cares of Princes.

Plut. in vita Solonis & in Lac. seni gerenda sit respubl.

Valer. Max. l. 7. c. 2

Eccles. 40.1.

And among these three I find, that Iesus and Rex do compasse about Nazarenus; to shew indeed, that as the red sea was a wall of defence unto the Israelites on either side, so are Kings and Priests a wall of defence to environ about the Christians, and to save them, as much as may be, from all dangers, by exposing themselves to the greatest hazards of the vilest persecutions. And we find that these two, Kings and Priests, do ever beare the greatest brunt of all afflictions and troubles in a double respect.

A mystery to be observed: Exod.14.21. Christians defended by Kings and Priests.

Kings and Priests in the worst place, in two respects.

§1. In respect of their adversaries abroad.

§2. In respect of their owne people at home.

1. In respect of their enemies. Mat.26.31. Zach.13.7.

De 1. The adversaries do know full well, that if these shepheards be smitten, then all the sheepe will soone be scattered; and therefore we see the Divell chargeth the world to fight against neither small nor great, save onely against the Captaines of Israel, and these leaders of Gods people.

2 Reg.22.31. 2. In respect of their owne people

De 2. It is apparent, that the government of their owne people at home, is a matter of no small importance; for the rod of government is a miraculous rod, as well well that of Aarons, as that of Moses; for the former of a drie, and seare waster, would blossome and beare ripe Almonds, and the latter would turne to a Serpent and backe againe; and therefore he that was Prince and Prophet compareth the governing of the people, unto the appeasing of the raging of the seas, saying, Thou stillest the noyse of the waves, the raging of the seas, and the madnesse of the people; as if he should say, seeing the people are so unruly, and that turba is but turbata multitudo, the common people an unruly people, crying out; Let us breake their bonds asunder; & nolumus hunc regnare super nos, This man shall not rule, nor raigne over us; It is no lesse miracle to governe the people, then it is to appease the raging of Euripus, or the sea of Oseria, which, as they say, ebbes and flowes 24. times in a day; and in the 77 Psal. he doth not onely number the governing of the people among the rest of Gods wonders; but particularizing the thundering out of heaven, the shaking of the earth, and the dividing of the sea, he putteth this as the last, and not the least of them all, saying, thou leadest thy people like sheepe by the hand of Moses and Aaron.

Exod. 4. 34. Num. 17. 8. The difficulty of government.

Psal. 65. 7.

Psal. 2 31

Luk. 19. 14.

Psal. 77. ult.

And here also you may observe (if you will) that, as these two sorts of men are ever in the greatest brunt, so the Priests are the chiefe of these in all afflictions for there were Multi Reges ante Christum, at nullus Iesus ante illum, many Kings before Christ, but no Iesus before him; and therefore not one of them all so vexed as hee was, non ullus dolor sicut dolor meus, not any sorrow like the sorrow of Christ; for he suffered potius quia Iesus quam quia Rex, rather as a Priest then as a King; and therefore Iesus is put in the first place: Even so, at all times, the Priests are like Uriah, placed in the forefront of the battell; for the Divell doth not so much care, though the kingdomes of men should stand, so he might overthrow the kingdome of Christ; for hee knowes that kings would never take the paines to bring you to heaven, if there were no priests to teach you the way to heaven; besides, Kings have some power and might to repell their wrongs, and to defend themselves from all injuries; At dolor & gemitus, lachrymæ nostræ, & preces nostræ sunt arma nostra, saith Saint Ambrose; but sighing and sobbing, teares and prayers, be all the weapons, and all the strength that wee have to defend our selves; and therefore, seeing we are the chiefest here in supplicio in all troubles, I hope wee shall not bee the least hereafter, in præmio in the joyes of Heaven.

The Priests in worser place then the Prince.

Lam. 1. 12.

2 Sam. 11. 15.

What the divell chiefly maligneth

Ambros. l. 5 Ep. 33

De 2. The Crucifiers of Iesus Nazarenus Rex, are noted to be,

1. The People, 2. The Priests, And 3. Pilate.

2. Who are the crucifiers.

De 1. The people double their cry, Crucifie him, crucifie him; to note that they would crucifie him in a double respect, both quia Iesus, & quia Rex. 1. Because he was a Priests, and 2. Because he was a King; for it is naturally ingraffed in the people to despise their Priests and their Princes; for they are impatient, and cannot endure to have any man to rule them, or to bee superiour over them; and they are the more impatient against their Priests; because that of all things else, they can least of all endure to bee reproved, or contraried in the desires of the flesh, and the wickednesse of this sinnefull world.

1. The people in two respects. Ioh. 19. 6.

1. Because he was a Priest.

2. Because he was a King.

And because both Priests and Princes must be πολλοι, wise and discreet in all their doings, els could they never governe; but the people are λαοι, quasi λεθοι, not much better in sense and understanding, then very stones; it is impossible that there should be any great love betweene them; for we doe alwaies find that, ὁι ἐν γνόσει ὄντες ὅτε τοῖς πολλοῖς ἀρέσκουσιν, ὅτε αὐτοῖς πολλοι, Wise men please not the people, neither can the people please Wise men: and therefore it is apparent, that the people in all respects cannot abide their Priests and their Princes, but doe most eagerly cry out Crucifie, Crucifie, both the one and the other: and therefore seeing the people are against them both, it should teach them both to hold together; for we see, that when God would sever these offices of Kings and Priests to severall sorts of men, which before were in one

Why the people love neither kings nor Priests.

That Kings and Priests should both love and helpe one another.

perſon, the ſame man being both a Prince and a Prieſt, as we may ſee in Melchizedech and others; yet he conferred the ſame upon two brothers, Moſes and Aaron; to ſhew, that Kings and Prieſts ſhould live like brethren in all their waies, and be alwaies ready to defend each other againſt all occurrents. But theſe were Iewes that crucified Ieſum & Regem, and ſo are they Iewes, or worſe then Iewes, that will crucifie either their Prieſts or their Princes.

2. The Prieſts; and why.

De 2. The Prieſts crucified him, quia Ieſus, becauſe he was a Prieſt; Figulus figulo invidet, faber fabro; they envie him becauſe he is a Prieſt; for they cared not for Cæſar; ſo now we find that Prieſts and High-Prieſts are alwaies bitter unto poore Prieſts, as Ianſen: reports it in his Concordance: It ſeemes that Latini non expertes, the Latine Prieſts are not free from this fault of the Iewiſh Prieſts; & utinam nos expertes, and I would to God that poore Prieſts in England were not contemned by the High-Prieſts; that thoſe which have five talents would not deſpiſe them that have but one talent; but that we might convenire in unum, agree together in one mind; for then, although there be multi Lupi velleribus tecti, many Wolves in ſheepes cloathing, ſeeking to deſtroy us; yet in noſtris concordibus animis nullus dabitur illis locus, if wee hold one with another, they ſhall not be able to prevaile againſt us: for Euſebius tels us, that while the Miniſters of the Church did hold together, the Chriſtians increaſed, and the glory of the Church was augmented, & hæc nulla potuit invidia prohibere, Sathan with all his malice, the world with all his cunning, and tyrants with all their cruelty, were never able to hurt or to hinder the glorious eſtate of the Church; but when Biſhop ſet upon Biſhop, and the Miniſters fell out one againſt another, then the Lord ſent a grievous perſecution upon his Church, and cauſed the very Biſhops to flee unto the mountaines, and to wander in ſolitary places, like Pellicanes in the wilderneſſe, or like the owles in the deſert: and no marvell; for if we be divided among our ſelves, we cannot ſtand, ſaith our Saviour; and therefore I would to God, that Prieſts would never ſpeake one againſt another; for then Chriſt ſhould never have beene crucified, and we ſhould not be ſo much as we are contemned.

Ignat.Ep.9. ad Philadel.

Euſeb.l.8.c.1.

That Prieſts ſhould not be one againſt another.

Pſal.102.6,7.

Luk.11.17.

3. Pilate crucified him; and why.

De 3. Pilate crucified him, quia Rex, becauſe hee was a King, as you may plainely ſee in his accuſation; he ſaid hee is a King; and therefore if thou let this man goe, thou ſhalt bee no friend to Cæſar; to ſhew that Kings are chiefly moleſted by great ones, and by ſuch as indeed would have all government in their owne hands.

Ioh.19.12.

All crucifie him becauſe he was juſt.

And all of them crucified him, quia Nazarenus; becauſe he was holy and true; for had he beene ſuch a Prieſt as the High-Prieſts were; had he beene ſuch a King, as Cæſar was, or had he beene ſuch a man, as the people were, wicked in all their waies, then would they not have crucified him; for our Saviour tells us plainely, that for his good deeds, they went about to kill him; even ſo, if we would be as the worldlings are, the world would not hurt us; but therefore doe they hate us, quia contrarij ſunt operibus noſtris, becauſe their deeds are evill, and we beare witneſſe againſt the evill.

Ioh.10.32.

Sap.2.15. Ioh.4.19.

3. In reſpect of the perſon.

3. In reſpect of the perſon, for whom this title was written, and on whoſe croſſe it was infixed, We ſee that he is that eternall Iehovah, and the promiſed Meſſiah, the God of all men, and the Saviour of all good men: For the Prophet David ſaith, That ſalvation belongeth unto the Lord; and in that golden plate, which the High-Prieſt was to weare alwaies upon his fore-head, was ingraved, ἁγιασμα κυριε, Sanctitas Iehovæ, as Tremellius tranſlates it, or Sanctum domino, as the vulgar hath it, all holineſſe is to bee aſcribed to God Iehovah: and in all places we find that potentia Iehovæ, all power belongs to God; but here all theſe are aſcribed to Chriſt; Salvation, quia Ieſus, becauſe he is a Saviour; holineſſe, becauſe a Nazarite; and power, becauſe he is a King: And therefore ſeeing Pilate, that was a Gentile, doth aſcribe this to Chriſt, and ingrave the ſame above his head; then let us, that are Chriſtians acknowledge him for our God, and for our King, for our Saviour, and for our Sanctifier; and

That Chriſt is the Meſſiah and the true Iehovah. Pſal.3.8.

Exod.28.36.

and let us aſcribe all ſalvation, all holineſſe, all power and might unto this our God, our King, and our Ieſus for evermore. And

So much for the firſt part of my Text.

The ſecond part.

2. Part.

THe ſecond part of my Text is ſet downe in the ſecond word, ſcripſi; what I have written, wherein I find theſe two things.

Two things to be obſerved.

1. The perſon that writ this title included.
2. The quality of the title it ſelfe plainely expreſſed.

1. The perſon that wrote this title.

De 1. The perſon that writ this title is noted to be Pilate; for what I have written, I have written, ſaith Pilate; but whether it was himſelfe that writ it, or another for him, the queſtion is not great, neither will I now diſcuſſe it; For it is moſt certaine, by this his anſwer unto the High-Prieſts, that either he did it himſelfe, or it was done in all reſpects by his command, and according to his direction; and of the twaine, I thinke the words of my Text doe inferre cleere inough, that it was himſelfe, that writ it, and none other; to ſhew that a matter of waight ſhould not be ſo lightly committed and poſted over unto others; but that every man ſhould be carefull to doe the ſame himſelfe: which is the fault of very many of us to diſcharge our ſelves of our duties, by impoſing the ſame charge upon others; for though it be very true, that quicquid feceris per alium, feceris tu ipſe; whatſoever thou doſt by another, thou doſt it ſo, that thou thy ſelfe ſhalt anſwer for it, whether the ſame be good or evill; and thou canſt not be cleered, by ſaying, that thou truſtedſt to thy Curate; but when thy people goe to hell, through thy Curates fault, thou maiſt goe there with them, for poſting over thy duty unto ſuch a one, as hath neglected it; yet the beſt way for any man is to imitate Moſes herein, to leave the leſſer matters to the determination of others, but to decide and determine the greateſt affaires himſelfe.

Waighty matters to be done by our ſelves.

We muſt often anſwer for others faults.

Exod. 18. 26.

2. The quality of the title, threefold

De 2. Touching the quality of this title I find that it was,

1. Written.
2. Written in Hebrew Greeke and Latine.
3. Written to ſhew the cauſe of Chriſts death.

1. It was written for three reaſons.

De 1. It was written, and that as we may gather, for three ſpeciall reaſons.

1. Reaſon.

1. In perpetuam rei memoriam, for the perpetuall remembrance of this title.

2. Reaſon.

2. In publicam cauſæ manifeſtationem; for the publique manifeſtation of the title and the cauſe thereof.

3. Reaſon.

3. In veritatis plenam preſervationem, for the full and continuall preſervation of the truth of the title.

Of the firſt reaſon

1. Wee finde, that two things are chiefly commanded to us, in the Scriptures:

Two things commanded us.

1. To learne.
2. Not to forget.

Pro. 4. 5.

And theſe two are joyntly commanded together, Get wiſedome and underſtanding, and forget it not.

1. To get it, and then
2. Not to forget.

Pſal.78.

Pro.3.
Ovid de arte amandi.
Memory how uſefull and how neceſſary in Diuinity.
Exod.20.
Mat.26.
Ioh.14.26.

And therefore David ſaith, O my people heare my Law; and the ſonne of David ſaith, Forget not my Law, O my ſonne; for, Non minor eſt virtus quam quærere parta tueri, it is no leſſe vertue to remember it, then it is to learne it; and therefore as in all things elſe, ſo in Divinity it ſelfe, memory will come to have a ſingular place; for the Father doth not onely bid us, remember to keepe holy the Sabbath day; but the Sonne hath alſo ordained a Sacrament, in remembrance of his Paſſion, hoc facite in commemorationem mei, do this in remembrance of me; and ſo the Holy Ghoſt, in many places, doth put us in remembrance of many things; and for that cauſe he was promiſed unto the Diſciples, to bring into their remembrance the things that our Saviour taught them; becauſe God cannot endure to have his benefits and bleſſings to be forgotten; as the Iſraelites did, forget God their Saviour, which had done ſo great things in Egypt, and fearefull things by the red ſea; and

Pſal.106.21,22.

Our great forgetfullneſſe.
Bern ſer.1.parvorum ſer.

Yet we are naturally ſo forgetfull, & tam labilis memoria, atque primorum parentum lapſu tam vulnerata, and our memory is ſo weake, ſo ſlippery, and ſo wounded by the fall of Adam, (ſaith Saint Bernard,) as that we forget, before the evening, what we have heard ſince the morning; for how ſoone did Pharaohs Butler forget Ioſeph, and Ioſeph his Fathers houſe, and the Diſciples of Chriſt, (which men ſeldome doe) forgat to take bread with them? Nebuchadnezzar dreamed, and he preſently forgat his owne dreame; and we reade of one Meſſala Corvinus, that was ſo ſotti ſh, and ſo forgetfull, as that he forgot his owne name; and I feare, that many of us are ſo forgetfull, as that, unleſſe at time of ſwearing and blaſpheming God, we doe forget the name of God; and therefore if it be needfull, as Themiſtocles ſpeaketh, to learne the art of forgetfullneſſe, and as Saint Paul alſo ſaith in ſome reſpects, I forget thoſe things that are behind; that is, my good deeds leaſt I ſhould be proud thereof; quia memoria virtutis fovea mentis, becauſe the remembrance of our vertues doth oftentimes beſot our mindes, ſaith Saint Gregory, and makes us to leeſe all our goodneſſe, as Orpheus loſt his wife Euridice, for looking backe upon her as the Poet ſaith; Flexit amans oculos & protinus illa relapſa eſt; and I forget my evill deeds alſo, leſt they ſhould caſt me downe into deſpaire, for the remembrance of former ſinnes (ſaith Marke the Erimite) is inough to caſt him downe altogether, that otherwiſe might have had ſome hope of ſtanding; then how much more needfull is it to learne the art of memory, and to uſe all helpes to helpe the ſame? that the remembrance of our evill deeds may breed in us true repentance, and that the remembrance of our good deeds may ſtirre us forward in continuance, and be a comfort unto us in all adverſity; quia immenſa eſt lætitia de recordatione tranſacta virtutis, becauſe exceeding great is the comfort, that we reape by the remembrance of former vertues, ſaith Saint Bernard, in feſto omnium Sanctorum, and eſpecially the remembrance of Gods goodneſſe; that his patience, and his long ſuffering may bring us to repentance, and his juſtice and ſeverity may drive us from our wickedneſſe: how neceſſary (I ſay) is it for us, to uſe all helpes to helpe us, to remember theſe things, and all things elſe, that we ſhould not forget?

Gen.40.c.41.& 51

Mat.16.

Dan.2.

Forgetfullneſſe needfull.

Philip.3.

How the remembrance of things may hurt us.
Gregor. de cura paſtorali par.4.c.1.
Ovid.l.10. Metam.

Memory how needfull, and to what.

Bern.in feſto omnium Sanctor.

But among all the meanes that helpe our memory, we find writing to be the beſt and the ſureſt helpe; for if we heare any thing, that we would not forget, we doe preſently write it downe in our bookes; and then, if we ſhould forget it, we can call it to memory when we liſt; and ſo Saint Auguſtine ſaith, that Scriptura memoriæ ſubſidium; writing is the beſt helpe of memory; and Saint Bernard ſaith, that Scriptura eſt memoriæ reparatrix, writing is the repairer of our memory; and the very Heathens tell us: that their writing of Hiſtories and of the Acts of great men, is the preſervation of the memory of thoſe things, as Grynæus affirmeth.

Writing the beſt meanes to helpe memory.
Aug.to.1.l.ſoliloq. f.219.

Grynæus de utilit. legend hiſtor.

And therefore Pilate would not onely utter this ſentence in the ayre; for that would ſoone have beene forgotten; but he would alſo write the ſame, that it might ever ever be remembred: and God himselfe commanded Moses to write the book of the Law; and he commanded the children of Israel also, to write it upon their gates, and upon their doores without, and to write it upon their posts, and upon their wals within, and to write it upon the Philacteries, and upon the skirts of their garments: and all was to this end, that it might ever be remembred, and never to be forgotten. Deut 6.9. Deut.11.20.

And therefore, hereby it is apparent, how greatly they are to be blamed, that either neglect the same, and do not write, or els do condemne those that use the same; for I know that many cannot indure that we should write our Sermons, but would have us to speake, Quicquid in buccam venerit, what may happen in our mouthes; at hab nab, rather than our studied, premeditated, diligently read, and carefully penned Sermons, which these enemies of God, and the haters of all good learning, do contemptuously call our pocket, or our bosome Sermons: Neither can they indure, that we should looke on our notes in our pulpits, as if that did make the matter worse, or that all mens memories were so good, as that they could remember all things, that they read, without help of their writings, or of what they writ without looking on it. Ignorant contemners of writing.

2. This title was written, that all men might see, and read, and know the same; Nam, cum ad omnes homines universi orbis causa pertineat, ideo meritò omnibus cognoscenda proponitur; for seeing the cause of our Saviours suffering pertained unto all men, of all nations, therefore it was requisite, that the title thereof should be so ordered, in that manner, as that it might be best known unto all men, saith Barradius. Of the second reason why this title was written. Barrad.to.4.l.7.c.12

3. It was written, to preserve the truth hereof uncorrupted; that men might certainly find and know what he did, and be assured of what he writ; For we find, that unwritten verities are many times uncertaine verities; and the received traditions do prove oftentimes deceiving superstitions; and although I do not deny, but that, as Christ himselfe, so the Apostles and Disciples of Christ delivered many things, which are not written in the Scripture; and left many traditions unto the Church, as Epiphanius witnesseth, which the true Church believeth to have been delivered from the Apostles by traditions, as S. Augustine sheweth; the Apostle himselfe, shewing no lesse, when he bids the Thessalonians hold the traditions, which they had learned; whether it be by word or by Epistle; wherein (as I gather) he noteth two sorts of traditions, the one that were written, the other unwritten, and by mouth delivered onely. Of the third reason why it was written. Ioh.vlt.& ult. That the Apostles left many things by tradition. Aug.l.2 de bapt. contra Donatist. 1 Thes.2.15.

Yet, because they were left unwritten, they grew presently, in the very next succeeding ages, to be so doubted and gainsaid, as that most men knew not, which were the true Divine traditions, which Apostolicall, or which Ecclesiasticall; but that, which some affirmed to be Divine or Apostolicall, others said, they were Ecclesiasticall, and other said, they were neither.

For the booke of the Apostles constitutions is allowed for good Scripture in the last Canon of the Apostles; and yet it is rejected by the sixt generall Councell at Constantinople: And in the second Booke of the Constitutions of the Apostles it is said, that Iames the brother of the Lord was no Apostle, and Iudas was absent, when Christ celebrated his last Supper; and yet the Scripture it selfe contrarieth both: Ireneus saith he received it by tradition from the Apostles, that Christ lived untill he was fifty yeares old; whereas we find it in the Scripture, that he lived but to thirty three, or thereabout: S. Chrysostome saith, that ab Apostolis sanctum est, it was received by tradition from the Apostles, that the dead should be prayed for, and that sacrifices should be offered for them, and to that end, he citeth a place out of the Canons of the Apostles: yet S. Augustine saith, that this was a tradition of the Fathers; and so saith Epiphanius; Ecclesia hoc perfecit, traditione a patribus accepta; that the Church did the same by tradition, received from the Fathers; And the same Epiphanius, with Ignatius and Tertullian, do say, that it is an Apostolicall tradition, not to fast upon the Sunday; and therefore Epiphanius saith that, qui affligit animam in dominica, maledictus est a Deo; he that Doubts about traditions. Cap.14. Can.2. Mat.26.& Mar.14 Chrys.ho.3.in Philip. Aug.ser.32. de verb. Apost. Epiph. haeres 75. Epiph. haer.30. Tertul.de coron. milit.

afflicteth

Hieron Dialog. contra Lucifer. c. 4 Not to fast on Sunday.

afflicteth his soule upon the Sunday, is accursed of God; and so saith S. Hierom too: And Ignatius calleth the fasters upon the Sabbath, χριστοκτόνους, Christ-killers; and, as I remember, the Councell of Laodicea, doth most straitly forbid this Sunday fast, under the great curse and censure of Anathema; because we should not so farre comply with the Iewes, that rejected Christ, and despised the day of his glory, but should rather make this day the day of our exultation; because it is the day of our Saviours resurrection; and therefore by no meanes, ought we, saith the Councell, to fast upon this day, which is our Lords Day: And yet the Church can now disanull the same, and with Aerius and Anastathius, they can permit, ut in die dominica jejunent, that men should fast upon the Lords Day: And in the Canons of the Apostles, in Epiphanius, Irenæus, and others, we find it was an Apostolicall tradition, to fast upon the Wednesdayes throughout the whole yeare, except in the feast of Pentecost; and that sixe dayes before Easter, no sustenance should be received, but salt, bread and water; and yet the Church seldome or never useth the same: but this wednesday-fast is now almost forgotten among the Romans, saith Cassander: And Tertullian saith, it was an Apostolicall tradition, to dip the infants three times in baptisme; but this is disallowed in the fourth Councell of Toledo; he saith also, that it was a tradition from the Apostles, to give milk and honey unto their infants, as soone as ever they were baptized, to use the signe of the crosse, almost at every thing that we do; and many other things he affirmeth, to be delivered by tradition from the Apostles; and yet the Church doth wholly reject them: So the Greeke Church did celebrate the feast of Easter upon the foureteenth day of the moneth of March, by tradition from the Apostles; and the Latine Church did celebrate the same feast upon the Sunday, next following after the foureteenth day of the moone of March (if the said foureteenth day happened not upon a Sunday) by tradition also from the Apostles: and the like difference was between them, about leavened and unleavened bread; and either of them grounded their doctrines upon traditions received from the Apostles: And to what end should I reckon any more traditions, that are affirmed by some, to be Apostolicall, by others to be Ecclesiasticall, and by others to be neither? For hereby you may see apparently, how hard it is for us to know, which be the true traditions of the Apostles, and how uncertaine unwritten verities, though they be verities, do shew themselves to be; how suddenly they are doubted, and how greatly they are gaine-said, to be what they are: though I am not ignorant of S. Augustines rule, how to discerne the true Apostolicall traditions, by the generall acceptation of them, throughout the whole and universall Church.

Canon. 68. Epiph. haref. 75. Iren. l. 2. c. 39. & 40.

Cassand. defens. lib. de officio pij viri. Tertul. de corona militis.

Easter, when celebrated.

Aug. quæ. sup. l. 2. de baptis. contra Donat.

And therefore, seeing unwritten things are such uncertaine things, Pilatus scripsit, he writ this title, that the truth thereof might not be altered, but remaine perpetually undoubted and uncorrupted: And for this cause also did the Lord himselfe cause his Prophets and Apostles to write the things that were necessary for our salvation, ut maneret intacta veritas, that the truth of his will might remaine inviolable.

The antiquity of the Scripture.

It is true indeed, that for a great while, God delivered his Word by the Oracle of his voice; but at last, when God saw the time fit, it pleased him to commend the same to writing, and to ingrave it upon publike tables, that it might neither be razed out by oblivion, nor corrupted by errour, nor prophaned by any reprobate rashnesse.

Plato in Timæo in fine.

And if we compare the antiquity of this writing with all other writings whatsoever, we shall find them all farre short of this edition; for, the first written learning that we read of among the Gentiles, were the Poems of Hesiod, Homer, Musæus, and Orpheus; and yet these men lived almost foure hundred yeares, or thereabouts, after Moses time; and the very names of the Grecians were scarce knowne in the world, when the Pentateuch was first written; and Plato doth confesse, that the Egyptians did ever say, that the Grecians were alwaies boyes, that never could be men of age; because they were altogether ignorant of true antiquity.

And

And therefore how much are we bound unto Almighty God for his goodneſſe? for all the truth that was preached and delivered by the Apoſtles, and is left unwritten, is found to be ſo uncertaine, ſo altered, ſo perverted, ſo gainesaid, as that now, men will beleeve nothing thereof: O then how ſhould we have done, or what ſhould we have beleeved, if the Lord had not written any thing unto us? And being written, if it was ſo hardly received? Carpocrates, Severus, Cerdo, and Manes rejecting all the bookes of the Law; and Marcion rejecting all the Evangeliſts, excepting onely Saint Luke; and Cerinthus rejecting all, ſave only S. Matthew; and the Severians diſallowing all the Epiſtles of Saint Paul, and the Acts of the Apoſtles; & alij alias reijcientes, and ſome rejecting one Scripture, ſome another; ſo that many parts of it were not, for the ſpace of 300. or 400. yeeres, received generally for Canonicall Scriptures; (as we ſee that the Revelation of S. John was not generally received in the time of Nazianzene;) and being received, if it be ſo hardly underſtood, and ſo much controverſie about the ſence of the ſame; ô how hardly ſhould we have received any truth, and how much controverſie would have riſen about al truth, if the ſame had not been written at all? and therfore bleſſed be the Lord our God, that for the preſervation and continuance of the truth, mooved, not onely Pilate, to write this one little ſentence, of his conſtant reſolution; but cauſed his Apoſtles alſo to write whatſoever he thought needfull for our eternall ſalvation, as Saint Iude doth teſtifie.

Aug de hereſ. ad Quod vult. Deum. Tertul. l. de hereſibus. Pinlaſt. l. 1.

Euſeb l. 4. c. 29.

Nazianz. de verit ſcript. libru ſ. 730.

Iude ep. v. 3.

And yet, for all theſe reaſons, we find that it was but ſcriptus, written: and therefore quanquam hoc magnum mortalibus munus; though this was a great gift of God to men; yet it is not comparable unto the unſpeakeable benefit of Printing, which God hath reveiled unto us, in theſe latter times; for that now one man can Print more in one day, then many men could ſcarſe write in a whole yeare: and therefore, though they had theſe things written; yet by reaſon of the difficulty and ſlowneſſe of Writing, there was Scripturarum inopia, a ſcarcity and a great want of Scriptures, and but very few could have the ſame; but now ſince the time of Iohn Cuthenberg, that firſt invented, and Conradus, which perfected this art of Printing, about the yeare 1458. there is Scripturarum copia, no want of Scriptures, but we have the ſame ſo plentifull, that now a meane man, for a ſmall matter, may have that, which, 200. yeeres agone, a great man, with a great ſumme of money, could ſcarſe obtaine: and therefore it is a ſhame for us, that we ſhould be unthankefull unto God, for ſo great a bleſſing, or unskillfull in the knowledge of his Word, having the ſame ſo plentifull, as it is now, bleſſed be God, amongſt us.

Pol. Virg. l. 2. c. 8. de inventione rerum.

The great benefit of printing.

The firſt inventors of printing.

Idem ibid.

De 2. It was written in Hebrew, Greeke, and Latine; and that, as we may gather, for foure ſpeciall reaſons.

2 It was written in Hebrew, Greek and Latine, for foure reaſons.

1. Ad Gentium vocationem oſtendendam; to note the vocation and calling of the Gentiles.

2. Ad trium linguarum excellentiam & predicatoribus neceſſitatem ſignificandam; to ſhew the excellency of thoſe three languages, and how neceſſary they be for all Preachers.

3. Ad omnium nationum linguas in Scripturarum tranſlationem prænotandam, to foreſhew the tranſlating of the Scriptures into all languages.

4. Ad veritatem tituli per idoneos teſtes confirmandam, to confirme the verity of the title, as by ſufficient Witneſſes.

1. Titulus iſte, per præcipuas linguas omnium linguarum, Ieſum futurum Principem prædicabat; the writing of this title in the three chiefeſt languages doth ſufficiently ſhew Chriſt to be the Saviour and the King of all people, of all languages, ſaith Saint Auguſtine; and that now, by the ſpreading forth of Gods truth into all tongues, the Gentiles ſhould bee perſwaded to dwell in the Tents of Shem.

1. Reaſon.

Aug. in Pſal. 10, 8.

To ſhew the calling of the Gentiles.

Gen. 9. 27.

2. It was written in Hebrew, Greeke, and Latine, to ſhew, the excellencie of theſe three languages, and how neceſſary they be for all preachers, that would underſtand

2. Reaſon. To ſhew the neceſſity of learning for all preachers.

derſtand the holy Scriptures; for that, in theſe three, they were all written; the Old Teſtament, all in Hebrew, (except Tobit, Iudith and Daniel, which were written in the Chaldee tongue, which was but a baſtard kind of Hebrew, as the Scottiſh tongue is but a kinde of baſtard Engliſh, and the booke of Wiſedome and the ſecond booke of Macchabees, that were written in Greeke, as Saint Hierome writeth) and the New Teſtament was all written in Greeke, (except the Goſpell of Saint Matthew; which was written in Hebrew, as Euſebius witneſſeth, and which Saint Hierom ſaw in Hebrew, at Cæſarea, in the Library of Pamphilus Martyr, as himſelfe doth teſtifie,) and both the Old and New Teſtament were tanſlated into Latine, preſently after the times of the Apoſtles, as it ſeemeth out of Saint Hierom, Irenæus, and Saint Auguſtine, who affirme, that there were many Latine tranſlations in their time: And therefore without theſe three languages, it is unpoſſible to underſtand the Scriptures; not onely, becauſe that in theſe three tongues were written all the bookes of learning, either humane or divine (which without doubt are great helpes for the underſtanding of the Scriptures) but alſo becauſe the Scriptures themſelves were written in theſe languages, and that, many times, we find our tranſlations to be ſo different, and ſometimes ſo contrary to the originall, as that we are faine to runne, even from the Latine it ſelfe, to the fountaine of the Greeke and Hebrew Text, for the underſtanding of many places.

Euſeb. l. 3. c. 24 l. 5. c. 8.
Iren. l. 3. c. 1.
Hieron. in vita Matthæi.
Yet ſome doe thinke, that S. Matthew writ his Goſpell firſt in Greeke, and that the ſame was afterwards tranſlated into Hebrew.
Hieron. in Prolog. Joſ.
Aug. l. 2 de doctrina Chriſtiana.
Moſt learning written in theſe three languages.

The raſh unliterate men blamed.

Nazian. orat. 2.

And therefore this greatly blameth the raſhneſſe of the people, that thinke they can underſtand and interpret the holy Scriptures, though they have neither Hebrew, Greeke nor Latine, yea many of them that cannot reade good Engliſh, and yet, ſi verbum nacti ſunt, (ſaith Nazianzene) ſubitò proſiliunt, ſummâq; cum injuria rectè tradita diſcerpunt; if they get but a word by the head, they will ſo inſult, and keepe ſuch a coyle, as if they onely did expound it rightly, and all other expoſitions, be they never ſo well and truely delivered, they reject and contemne them: And it would pittie a mans heart to ſee, what great paines they will take, in the quoting of many Scriptures, (for they have them at their fingers end) and to obſerve how peeviſhly they will expound them, and how perverſly they will apply them; of whom I may ſay with Tertullian, quod credunt Scripturis, ut credant adverſus Scripturas; they beleeve the Scriptures, that they may beleeve againſt the Scriptures; for the truth of any matter conſiſteth not, in the quoting of many Scriptures, but in the right underſtanding, and in the well and fit applying of thoſe Scriptures, that are alleadged; for who knoweth not, but that the Arrian Heretikes brought forty places of Scripture more, then the Catholikes had againſt them; but they were all moſt falſly underſtood, and moſt lewdly applyed; and therefore they did nothing els herein, but arme their tongues, that they might be eloquent againſt the truth, ſaith Nazianzene; & eadem Scripturarum facere ad materiam ſuam, as Tertullian ſpeaketh, and to enthrall the Scriptures, to be their ſlaves, and to ſlaughter the ſame to ſerve their turne: And then the Scripture, ſo miſapplyed, becommeth the ſheepes cloathing, wherein the Wolfe doth ſhrowd himſelfe, that ſo, by the ſoftneſſe of his fleece, the ſimple Chriſtian might not miſtruſt the tyranny of his teeth.

Scriptures abuſed

Tertul. de præſcrip. adverſus Hæret.

Vide etiam Theod. Eccleſ. hiſt. l. 2. c. 18

Nazian. orat. 1.

Tertul. de præſcript.

How the Scripture comes to be the ſheepes cloathing to ſhroud the Wolfe.
Mat. 4. 6.

And therefore, as the Divell alleadged Scripture unto Chriſt; ſo when the Scripture is miſapplyed, then out of doubt (ſaith Vinc. Lyrinenſis) the Divell ſpeaketh unto us by their mouth, and ſaith unto us, as he ſaid to Chriſt, Si filius Dei es, mitte te deorſum, if thou beeſt the Sonne of God and a true profeſſor of his Goſpell, then caſt thy ſelfe downeward, from the expoſition of the Church, and the interpretation of thy teacher, to that, which thy ſelfe thinkeſt moſt agreeable to Gods Word, and thinkeſt likelieſt to be true; Scriptum eſt enim, for it is written, that hee ſhall give his holy ſpirit unto thee, and hee ſhall lead thee unto all truth; Why then ſhouldeſt thou hazard thy ſoule with the opinion of others, and not rather beleeve what thy ſelfe thinkeſt to bee true, when as thou haſt the Scriptures aſwell as they?

Vincen. Lyrin. adverſus prophanas hæreſ. Novat.
How the divell teacheth his Schollers.

Ioh. 16. 13.

How we ſhould anſwer the divell.

But then, as Chriſt unto the divell, ſo ſhould every Chriſtian ſay, Vade Satana non non tentabis, avoid Sathan, thou ſhalt not tempt me; Scriptum eſt enim, for it is written, that, Eccleſia eſt columna veritatis, the Church is the piller of truth, and whoſoever heareth not the Church, ſhould be, tanquam Ethnicus, as an Heathen, and that the Prieſts lips ſhould preſerve knowledge, and that the people ſhould ſeeke for the knowledge of the Law from his mouth, as ſaith the Prophet: Nam quicquid eſt in Scripturis illis, altum & divinum eſt; for whatſoever is in the Scripture, it is myſticall, it is high, it is very deepe, and farre paſſing the capacity of ignorant men: & hinc omnes hæreſes, (as Saint Auguſtine ſpeaketh) Dum Scripturæ bonæ intelliguntur non benè, hence proceedeth all hereſies, when the good Scriptures are not rightly underſtood, but moſt ignorantly expounded, according to the fancie of every idle braine: and therefore ſeeing no Scripture is to be interpreted, privata interpretatione, by any private mans interpretation; I will not venture to be fencing and cenſuring, underſtanding, or applying the moſt holy Scriptures; but I will leave that to them, whoſe place and office it is to doe the ſame; for that The ſpirit of the Prophets is ſubject to the Prophets, as ſaith the Apoſtle. And thus ſhould every Chriſtian man anſwer unto that tempting divell, who by theſe ſubtle ſleights doth ſeeke to deceive the ſimple.

1 Tim. 3. 15.

Mat. 18 17. Mal. 2. 7.

Aug Ep. 197. ad Honorat. The Scriptures how deepe they be. Idem to 9. in tract. 18 in Iohan.

Hereſies whence they ſpring.

Vide Bedam in 2 Pet. 1. 20.

1 Cor. 14. 32.

And yet for all this, we may now complaine with Saint Auguſtine, that nulla imbutus Poetica diſciplina, though a man, which had no skill in Poetry, would not read Terence, without a Maſter; yet will every man ruſh into the holy Scriptures, and thinke, that cum legerit per ſe, ipſe cognovit, as ſoone as he reades it, he himſelfe doth underſtand it: and it is a wonderfull thing to ſee, how boyes, preſtiſes, and plow-boyes will ſweare, if you anger them, they know more then their teachers, and doe underſtand the Scriptures better then all the ancient Fathers; For although Dawbers, Smithes, Carpenters, and Coblers, abſq; doctore non poſſunt eſſe quod cupiunt (ſaith Saint Hierome) cannot learne their trades without a Maſter; quoniam id, quod medicorum eſt, promittunt medici, becauſe Phyſitians onely treate of phyſicke, & Tractant fabrilia Fabri, and Smithes are moſt skillfull in the anvill; yet ſola Scripturarum ars eſt, quam ſibi paſſim omnes vendicant, the Scripture is that only art, which all men challenge unto themſelves: and therefore, hanc garrula anus, hanc delirus ſenex, hanc ſophiſta verboſus, hanc univerſi præſumunt, lacerant, docent, antequam diſcant; the pratling goſſip, the doting old man, the babbling Sophiſter, and all elſe; the fooliſh girles, and the ſawcie boies, will moſt impudently preſume of the knowledge of this art, and will teare it, ſpoyle it, teach it, before they can learne it; all of them thinke they have the ſpirit of God, the ſpirit of Propheſie, and the underſtanding of the Scriptures, aſwell as we; and if you doe obſerve them, you ſhall ſee how demurely they will looke up, and pauſe for an expoſition of ſome Scripture, as if they had ſome Enthuſiaſmes, or a familiar at their eare, to direct them what to anſwer; and at laſt you ſhall heare the expoſition of Abaddon, and a bad one indeed you ſhall find it, either apparantly falſe, or impertinently true.

Idem ad Honoratum quo ſupra.

How every one ventures to interpret the Scripture

Hieron Ep. ad Paulin.

Rev. 9. 11.

But alas beloved, non equidem invideo, I envie no mans true and lawfull knowledge; but I would to God they knew all things, ſo they knew it truely; yet becauſe the myſtery of the Lords commanding Adam, that he ſhould not eate of the tree of knowledge, was very great; and the deſire of Sathan to have them taſte thereof, was not very ſmall; I would have all men to conſider well, how they venture upon the tree of knowledge, which is the Word of God: for you ſee the divell promiſed unto Evah, and he kept his promiſe, that if they ſhould eate of the tree of knowledge, their eyes ſhould be opened, and they ſhould have knowledge, and ſo it was; but alaſſe, what good did their knowledge? it taught them a way to runne away from God; ſo he promiſeth you knowledge, and he will performe it; but it ſhall be to make you to fall, as the Prophet ſpeaketh of Babylon; thy wiſedome and thy knowledge have cauſed thee to rebell; for theſe be delitiæ Diaboli, & divina myſteria iniquitatis, the delights of Sathan, and the divine

Gen. 2. 17. Gen. 3. 1. 4. 5.

Eſay 47. 10.

divine myſteries of iniquity, to make a man cum ratione inſanire, to run mad through too much wiſedome; with the reaſon, that God hath given us, to doe all things contrary unto reaſon; and with the knowledge of Gods Word, to make us ignorant in the truth, and to pervert the ſame to our owne deſtruction.

Act.26.24.

And therefore, leaſt too late we cry with the Poet,

Ingenio perij, qui miſer ipſe meo;

Rom.12.3. O miſerable men that we are, we are periſhed through our owne wiſedome, and the deſire of gaining knowledge; let us ſapere ad ſobrietatem, be wiſe unto ſobriety, and be contented with the knowledge, which God is contented to give us; and let us take heed how we ſtretch out our hands unto the forbidden tree, how we interpret and apply the holy Scriptures; or if you will not; then can we but warne you to take heed betimes, leaſt you fall into the number of thoſe, who being unlearned and unſtable, doe wreſt the Scriptures unto their owne deſtruction; for qui Scripturas malè intelligunt, de medicamentis vulnera ſibi faciunt, they that do interpret the Scriptures falſly, do make wholeſome medicines to become deadly poyſon unto themſelves.

2 Pet.3.16. Aug. ſer.61. de Temp.

And yet I ſay not this to deterre men, either from hearing Sermons, or from reading the holy Scriptures; for I know what knowledge is required in all Chriſtians, that every one be able to render an account of his faith, and not onely to anſwer, but alſo to ſtop the mouthes of all the gainſayers of the truth of our profeſſion; and I remember well inough what Theodoret and S. Chryſoſtome have ſet downe, how expert and skillfull the poore labourers and handicrafts men of their times and of the primitive Church, were in the holy Scripture; and as Saint Paul ſaith in another caſe, I would that all men were even as I am, that is, ſingle, and unmarried; ſo I ſay in this caſe, I would the meaneſt man knew as much as I know, or more, if it were Gods will, and I would not envie him one jot, no more then Moſes did the propheſying of *Eldad and Medad, Numb.*11.28. but I ſay this, onely as a caveat to warne them, to take heed, how they, with unwaſhen hands, and perhaps prophane lips, will ſo boldly, beyond their capacities, venture to interpret and expound theſe ſacred Scriptures.

1 Cor.7.7.

3 Reaſon, To foreſhew the tranſlating of the Scriptures. Ledeſima tract. de divinis ſcrip. quavis paſſim lingua non legend.c 3. The Hebrew, Greeke and Latine, of the greateſt extent of all other languages.

3. It was written in Hebrew, Greeke and Latine, to foreſhew the tranſlating of the Scriptures into all languages: Tres enim linguæ præcipuæ omnium linguarum regnum adumbrarunt, ſaith Saint Cyrill; for theſe three ſpeciall languages doe adumbrate, and incluſively ſignifie all the languages of the world; and Iacobus Ledeſima, that writ his Treatiſe, de divinis Scripturis, quavis paſſim lingua, non legendis; that the Scriptures ſhould not be read in every language, denies not, but theſe three languages were Univerſaliſſimæ & maximè communes, the moſt univerſall, and moſt commonly uſed languages of all others, having ſpread themſelves almoſt throughout all regions; as the Hebrew was ſpread well nigh throughout all the Eaſt; the Greeke throughout all Gracia and Aſia minor, and many other Provinces; and the Latine throughout the greateſt part of Europe, imo per totum Romanum imperium notaerat, (ſaith Ledeſima) yea it was knowne throughout all the Romane Empire. And what might this ſignifie, that the Scriptures ſhould be written in the generalleſt and univerſaleſt languages, that were then uſed in all the world, but to ſhew indeed, that it ſhould be tranſlated, in good time, unto all languages that profeſſed Chriſt; as we ſee intruth, not long after the Apoſtles time, but very long before Luthers time, the Armenians had the Pſalter, and ſome other peeces of Scripture tranſlated by Saint Chryſoſtome; the Slavonians had the Scriptures tranſlated by Saint Hierom; the Gothes by Vulpilas; our owne countrymen, had the whole Bible tranſlated them, by venerable Bede; the Syrians, Arabians, Æthiopians, Dalmatians, Ægyptians, and the Huſſites in Bohemia, had it tranſlated into their vulgar languages, as Ledeſima himſelfe cannot deny. Why then ſhould other nations be deprived of that benefit, which theſe and others had, when as God is no accepter of perſons, but that in every nation, hee that feareth him, and worketh righteouſneſſe, ſhall bee accepted with him?

When the Scriptures began to be tranſlated.

Rhemiſh preface, Sect 4. D. Fulk anſwer to the preface. Fox preface before the 4. Evang. in the Sax. *Ledeſim.c.*23.

Act.10.35.

It

It is true indeed that the Iewes were very spitefull alwaies unto the Gentiles; and therefore in the time of Hyrcanus and Aristobulus they did make that cursed decree, which Rabbi Zacuth setteth downe, in lib. Iuchasin; maledictus sit, qui filium suum Græcorum instruxerit disciplinis, whosoever instructeth his sonne, in the Greeke discipline, let him be accursed, as Petrus Cunæus sets it downe, de repub. Heb. l. 3. c. 4. p. 443.

Yet we find that the Old Testament was translated into Greeke by the Septuagint, the 70. interpreters, at the command of Ptolomeus Philadelphus, about 341. before Christ; and we find other Greeke versions of Aquila, Symachus and Theodot; And what might this signifie, but as it were, to propheſie and foretell the translating of the Scriptures into other languages, then which at first they were written? The Iewes also had the Scriptures in their owne mother tongue; and Saint Matthew writing unto the Hebrewes, writ in Hebrew as some thinke; or if he writ in Greeke, as others thinke; yet was his Gospell presently translated into Hebrew, and the Apostles, that writ unto the Grecians, writ in Greeke; and why was this, but that every nation might have the Word of God in their owne proper language? All which, with many other reasons, that I could alleadge, doe sufficiently shew how the Scriptures indeed should be translated into all languages.

Euseb Orig. Et propter hanc versionem legis Moſis in profanum ſermonem, dolorem ſuum quotannis ſolemnis ieiunio ad 8 Tenath fuiſſe ſunt. Cunæus. Ibid p. 444.

Ob. But against this it may be objected, that this should be the cause of many errors and heresies among all the simple people, especially considering, that in the Scriptures there are multa difficilia intellectu, many hard and difficult places, so that it falleth not within the compasse of every mans understanding to judge of Scriptures, sed exercitatorum tantum, but onely of those that are skillfull and well exercised therein, who, notwithstanding all their knowledge, are yet many times found to stumble; and therefore how much sooner the ignorant people, that can neither understand the tropes, nor distinguish betweene facts, that should be avoided, and those that should be imitated, betweene the literall and the spirituall sense, betweene figurative speeches, Historics, and Parables, or reconcile the places that seeme repugnant one to another, as

That all are not able to understand § Scriptures. 2 Pet. 3. 13.

Gregor. Nazian.

Repugnant places of Scripture.

§ Gen. 2. Increase and multiply.
Luk. 13. Blessed are the barren.
§ Gen. 22. God tempted Abraham.
Iam. 1. God tempteth no man.
§ Exod. 14. They saw God and did eate and drinke.
Exod. 33. Thou canst not see my face and live.
§ Mat. 5. Let your light so shine before men.
Mat. 6. Take heed that you doe any thing to be seene of men.
§ Mat. 15. What entreth by the mouth defileth not a man.
1 Cor. 6. Drunkards shall not inherit the kingdome of God.

And many such places, which now is too long to rehearse; all which things, with many others, are requisite, for the interpretations of the Scriptures; and therefore, seeing it is so difficult a matter, as that the wisest and greatest Schollers doe find it hard enough to doe these things, though they be never so expert both in Latine, Greeke and Hebrew; for ὡϛ τοῦτα τὶς ἱκανὸς, Who is sufficient for these things? O then what brave construction, what wise distinctions, what learned reconciliations, what sound expositions, and what deepe mysteries will these men gather and collect out of Scripture, that have neither Art nor languages, neither Hebrew, Greeke, nor Latine, nor scarce good English? will they not fall into a thousand errours if they may have the Scripture to read at their pleasure?

2 Cor. 2. 16.

Resp. And I confesse indeed, that in the Scriptures, there are many hard places, many seeming repugnant places, many mysteries, parables, figurative speeches, and such like; but yet that this should not hinder the translating of them unto our vulgar speeches; for that we give no leave unto our people, either to distinguish, or to reconcile, or to interpret any place or parcell of the

How farre wee permit the people to use the Scriptures.

Scripture, but onely to be ſimplici lectione contenti, contented with the reading of it, and goe no further; for, as when the keeper of an orchard opens his gates, or breakes downe his hedges, to ſuffer the ſwine to come in, to eate up the graſſe and the apples, that fall from the tree, he doth not give them leave to dig up the trees by the rootes: and as, when the porter of an houſe doth open his doores, to ſuffer the dogges to come to his maſters chamber, and to gather up the crums, that fall under his maſters table, he doth not give them leave to ſnatch the meate out of the childrens hands; even ſo, when we give them leave to read the Scriptures, we give them leave to doe no more: But, as God himſelfe ſuffered Adam to ſee the tree of knowledge, but not to taſte of it, and Vzza to ſee the Arke, but not to touch it: ſo doe we give leave unto our people to ſee the Scriptures, to looke into the ſame, and to read it, but not to interpret or to expound the ſame.

Similies explaining the former point;

Gen.2.

2 Sam.6.

Repl. But then you will reply; how can it be, that they, which are ſo preſumptuous of their owne knowledge, ſo ready, to take farre more then we give, taking an ell, when we give them an inch, ſo unruly and ſo unwilling to obey what we ſay unto them, ſhould be contented with the only reading of the Scriptures, and do no more?

Reſp. And I muſt needs confeſſe, that hinc illæ lachrymæ, hence proceeds all the miſchiefe; for experience teacheth us, that now, having the Scriptures in their owne languages to be read, every man will be his owne Doctor, and thinkes, that his owne ſenſing and interpreting of the Scriptures is as good, as the beſt Divines in the world; for though we be ſaid to be the ſtewards and diſpenſers of Gods ſpirituall treaſure; to give unto every one his owne portion in due ſeaſon; yet now, they will take what they liſt, and when they liſt, and not ſtand to what we give them; the wicked will aſſume and appropriate unto himſelfe the ſure mercies and promiſes of David, and the graces of God, which belongs onely unto the godly, and not to them; for now having all in their own hands, they will doe what they liſt, who is Lord over them? and I have heard hiſce auribus, horrendum dictu, moſt fearefull things, with mine owne eares, not onely what Divines have taught in the Pulpit to be cenſured, and judged by Artizans in the Ale-houſe, but alſo many ſimple people and tradeſmen to ſay, that if they were permitted, they could preach farre better then many of our Preachers; meaning thoſe, as I take it, that uſe ſome latine, or the ſayings of Fathers in their ſermons; and therefore, preſuming ſo much upon their uſurped and unjuſtly gotten knowledge, that they have gotten, but not by us, they will not beleeve us in any thing, that is contrary to their owne minds; but, if we ſay, that we have any ſpeciall prerogatives in the underſtanding of the Scriptures more then any elſe, then doe they thinke with Corah, that we take too much upon us, that are the ſonnes of Levi; and it is eaſier to pull their hearts out of their bellies, then to pull ſuch conceits out of their heads, or ſuch wicked thoughts out of their hearts.

Luk.12.4.

Laertius in vita Anacharſis.

The impudencie and obſtinacy of ſome fooliſh people.

Num.16.

And yet for all this, I ſay the fault was none of ours, for the tranſlating of the Scriptures; for though wee muſt not doe evill, that good may come thereof; yet we ſhould doe good, though evill doth come thereof; for the cauſe of that evill, which ariſeth by reaſon of ſome good, is not primarily from that good, but accidentally; as the brightneſſe of the ſunne in his ſtrength, is the cauſe of blindneſſe to the weake and queaſie eies, not that the ſunne makes blind, which is ſubjectum lucis & objectum viſus, the ſubject, from whence proceeds all light, and that object of our ſight, whereby we ſee all light; but becauſe our weake eyes are not able to looke upon the ſame; even ſo the tranſlating of the Scriptures is the cauſe of errour, non efficienter, not efficiently of it ſelfe; for ſo it is a Lanthorne unto our feet, and a light unto our paths; but accidentally it may be the cauſe of errours; becauſe our ignorance cannot attaine unto the knowledge of it; and yet preſumptuouſly we will venter to looke too fully upon this light, and ſo, our underſtanding being dazeled, we fall into a thouſand errours; and ſo

Subiectum inhæſionis.

Pſal.119.105.

conſequently

conſequently it appeareth that the cauſe of theſe errours is not in the tranſlation of the Scriptures, but in the corruption of our underſtanding, and the preſumption of our minde; the cauſe efficient is in our ſelves, but accidentally in the Scripture; and therefore, ſeeing the tranſlating of the Scriptures in it ſelfe is exceeding good, to give light and conſolation unto all Chriſtians, it ſhould not be left undon, though evill accidentally doth come thereof.

For ſi bonum feceris bona intentione; If thou doſt good with a good intent, licet malum inde perveniat, non imputabitur tibi pro peccato, ſaith Saint Ambroſe, though evill ſhould come thereof; yet ſhall not that evill be imputed to thee for ſinne; for we ſee that the death of Chriſt accidentally brought the contempt of divers unto himſelfe, the rejection of the Iewes, and the deſtruction of many others, it being to the Iewes a ſtumbling blocke, and to the Grecians fooliſhneſſe; becauſe they would not beleeve in him; and therefore ſhould he not have died, becauſe theſe evills ſhould not have followed? abſit, ô God forbid; for that it brought a thouſand thouſand times more good, and that cauſaliter & efficienter, then it hath done evill, but accidentaliter & aliunde; even ſo the tranſlating of the Scriptures brings contempt to our ſelves, that are the Miniſters, and the deſtruction of many thouſand ſoules; becauſe they will not ſubmit their owne judgements, to the judgement of their teachers, but will runne headlong, according to their own deviſes, into a thouſand errours; yet God forbid that the ſame ſhould be left undone, to the far greater loſſe of the godly then this can be hurt unto the wicked; quia cauſaliter efficit majus bonum, quam accidentaliter oritur inde peccatum; becauſe I ſay farre greater good doth efficiently proceed thereby unto the godly and ſober minded Chriſtian, then it doth accidentally, and through their owne perverſneſſe, bring hurt even to the wicked.

The death of Chriſt accidentally, is the cauſe of much evill to many. 1 Cor. 1. 23.

That the tranſlating of the Scriptures doth a thouſand times more good then it can doe hurt.

And therefore ſeeing we, by tranſlating the Scriptures, have given them the ſword of the ſpirit, but to defend themſelves, and not to offend our ſelves; for to read it humbly to their conſolation; and not to interpret it raſhly for their deſtruction, if they, verſo mucrone necabunt, doe play the mad-men with this two-edged ſword, to contemne us, and to kill themſelves and others, then are they guiltie of their owne bloud, and we are free from the bloud of all men.

4. It was written in Hebrew, Greeke, and Latine, that the truth of this title might be confirmed, as it were by three ſufficient witneſſes; ſcriptus eſt enim tribus linguis, tanquam tribus teſtibus approbatus, ſaith Saint Auguſtine, it was written in three languages, as approved by three witneſſes; becauſe it is written, that in the mouth of two or three witneſſes, every word ſhall be eſtabliſhed; To teach us indeed, that no great matter ſhould bee done without ſufficient witneſſes; and therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, receive no accuſation againſt an Elder, without two or three witneſſes; many are ready enough to ſpeake evill of them, but beleeve them not unleſſe thou be very ſure of it by divers witneſſes; for that in great matters and againſt great perſons, of place or authority, every word or every man ſhould not be beleeved. Though now beloved, commonly whatſoever is ſpoken, and by whomſoever it is ſpoken againſt them, it is no ſooner told, though doubtfully delivered, and perhaps by heare-ſay, but it is preſently and certainely beleeved, as if the hearers had beene ſeers thereof; ſo ready are wee to heare and to beleeve any thing that is ſpoken to their diſcredit, though we will beleeve nothing that they ſay unto us for our own profit; we will beleeve the errors of their lives, though we heare it but from others; but we will not beleeve the truth of their doctrine, though we heare it from themſelves.

4. Reaſon, To confirme the verity of this title. Aug. to 8. in Pſal. 55.

Deut. 17. 16.

That no great matter ſhould be done without ſufficient witneſſe 1 Tim. 5. 19.

De 3. It was written to ſhew the cauſe of Chriſt his death, which was moſt truly ſet downe by Pilate; becauſe he was Ieſus of Nazareth King of the Iewes; he died that he might ſave us, and he ſaved us that he might raigne over us as a King for ever; for it is certaine that as Balaam, Saul and Caiphas propheſied, ſo Pilate did the ſame, divino quodam inſtinctu, by a divine inſtinct as S. Auguſtine ſheweth; and therefore Brentius ſaith, that as the theefe upon the

3. It was written to ſhew the cauſe of Chriſt his death.

Aug. tract. 11. in Iohan.

Bremius in 19.c. Johan. Pilate the firſt Apoſtle.

Croſſe is made primus Martyr, the firſt Martyr of Chriſt, ſo Pilate is hereby made primus Apoſtolus Chriſti, the firſt Apoſtle that wrote of Chriſt.

Beda in 2 Pet.c.1. Wicked Prophets underſtand not their owne propheſies, ſo Preachers that are wicked. Aug. quo ſupra. Dat ſine mente ſonum: Virg.

But although the true Prophets did underſtand what they propheſied, as venerable Bede doth declare; yet I cannot be perſwaded, that thoſe wicked men, which did propheſie, did underſtand their owne Propheſies, but that the Spirit of God, did, agere per malos, and not in malis, ſpake through them, but not in them, as he ſpake by Baalams aſſe, which underſtood not her owne voice; for S. Auguſtine ſaith, that ſuch propheſies and works of the wicked are ineffabilis vis divinæ operationis in cordibus ignorantium, the ineffable force of divine operation, which worketh the ſame in the hearts of them that know it not; ſo that we may ſay of Pilate, neſciebat quid ſcripſerat, he knew not what he writ, as the Evangeliſt ſaith of S. Peter, neſciebat quid diceret, he knew not what he ſaid; and therefore ſeeing Pilate knew not what he writ, or to what end he writ it, in reſpect of God; it ſeemeth doubtfull why he writ it, or with what mind he writ it in reſpect of himſelfe, what purpoſe Pilate had herein?

Mar.9.6.

That Pilate ſhewed the cauſe of Chriſts death for three reaſons.

I anſwer, that it may be gathered he writ it for three ſpeciall reaſons.

1. To ſhew his owne fidelity.
2. To declare our Saviours innocency.
3. To upbraid the Iewes impiety.

1. Reaſon, to ſhew his own fidelity. Friends not to be taken for foes. Tertul. in Apolog.

1. To ſhew his owne fidelity to Cæſar, that he would put to death each one, that would affect any part of his dominions: to teach all men, and eſpecially all Deputies, how carefully they ſhould defend the dominions of their Kings: but they ſhould take heed, leſt that, with Pilate, inſtead of Cæſars foes, they put to death his chiefeſt friends: Tertullian ſheweth us, that the wicked men accuſed alwaies the Chriſtians, and eſpecially the Preachers, for the greateſt enemies unto Princes; yet he ſheweth, that in very deed, Princes never had more faithfull ſubjects, more earneſt defenders of their crownes and dignities, than the Miniſters and the Preachers of the Goſpell.

2. Reaſon, to ſhew Chriſt his innocency. Chryſ. hom. 48, in Mat.

2. He writ it, to declare the innocency of our Saviour Chriſt; for the Iewes would have him crucified among the wicked theeves; and therefore, ne quis tanquam malum & perditum accuſare poſſit, ſaith S. Chryſoſtome, leaſt any man ſhould accuſe him for an evill doer; ut calumniantium os obſtrueret, that he might ſtop the mouthes of the wicked, in Regem ſuum, & innocentem inſurrexiſſe denunciat, he ſheweth that they did thus riſe and rage againſt their own king, againſt an innocent man; and ſo Theophilact thinketh too.

Theoph in Joh. 19. 3. Reaſon, to upbraid the impiety of the Iewes.

3. He writ it to upbraid the impiety and the wickedneſſe of the Iewes; and no doubt but the high Prieſts did full well underſtand his meaning to be ſuch; and therefore they deſired him not to write King of the Iewes, but that he ſaid, he was King of the Iewes: Et partim ulciſcens ſe de illis, and partly revenging himſelfe on them; becauſe they would not yeeld to his deſire of ſaving Chriſt, oſtendit malitiam eorum, he ſheweth the malice and the madneſſe of this people, that they would crucifie,

Idem quo ſupra. The madneſſe of the Iewes three wayes; that they would crucifie

1. A Saviour.
2. An Innocent.
3. A King, yea their own King, the King of the Iewes.

1. Their Saviour. Aug. in Pſal. 120.8.

1. He came to ſave them, yea to ſave them from their ſinnes; not as Moſes did the Iſraelites, è lutulentis mannum operibus, to eaſe their ſhoulders from the burden, and their hands from making of pots, but to ſave their ſoules from the pit, wherein there is no water; and therefore what a ſhame was it unto them to crucifie him? but yet he ſaith himſelfe, for my good deeds ye go about to kill me; Here then they reward him evill for good, to the great diſcomfort of his ſoule. Joh. 10.32.

2. An innocent man. Pſal. 11.

2. He was juſt and innocent; for what evill hath he done (ſaith Pilate) juſtum quid fecit? what hath the righteous done? Doth not your law ſay, juſtum & innocentem non condemnabis, thou ſhalt not condemne the innocent, and yet will you you condemne this innocent man? Tum hoc erit in teſtimonium, then this will be a teſtimony of your perpetuall ſhame.

3. He was their King; for ſhall I crucifie your King, ſaith Pilate? Doth not your God ſay, Touch not mine annointed? And yet will you crucifie his annointed? Then this alſo will be a teſtimony of your ſhame; and therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith, that Pilate writ, Rex Iudæorum, ut ille titulus exprobraret frontem ipſorum, quod a Rege ſuo manus non abſtinuerunt, King of the Iewes, that this title might ſhame the Iewes, that they would not refraine their hands from their King, but would, contra proprium Regem inſurgere, (ſaith Theophilact) even riſe and rage, and crucifie their owne proper King; a moſt intolerable ſhame.

3. Their King. 1. Paralip. 16. 22.

Aug. in Pſal. 56.

Theoph. in Ioh. 19.

For Kings be Gods Vice-gerents here on earth; and therefore Daniel ſaith three times in one Chapter, that the kingdomes be Gods, and that he giveth them to whom he will, and he ſaith, that this is ſententia vigilum, & ſermo ſanctorum: and Irenæus ſaith, that, cujus juſſu naſcuntur homines, ejus juſſu conſtituuntur Principes, by whoſe command men are borne, by his authority they are appointed Princes: and Iob ſaith, that it is God, qui Reges collocat in perpetuum, which ſetteth up Kings for ever; and S. Paul tels us generally, that omnis poteſtas eſt a Deo, all power is from God.

Kings placed by God to be his under-gods on earth Dan. 4. Iren. l. 5.

Iob 36. 7.

And therefore ſeeing God alone is he, per quem regnant Reges, by whom kings do raigne; he ſaith with a note of univerſality, that omnis anima, every ſoule ſhould be ſubject to them: Sive Apoſtolus, ſive Evangeliſta, ſive Propheta, ſive quis tandem fuerit, ſaith S. Chryſoſtome, whether he be an Apoſtle, or an Evangeliſt, or a Prophet, or whoſoever els he be, he is to be ſubject unto his King; for if all be commanded to be ſubject, then none is excluded from this ſubjection; and he ſaith alſo, that no man ſhould, not onely non occidere, aut non perdere, not to kill, or not to deſtroy, ſed ne tangere, not ſo much as to touch them, that are his annointed; Quia ſuper Imperatorem non eſt ullus, niſi ſolus Deus, qui fecit Imperatorem, ſaith Optatus, and Tertullian too:

Pro. 8. 16.

Chryſ. hom. 23. in 13 c. ad Rom. That we oughe not to do the leaſt indignity unto our Kings.

Aſtra Deo nil majus habent, nil Cæſare terra:

Optat. l. 3. contra Parmen.

* For as God is the chiefe in heaven, ſo the King, next under God, is the chiefe on earth, ſaith the Poet: And I could never find where any man might touch his ſuperiour tactu noxio, with any hurtfull touch; and therefore Kings themſelves, being equall, and not ſubſtitutes one to another, may not touch one another, but ſhould leave that to God alone to diſplace them, which did only place them, and him alone to touch them, becauſe he alone is above them.

* Maulim loc. com.

Kings not to touch one another.

And therefore David, though he was annointed himſelfe, yet would he not lay his hands upon Gods annointed; but he greatly blameth the Philiſtims, for doing more than they ſhould have done unto Saul; becauſe he was a King; for as Lycophron ſaid of Iuno, that ſhe was ἀτρωτον, invulnerable, ſo ſhould every king be invulnerable, not becauſe that majeſty cannot, but becauſe that it ſhould not be wounded.

1 Sam. 24. 7.

Kings invulnerable. Amb. de Valentin.

The Iewes therefore touching a King, yea their own King, yea the King of all Kings; how can they excuſe themſelves from unſpeakable ſhame? Eſpecially conſidering that the Wiſe men, which were Gentiles, and Pilate that was a Gentile, did acknowledge him to be Rex Iudæorum, King of the Iewes; and yet the Iewes themſelves, not illuminated by the ſtarre, would not receive him for their King, nor yeeld to the title of Pilate, that he was their King, but ſaid, write not King of the Iewes, but that he ſaid he was King of the Iewes.

Mat. 2. 2.

But hereby we ſee now a type, of the fulfilling of what our Saviour had ſhewed afore, that multi ab oriente & occidente, many ſhould come from the Eaſt and from the Weſt; and ſhould ſit downe with Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob, Filij autem regni, but the children of the kingdome ſhould be caſt into utter darkneſſe; for the Wiſe-men came from the Eaſt, and Pilate from the Weſt: Ideo illi orienti, id eſt, naſcenti; ille occidenti, id eſt, morienti, atteſtebantur regi Iudæorum, Iudæi ipſi reſpuerunt, ſaith S. Auguſtine; and therefore the Magi at his riſing, that

A type of Chriſts propheſie fulfilled

The Magi from the Eaſt, Pilate from the Weſt. Aug. Ser. in Epiph.

is, at his birth, like the riſing of the Sun, and Pilate at his falling, that is, at his death, like the going down of the Sun, did acknowledge and confeſſe him to be the King of the Iewes, but the Iewes themſelves did reject him.

Virg. Æneid. l. 1. At Muſa mihi cauſas memora, what was the reaſon that they hated him, and refuſed him to be their King,

Idem l. 1. Æneid. ——Et tot volvere caſus
Inſignem pietate virum,——

And did thus perſecute him that was ſo excellently good, and ſo incomparably juſt, with ſuch mortall-immortall hatred?

Pride the cauſe why the Iewes rejected Chriſt. Luk. 9.58.

I anſwer briefly, that it was their pride and ambition; for they ſaw he uſed no legions of Angels or men, neither chariots nor horſmen, neither court nor pallace, having not ſo much as the hole of a Fox to couch him in, but Rex ſine terra, being as King without a kingdome: but Cæſar was the ſole Monarch of the whole world,

In vita Virgilij. Diviſum imperium cum Iove Cæſar habet:

If Kings, being poore, be thus rejected, what wonder that poore Prieſts ſhould bee deſpiſed? Sap. 2. 21.

They held him as a demi-god among them; and therefore in the height of their pride, they ſcorned to have ſo poore a King as they ſaw Ieſus was, and they would have no King but Cæſar, unleſſe they might have ſuch a one as could vanquiſh and conquer Cæſar; quia malitia excæcavit eos, for their malice had ſo blinded them, that they could not ſee the glory of Chriſt.

Well therefore and moſt worthily might Pilate upbraid and deride the impiety of this people, that had ſo unworthily crucified,

1. A Saviour.
2. An Innocent.
3. A King.

} A threefold teſtimony of their iniquity.

Aug. in Pſal. 55. f. 919. At non ſolum in Iudæis hoc advertamus, (ſaith S. Auguſtine) but this is not only to be ſeene in the Iewes, quia data ſunt illis, quaſi primitiva exempla, ut in illo populo eluceret, quod omnis homo caveret, for they are given for our example, that what we ſee amiſſe in that people, every man among all people, might avoid in himſelfe, and take heed, leaſt (with the Iewes) we do crucifie Ieſum, Nazarenum, Regem.

What the former doctrine inſtructeth us.

Heb. 6. 6.
1. That we ſhould not crucifie nor abuſe our Miniſters.

1. That we ſhould not crucifie Ieſum, not onely not himſelfe by our ſinnes, which do crucifie againe the Lord of life, as the Apoſtle ſheweth; but alſo not his Miniſters, which may be underſtood by Ieſus, as I ſhewed you before; for why ſhould we ſeek to put them to death, that ſeek by all meanes to bring us to eternall life? Why ſhould we render evill for good, eſpecially unto our Miniſters? For God himſelfe hath dignified them,

How God hath dignified his Miniſters.
1. Reſpect.

1. Quoad Authorem, in reſpect of the Authour of this calling; for their profeſſion is not inventum humanum, ſed inſtitutum divinum, no humane invention, but a divine inſtitution; God the Father being the firſt Preacher that ever was, when he ſaid in Paradiſe, that ſemen mulieris, the ſeed of the woman ſhould breake the head of the ſerpent; God the Sonne likewiſe being appointed by the Father, and annointed by the holy Spirit, to preach the Goſpell unto the poore; is therefore called ἀπόστολον, the Apoſtle and high Prieſt of our Profeſſion; and God the Holy Ghoſt, teaching the holy men of old, and giving wiſdome unto our Teachers now; for it is not you that ſpeake, but the Spirit of your Father which is in you.

Gen. 3. 15.

Eſa. 61. 1.
Heb. 3. 1.

1 Pet. 1.

Mat. 10. 20.

2. Reſpect.

2. Quoad authoritatem, in reſpect of their authority; for their power is not imperium in belluas, ſed in homines, the keeping of beaſts, but the guiding of men; and therefore we find that there is no title of dignity that the world can affoord, but the Lord affoords it them; for they are called ἀπόστολοι, σκοποὶ, ἐπίσκοποι, κύριοι, patres, nutritij, angeli, dij terræ.

Terent. in Eunuch.

The honourable titles of the Miniſters.
1. Apoſtles.
2. Seers and over-ſeers.
3. Lords.
Acts 16. 30.

1. They are called ἀπόστολοι, men ſent from God, that they might ſend men unto God.

2. They are called σκοποὶ, & ἐπίσκοποι, ſeers and over-ſeers of Gods people.

3. They are called κύριοι, Lords, Princes, and Vice-royes here on earth; for of of them the Prophet ſpeaketh, conſtitues eos Principes ſuper omnem terram, thou ſhalt make them Princes in all lands, as S. Auguſtine doth expound it. Aug. in Pſal. 44. 18

4. They are Fathers, begetting us anew, with the immortall ſeed of Gods Word, non ad laborem, not unto damnation, (as our earthly Fathers doe) ſed ad ſalutem, (ſaith S. Bernard,) but to be heires of eternall ſalvation; and they are nurſing Fathers, feeding us with the ſincere milke of Gods Word; and therefore Chryſoſtome wondereth, quomodo nobis, iſti non ſolum reverendi magis quam reges aut judices, ſed etiam magis honorabiles, quam parentes; how it comes to paſſe, that the Miniſters are not more reverenced, not only then Kings or Iudges, but alſo that they are not more honoured then our parents: but I know he ſhall wonder long enough, before they ſhall have neere that honourable reſpect. 4. Fathers. 1 Pet. 1. 23. Bern. ſer 38. in Cant. 1 Pet. 2. 2.

5. They are called angeli Dei, the Embaſſadours of God, ſent to men, to declare his will unto them, and to intreat conditions of peace, inter mortalem peccatorem & immortalem Iudicem, betweene the mortall ſinner, and the immortall Iudge, ſaith S. Auſtine. 5 Angels. Mal. 2. 7.

6. They are called dij terræ, the gods of the earth, that are vehementer elati, moſt wonderfully exalted throughout the whole world. 6 The gods of the earth. Ferus in feſt. Barth.

3. Quoad materiam, in reſpect of the matter and ſubject, that they treat of, for their office is to handle the Oracles of God, the tidings of ſalvation, the Word of grace, the Word of God. 3. Reſpect. Rom. 3. 2. 1 Theſſ. 1. 13.

4. Quoad depoſitum, in reſpect of the charge committed to their charge; for they are to looke unto the Spouſe of Chriſt, and to take care for the Saints of God. 4. Reſpect.

5. Quoad finem, in reſpect of the end of their labour; for they are not to ſeeke for pecuniarum collectionem, ſed animarum ſalvationem, the collection of money, but the ſalvation of ſoules; for they preach the Word of God, not for the gathering of riches, but for the gaining of men, which is uberrimus queſtus, the greateſt gaine in the world; and therefore to ſhew that lucrum animarum eſt maxima curarum, our greateſt care is to care for you, the Apoſtle tells you plainely, οὐ ζητῶ τὰ ὑμῶν, ἀλλ' ὑμᾶς; we ſeeke not yours but you. 5. Reſpect. 2 Cor. 12. 14.

6. Quoad præmium, in reſpect of the reward that they ſhall have for this their care and their labour; for they ſhall be ſure to have, mercedem nimis copioſam, a wonderfull great reward; for though here they have, nec partem quotam nec aliquotam, neither the tenth part, nor ſcarſe any part, but lanam caprinam (ſhall I ſay) porcinam, the fleeces of goates or the ſhearings of hogs; yet hereafter Fulgebunt quaſi ſtellæ, they ſhall ſhine as the Starres for ever and ever, exceeding all others in glory as the Starres doe exceed the brightneſſe of the glory of the firmament. 6. Reſpect. Dan. 12. 3.

And therefore as in Chriſt there ſeemed to be neither forme nor beauty; yet ſpecioſus forma præ filijs hominum, hee was fairer then the ſonnes of men, and his lippes were full of grace; even ſo in the Miniſters of Chriſt, though there ſeemeth to be nothing; yet are they like the ſunne in the firmament, which, though it ſeemes but inſtar pilæ pedalis, no bigger then a foot-ball: yet is it no leſſe then lux mundi, the glorious light of the whole world; ſo, though they be ſpurned and ſcorned, yet are they no leſſe, then the light of the world, and the ſalt of the earth, which preſerveth the ſame from putrifaction. Eſay 52. 14. Pſal. 44. Mat. 5. 14.

And therefore, as it was an intollerable ſinne, and the greateſt ſhame unto the Iewes by Pilates title, to crucifie Ieſus, their Saviour, their High-Prieſt, their Prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedech; ſo was it one of their greateſt ſhames, by our Saviours teſtimony, (and therefore is one of the greateſt ſins that he layeth againſt Ieruſalem) that they killed the Prophets, and ſtoned them that were ſent unto them; ſo it will be the ſhame and the confuſion of all others, that will crucifie or contemne their preachers, and a ſhame indeed, that they which are thus dignified by God ſhould be vilified, perſecuted, and crucified by men. Heb. 5. 5. Mat. 23. 37.

Psal. 83.

But if for all this, they will still goe on (as they doe) with crucifige, crucifige, crucifie them, crucifie them, downe with them, downe with them, even to the ground; & disperdamus eos de gente, and let us cut them off from being a people; quia inutiles sunt nobis & contrarij sunt operibus nostris; because they bring us no profit, nor any gaine in the world, but are alwaies contrary unto us, and speaking continually against us; why then, herein standeth all our comfort, that although capitis pœna nos afficere possunt, nocere tamen non possunt, they can naile us to the Crosse, or cut off our heads; yet can they not make God to forsake us upon the Crosse, nor can they cut us from our head: Premere possunt, opprimere non possunt, for they can kill our bodies, but they cannot destroy our soules; they can (as they doe) send us empty away from the Church, when we have wearied our selves to speake unto them; but they can not empty us of Gods grace, nor send us out of the way to Heaven; they can shorten our naturall life, but they cannot bereave us of eternall life; they can cast us down into our graves, but they cannot hinder us to ascend up into heaven; quia non plus valet ad deijciendum terrena pœna, quam ad erigendum divina tutela, saith S. Cyprian; for all the malice of the world, and the greatest punishment of the cruellest tyrants are not so able to cast us downe, as the spirit of God and his Divine assistance is to raise us up.

Justin Martyr. Apolog. 2. ad Antoninum imperat.

What the people cannot doe to the Preachers.

Our comfort.

Cypr. l. 2. ep. 6.

2. That we should not wrong the innocent. Pro. 17. 15.

2. The shame of the Iewes for condemning an innocent, is also set down for our example, that we should take heed of condemning innocents; for this also is an abhomination before the Lord: And yet such is the wicked nature of man, that as Aristides must be banished out of Athens, justus quia justus, for none other cause but for justice; so the Christians in former times must be throwne to the Lions and other savage beasts, Christiani quia Christiani, because they were Christians; and so now oderunt nos gratis, they can hate us freely without any cause. Gens immitis atq; intractabilis, a cruell and unplacable people, that will condemne the innocent, and offer to do wrong unto the harmelesse.

Psal. 34. 19.

3. That we should not oppose our Kings.

The pestiferous doctrine both of Iesuites and Puritanes.

3. Their shame for crucifying their King, is set downe, to teach us, that we should not respuere Regem, refuse or cast away our King; for though the Iesuites tell us, that if the King prove an Heretick, the Pope may give us a bill of divorcement, de justa abdicatione, of the lawfull deniall of our alleagiance; and our Precisians too, do hold those Kings, which obey not their discipline, to be unworthy to beare any rule over Gods people; and therefore thinke that they also may send their bils of inditement, de justa excommunicatione, of the just and lawfull excommunication of Kings; and so both of them, veluti lepores, dare jura leonibus audent; and going so farre, then as Salomon said to his mother, in her suite for Adoniah, postula ei & regnum, they were best take the kingdome too; for scrape away his annointing, and he is no more annointed, he is no longer King, and then doe what you will: and although S. Ambrose went very farre with Theodosius; yet none can deny but he shewed himselfe herein very bold and resolute, (and I think he was as bold, and as resolute a Bishop as ever was) and so, as it might have been, to the overthrow of himselfe and many others, had not the mildenesse, and the goodnesse of that good Emperour so quietly put it up: Neither could I ever see, how it can be lawfull for any man breathing, to excommunicate a free Monarch or an absolute King; for it is apparant, that this is the onely way to rebellion, and to suffer him to be no longer King; for that the excommunicate person must be unto us, tanquam Ethnicus, as an Heathen, with whom we are to have no commerce; or how can it be, that he should be excommunicated and excluded from the society of the Saints, and from the exercises of Religion, by whose authority Religion is maintained? as if the children should exclude their fathers out of dores, who is the master of the house, and the maintainer of his children.

3 Reg. 2. 22.

Lege Ep. 18, 29. Ambros. to. 3. l. 5.

Yet S. Ambrose went not so far as these men do.

Mat. 8. 17.

That Kings ought not to be excommunicated.

The King is the head of the Church, the Church being governed, and Religion maintained, authoritate regia; but the head is not to be excommunicated by the members; for as the greater must blesse the lesser, as Melchizedech blessed Abraham; so it must be the greater that can curse any man by the sentence of excommunication,

Heb. 7. 7.

munication, and not a leſſer to curſe the greater, which in all reſpect is contrary to the rules of nature; and therefore no King can be excommunicated by any man, becauſe there is not any man greater, either in temporall, or eccleſiaſticall matters. And it is worth the noting, which Petrus Cunæus ſetteth down out of Maimoinides; to ſhew unto us, quanto major omnibus & Prophetis & Pontificibus Rex fuerit, how the King is farre above both all the Prophets and all the Prieſts, the words of Ben Maimon are thus rendred by Cunæus: Sanctum fuit, ut Pontifex maximus Regem veneraretur, & locum illi ſuum ad ſedendum cederet atq; ipſe ſtaret, ſi quando veniret ad eum Rex; at è contra, Rex non ſtat preſente Pontifice, niſi cum conſulit ſolemni ritu oraculum Urim: præterea tanta Regis dignitas eſt, ut vel ipſe vates, quoties ei adeſt, in terram humiliter ſe ſummittat; quippe ſcriptum eſt, Nathanem Prophetam veniſſe coram Rege, & ſpecie honoris prono ore procubuiſſe in humum. Pet. Cunæus de repub. Heb. l. 1. c. 14. p. 131.

Ob. But it may be objected, that the Prieſts drived King Ozias out of the Temple, and hindred him to meddle with the things that pertained to the Prieſts office; therefore the Prieſts may excommunicate the King, if he doe what he ſhould not doe, in a fact deſerving ſo ſevere a ſentence. 2 Chron. 26.

Sol. I anſwer briefly, that they hindered him to offer ſacrifice, and to execute the Prieſts office, but they hindered him not to execute his owne office; and therefore that was not ſo great as the ſentence of excommunication which ſhutteth him out of all; ſo may the High-Prieſts denie, that the King ſhould adminiſter the holy Sacrament, but not to excommunicate him; for it is apparant that theſe are two different things.

And therefore in very deed, both Papiſts and Puritanes, though they differ a little in the manner of their practiſes, yet if we narrowly looke into the end of their purpoſes, we ſhall eaſily ſee, that it is no popiſh conceit from poyſoned ſoules, but a manifeſt truth ſeene in their doings, that as Herod and Pilate were reconciled to crucifie Chriſt the King of the Iewes; ſo do both theſe Iewes and Gentiles agree together in no leſſe then the apparant depoſing, and conſequently the ſecret killing of Chriſtian Kings and Princes: And whoſoever ſay to the contrary, ſurgunt indocti, they are unlearned or undutifull indeed, that ſay it; and they doe apply their tongues, and that little learning that they have in adjutorium falſi, & non in teſtimonium veri, to underprop falſhood, and not to confirme the truth: for, exitus acta probat, we can ſee no leſſe in the end of their practiſe.

Yet the very Heathens can tell us, what a ſhame it is for a Souldier to betray his Captaine, or for a ſubject to kill his King; and the Lord ſaith plainely, that per me regnant Reges, by him Kings doe raigne, whether they be good or bad, and that Cyrus was Chriſtus, an anointed, though no Chriſtian; and therefore not to be touched by any Chriſtian: Nam ſi bonus, nutritor eſt tuus, for if he be a good King, he is thy nurſing father, receive thy nouriſhment with obedience; & ſi malus, tentator eſt tuus, and if hee be an evill King, he is thy tempter, and thou ſhouldſt receive thy tryall with patience; ſo there is no reſiſtance; either obey good Princes willingly, or endure evill tyrants patiently; and therefore David would not touch Saul, though he was wicked, and would have touched his life; and the Chriſtians denied not their allegiance unto Iulian, that was worſe then a Iew, an Apoſtata, worſe then a Pagan; and therefore all Chriſtians ſhould take heed of this, that they ſhould neither apparantly nor ſecretly, neither directly, nor by conſequent reſpuere Regem, caſt off their King with the Iewes. Iuſtin. l. 14. hiſt. Pro. 8. 16. Eſa. 45. 1. Kings good or bad, ought to be obeyed.

An eſpecially (ſaith S. Auguſtine) that they ſhould not reſpuere Regem Deum, & eligere Regem hominem, refuſe God to be their King, and chuſe man to be their King; for we have many that are contented to have Cæſar to be their King, at Chriſtum in cœlo ſedentem, & ubiq; regnantem habere nolunt, but Chriſt, that ſitteth in heaven, and raigneth every where, they will not have; they will obey their King, but not their Chriſt; Neither do they offend in obeying their King, but becauſe they obey not the King of Kings; non enim illi dicendo ſe habere Regem Cæſarem peccaverunt, ſed quia Regem Chriſtum habere noluerunt: for they did not Aug. in Pſal. 55. Not to refuſe God for man. Not to obey the King before God Idem ibid.

not ſin (ſaith S, Auguſtine) in ſaying they had Cæſar for their King, but becauſe they would not have Chriſt to be their King; for our Saviour bids them give unto Cæſar, that which was Cæſars; but he doth not bid them give all unto Cæſar; for they muſt alſo give unto God that which is Gods; but the Iewes would have no king but Cæſar: they would give all unto Cæſar, and leave nothing for God; but we beloved ſhould take heed, that, as we are to do the one, ſo we leave not the other undone; to obey our King, but not to diſobey our Chriſt, to chuſe the one, but not to refuſe the other; for though it be good to obey man, yet is it better to obey God, then men.

Mat. 22. 21.

Act. 5. 29.

Many men more afraid to offend the King then God.

And yet (I feare me) we have too too many that are afraid to offend their King, and are very obſervant of his lawes, which they ought to do, but are very careleſſe in the lawes of God, which they ought not to be; Cæſar ſhall be their King in their outward affaires, but Chriſt ſhall not be their King to rule their hearts; for we do daily ſee, that men are more afraid to breake the penall lawes of men, then they are to tranſgreſſe the lawes of the eternall God; and what doe theſe but with the Iewes, to ſay, Wee have no King but Cæſar, we will not care for any lawes, but for the lawes of Cæſar; and ſo as our Saviour ſaid of the Iewes, that they made the commandements of God of none effect, through their owne traditions: ſo may I ſay of theſe men, that through the lawes of men, and the cuſtomes of thoſe lawes, the law of God is not regarded among them; the cuſtome of mans law makes void the precept of Gods law: but this is the ſhame of the Iewes, (and all Iewiſh people, that will reſpuere Regem Deum, that is, care not for God and his commandements, and reſpect none but Cæſar and his lawes; and therefore I am aſhamed to ſpeake any more of what our people do herein, or to particularize the precepts of Gods law, that are nullified by the cuſtomes of mans law.

Ioh. 19. 15.

Mat. 15. 6.

And ſo much for the ſecond part of my Text.

The

The third part.

THe third part is set downe in the third word, scripsi, What I have written, I have written; and it sheweth the irrevocability of what he had written, that it should remaine unchangeable: nam duplicatio verbi, est confirmatio rei; for the doubling of his words is the sure confirming of the matter.

Of constancy. Thom. 22. q. 137.

Constantia (saith the Schooleman) est stabilitas animi firmi, & in proposito perseverans, Constancy is the stability of a firme mind, persevering in the same purpose, without wavering; For βεβαίως ἔχειν, is that, which is said to be firme and stable, (as Plato saith) and it may be taken either well or ill (though usually it is taken in the better sense) according to the purpose of the mind; for when a man is firme, stable, and constant in a good matter, then it is good; but when a man is firme, and stable in evill, as hereticks in their errours, sinners in their wickednesse, or any man in a lewd purpose, then is the same a most wicked constancy; but Pilate in these words sheweth, that his mind was firme and stable in that, which he had done, and should not be over-swayed, or altered, either for feare of Cæsar, or through the flattery of the Iewes; for quod scripsi, scripsi, and I will not alter it.

The resolution and constancy of Pilate.

Herein therefore is set downe the constancy and resolution of Pilate, that he would not change his mind, nor alter the thing that he had done; and this is the maine end of my text, and the chiefe aime of my mind.

Luk. 14. 28. The mischiefe of temerity.

The heathen man saith, antequam incipias consulito, consider well what thou dost, before thou beginnest; and not onely, when thou goest to warre, but also when thou buildest a tower, (saith our Saviour) consider first what thou doest; that thou shouldst not be too rash in any thing, whether great or small, either in thy word, or in thy work: be not inconsiderate in any thing; quia temeritas præcipitat in malum, because rashnesse makes many a man to fall; proud Phaetons fall doth prove it,

Andr. Alcian. Emblem. 5.

Qui temerè infesso lapsus ab axe miser;

Which wretchedly did faile, and fall from the highest pole; but when thou hast well considered of thy matters, then be not carried away with every wind, but shew thy selfe constant in all thy purposes; for this is the property of the wise, and that is the note of a foole, ut lunam mutari, to be changed as the moone, saith the sonne of Syrach: Pilate therefore, having well considered what he writ, he would not shew himselfe so foolish, as to alter the same by any meanes, but said, quod scripsi, scripsi, what I have written, I have written; as if he should have said, wise men should not alter their words, much lesse their writings: and I have not only said it, but I have written it, yea I have written it upon his crosse, and fixed it above his head; and therfore ego non corrumpam veritatem, etsi vos diligitis falsitatem, I will not alter the truth, though you love nothing but falshood, saith S. Augustine: Si enim illis obtemperasset, crimen temeritatis in seipso ostendisset, saith Theophilact. If he had yeelded to them, he had thereby condemned himselfe.

Iam. 1. 6.

Aug. in Ps. 55.

Theoph. in Joh. 19.

Noverat autem dicere judex homo, quod scripsi, scripsi, & non noverat dicere judex Deus, (saith S. Augustine) but could man tell how to say, what I have written, I have written, I said he is your King, though you do crucifie him, and this my saying shall not be altered; and doth not God know how to say the same without altering of it? Prorsus ergo Rex vester est, why then he is; and he shalbe your King; do what you can, crucifie him, kill him; yet still he is your King; and therefore, if you will not have him for your Iesus, you shall be sure to have him

Aug. in 2. in Ps. 55 & 120.

for

for your Iudge: O yes, they can be contented he ſhould be their Ieſus to ſave them, but not their King to rule them; for they deſire him not to alter Ieſus of Nazareth; that may ſtand: but King of the Iewes muſt be altered, for that they cannot indure to ſtand; to ſhew indeed that many would be contented to be ſaved by Chriſt, but not to bee governed and guided by Chriſt; they can bee glad to have him for their Prieſt, to deliver them from their ſinnes, but they cannot indure to have him for their King, to preſcribe them lawes of righteouſneſſe: Yea, but this will not be altered, theſe two muſt go together; for if he ſhall not be your King to governe you, he will not be your Ieſus to ſave you: and therefore you were beſt to imbrace him for your King, that you may obtaine him to be your Saviour; or if you will not, yet prorſus Rex veſter eſt, ſtill he is your King; quia omnium Rex Chriſtus, ſaith S. Auguſtine; and therefore, if you will not ſuffer him as a King to raigne over you here, yet you ſhall be ſure to find him to be your King hereafter, that will call for thoſe his enemies, that would not he ſhould raigne over them, to ſlay them all before him; for this truth is unchangeable, and I will not alter it, ſaith Pilate, that he is the King of the Iewes.

A good note to be obſerved.

Idem ibid. fol. 231.

Luk. 19. 27.

Herein therefore you ſee the conſtancy of Pilate; and this conſtancy alſo to be in good, becauſe he would not alter the truth of the title: But if you look a little before, you ſhall ſee his great inconſtancy; for he purpoſed to ſave our Saviour Chriſt, as S. Peter ſheweth; yet at the clamour of the Iewes, and for feare of Ceſar, tradidit eum morti, he delivered him unto them to be crucified: And ſo many men els, in that, wherein they do well at ſomtimes, they do faile in the ſame thing, at other times, nemo idem omnibus horis, for no man is the ſame at all times: Brennus was valiant at all times els, yet his heart failed him when he came to Delphos, ſaith the hiſtory; Ioab was bold enough to reprove David after the death of Abſolon, but he was not ſo bold when he numbred Iſrael; ſo Moſes was faithfull enough in the land of Egypt, but he failed of his duty at the waters of ſtriſe; and ſo Pilate alſo was conſtant enough in not altering the cauſe of Chriſts death, but inconſtant enough in his purpoſe to preſerve his life.

The unconſtancy of Pilate.

Acts 3. 13. Ioh. 19. 12. Ver. 16.

Many men unconſtant. Iuſtin. hiſt. l. 24.

But what was the fruit of either?

1. His inconſtancy was the cauſe of Chriſts death.

2. His conſtancy proveth the fulfilling of the truth of God; for it was propheſied by David, or at leaſt prefigured, that the title of his inſcription, ſhould not be altered, as S. Auguſtine affirmeth in diverſe places: And therefore we are earneſtly perſwaded to conſtancy in all our waies; Let your ſpeech be yea yea, ſaith our Saviour, or, let your yea be yea, that is, whatſoever you ſay, let it be truth; and being ſo, let your yea be yea, and let not your yea now, be preſently a nay; ſo here, he perſwadeth you to ſay the truth without ſwearing, in the firſt yea; let your ſpeech be yea; and then he perſwadeth us to continue in that truth without altering of it, in the ſecond yea, let your yea be yea ſtill; and S. Paul ſheweth how ſtedfaſt he was in his purpoſes to the Corinthians: and likewiſe in his preaching of Chriſt, that it was not yea and nay; but it was yea, that is, that he was not diverſe and wavering, as now ſaying yea, and preſently nay, but it was yea, that is, moſt ſurely, it was the ſame thing; for I uſed no lightneſſe, I was not ſo changeable, ſaith the Apoſtle; for a wavering minded man is like a wave of the ſea, (ſaith S. Iames) that is toſt with the wind, and caried away.

The fruits of Pilates conſtancy and unconſtancy.

Aug. in Pſ. 55 & 56. &c.

2. Cor. 1. 18.

Iam. 1. 6.

And that we might be the ſooner moved, and the better perſwaded to avoid and ſhun inconſtancy and lightneſſe, and to imbrace conſtancy and firmeneſſe in all our doings, wee have moſt manifeſt reaſons ſet downe in all places. For,

Two reaſons to diſſwade us from inconſtancy.

1. To diſſwade us from inconſtancy we have left to our conſideration,
   1. The firſt authours of inconſtancy.
   2. The juſt deſerved puniſhment of the ſame.

2. The authours of inconſtancy. Ioh. 8. 44.

1. The firſt that proved inconſtant, was the Divell, in Heaven; for he kept not his firſt eſtate, he remained not in the truth; and the next that followed him was man

man in paradiſe: when he fell from grace to that moſt grievous ſin that wrought his overthrow.

2. But what is the puniſhment of inconſtancy? Vidi Satanam tanquam fulgur è cœlo cadentem; Satan was thruſt out of heaven, and is reſerved in everlaſting chaines under darkneſſe, unto the judgement of the great day; And man was thruſt out of Paradiſe, with a curſe inſtead of a bleſſing; and the Lord tels us plainly, that though we ſhould be righteous never ſo long; yet if we prove unconſtant, and fall away but at the laſt houre, then all our former righteouſneſſe ſhall be forgotten, and we ſhall die in our ſinnes, and ſo periſh for our inconſtancy: O terrible voice of a juſt judgement, that this one ſin of inconſtancy, ſhould ſpoyle all our former vertues; who then would prove unconſtant!

2. Puniſhment of inconſtancy. Luke 10.18. Iude Ep. Ver. 6. Ezek. 18.24.

2. To perſwade us unto conſtancy, we have

1. The infallible example { 1. Of God the Creatour. 2. Of all his creatures.
2. The moſt excellent reward of perſeverance, which is promiſed to all them that will continue conſtant unto death.

2. To perſwade us to conſtancy. 1. Examples.

De 1. God is ever the ſame, both in himſelfe, and in his will: in himſelfe, yeſterday, and to day, and the ſame for ever; nam ego Deus & non mutor, for I am God, and I change not; his name is Iehovah, an eternall being, which was, and which is, and which ſhall be: and as God is in himſelfe, ſo the will of God is ever the ſame, immutable and unchangeable; for the Word of God, which is, regula fidei, manet immobilis & irreformabilis, ſaith Tertullian; it is immoveable and unalterable; and therefore the Lord ſaith directly, conſilium meum ſtabit, & voluntas mea fiet, my councell ſhall ſtand, and my will ſhall be done; for he is not as man, that he ſhould lie, or as the ſonne of man, that he ſhould change his mind; but with him there is no repentance, no change, no alteration; a change indeed may ſeeme to be in him, as when he threatneth to deſtroy the wicked, and yet ſpareth them, as he did the Ninivites and others; but if you do well obſerve it, we ſhall find this change to be in man, and not in God, as that thrice worthy Zanchie doth moſt excellently expreſſe: And therefore moſt falſly doth Cardinall Cuſanus ſay, that intellectus Scripturæ currit cum praxi, the underſtanding of the Scripture, which is the will of God, or the manifeſtation of his will, runneth with the practice of the Church; for, as that were but a deceitfull touchſtone, that would apply it ſelfe to the gold-ſmiths pleaſure, ſo were this but a deceitfull rule of Gods will, if it were to yeeld and to change, according to the fantaſies of men; but we find, that as God, ſo the will of God, and the word of God is ever the ſame, immutable and unchangeable.

1. Of the Creator. Mal. 3.6. Tertul. de velan. virgin. Pſal 33.11. Eſa 46.10. Pro. 19.21. Rom. 11.29. No change in God. Zanch. l. 3. de nat. Dei. Card. Cuſanus Ep. 2 ad Bohem.

2. As God the Creatour, ſo all his creatures are moſt conſtant in all their waies; for he ſpake the word, and they were made; he commanded, and they ſtood faſt; yea ſo faſt, as that the heavens, the earth, and all the elements, with all other creatures therein, do keep their ſtation and their wonted courſe, to this very day; for he appointed the Moone for certaine ſeaſons, and the Sun knoweth his going down; And all other creatures do remaine unchangeable, as they were created: onely proud Lucifer in heaven, and fooliſh man in Paradiſe, did firſt run out of order.

2. Of the creatures. Pſal 32.9. Pſal 104.19.

And yet of men we find that very many, both of Heathens and Chriſtians, have retained in them ſome reliques of this conſtancy.

1. Of the Heathens, we read that ſome of them were moſt conſtant in their vertues, as Ariſtides; ſome in their ſtudies, as Plato, Socrates, and Diogenes, qui eodem vultu tenore, that, with the ſame countenance, armed themſelves with a ſetled reſolution, conſtantly to proceed on againſt all croſſes, that might happen unto them; and ſome in their ſufferings, as Cato Uticenſis, and Anaxarchus, who moſt reſolutely ſaid unto the tyrant of Cyprus, tunde, tunde Anaxarchi vaſculum, Anaxarchi conſtantiam non teris, though thou teareſt my body in ſunder, yet canſt thou never teare my conſtancy: and ſo alſo might I reckon infinite others, whoſe praiſe ſhall ever continue for their continuance in their conſtancy.

1. The conſtancy of the Heathens. Solinus c. 4. Bruſius l. 2. c. 2. ex Plut.

2. Of the Saints.

2. Of the Saints and holy men of God, we find they were so constant as is wonderfull, both in their profession, and in their conversation.

1. In their profession.

1. In their profession, you may see the constancy of Moses, Aaron, Daniel, Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego, Mordocheus, Mathathias and his children, Eleazar, Susanna, the mother with her seven sonnes, and a cloud of witnesses more of the old Testament, who were racked, and would not be delivered, that they might receive a better resurrection, and were tried by mockings and scourgings, yea moreover by bonds and imprisonment: yea they were stoned, they were hewne asunder, they were tempted, they were slaine with the sword, they wandred up and downe in sheepes skins and in goats skins, being destitute, afflicted and tormented, whom the world was not worthy of; they wandered in wildernesses and mountaines, and dens, and caves of the earth: and all this they suffered and indured for their profession; because they would not forsake their God, which was the God of Israel: And yet more wonderfull was the constancy of the Christians and Martyrs of the Primitive Church; for as you know, the commendation of Levi was, that he said of Father and Mother, I have not seene them, neither did he acknowledge his brethren, nor knew his owne children, in causa Dei, in respect of God; he regarded none of these; so the Christians of the Primitive Church respected neither father nor mother, nor children, nor even themselves, in respect of God, but they would sooner leese themselves, than either alter or dissemble their faith; for though they were daily persecuted, and most cruelly tormented, rosted and racked, boyled and broyled, dismembred, and barbarously handled; yet were they so unchangeable in their faith, so constant in their profession, and so patient in their sufferings, as that the beholding thereof, made many Heathens to become Christians, as S. Basil affirmeth; and Tertullian tels us, that their holinesse was such, as that it made their greatest adversaries, and their cruellest persecutors to stand amazed at their constancy, and to cry out, qua miseria est hæc? what a misery is this, that we are farre more weary in tormenting, then they are in induring torments? for they were so patient, that being reviled they reviled not againe; but as sheep before their shearer are dumb, so opened they not their mouthes.

Heb. 11. 35, 36, 37.

2. Saints of the new Testament.

Deut. 33. 9.

Basilius orat. de 40. Mart.

Tertull. in Apolog.

You know the constancy of Peter, of Paul, and of all the rest of the Apostles and Disciples, whose praise is in the Gospell; and we read of Ignatius Bishop of Antioch, that the ravening beasts could not make him alter the profession of his Saviour, but being commanded by the King of Syria, to be torne in pieces of wild beasts, and being led to the place of execution, he most constantly said, nihil moror visibilium, nec invisibilium, I neither care for visible nor invisible things, nor yet for any thing in the world, so I may obtaine Iesus Christ: so we read of S. Cyprian Bishop of Carthage; of Polycarpe, Bishop of Smyrna; of Symeon Bishop of Ierusalem; yea of women too, as Apollonia, Dionysia, Mercuria, and many millions more both of men and women that were so constant in their profession, as that they boldly said to their bloudy butchers, Ure, tunde, divelle, idola tua non adorabimus; devoure us, slay us, hew us in peeces; yet will we never worship thine abominable idols; for though thou canst consume our mortall bodies with intolerable torments, facere tamen ut aliud sentiamus, aut loquamur, non potes; yet to make us either to think or to speak otherwise than we do, thou canst never do; & ideo citius saxa scopulosq; & montes de loco suo movebis, quam nobis fidem Christo datam eripies; and therefore thou shalt sooner remove the rocks and the mountaines from their places, than thou shalt make us to alter our profession of the Gospell of Christ: For, as Megara said of Hercules, gravent catenæ corpus, & longa fame mors protrahatur lenta, nan vincet fidem vis ulla nostram; so the Christians were resolved, that although their bodies should bee chained with fetters, or pined with famine; yet that neither these, nor any other cruelty, should alter their mindes, or subdue their faith; such was the constancy of the Saints of God in their faith and profession.

The constancy of Ignatius.

The constancy of the Martyrs.

Megara apud Senecam, in Hercule furente.

2. In the holinesse of their life and conversation.

2. It was no lesse in their life, and conversation: they were like the Cypresse tree, tree, quæ viriditatem ſuam hyeme quidem non amittit, which changeth not her colour in the middeſt of Winter, ſaith Saint Ambroſe; for they never ceaſed to doe good workes in the middeſt of the ſtormie winter of perſecution; but as Hannibals Souldiers continued their journey over the Alpes, notwithſtanding all the rockes and craggy clefts that hindred them; ſo did theſe true Souldiers of Chriſt Ieſus continue ſtill, in the race of a holy life, notwithſtanding all the mountaines of afflictions, that did oppoſe themſelves againſt them; for if wee looke into their learning, we may thinke they did nothing elſe but reade; if wee looke unto their voluminous workes, we may thinke they did nothing els but write; and if we looke into their devotions, their confeſſions, their Soliloquies, then may we thinke indeed, they did nothing els but pray; and if we looke into their care and diligence, both of eſchewing evill, and of doing good, then ſhall we ſee that it was wonderfull and exceeding great; that they faſted truely, prayed earneſtly, watched diligently, and chaſtened their bodies ſeverely, beating their breaſts in their devout prayers, and fighting againſt the violence of the Serpent; and the infinite monuments of their almes-deeds, that are yet extant in the world, the infinite Churches, that they have builded, and endowed with great and abundant maintenance for the Miniſters of the ſame, to maintaine true Religion, (which now we have taken away to maintaine the pride of Atheiſticall and graceleſſe men, and to bring in Atheiſme and Paganiſme amongſt us) and the infinite Schooles, Vniverſities, and Colledges, with infinite more publike commodities, which were done by thoſe good Chriſtians, not onely out of their abundance, but many times out of their neceſſities, when they ſaved it from their owne backes, and out of their owne mouthes, to beſtow it upon ſuch deeds of charity, doe ſufficiently declare their wonderfull care and unſpeakeable diligence in doing good; and therefore Iulian the Apoſtata, writing unto Arſatius, ſaith, that Chriſtiana Religio, propter Chriſtianorum erga omnes cujuſvis Religionis beneficentiam, propagata eſt, the wonderfull bounty and charity of the Chriſtians towards all men, of what Religion ſoever they were, did wonderfully increaſe the Chriſtian Religion: And Maxentius alſo (as Euſebius witneſſeth) could not chuſe but wonder to ſee, how ſedulous they were in doing good; for when their very enemies, and their greateſt adverſaries were even conſumed away with miſery, then they tooke from their owne ſuſtenance, and that little ſtore, which they had, (like as the widdow of Sarepta did to Elias) and gave it for their reliefe; they buried all their dead, and never ceaſed to follow them with the workes of charity, and they were ſo religious in their profeſſion, ſo righteous in their converſation, and ſo charitable in all their actions, as that thereby they moved the very tyrants to give out Edicts, with Nebuchadnezzar, that none ſhould worſhip any other God ſave the God of Chriſtians. And Sozomenus tels us that the devoute life of a poore Captive Chriſtian woman, moved a King and all his familie to embrace the Chriſtian faith: And ſuch are the examples of conſtancy, which we find in former Chriſtians: ſo that, as Cæſar wiſhed, that he had ſuch valiant ſouldiers, as were in the time of Alexander the Great; ſo might we well wiſh, that we had ſuch conſtant Chriſtians, as theſe our forefathers were.

Livius l. 21. hiſt. Rom.

The great piety of the Primitive Chriſtians.

Piety increaſeth piety.

Euſeb. l. 9. c. 8.

1 Reg. 17. 15.

Dan 3. 29.

Sozomen. l. 7.

De 2. Though examples doe move much, as Saint Hierome affirmeth; yet the hope of reward moveth more, as Saint Baſil writeth; For what doth make the labourer to worke, but his hire, the husbandman to toyle, but the hope of a good harveſt, and the Souldier to fight, but the hope of victory? ſo what could make men to continue conſtant in a godly life, but the hope of ſome reward? and therefore the Lord doth not onely propoſe theſe examples before our eyes, but he doth alſo promiſe an exceeding great reward; that if we continue conſtant unto death, we ſhall have the crowne of life.

2. The reward of perſeverance and conſtancy. Hieron. Ep. ad Heliod. Baſil in Pſ. 1.

Rev. 2. 10.

And the end of all this, both the examples of the godly, and the promiſe of reward, to thoſe that are conſtant, tendeth to this end; that all we, ſhould be mooved hereby to continue in the like conſtancy, both in our words and workes, in

How conſtant we ſhould be.

our profeſſion, and in our converſation; and not to be carried away with every idle conceit of an unſtable minde; but that our zeale ſhould be like the fire, that the Veſtall virgins did keepe in Rome; or rather like the ſacrificing fire, that ever burnt upon the altar of God, and never went out; or as the ſtone Aſbeſtos in Arcadia, mentioned by Solinus, which being once ſet on fire, cannot be quenched againe; or as Pilate ſaid, quod ſcripſi, ſcripſi; what I have written, I have written, and will not alter it.

Plut. in Numa.

Levit. 6. 13.

Solinus, c. 12. biſt.

Permanet in facto mens mea firma ſuo; feares ſhall not compell me, & lachryma voluuntur inanes, and teares ſhall not move me to change my mind; quia mens immota manet, for I am fully reſolved never to alter it; ſo ſhould every Chriſtian man ſay, quod credidi, credidi; what I beleeved I beleeved, what I have ſaid, I have ſaid; and I ſaid I would take heed unto my waies; and what I have purpoſed, I will performe; to continue conſtant in my faith, and to perſevere in an holy and a godly life; and neither the flattering Calypſo of worldly pleaſures, nor the ſubtle ſleights of the intiſing ſerpent, nor our owne fleſh, that like Dalilah, allureth us to ſinne, nor yet that roaring Lyon, which threatneth our deſtruction, ſhall ever be able to make us alter this our godly and conſtant reſolution.

Ovid. Ep. 15. Virgil. Eryth. Æneid. l. 4 p. 204.

So it be in good, as hereafter I ſhall diſtinguiſh of our conſtancy.

For that we know full well, that non eſt magnum bonum inchoare bonum, it is no great matter to begin a good matter; and therefore, that non inchoantibus ſed perſeverantibus præmium dabitur, the reward is not given to the beginners, but to the perſeverers; for to him that overcommeth will I grant to ſit with me in my throne, and he that will continue unto the end ſhall be ſaved.

To begin well is nothing.

Rev. 3. 12.

Mat. 10. 22.

And yet for all this, we doe ſee, how many and how manifold are the multitudes, that are as unconſtant, and as conſtant too, as ever Pilate was; ſed pejori modo, in a farre worſer manner; for whereas he was unconſtant in that which was good, in his deſire to ſave our Saviours life; ſo afterwards he was moſt conſtant in that which was good, in not altering the cauſe of his death: but moſt men in theſe daies are,

That many of us, are
1. Vnconſtant in good.
2. Conſtant in evill.

1. Moſt unconſtant in that which is good; and

2. They are conſtant onely in that which is evill: ſo that intollerabilis inconſtantia, & abominabilis eſt conſtantia eorum, their inconſtancy is intollerable, and their conſtancy is moſt abominable; for

1. In good, three waies.

De 1. To inſtance a few things of many, how many doe we ſee unconſtant?

For { 1. In their minds and manners. 2. In the method and manner of teaching. 3. In the order and governement of our Church. }

1. In their minds and maners.

1. In their mindes, they are as changeable as the Iewes, that, as it were to day, cried Hoſannah, Hayle king of the Iewes, and as to morrow, cried out, crucifige, hang him up; for we have no King but Cæſar; or as theſe in the Iſle of Melita, that even now ſaid, Saint Paul was a wicked perſon; and by and by, they would Canonize him for a God: ſo theſe men; to day, they ſay one thing, to morrow another thing; to day they runne after ſuch a Preacher, and with the Galathians, they are ready to pull out their eyes to doe him good; for all the world in their conceit, cannot affoord ſuch an other; yet the next day, if he pleaſe them not, they will find ſome fault in him, and ſo he ſhall become their enemy, becauſe he telleth the truth, and then they care not for him; He is quite caſt off and contemned, as the Galathians did with Saint Paul: and ſo they are never contented, unleſſe they have heapes of teachers, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh; for whoſoever he be, qui placet, non diu placet, which pleaſeth them, it is unpoſſible for him to pleaſe them long, unleſſe he be like the Camelion, that will change his colours, as they doe their minds: And ſo, to day they are of this profeſſion, and to morrow they be of another: Of theſe the Apoſtle ſpeaketh; that in the laſt dayes, quidam diſcedent, certaine men ſhall depart from the faith, ſuch as are our Runnagates to Rome, and our Separatiſts of Amſterdam, that will not be

Act. 28. 4. 6.

Gal 4. 15.

The practice of the people.

Gal. 4. Ver. 16.

2 Tim. 4. 3.

Our runnagadoes

1 Tim. 4. 1.

be ſicut cæteri, as the reſt of their brethren be, but deviding themſelves from all other, they onely will be the ſingular and elected brethren: and to ſhew that theſe quidam, certaine uncertaine men are conſtant in nothing but in inconſtancy, we find them like reedes ſhaken with the winde, to day a Proteſtant, to morrow a Papiſt, and the next yeare a Proteſtant backe againe; but hereafter if they prove no more conſtant then they ſhewed themſelves heretofore, I thinke it had been as good they had tarried ſtill there, as come over here; for as the Emperour ſaid of the crow, that ſatis iſtarum avium habebat domi, he had no need of it; becauſe he had inough of thoſe birds at home, ſo have we inough, and too too many of ſuch inconſtant men at home already.

Mat. 11. 7.

And as they are thus in their minds, ſo are they no leſſe in their manners: as changeable as the Iewes that came out of Ægypt, but murmured in the wilderneſſe; they are like the Lyzards that caſt off their old coates, and when they have done, they eate it up againe; ſo do theſe Lyzardlike profeſſors, caſt away their ſinnes for a time, and then preſently againe, they will returne with the dogge to his vomite, and with the ſow to her wallowing in the mire; And as Mandrabulus offered unto Iuno, the firſt yeere a ſheepe of gold, the ſecond yeere a ſheepe of ſilver, and the third yeare a ſheepe of braſſe, ſtill proving colder and colder in his devotion; ſo do theſe men ſtill, grow worſe and worſe in their profeſſion, like that ridiculous picture in the Poet,

The Lizards what they do.

Plin. l. 2. c. 31.

What Mandrabulus did.

2 Pet. 2. ult.

Ὁτὶ Μανδραβούλου χωρεῖ τὸ πρόβατον. Lucian. de merced. ſervient.

Horat. de arte Poetica.

Deſinit in piſcem mulier formoſa ſuperne,

Which had the face and countenance of a woman, but the monſtrous ſhape of a fiſh, in her lower parts; for as in the time of the Apoſtles, there were abundance of ſuch revolters, as Demas, that for a time profeſſed Chriſt, but then embraced this preſent world; and Phrigillus, Hermogenes, Hymineus, Alexander, and ſuch like; ſo now in theſe our times we have more abundance of ſuch men, that have beene very zealous at the firſt, and, as Comets have appeared for a time on high, as if they had their converſation in heaven, but preſently they have reſolved to nothing, breaking their firſt faith, like thoſe wanton widdowes; whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, and forſaking their firſt love, like the Angell of the Church of Epheſus, and betaking themſelves to ſerve God by turnes, like thoſe that are taken by the fits of an ague, which at laſt will ſo leave them, as that they ſerve him not at all. And ſo, though with the fooliſh Galathians, they doe begin in the ſpirit, yet doe they end in the fleſh; and therefore it had beene farre better for ſuch men, that they had not knowne the way of righteouſneſſe, then after they have knowne it, to turne from the holy commandement, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh.

Revolters in the Primitive Church

2 Tim. 4. 10.

2 Tim. 1. 15.

1 Tim. 1. 20.

Garſaus in Metaphraſt.

1 Tim. 5.

Revel. 2. 4.

Gal. 3. 3.

2. Pet. 2. 21.

The Prophet David was ſo conſtant in Gods ſervice, that he ſaith: he would benedicere Domino in omni tempore, his praiſe ſhould be alwaies in his mouth; but our people are ſo unconſtant, as that they will praiſe him, and ſerve him, but at ſometimes onely.

Pſal. 34. 1.

Some, cum benefecerit illis, cum accidit eis lucrum, when God doth bleſſe them, and when gaine doth happen unto them, they are willing to ſerve him, ſaith Saint Auguſtine; but with Iobs wife, they are ready to curſe him, if hee doth but touch them with the leaſt of his fingers They are like the Swallowes, that are preſent all ſummer, but abſent all winter, or like unto the rich mens fawning and flattering friends whereof the Poet ſaith truly:

Some ſerve God in proſperity but not in adverſity.

Aug. in Pſal. 32. & in Pſal. 48.

Donec eris fœlix multos numerabis amicos,

Tempora ſi fuerint nubila, ſolus eris.

Ovid. triſt. l. 1.

As long as thy wealth doth laſt, not one of thy friends will be loſt, but if miſery fall upon thee, then will they melt like waxe, and fall away from thee like water; but theſe men doe not conſider, ſaith Saint Auguſtine, that as a father, & blandiens & flagellans, parat hæreditatem filio, provideth an inheritance for his ſonne, as well when he whippeth him, as when he cheriſheth him, as well when he is in the Schoole of correction, as when he is in the houſe of conſolation; ſo doth the Lord prepare an everlaſting inheritance, as well for thoſe, that he ſcour-

Flatterers how they deale with the rich.

Correction an argument of Gods love.

Heb.12.6.

geth, as for those that he blesseth; for he loveth those that he scourgeth, nay, he scourgeth those that hee loveth, yea every one that he loveth, saith the Apostle: quia mala quæ nos hic premunt, citius ad Deum ire compellunt; because the scourgings that come from him, doe cause us to runne unto him; saith Saint Gregory; for that there is no place, quo fugias à Deo irato, nisi ad Deum placatum, where thou mayest flie from thine angry God, but to the same God being pleased: and therefore we should not onely love him when he blesseth us, and bestoweth his benefits upon us; but with David, we should also de profundis clamare, call upon him in the dungeon, with Ioseph, and to praise him in the fiery furnace, with the three children; for that both scourgings and blessings doe proceed from him as from a loving Father.

Psal.129.1.

Gen.30.9. Dan 3.24.

Some serve God in adversity but not in prosperity.

Others can be diligent inough in adversity, but they forget him in the time of prosperity; as the children of Israel could call upon God in the land of Egypt, but serve strange gods in the land of Canaan: Moses will tell you that dilectus meus impinguatus, when they were fatted and enlarged, they kicke with their heeles: And David can tell you too, how they called upon God in their troubles, and he heard them and delivered them out of their distresse, yet presently they forgate his workes, and regarded not the counsels of the most highest; so we have many, that can call upon God in their troubles, but when they grow rich, and want nothing, when they are great, and feare no man, they cannot frame themselves to stoope, and to serve the Lord; they thinke that they, which need nothing, need not this; so that unlesse God should sometimes punish them, they would never remember him, they would grow as obstinate as Pharaoh, and as proud as Nebuchadnezzar against their God; so ready we are to be lulled a sleepe by the pleasures, the riches, and the honours of this world: and so to forget God that made us, and hath done so great things for us.

Deut.32.15.

Psal.107.19. Psal.106.13.

Great rich men love not much to serve God.

The worse men serve God best in prosperity, and the best men serve him best in adversity.

2 Sam.11. The great mercy and wisedome of God, in prospering the wicked and punishing the godly.

And most commonly we doe see, that as evill men doe serve God best, cum accidit eis lucrum, when they are hedged about with blessings, and doe blaspheme God most, cum accidit damnum, when they are touched with any losses, (as we may plainely see in Saul and Iobs wife, who would then either curse God, or kill themselves;) so good men doe praise God best in the time of affliction, and they forget him most in the daies of refection, and are lulled asleepe in the time of prosperity; as we plainely see in David and divers others: And therefore seeing adversity is most powerfull, to make the wicked forsake their God, and prosperity to make the best men forget their God, we doe see that the worse men are in most prosperity, and the best men, in most adversity: the Lord herein shewing himselfe not unjust to any of them (as the wicked thinke) but most mercifull to both of them, in keeping from either, what might bee most hurtfull unto either of them.

2. The unconstancy of preachers in their preaching

2. Neither are our people onely thus changeable in their minds and manners, but many of our preachers also are as changeable in the method and manner of preaching: I know that to preaching pertaineth these foure parts, which they call Foure things belong to preaching 1. Point, Edification of faith.

1. μάθησιν,
2. ἔλεγχον,
3. ἐπανόρθωσιν,
4. παιδείαν.

} By the first, we teach faith, and whatsoever pertaineth to the Articles of Faith, what we are able to beleeve, and what not to beleeve concerning God, the Church, Man, &c. And this we call διδασκαλίαν.

2. Point, Confutation of errours.

By the second, wee confute all errours that are contrary to the doctrine of Faith.

3. Point, Exhortation to piety.

By the third we perswade men to amend their manners, to live soberly, and justly, and godly in this present world, to forsake all vices, to denie ungodlinesse and worldly lusts, and all other sins whatsoever.

4. Point, Instruction of beginners.

And by the fourth we teach the beginners of Religion, the Catechisme and first rudiments of the Christian faith; These foure parts, I find to be set downe by the Apostle in the 2. of Tim. 3.16. Where he saith that the Scripture is profitable for these theſe foure: Firſt to teach, that is, articulos fidei. Secondly, to convince, that is, to confute all hereſies and errours, that are contrary to the truth of faith. Thirdly, to correct, that is, the vices and the wickedneſſe of men, whereby we diſhonour God, and defile our ſelves. And fourthly, to inſtruct in righteouſneſſe, that is, all thoſe that are ſimple in the rudiments of religion. And although the Apoſtle putteth doctrine in the firſt place, as being the chiefeſt of all the reſt, yet Tertullian tels us, that it is the property of hereticks, firſt movere, to perſwade, and then docere, to teach them; firſt, to make them their ſure followers, and then, when they be ſo addicted unto them, they can teach them what they liſt.

The property of Hereticques. Tertull. de Præſcrip.

And I am ſure, that we have ſome men in our daies, that are alwaies moving and perſwading, but never teaching; for notwithſtanding all their great ſhew of doctrine, they have nothing in their doctrines, but meere exhortations: I do not deny, but exhortations are exceeding good, to reforme our manners, but doctrinall inſtructions are farre better to informe the underſtanding; for that the other without this can no more be done, than a roofe can ſtand without a foundation; but this is farre eaſier for themſelves, and more plauſible unto the people; and therefore do they wholly addict themſelves unto the ſame; and they do not only practice nothing elſe, but to perſwade, but they have brought the ſame to ſuch a forme of doctrines, and reaſons, and obſervations, and uſe, ſo that I am ſure the like can never be found in the writings of the ancient Fathers, or any of the learned Schoolemen; for that good and ſcholler-like method, which all they have practiſed, is now quite altered, changed, and wholly rejected; and this new invented method, (whereby they can draw quidlibet ex quolibet, & ex ſilice ſanguinem, * any point of Divinity, out of what text you will) is now onely imbraced; and it hath gained ſo great a credit, as that the ſimpler ſort, ſuch as are the greater ſort, do think this form of preaching to be the onely infallible note of the true Preacher of God; and what they think of others, that uſe it not, I will not ſpeake: Yea now, theſe Preachers of the faction have verified that ancient propheſie, like Prieſts, like people; for this could not be ſaid in the time of the Fathers; for then, (as S. Bernard ſpeakes) The Prieſts were better than the people; neither could it be ſaid in the time of Popery; for then the people were better than the Prieſts; but now they are both alike, while the one will heare, but what may pleaſe him, and the other will ſpeake, but what may profit him; ſpeaking what, and when, and howſoever the people will, at whoſe tables they are fed, * like geeſe in the Capitol, to gaggle againſt every man that is againſt them.

Yet I confeſſe herein, the great goodneſſe of God in the diverſity of his gifts; that makes ſome men very able to perſwade the people unto piety, and others able to confute errours, which are not ſo powerfull in the former. Which alſo I confeſſe to be moſt plaine and eaſie, and therefore moſt profitable for the ſimpler ſort of people. *Divinity is indeed ſuch an homogeneall body, that, by deduction of conſequents, any point almoſt may be drawne from any text. Which is but the errour of the ignorant.

*This is only ſpoken of ſome few paraſyticall Preachers.

3. And moſt eſpecially in the orders and government of our Church, both Prieſts and people are as wavering, as changeable, and as unconſtant as in any thing els: for

3. The inconſtancy of ſome about the government of the Church.

1. Touching the Governours of our Church, and the guiders of Gods people, the moſt reverend Biſhops, which in the Church of God had alwaies authoritatem uberrimam, exceeding great authority, and the Church of them had uſum ſaluberrimum, exceeding great good uſe, as S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh, they muſt be quite excluded, Ædibus & ſedibus effugari, driven out of houſe and home, out of life and being, and inſtead of them muſt be erected a new ſort of governours, of a ſtrange concretion and compoſition, part of Clergy, part of Laity, a linſie wolſie, or an old and a new cloth pieced together, not much unlike Nebuchadnezzars Image, gold, braſſe, iron, clay, all patcht together; and yet, the whole Book of God muſt be unbowelled, to find out ſtiles honourable enough, to dignifie theſe new erected governours.

1. Touching the Governours. I do not here make an exact confutation of the folly and errours of theſe men, but I onely make a relation of the inconſtancy of them, how they alter all things, and how variable they are in all their waies, Dan. 2. 32.

And they ſay, that where this preſbyteriall Synod is not erected, Gods ordinance is not performed, the kingly office of Chriſt is not acknowledged, and the denyers of this government to be thoſe, which ſay, nolumus hunc regnare ſuper nos, we will not have this man to raigne over us; and therefore they ſhall heare that fearfull ſentence, thoſe mine enemies that would not that I ſhould raigne over them, bring hither and ſlay before me.

Luke 19. 14.

Verſ. 27.

But alas, alas, besides the antiquity of this calling, the divine authority that it hath from the Apostles; cannot the good service, done by Bishops, (not of few, but of so many, not of late in England onely, where the English Bishops, more than any else, have written learnedly, disputed soundly, and suffered manfully, in the defiance of Popery, in the time of Queene Mary; but of former times also, and in forraine countries, where so many faithfull Bishops, as S. Cyprian, S. Chrysostome, S. Basil, S. Nazianzene, S. Augustine, S. Ambrose, Fulgentius, and almost infinite more, have witnessed the Faith, some by their most painefull writings, and others by their most constant (suffering under bloudy tyrants) be any meanes to stand in the gappe, to stoppe this furious downe-throwing of them all?

The good service of many Bishops.

Hath some offended, and shall all be punished for the offence of a few? Indeed Theodosius, for the offence of a few, put all the Thessalonians to the sword;

Pallasq; exurere gentem Argiuûm, atq; ipsos voluit submergere ponto, And Pallas overthrew the whole navie of the Argives, Ruffin. l.2.c.18. Eccles. histor. Virgil. l.1. Æneid.

Vnius ob noxam & furias Ajacis Oilei, even for the sinne of one man; and, πολλακὶ ϗ ξυμπασα πόλις κακῆ ἀνδρὸς ἐπαυρεῖ, the Heathens say, God punisheth a whole citie for one mans sin, and sends upon it λιμὸν ὁμᾶ ϗ λοιμον, a famine and a plague for the sinne of few. But the Scriptures say, God would have spared five Cities, if but tenne good men could have been found therein; nay he would have spared Ierusalem, if but one good man had beene found therein; why then should all the Bishops be quite overthrowne, when as we find so many, so worthy, and so excellent men amongst them?

Hesiod. op. & dies.

Gen. 18.

Ier. 5. 1.

The novelty of the presbyteriall government.

Or if this can availe nothing; yet me thinkes the novelty of the other order of government should be a sufficient motive, to make all wise men to dislike the same, quum id verius quod prius, seeing ever the truth is the most auntient, as Tertullian speaketh; For it is most certaine, that this order of governement, which these men have invented in the Idea of their owne braines, hath never yet seene the age of a man; M. Calvin and M Beza being the first devisers, and chiefe erecters of the same; for, not onely the Councell of Nice confirmeth the antiquity of the government of the Church by Bishops, but Ireneus also, that lived not long after the Apostles time, doth say, that the Bishops then governing could derive their succession from them, to whom the Apostles by hand delivered the said Churches to be governed in every place; and he saith, that this antiquus Ecclesiæ status in universo mundo secundum successiones Episcoporum, pervenit usq; ad nos, &c. And S. Hierom himselfe, (that least favoured Bishops being no Bishop himselfe,) denies not but that the Church was governed by Bishops, even from Saint Markes time.

Which perhaps might be best in their popular estates.

Iren. l.4.c.63. f.487.

Hieron. ep. ad Evagr.

And yet we have too too many that, as Saint Hierom said of Origen, had rather erre with M. Calvin and M. Beza, quam vera cum alijs sentire, then to say the truth with others; they thinke that tutum est peccare, autoribus illis; they may well sinne, so they may have such authority; but I beloved, will say no worse of them, then S. Austine said of S. Cyprian, that sicut multa erant, quæ doctus Cyprianus doceret, although there are many things that S. Cyprian did most excellently teach; yet erat & aliquid quod Cyprianus docibilis disceret, there was something wherein Cyprian might have learned more then he knew, as especially in that point of rebaptization of children; so these men had not all knowledge, they might be ignorant in some things; and therefore though amicus Plato & amicus Socrates, these men shall be my friends, and I will love them well and honour their memories, for the exceeding great good service, that they have done unto the whole Church of God; yet magis amica veritas, I must love the truth farre better; for wise men have no reason to alter any ancient verity, for the love they beare to the authors of any novelty.

That we ought not to erre with any master.

Aug. de Baptis. contra Donat. to.7.

2. Touching the Lyturgie of our Church.

2. As for our Booke of Common prayers (which, for the excellency thereof, I have ever admired, and which, in any thing to dissent from Gods Word, I think can never never be proved, they being extraordinarily aſſiſted by Gods ſpirit that penned it) it muſt notwithſtanding be quite baniſhed by theſe men, and themſelves forſooth, that cannot erre, as they thinke, muſt frame another in ſteed of it: and, becauſe heerein they would ſhew themſelves to be no changelings, but remaine ſtill conſtant in unconſtancie, and moſt wavering in all their waies, we find that within the ſpace of three yeeres, there were no leſſe then three bookes brought forth by them, and as baſtards, ſo theſe baſtard bookes, were farre unlike, and much different each from other.

Teſte D. Bancroft. fol. 63.

3. Touching our Rites and Ceremonies, though they aime more at the Biſhops, yet are they boldeſt to ſpeake more againſt theſe; and therefore, theſe of all things elſe muſt preſently be packing at their pleaſure: ſome diſlike one Ceremony, ſome another, and by that time you have made the totall ſumme of them, we find that the totall ſumme of our Ceremonies, muſt be quite altered, and changed; not any one of them all, but ſome one of them will ſpeake againſt it: And becauſe we will not yeeld unto their deſires, they cry out, that the Church of England hath committed fornication with the Church of Rome, and hath tript out her foote like a ſtrumpet, to every device of mans braine, that hath paſſed by her: But herein I ſee that the Churches caſe is like the caſe of Suſanna; for this accuſation of incontinency is framed againſt her, by ſuch as would have beene incontinent with her themſelves; had Suſanna proſtituted her body to the Elders, her credit had never beene called into queſtion; even ſo had the Church of England yeelded unto theſe Preſbyterian Elders, to frame what Rites and Ceremonies they would, her credit would never have beene called into queſtion; and ſhe ſhould never have had ſuch bitter accuſations, had ſhe yeelded unto all their alterations.

3. Touching our Rites and Ceremonies.

Why our Ceremonies are accuſed.

Dan. 13.

And yet we are not ſure of that; for an Ægyptian will be againſt an Ægyptian, & proditoris proditor; and had Suſanna yeelded unto the Elders, it may be they would have accuſed one another, and then worthily had her credit been called into queſtion: ſo, had we yeelded unto theſe men, we ſhould have found it too too certaine, that they would have beene alwaies jarring, or alwaies altering even thoſe things, that themſelves had invented; for we find that they are conſtant in nothing; and not onely differing every one from another; but every one of them contrarying himſelfe, altering his minde, changing his reſolution, and carried away, like a clond, with every puffe of wind.

One thiefe betrayes another.

For be it knowne unto all men, that all of them, and every one of them ſcripſit, ſubſcripſit, & reſcripſit, yea ſome of them have ſubſcribed no leſſe then five times; and not onely ſcripſerunt, but juraverunt, they have alſo taken their oath in ſome things, ere they entred into the ſacred order of Prieſthood; if therefore they diſlike of our Church, and of the Rites and Orders thereof; why would they be made Miniſters of our Church? and ſo they take their oath before they receive any Eccleſiaſticall dignity; And this requirall of ſubſcription is no more then both may and ſhould be done, as we ſee plainely in the Councell of Nice: And yet theſe men, for all this, doe denie the ſame unto the people, and they will not performe the ſame in their function; but they doe alwaies ſpeake againſt the ſame in their Sermons, and they are ever beating this point into their followers heads, that they ſhould examine, ſearch, and ſeeke, whether the Word of God doth approove of the ſame or not.

D. Covell in his anſwer to D. Bury.

Subſcription Juſtified. Canon 8.

And therefore we may ſee hereby, not onely the largeneſſe of their conſciences, that can ſweare, and forſweare, and thus diſſemble with God and man; but alſo their cunning and crafty dealing with Gods people, that they may the more eaſily deceive them; for this hath beene alwaies the property of all Heretickes, to bid all men to ſearch and ſeeke, that ſo, bringing them to uncertainties, they might the ſooner catch them by their ſubtilties.

The craft of Heretiques.

Tertul. de præſcriptione hæret.

Ob. But then you will ſay, Will you ſo blind us with the Church of Rome, that we ſhall not examine the things that are propoſed, when as the Apoſtles bid us to trie the ſpirits, and to examine all things.

1 Theſ. 5. 21. 1 Ioh. 4. 1.

Sol. I

Sol. I anſwer briefly, not diſtinguiſhing the perſons, who ſhould be the examiners, whether this be ſpoken to the Prieſts onely, or to the people alſo; nor yet the matter that they ſhould examine; whether all things onely, that pertaine unto ſalvation; or all things generally, without reſtriction; but I ſay, that although all men had that authority, to trie and to examine all things; yet that they have it not at all times.

All things not to be examined at all times. 1 Theſſ. 5. 21. 2 Tim. 3. 7.

For, when the things be examined and approved, then wee muſt hold the things that are good, ſaith the Apoſtle; and then we muſt receive it without curioſity; for otherwiſe we ſhall be like thoſe fooliſh Women, that are ever learning, but are never able to come to the knowledge of the truth: ever ſeeking but never finding, ἀεὶ ὁδὸν ἐν ὁδῷ, alwaies about the way, but never in the way: for as Tertullian ſpeaketh, qui credit quæ credere debuerat, he that beleeveth, what he ſhould beleeve, Et aliud in ea re putat requirendum, and thinketh afterwards, to ſeeke for ſome other thing in that ſame thing, that he beleeved; Indicat ſanè ſe nihil eorum credidiſſe, quæ credere videbatur, aut credere jam deſiiſſe; he doth manifeſtly declare, that he never beleeved thoſe things, that he ſeemed to beleeve, or that now he giveth over to believe the things that formerly he beleeved; for it is moſt certaine, that he which ſeeketh, doubteth; and he which doubteth, beleeveth not, as he ſhould: ideo nobis curioſitate opus non eſt poſt Chriſtum Ieſum, nec inquiſitione poſt Evangelium; and therefore we need not be any longer curious, after we have found Ieſus Chriſt; nor be inquiſitive for any thing els, when we have found the Goſpell of Chriſt; for when we have once beleeved, nihil deſideramus ultra quærere; we do not deſire to ſeek, or to find any other thing: and Saint Chryſoſtome, upon thoſe words, volumus a te ſignum videre, we would ſee a ſigne of thee, ſaith, that ſicut ſemper diſcere ſignum eſt nunquam poſſe perficere, as to be alwaies learning, is a ſigne that we ſhall never be learned, never able to be perfect, ita teſtimonium ſemper quærere, ſignum eſt velle nunquam credere; ſo to be alwaies ſeeking for more proofes and teſtimonies, is a ſigne that they will never beleeve us; and Athanaſius alſo ſaith, that thoſe things, which have beene proved, and decreed by ſo many and ſo worthy Biſhops, ſupervacaneum eſt in judicium revocare; it is a vaine and an idle thing, to call them againe into queſtion: and ſo ſaid Valentinian and Martian; and ſo you find in your owne lawes, and in your owne trades, that things proved and approved goe for currant.

The doubtfull man beleeveth not.

Chryſoſt. ſuper. 12. Mat.

Things fully proved ought not afterwards to be queſtioned.

Yet things falſly determined by Councells have beene diſcuſſed and altered by other Councells.

And therefore when certaine men, in the Councell of Chalcedon, began to diſpute of ſome points, determined before in the Councell of Nice, the Fathers there aſſembled ſaid all with one conſent, Si quis retractat, anathema ſit; ſi quis ſuper iſta inquirit, anathema ſit; if any man retracteth, let him be accurſed; if any ſearcheth or ſeeketh any further, after theſe things, let him alſo be accurſed; maledictus qui aufert, maledictus qui innovat; yea let all and every one, that either addeth or diminiſheth, or altereth any thing, of theſe our decrees, be accurſed: and no marvell; for otherwiſe we ſhould never have any certainty of any thing, if we ſhould ſtill call into queſtion thoſe things, that are already determined.

And if theſe points determined by the Fathers in the Councell of Nice, touching the Deity of Chriſt, and other the waightieſt and greateſt points of all our Religion, might not be innovated or inquired into; Sub pœna maledictionis, under no leſſe danger then a curſe of Anathema, to be ſeparated from Gods people; then why ſhould we be ſo ready to alter the decrees of our forefathers touching Ceremonies and Circumſtances? could the former judge in ſo great matters; and could not the latter judge in ſo ſmall matters? or were the latter able, by the aſſiſtance of Gods Spirit, to plant the true Religion in deſpight of all their adverſaries; and had they no knowledge in theſe inferiour matters? What ſhall we doe then? Shall wee beleeve them? or as Appian the Grammarian reports of himſelfe, that hee called forth Homer out of his grave, onely to aske him what Countrieman hee was, and who was his Father; ſo, ſhall wee call the Apoſtles, or the Fathers out of heaven, onely to know whether wee

What Appian did

ſhould

ſhould receive the diſcipline and orders that they have decreed or not?

You ſee then (unleſſe, with the Sodomites, we do grope for a wall at noone day) what little reaſon we have to alter, either the Governours, or the government of our Church; and what great reaſon we have to imbrace the reſolution of Pilate, and to ſay, quod ſcripſi, ſcripſi, to what we have ſubſcribed, we have ſubſcribed, and will not alter it; our Lawes and our Orders are good; and therefore they ſhall remaine, like Pilates title, unchangeable, or like the Lawes of the Medes and Perſians, that could not be altered. Gen. 19. Eſter 1.19. Dan. 1.3.

And yet, who knowes not, what great contention and oppoſition, theſe men of the Puritan faction have made in our Church about the ſame? And the cauſe hereof (as they pretend) is their conſcience, and the zeale of God; but if you looke into it more narrowly, you ſhall find the true cauſe indeed to be, The cauſe of Schiſme and the oppoſition of the orders of our Church, threefold

1. Their covetouſneſſe.
2. Their ambition.
3. Their intolerable pride.

} A threefold cord, and therefore moſt hardly broken, unleſſe you breake their hearts wherein they are rooted; for,

1. Covetouſneſſe makes men teach things, which they ought not, for filthy lucre ſake, ſaith the Apoſtle: And this is diverſe times noted to be the cauſe of diverſe hereſies; for we read of Paulus Samoſatenus, that the hope of preferment, which he expected from the Queene of Arabia, cauſed him to fall into thoſe Schiſmes, which afterwards wrought his overthrow; ſo theſe men, finding themſelves unfit for any eminent charge in the Church, ſought to draw every place to an equality with themſelves; that ſo, they might partake of all the goods of the Church; or if this could not be, yet they ſaw the people were ſo deſirous of novelty, and ſo delighted to heare the ſpeakers againſt authority, that if they would be the men to ſpeake againſt the truth, to pleaſe the people, that (as I ſhewed you before) can never be pleaſed with authority, they ſhould get more by the people (as theſe do) for maintaining of their faction, than the true and faithfull Preachers could get, for the preaching of the faith: and they find, that to live at every mans Table, like begging Friers, was both dainty and eaſie unto themſelves; howſoever the ſame is baſe to any generous mind. 1. Covetouſneſſe. Tit. 1.11. Theod. l. 2. haer. fab.

2. Ambition is another cauſe of their contention and ſeparation; for as we read, that Arrius coveted the Biſhopricke of Alexandria, and Donatus laboured to be Biſhop of Carthage, and Aerius for a Biſhopricke in Pontus, which Euſtathius had gotten from him, and becauſe they could not get theſe eminent places in the Church, they became enemies againſt the Church, and ſo fell into moſt fearefull and damnable hereſies, as Epiphanius and others do declare; even ſo, the deſire of T. C. preferment, being fruſtrated by the farre more worthineſſe of another man, was the firſt cauſe that moved him to whet his pen and his tongue againſt the government of our Church; and the ſame thing is ſeen in all his followers; ſtop their mouth with a living, and preſently you ſhall ſee their hands ſubſcribing. 2. Ambition. Epiphan. haeſ. 75.

3. Their intolerable Pride, (whereby they contemne others, and are in admiration of their owne worthineſſe, and that moſt hypocritically under their demure carriage, and moſt holy ſhew of humility) is the chiefeſt cauſe of their diſobedient contention; Quia initia haereticorum (ſaith S. Cyprian) the beginning of all heretickes groweth from this, that contemning their Governours, they run from the Church, and erect prophane altars without the doores: And as the contempt of others is the cauſe of their departure, ſo their ſelfe-love is the cauſe of their contempt; for Aquitanicus Proſper found this to be the cauſe of all contentions in the Schooles of Philoſophers, quia ſeipſis ducibus utebantur, becauſe every one, that had a whirly-gigge in his owne braine, would have his owne conceit to go as currant as any; and ſo likewiſe this is the cauſe of all contentions in the Schooles of Divinity, and therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith, that this ſelfe-love is the maſter- 3. Pride. Cypr. ad Regnum. Pride the cauſe of all contention. Aug. de civit. Dei. l. 14. c. 28.

maſter-workman, qui adificat civitatem Diaboli, which buildeth the city of the Divell; for they are ſo beſotted with an opinion of themſelves, that they thinke their owne writings to be Goſpels, as the Hereticks did in the time of Irenæus; andthen, Pigmalion-like, they fall in love with thoſe images of their owne making, and they will ſooner hazard their lives, than, by revoking their errours, to impaire their reputations: and if you alledge againſt them all the generall Counſels; yet they think that all Councels might ſooner erre than themſelves: if you alledge the generall conſent of all Fathers, they ſtick not to ſay with Abailardus, though omnes Patres ſic, all the Fathers indeed thought ſo, at ego non ſic; yet I do not thinke ſo; Fathers are but children, and Schoole-men are but foole-men, (as ſome of our zealous fooliſh men have been pleaſed to call them in this place) in reſpect of themſelves, who can ſooner eſpie motes in the Fathers eyes, than they can thoſe beames of folly and ignorance, that are in their owne eyes. What then ſhall we ſay to them? An non juſtiùs os loquens talia fuſtibus tunderetur, quam rationibus refelleretur? Should not ſuch men be rather knocked with cudgels, than refelled by reaſons? Seeing the rod is the fitteſt for the back of a foole, as Salomon ſpeaketh; Et nonne omnium in ſe meritò provocat manus, cujus manus contra omnes? And ſhould not all mens hands be againſt that man, whoſe hands are againſt all men, ſaith S. Bernard?

Iren. l. 1. c. 1.

The waywardnes of Abailardus.

Bern. Ep. 119.

Idem ibid.

And yet theſe men are ſuch, as that they contemne all others; and, Narciſſus-like, do admire their own ſhadowes; yea and believe themſelves ſooner, than they will believe the Goſpell of Chriſt: Nam, qui in Evangelio, quod volunt credunt, ſibi ipſis potius quam Evangelio credunt, ſaith Tertullian; for they, that will believe what they liſt out of the Goſpell, do believe themſelves, and not the Goſpell: And howſoever they do pretend zeale and conſcience to be the cauſe of their contumacy, and conſtancy in their opinions; yet one true cauſe is the feare of impairing their credit; for many of them have been heard to ſay, if they ſhould now ſubſcribe, and yeeld to that, which they had formerly ſo bitterly ſpoken againſt, what would the world thinke of them? And ſo, they ſhew themſelves to be ſuch, as love the praiſe of men more than the glory of God, and to ſave their credit, with the loſſe of their ſoules, if God be not the more merciſull unto them, to mollifie their obſtinate hearts: parvum & inſcrutabile cor, for though their hearts be little, yet they are unſearchable, and they are full, &c.

They believe themſelves, and not the Goſpell.

Ioh. 12. 43.

And therefore, whatſoever cauſes they do pretend, yet theſe are the true cauſes, that cauſed them to contend; and their contention cauſed many people to become ſo diſtracted, as that they could not tell what to do: It hath ſhaken the hearts of thoſe, that were beginners, and it hath hindered thoſe, that would have been followers in the faith of Chriſt; for if a Gentile ſhould come and ſay, Vellem fieri Chriſtianus, I would faine be made a Chriſtian; (ſaith S. Chryſoſtome) yet when he ſeeth ſuch ſtrife and diſſentions amongſt us, ut neſciat cui adhæreat, that he knowes not of which ſect to be, cum ſinguli dicunt, ego verum dico, when every man ſhall ſay, I ſay the truth; why then, he knowes not what to do; and ſo ſay the Papiſts too; for I have read of Bernardine Ochin, a man of great learning, that being touched with the finger of Gods Spirit, began to diſlike of the doctrine of the Church of Rome, and ſo fled to Geneva, and from thence he came to England; but ſeeing ſo many blind ſects here amongſt us; Quæ licet omnes Chriſtianiſmi titulum ſibi vendicant, which, though all of them challenged to be true, tamen aliam aliam execrantem, yet each one condemning the other; he turned back againe to the Church of Rome, and, as the Indian Noble-man ſaid to the Prieſt, that would have baptized him, (when he had asked him, where the Spaniards went, when they died, and the Prieſt had anſwered to heaven;) he would never be baptized to go where they went; for that it was impoſſible for ſuch cruell and bloudy people, to go into any happy place: ſo this man ſaid, he would never be of that faith, which theſe men were of; for that it was impoſſible, that they, which were ſo ſimple, ſo way-ward, ſo obſtinate,

What great miſchiefe the oppoſition of rites and ceremonies effecteth.

Chryſ. Hom. 33. in Act.

Bernardine Ochin.

Chem. Serm. f. 71.

What the Indian Noble-man ſaid to the Spaniſh Prieſt.

obstinate, and so full of sects, and dissentions, could be of the true faith of Iesus Christ; seeing his coate is without a seame; to shew, that his Church should bee without a Schisme. O unhappy man, that being once lightned, would looke back againe to that Sicilian Ætna, that spues up smoake and sulphure, errours and heresies, into the world, to put out the eyes of men; but more unhappy England, that by thy Sects and Schismes about Rites and Ceremonies, things of such small moment in themselves, hast set so many hands to his shoulders, to cast him down, that was so desirous to stand in the truth of God. But I need not amplifie this point, to shew how their ignorance and simplicity, their division, and their obstinacy, have not onely hindered many from becomming Protestants, but have caused more to turne Recusants, and have shaken the hearts of many men, making them Camelion-like, capable of any faith, save the right faith: Heretici enim firmos fatigant, infirmos capiunt, & medios cum scrupulo dimittunt, saith Tertullian; for this is the property of Heretickes, to weary the strong, to catch the weake, as in a snare, and the middle sort, to leave them scrupulous; and therefore it is apparant, that quos ducunt, seducunt, they misleade all those, that they leade after them: and better no leading at all, then a leading out of the way.

Iob. 19. 23.

Tertul. de præscrip.

What then should be done unto these men, but (as the Lord commanded Abraham to cast out the bondwoman and her sonne) to cast them out of our Church, and to make them hold their peace, if they will offer to disturbe the peace of our Church; for, as in the Arke, there was as well Virga as Manna, a rod for correction, as bread for refection; so in the Church of Christ, there must be as well vox correctionis as vox consolationis, that is, not onely a voice of consolation, to defend the godly as with a shield, but also a voice of correction, to bruise the disobedient and the stubborne, as with a rod of iron, and to breake them in peeces like a potters vessell; For the Church of Christ, as she is ancilla Domini, the hand-maid of the Lord, so is she domina populi, the mistresse of her people, to rule and to guide her folke; yea and to correct them too, if they doe offend: and therefore Saint Augustine doth well compare her unto Sara, who thrust her maide out of dores, when she contemned her mistresse; to teach us, how the Church should mittere foras, thrust all those out of doores by Ecclesiasticall discipline, that are rebellious, and contumacious against her.

Gen. 21. That they ought to be silenced, which will not by any meanes be perswaded to subscribe, Heb. 9. 4.

Aug. to. 8. in Ps. 88

Idem ep. 48. ad Vincent.

I know that some thinke this to be durus sermo, an hard saying, quia cor durius est, because their foolish hearts are farre harder; and therefore they doe contemne the censures of the Church, and esteeme it none otherwise then as brutum fulmen; a bullet of corke, or as a thing of nothing; because they thinke the Church dealeth too hardly with them: But as, gravius ancilla Saram persecuta est, per iniquam superbiam, quam eam Sara per debitam disciplinam; Hagar did more persecute Sara, by her contempt and wicked pride, then Sara did Hagar by sending her out of doores, saith S. Augustine: so may I boldly say of these men, that they doe a thousand times more persecute the Church by their foolish speaking, and unjust accusing of her, then the Church doth them, in silencing of them.

Hagar persecuted Sara.

Aug. de unitate Eccles.

And we know by the rules of reason, that non omnis amicus qui parcit, nec omnis inimicus qui verberat; as Saint Augustine speaketh; every one is not a friend that spareth, and every one is not a foe that smiteth; and therefore, Let the righteous smite me, saith the Prophet; nam sicut est aliquando misericordia puniens, ita est aliquando crudelitas parcens, saith Saint Ambrose; for sometimes it is mercy to punish, and sometimes cruelty to spare; as the Father, which spareth his servant that killeth his Sonne, will be rather thought unjust then mercifull: and therefore when mildnesse will not serve, debet amor lasus irasci, love too much provoked, must grow angry, saith Saint Hierom: And the rules of Divinity tell us, saith S. Augustine, that, ut semper mali persecuti sunt bonos ita & semper boni persecuti sunt malos, as wicked men doe alwaies persecute the godly, so the godly doe alwaies persecute the wicked; illi nocendo per injustitiam, hi consu-

Idem ep. 48. ad Vincent.

To spare is sometime cruelty.

Hieron. ad Helio.

How the godly persecute the wicked.

lendo per diſciplinam; they, through malice doe unjuſtly hurt and vexe the godly, without a cauſe; but the godly, through love, doe juſtly correct them, for their wicked deeds by diſcipline; and therefore we ſee that the Apoſtles, which were delivered poteſtati humanæ, to the hands of men, delivered their deliverers, poteſtati Satanæ, to the power of Satan: And no marvell; for the diſcipline of the Church, ſaith Saint Cyprian, is cuſtos ſpei, retinaculum fidei, dux itineris ſalutaris, ac inſtrumentum bona indolis; the preſerver of hope, the retainer of faith, the guide unto ſalvation, and the cheriſher of all godlineſſe.

Aug. ibid. ep. 48. ad Vincent.

Diſcipline what it is.

Cyprian de diſcip. & hab. virg.

And therefore, ſeeing theſe men are ſo obſtinate, as that they will not be moved, voce ſuavitatis, by the ſweet voice of intreating; they ſhould be compelled to hold their peace, voce ſeveritatis, by the councelling correcting voice of diſcipline; and that as I gather in a double reſpect.

That the obſtinate and retractarie ought to bee diſciplined in two reſpects.

1. Of themſelves.
2. Of the Church.

1. Of themſelves.

1. For, ſi ille hæreticum interficit, if he killeth an hereticke, (as S. Hierome ſpeaketh) who ſuffers him to be an hereticke, and the other that doth juſtly puniſh him, quickneth and puts life unto him; becauſe he maketh him thereby to die unto his hereſie, and to live unto the Catholike faith; and if that be true, which Saint Auguſtine ſpeaketh, qui phreneticum ligat, & qui lethargicum excitat ambobus moleſtus, ambos amat; he that bindeth him that is frantike, and awaketh him that is in a lethargie, he is troubleſome unto both, but he loveth and helpeth both; why then, ſeeing they are poſſeſſed with a ſpirit of phrenſie, ſeeking to ſubvert all things; what greater good can be done unto them, then to bind ſuch mad men with the cords of juſtice, that ſo they deſtroy neither themſelves nor others.

Hieron. l. 3. c. 6. com. Pellag.

Aug. de verbis Domini. ſer. 59.

2. In reſpect of the Church.

2. It is farre better for the Church to weaken them by juſtice, then that they ſhould be ſuffered to weaken the Church by their faction; for as Groſthead ſaid of our Church, that ſhe ſhould never be delivered from the Ægyptian bondage, that ſhe was held in by the Pope, untill her deliverance was wrought in ore gladij cruentandi; even ſo, ſeeing theſe men are growne ſo head-ſtrong, I feare, we ſhall never have peace, untill it be wrought in ore gladij juſtitiæ, with the ſword of juſtice.

Groſtheads ſaying.

And therefore, they that accuſe our reverend Biſhops of too much ſeverity againſt theſe men, in ſilencing them; they ſhew themſelves to be enemies both to theſe men and us; for I thinke rather that of the twaine they are too mild and mercifull, then any waies too ſtrict and ſevere.

Three demands made.

But then, for all this that I have ſpoken, it may be, ſome will marvell at three ſpeciall things.

1. Queſt.

1. Why I ſpeake ſo much againſt them that are now ſo quiet, and are as the ſcinders quite buried in the aſhes; and therefore ſhould not be raked out now againe, quia malum bene abſconditum ne moveas; becauſe thou ſhouldeſt not touch an evill well couched.

2. Queſt.

2. Why I ſpeake ſo much againſt theſe men, and ſo little againſt the Papiſts.

3. Queſt.

3. Why I have ſo ſharpened my ſtile againſt them; as if it proceeded from an uncharitable minde toward them, or at leaſt with leſſer moderation then I ſhould, againſt brethren of the ſame profeſſion, howſoever different in ſome circumſtances of Religion?

1. Demand anſwered.

To the firſt I ſay, that I would to God this evill were bene abſconditum, well alayde; for I finde that in all places, like the Caterpillers of Ægypt, there are abundance of theſe people, both among Cleargy and Laity: why then ſhould we leave ſpeaking againſt them, untill they leave ſpeaking againſt the Church?

2. Demand anſwered.

To the ſecond I ſay; firſt, becauſe I find moſt men (as they ſhould, and as there are many juſt and great reaſons for it) ſpeaking againſt the Papiſts, and that large enough, and yet ſcarce ſo large as they ought; and but very few ſpeaking againſt theſe, theſe, and they that doe it but little enough. Secondly, becauſe though the Papiſts ſeeme and are indeed farre worſe then theſe; yet, for ought that I can ſee, I find theſe in ſome reſpects but little inferiour unto the other; For you can ſay of the Papiſts, but that they maintaine a falſe Church, (which indeed is as bad as bad may be) and it is moſt apparent, from the conſequent of their doing, that theſe would doe little leſſe then overthrow the true Church; and what difference betweene theſe two, to juſtifie the wicked, and to condemne the godly? Pro.17.15. And thirdly, becauſe I find, that although the other be farre more hurtfull to the Church of Chriſt in generall, as thoſe that are poyſoned in their doctrines, and doe maintaine errours and hereſies, and doctrines of divels farre more pernitious then theſe men doe; yet theſe men are more hurtfull to the Church of England in peculiar: Quia longe plus nocet falſus Catholicus, quam ſi verus appareret hæreticus; nam ſi inſurgeret apertus inimicus hæreticus, mitteretur foras & areſceret: because theſe are within the boſome of the Church; and therefore quò interius eò periculoſius; and the others are ſo farre that as yet, we hope, we need not feare ſo much; but theſe are ſo neere, that they are ſtill buzzing errours in the eares of our people. Inward enemies moſt dangerous.

And to the third I ſay, with what charity I ſpeake it, the God of all charity doth beſt know; and my ſelfe doth proteſt before that God unto you all, that though I have ever deteſted all their practiſes, yet have I ever loved all their perſons, and never wiſhed any more hurt to any of them, then I did to mine owne ſoule; the chiefeſt thing that ever I deſired, being their owne good, and the peace of the Church: And for the ſuppoſed too much vehemency of ſpeech againſt them, I ſay, that with a tender hand, and trembling tongue, I have ever touched the ſores of friends: but in them non verenda retego, ſed inverecunda confuto, I do not uncover the ſhame of a friend, but I diſcover thoſe things that are paſt all ſhame; the malice of enemies, and not the infirmities of friends: For why ſhould I thinke them to be friends, whoſe violent and tumultuary ſpirits have wrought ſo much trouble to this whole Church: and the end of whoſe practiſes would by conſequent have brought nothing elſe, but an utter deſolation in the Church, and in the end a quite rooting out of all Chriſtian Religion. For firſt, downe muſt the Biſhops goe; and what can follow of that but an anarchie in the Church? and then comes up the Presbytery; and they undertake no leſſe then the excommunicating of Kings; and there can follow of that, no leſſe then rebellion: no uſe of the Church, but in the time of preaching; and therefore, though they profeſſe a zeale of God, yet hereby it muſt needs follow, that there will be no zeale of Gods houſe, which is the houſe of prayer; no authors in their Sermons to be named, no Greeke nor Latine to be uſed, no ſayings of Fathers to be alleaged, no Schoole-men to be followed; & quid ſequitur, all good learning will be ſoone withered, and their verball preaching will be ſoone contemned: no kneeling at the Communion, for that is too much reverence; no antiquity to be followed, for that is too much vanity; no order to be preſcribed, for that is too much tyranny; no holidaies to be obſerved, for that is too much ſanctity; and what can follow of all theſe, but diſobedience, ignorance, prophaneſſe, and a heape of confuſions in all their doings? And in briefe, to paſſe over a hundred other things, that would bring forth a thouſand ſuch bitter fruits, they would not onely leave the preachers to be at the peoples liking, to be placed and diſplaced at their pleaſures, (the end whereof I leave to ſpeake, it being the onely end the Divell aimes at,) but they would have altogether brought upon the Miniſters, (as in ſome meaſure they have already done) veriſſimos labores & certiſſimam egeſtatem, an unſtinted paines, and an undoubted penury; a ſtinted ſtipend, as they terme it competent, whereby, it may be, they may poorely live, while they live, but ſure to leave nothing for wife and children, when they die, ſo that they muſt either want, or be maintained by the Pariſh: & quid ſequitur? ſublatis ſtudiorum præmijs, ipſa ſtudia pereunt, take away the reward of learning, and learning muſt needs periſh, ſaith Corn. Tacitus; and the very

3. Demand anſwered.

The manifold evill conſequences of ſome refractarie puritans tenents.

The want & miſeries that they would have brought upon the Miniſters.

very Poets could ſay as much; for Iuvenal demands,

L. 4 Satyr. 10. ——— Quis virtutem amplectitur ipſam,
Præmia ſi tollas? ———
Who dame vertue will regard,
Where is no hope left for reward?

De triſt. l. 5. And Ovid ſaith,

Deniq́, nulla mihi captetur gloria, quaq́
Ingenij ſtimulos ſubdere fama ſolet.
To me there is no offer made of any golden wedge,
Or outward glory, that hath power, to ſet my wits on edge.

And Martial, that witty Epigrammatiſt, doth as wittily ſay;

Sint Mecœnates, non deerunt Flacce Marones;
Virgiliumq́, tibi vel tua rura dabunt.
Where Patrons will preſent themſelves, there Poets will abound,
In every village towne will then a Virgil great be found. And

Cicero. Cicero the Oratour ſaith as much as the Poets; honos alit artes, & omnes incenduntur ad ſtudia gloriæ; and the Philoſopher confirmeth the ſame, that honos eſt

Ariſtotle. præmium virtutis, and poverty is the poyſon of all learning; For when this miſery is ſeene, who will ſpend ſo much money to make their ſonnes to be Miniſters, to live ſo poore, to die ſo beggarly, and to leave their family to live on almes? And now put all together, & reſpice finem, and then tell me what is like to be the end of all; if not anarchy and barbariſme, and a quite rooting out of all Chriſtian Religion? For this is the device of Satan, and the policy of hell it ſelfe, to gaine by inches, and to root out by little and little, that which ſuddenly he ſeeth impoſſible for him to do: and therefore wiſe men ſhould not only conſider how all things are for the preſent, but how they might continue hereafter, not only for a time, but alwaies.

And therefore, ſeeing the beginning of their doings were tragicall, with the trumpet of Sheba, with the tongue of Shemei, and not much leſſe than the hand of Zimri, the proceeding indirect and tyrannicall, and the end, in proceſſe of time, like to have proved more than intolerable, no leſſe than moſt lamentable; I would have no man that loves the continuance of the truth of God, and the peace of the Church of Chriſt, to think that either I, or any other, have ſpoken too much; when as all that can be ſpoken is not neare enough, to be ſpoken againſt them, untill they leave ſpeaking againſt the Governours and government of our Church.

And ſeeing they are as unconſtant in all good, that concernes the good of the Church, as ever Pilate was in his purpoſe to ſave Chriſt; let us neither love them in ſuch unconſtancy, nor yet any waies ſuffer the ſame to be in our ſelves; for that this is not onely the note of a foole, ut luna mutari, to be as changeable

Cyprian. as the moone; but alſo the property of a wicked reprobate, to be as the chaffe, that is carried away with the wind; Nam ut triticum non rapit ventus, nec arborem ſolida radice fundatam, ſed inanes duntaxat paleas jactat tempeſtas; for as the wind doth not carry away the wheat, nor throwes downe the trees, that are deeply rooted; ſo the wind of Satans malice cannot ſo much as ſhake the godly, that are deeply rooted in the faith of Chriſt, and moſt ſoundly builded upon the rock Chriſt Ieſus: for as Pilate ſaid, quod ſcripſi, ſcripſi: I am conſtant in my reſolution and will not alter it, ſo will they and every one of them moſt conſtantly ſay, quod credidi, credidi, we are conſtant in our profeſſion, we will not alter our faith. But the wicked, that are carried away with every wind of doctrine, he cauſeth to change and to alter all things, and ſo to prove inconſtant in all things that are good.

Tertull. But ſeeing they are wicked, avolent quantum volent, let the chaffe of a wavering faith flee away as farre as it will, with every puffe of temptations; eo purior maſſa frumenti in horrea Domini reponetur; for ſo ſhall the graine, that is laid up in the garner of the Lord, be the purer ſaith Tertullian.

De

De 2. He doth not only shake them downe from the rock of truth, whereon they stood before, but having cast them downe into the gulfe and quick-sand of sinne, he holdeth them there so fast, as that they were not so unconstant before in good, as they are now obstinate in that which is evill. And this is as great a fault as the former: for declinare a bono & perseverare in malo, to be inconstant in good, or constant in evill is both alike abominable unto God. And therefore, though we commend constancy, yet not in evill; quia in malis promissis rescinde fidem, for evill promises thou shouldest not performe; in turpi voto muta decretum; quod incautè vovisti ne facias: What thou hast foolishly vowed, let it not be performed; and in wicked decrees and purposes change thy mind; quia impia est promissio, quæ scelere adimpletur, for that is a most wicked promise, and a most wicked vow, that is performed with any sinne, saith Isidorus: and therefore, Herod should not have given John Baptists head unto the Damosell, though he had sworne to give her whatsoever she asked; for if a man sin in the promising, or in the swearing, or vowing of a thing, let him not sinne againe in the performing: for this is to add sinne upon sinne, or to excuse one sinne by another.

2. Constant in evill.

Evill promises and vowes not to be performed.

Isidor. l. 2. in synon. & hab. 22. q. 4. in malis.

And yet for all this, such is our misery, that we are constant, firm, stable or resolute in nothing so much, as in the things that are only evill: as

For { 1. In the wickednesse of our lives. 2. In the errours of our minds.

1. I feare me, that we are so rooted in sin, and so resolved to live therein, every man in the delight of his heart, that if Christ himselfe came in his owne person, and preached in this place against our sinnes, (it may be we would let him say what he would) yet most surely we would do what we list; all his preaching and all his wonders should no more prevaile with us, than it did with the Iewes; yea we would rather crucifie him againe with the Iewes, than crucifie any one sin within us; for as Moses non potuit mutare colorem uxoris Æthiopissæ, could not change the colour of his wife (saith S. Bernard) so we are so fastned in sin, that we cannot change our foulnesse; every one of us may say, peccatum meum contra me semper, my sin is alwaies before me; because I sinne alwaies against thee, O God; and from the sole of my foot to the crowne of my head, there is no soundnesse, but wounds and swellings, sores full of corruption; nulla sanitas, no soundnesse indeed, saith S. Bernard, quia nulla sanctitas; because there is nothing but wickednesse: and therefore I may well take up the complaint of Tertullian, O miseri nos, qui Christiani dicimur hoc tempore, O miserable men that we are, which are called Christians in these daies, & gentes agimus sub nomine Christi, and yet do live like the Gentiles, under the name of Christians, yea farre worse than the Gentiles: for though they believed like Pagans, yet they lived as Christians; but though we professe to believe like Christians, yet do we live farre worse than Pagans; for it is most certaine to them, which read the histories of the Lives of the Heathens, and do observe the lives of many of our professed Christians, that (excepting idolatry) the very Iewes, the Heathens, and the Pagans neither had, nor have, so great, so many, and so horrible detestable sinnes, as we have raigning amongst many of us; and therefore I may take up the saying of Tertullian farre better of us, than he could say it of the Christians of his time, that we are hated of the very Iewes and Heathens, even for our vices sake; For we are so setled in sin, and so accustomed to heare all, say what you will, yea we will commend them, that speake earnestly and zealously against sinne; and yet so godlesse and so graceless are many of us, and so fastned in all sinnes, as that it is impossible for us with all our preaching, to draw any of them from any sin.

1. In the wickednesse of our lives.

Bern. dom. 1. post octa. Epiph. ser. 2. There are two Ethiopia's; and therefore, though Zippora was an Æthiopian, yet was she not a blackmoore. Esa 1.

And so saith S. Gregory too.

It is written of many of the Romish Fathers.

Hymnus hic est modus vitæ, This Hymne the usuall forme doth give,
Quo utuntur Iesuitæ. In which the Iesuites do live.

Opulentas civitates,
Vbi ſunt commoditates,
Semper quærunt iſti patres.

To wealthieſt cities, where the rather
They moſt commodities may gather,
Flies every Ieſuitiſh Father.

Bonum panem, melius vinum,
Nec recipiunt peregrinum,
Neq; ſurgunt ad matutinum.

Beſt wine they drink, and eat good bread,
With which no ſtranger ſees them fed,
Nor notes how long they lie in bed.

Carne pingui vitulina,
Per quam exul eſt vaccina,
Plena eſt horum coquina.

With groſſe beefe they'l never deal,
But for it fat and tender veal,
To their full kitchin ſtill they ſteal.

Indij galli atq; pavones,
Quorũ cibus ſunt macharones,
Horum patrum ſunt buccones.

Indian cocks and turkeyes great,
Fed alwaies with pureſt wheat,
Are thoſe bits theſe Fathers eat.

Crocum, piper, cum amomo,
Et quæ nullus ſanctus homo
Habuit, habent iſti in domo.

Saffron, pepper nouriſh them,
And Roſes of Ieruſalem,
Of which no holy man doth dreame.

Quando vocant carcerati,
Bonis omnibus privati,
Dicunt ſumus occupati.

When priſoners for their charity call,
They ſay, we are depriv'd of all,
And muſt to our devotion fall.

Sed ſi vocant potentes,
Divitijs affluentes,
Rogant Deum & omnes gentes.

But when their mighty friends and rich,
Require their helps, they God beſeech
For them, and through all nations preach.

Divitumq; patrimonia,
Magnatumq; matrimonia,
Ficta tractant ſanctimonia.

Th'inheritances of rich heires,
And Princes nuptiall affaires,
Diſpoſeth this fain'd zeale of theirs.

Si quis dives infirmatur,
Pro ejus morte Deus rogatur,
Quando hæreditas ſperatur.

When rich lie ſick, and theſe men gape
To have their riches feed their rape,
They pray God they may never ſcape.

O lupinam feritatem,
Prædicando charitatem,
Noſtram rapiunt hæreditatem.

O wild and wolviſh cheviſance,
That when they charity advance,
They raviſh our inheritance.

Habent opes Venetorum,
Gravitatem Hiſpanorum,
Et potentiam Romanorum.

Venetian wealth they ſtill apply,
Affect the Spaniſh gravity,
And build on Romes Authority.

Si quis quærat regia officia,
Eccleſiaſtica beneficia,
Horum dantur amicitia.

If Princely offices be ſought,
By theſe men all they muſt be wrought,
And with good ſtore of wealth be bought.

Dominantur temporale,
Dominantur ſpirituale,
Dominantur omne et; Vale.

In temporall ſtate they beare the bell,
In ſpirituall ſtate as much excell,
In all ſtates they command; Farewell.

But if we look well unto our ſelves, I doubt not but we ſhall find ſo much evill in many places, as can neither by rime nor reaſon be well expreſſed; we need not wander abroad to prie into the faults of our neighbours; we are full enough inough at home; and as I ſaid before, ſo I ſay ſtill; the preachers ſhall have inough to doe to draw any one of us from any ſin; and eſpecially, thoſe that are addicted to them, from

1. Adultery, 2. Couſenage, 3. Covetouſneſſe, 4. Diſſention, 5. Swearing, 6. Sacriledge. For

1. In whoredome and adultery we continue ſo conſtant, and cleave ſo faſt unto the fleſh, as the fleſh doth to our bones: and this is accounted but Magnatum ludus, the ſport of Nobles, though it proves magnatum funus, to bring many of them unto untimely death, yea and many more of them to everlaſting death; for whoremongers ſhall not inherit the kingdome of Heaven, ſaith the Apoſtle: Neq; populi ſunt expertes; and the Nobles ſhall have companions enough herein; for, as a horſe neigheth after a mare, ſo, from the higheſt unto the loweſt, doth every man neigh after his neighbours wife, ſaith the Prophet: And this bewitching ſinne, is like a well in Epirus, that when fire-brands are put into it, will preſently quench them; and yet when they are quenched, it will preſently ſet them on fire againe; for an harlot is found to be ſuch a water, as when it quencheth the luſt of the body for a time, it ſets the ſame on fire ever after a great deale more: And this is the cauſe, that we are ſo wedded to this ſinne, and ſo bewitced with the pleaſures therof, as that many will die a double death, not ὑπερ πάτρας, for the love of the Common-wealth, but ὑπερ μήτρας, for the love of a common wench, as Alexis ſaid to Calimedon; they will ſooner leeſe their life, and eternall life, then they will be perſwaded to forſake this ſinfull ſin.

1. How conſtant many are in uncleanneſſe. Eraſ. annot. in Hieron. ep. ad Innocent. 1. Cor. 9. 10.

Ier. 5. 8.

Aug. de civitat. Dei. l. 21. c. 5.

A harlot, what manner of water ſhe is.

Eraſ. Apoph. l. 6.

2. Couſenage is our common practiſe, and ſome Londoners ſerve ſeven yeares prentiſhip, that they may be cunning inough in couſening; and therefore now the times are ſo deceitfull, as that we know not whom to truſt; for moſt men are ſuch, as——fronte politi

Aſtutam vapido ſervant ſub pectore vulpem;

For they have mel in ore, fel in corde; lanx in dictis, fraus in factis, honey in their mouthes, but malice in their hearts, and miſchiefe in their heads; they write Pharmaca medicines, upon the outſide of the boxe, when they deliver venena poyſons; and they are as ambiguous in their anſwers, as Λοξίας was in his Oracles; yea many of them, with the face of an Angell, with nothing but indeed, have learned to play the divels of darkeneſſe, and to cozen men in very deed, yea to cozen them before their faces: theſe are the broode of vipers, and the generation of ſerpents, that with their Meandrian turnings and windings, are growne ſo skillfull in the rule of falſhood, and in the art of aquivocation, as that we may ſay,

2. How conſtant ſome are in fraud and deceit.

Perſ. ſat. 5.

Quo teneam vultus mutantem Protea nodo?

Is it poſſible for them to be underſtood by any mortall man? And therefore, being ſo skillfull in the divels logicke, they doe nothing elſe but inrich themſelves with unrighteous gaine: and of all other, they thinke that gaine to be their godlineſſe, which by their fraudulent leaſes, (that the wit of divels hath firſt invented) and by other their cunning, crafty, and cruell dealing, they keepe backe from the poore and godly Miniſters: I could ſpeake more of this, were it not our owne cauſe, and I would have ſpoken leſſe of this, were it but only our cauſe; but ſeeing it is a more greevous ſinne to you, then it can be loſſe to us, we muſt ſpeake of it for your good; yet I doe aſſure my ſelfe you can be contented to beare the ſinne, ſo we be contented to beare the loſſe; for that the wicked are herein, as in all ſinnes elſe, as conſtant in them, as ever the Divell was in evill.

3. Covetouſneſſe doth ſo cleave unto us, that as it is the roote of all miſchiefe, ſo are all of us little or much ſo rooted therein, as that our minds will never be altered; ſay we what we will, or what we can againſt it, yet may we ſay with the Prophet, who beleeveth our reports? our words ſeeme unto you, but as Lots Sermon to his ſonnes in Law, when he foretold the deſtruction of Sodome, who ſeemed as though he had mocked: For as the Cartwheele is alwaies tumbling in

3. How conſtant ſome are in covetouſneſſe.

Iſay 53. 1.

Gen. 19. 14.

the dirt, so our hearts are alwaies turmoyling in the base riches, the dung and drosse of this wicked world; and all the world cannot dissuade us from it; for as Judas sold Christ to the High-Priests for money; so would many now a dais sell their soules unto the divell for money; they will be contented to leese their soules, so they may save their money; they will leese their pleasure, their liberty, their contentment, and all else for the love of wealth; as if their soules were made of money: for among many other things, these two things I have observed.

Two observable things. 1. Thing.

1. That whatsoever the Pope hath done, that tendeth to your profit, and sends the money to your coffers, it is as well done, and as generally embraced, as if the best Angell in heaven had done the same; Looke to your impropriations, that the Pope hath made (and yet he did but take them from one Scholler, to give them to another Scholler) and yet this is well enough; if all his doings were thus to you, and brought so much profit to you, you would never blame him; but whatsoever he hath done to draw any money from you, though it be never to so good an end; yet the same is as damnable, as if the Divell of hell had made the same: Whatsoever is for your profit, whosoever did it, that you like well enough, & è contra.

2. Thing.

2. I have observed, that if the people have a Minister, that can neither teach as he ought, yea not at all, nor live as he should, but will take what they give him, and never raise their tythes; they will say they have a very honest man, and will desire he may long continue amongst them; for that they are sure, when he goeth they shall have a worse; but give them the best Preacher in the world, and let him live as uprightly as man can doe; yet if he doth but call for his due, or seeke to raise his tythes, a penny where a pound is due, then will they say, they are troubled with a contentious fellow, they will all with open mouth say, he is a covetous fellow, and very glad they would be to have him gone: Whereby any man may conclude, that they had rather leese their soules then leese their money: Well, but Cavete ab avaritia, take heed and beware of covetousnesse: for I do remember foure sins that are called peccata clamantia, crying sins, which are expressed in this distich;

Clamitat ad cœlum vox sanguinis, & Sodomorum;
Vox oppressorum, merces retenta laborum:
The wages detained doth loud for vengeance crie;
So murder, oppression and lustfull Sodomie.

Foure crying sins. 1. Murder. Gen. 4. 10.

1. Murder; nam vox sanguinis fratris tui clamat ad me, for the voice of thy brothers bloud cryeth unto me from the earth.

2. Oppression. Exod. 2. 23. Exod. 22. 23. 27.

2. Oppression, for the crie of the Israelites for their bondage came up to God, and the Lord saith, If you vexe and trouble the poore, and he crie unto him, he will surely heare his crie.

3. Sodomie. Gen. 18.

3. Sodomie, for the crie of Sodome and Gomorrah is great, saith the Lord.

4 Detaining of wages. Deut. 24. 15.

4. Detaining or defrauding the hire of the Labourer; for thou shalt give him his hire before the Sunne goe downe, lest he crieth against thee unto me, and it be sin unto thee saith the Lord.

Most of the crying sins proceed from covetousnes

These are crying sinnes, not for mercy for you (you may assure your selves of it;) but for vengeance against you; and yet most of these if not all of these doe proceed from covetousnesse; for what makes you to detaine the hire of the labourer? what makes you to oppresse the poore, by your unreasonable rents, or any waies else, but onely your covetousnesse, and your desire to enrich your selves, by the losse of others? what made Achab to kill Naboth, and what makes the Usurer to kill many men, and to shed innocent bloud, but onely covetousnesse? for his desire of wealth, not onely renteth his owne soule, but teareth in peeces the flesh of others, and fetcheth still the drops of bloud from them, one after another: And therefore the Usurers that are of all men most covetous, may be best termed, viri sanguinum, men of bloud, and bloudy men; and all their wealth may be truly

Vsurers what they are.

Psal. 5.

said

ſaid to be the price of bloud; and therefore when God maketh inquiſition for bloud, wo be to the uſurers.

So you ſee all theſe crying ſinnes, theſe bloudy ſinnes, nay all ſinnes els, do proceed from covetouſneſſe; for it is radix omnium malorum, the root of all miſchiefe, ſaith the Apoſtle: and therefore it made Demas to forſake S. Paul; it made the young man to forſake Chriſt; and it makes many to forſake the way of ſalvation, and to run on in the way of eternall deſtruction: It makes many men to forſake the Goſpell, and to refuſe the Miniſtery (for that is poore) and to imbrace the law, (and ſo, in ſome ſenſe, to fall away from grace) to become great Lawyers; becauſe they are the onely men, the chiefeſt rich men; they onely, or ſome of them (as I take it) having received the world from the Divell, upon thoſe conditions, which our Saviour Chriſt, and all his Miniſters have refuſed it. And yet for all this, when they have loſt their ſoules in getting riches, they ſhall leeſe their riches alſo; for when a rich man dieth, he ſhall carrie nothing with him; they are like Pyrrhus and Hannibal, who could quickly conquer Cities, but could never keep them long when they had ſubdued them; ſo the worldlings can heape up riches, but neither they nor their poſterity can keep them to the third generation; their wealth being but as ſnow-bals, that are gathered with cold fingers, and yet preſently are melted with the Sun, or waſhed away with the raine.

1 Tim. 6. 10.

What the Author thinks ſome Lawyers have done. Mat. 4. 19.

Plutarch. in vita Pyrrhi & in vita Hannib.

Wealth like ſnow-bals.

And we find that riches doth not onely prove the Spiders web, which is a vanity, but many times the Cockatrice egge, which is deſtruction to them that hatch it: for the rich man, ſaith S. Chryſoſtome, hath two heavy burdens upon his back, the one is, deliciarum putredo, fleſhly delights, and the other is, curarum magnitudo, quorum unumquodq; ad ſubigendum navigium ſufficit; abundance of worldly cares; whereof the leaſt is able to ſink a ſhip; or as S. Ambroſe ſpeaketh, he hath unum pondus divitiarum, alterum peccatorum, one waight of riches, and another waight of ſinnes; and therefore well ſaith Pope Leo, that fœnus pecuniæ, the birth of money proves many times to be funus animæ, the death of man.

Riches what they are to many.

Chryſ. hom. 45. in Mat.

Leo de Iejun. dec. menſ. ſer. 6.

4. In diſſention, we are ſo glued, that we cannot be diſſolved; for though in the Primitive Church ſuch was their unity, that omnis homo in Chriſto, unus homo; all men in Chriſt were but as one man, they were all like Hippocrates twins, that had idem velle, & idem nolle, the ſame mind, and the ſame meaning; for they had cor unum, & animum unum, one heart and one mind; yet now is it far otherwiſe; for ſo many men, ſo many minds; nay, ſo many minds in every man; for we are like the fooliſh Galathians, that delighted to devoure one another; and although our Church, many times, findeth peace among ſtrangers; yet, Filij nequam, filij ſcelerati ſæviunt in eam, her owne children, like the ſonnes of Rebecca, do ſtrive within her wombe; yea, Nero-like, viper-like, they do kill and exenterate their owne mother-Church; and ſo, like Ieroboams garment, they have rent in pieces the peace of the Church.

4. How conſtant ſome are in diſſention. Aug. in Enarrat. Pſal. 39.

Diſſention in the Church. Bern. Ser. ad Paſtores in Synodo. 1 Reg. 11. 30.

Neither is contention onely reſident in the Church, but a thouſand times more in the common-wealth; the Divell, which is the accuſer of our brethren, & diſſentionis deus, and the god of diſſention, doth throw his apples of ſtrife amongſt us, and ſetteth at variance as much as he can,

Diſſention in the common-wealth.

For
1. God with man.
2. Man with God.
3. Man with man.
4. Man with himſelfe.

Whom the Divell ſetteth at variance

1. He accuſeth God unto us, as he did to Eve; Ye ſhall not die, but your eyes ſhall be opened, and you ſhall be tanquam Dij, as Gods; as if God did of purpoſe keep them blind, that they ſhould not be happy; whereby he might draw her to a diſlike with God, and to like better of his device; and ſo he deſires alwaies to make man to diſlike of God, and to think he is not ſo good a God as he might be.

1. God with man. Gen. 3. 4, 5.

2. He

2. Man with God. Iob 1.9. Rev. 12.10.

2. He accuſeth us to God, as he did that righteous Iob, whom he ſaid did not ſerve God for nought; and therefore he is called the accuſer of our brethren.

3. Man with man.

3. He makes ſuch diſſentions betweene man and man; as we ſee, there is nothing but ſtrife, hatred, and warre it ſelfe amongſt us: I need not ſtand to confirme it; for the Lawyers wealth and velvet gownes do ſufficiently prove it.

4. Man with himſelfe. Bernard. feſto omn. Sanct. ſer. 5 fol. 207

4. He ſets poore man at variance againſt himſelfe; for ſinne (ſaith S. Bernard) non ſolum ponit nos contrarios Deo, ſed facit nos nobis-ipſis graves; doth not only ſet us at variance with God, but it makes us alſo grievous unto our ſelves; ſo that fugiat homo ab agro in civitatem, let a man run from the field into the City, or from the City into the field, Ecce hoſtem invenit, quo confugerat, behold ſtill he finds an enemy; for there is war within himſelfe, caro adverſus ſpiritum, & ſpiritus adverſus carnem concupiſcens, the fleſh fighting againſt the ſpirit, and the ſpirit ſtriving againſt the fleſh.

Aug. in Pſal 45. Tom. 8. fol. 286.

Here is nothing therefore but diſſention, and a conſtant continuance therein; all the perſwaſions in the world cannot diſſwade us from diſſentions; all being ſo conſtant in their reſolutions, to have their will, whatſoever it coſt them.

5. How conſtant others are in ſwearing.

5. Oaths are as common as words; ſo that it is a wofull thing to conſider of this one thing: but I will ſpeake no more of this, but only deſire you, before you paſſe this place, to looke into the fift of Zachary, and there to read of the flying booke, that was written, both within and without, and ſaith, that a flying curſe ſhall enter into the houſe of him that ſweareth, and it ſhall remaine in the midſt of his houſe, and it ſhall conſume it with the timber, and the ſtones thereof.

6. How conſtant others are in ſacriledge.

6. And as for ſacriledge, the patrimony and inheritance of the Church (as by a Lex Agraria) is diſſipated into ſo many hands, as that without a miracle it can never returne to the Church againe; and I think, they have vowed to themſelves, to ſow the land of the Church with ſalt, that it might ever be barren, and never beare fruit any more unto the Prophets or Prophets children: for they hold it as an irrevocable Maxime, that non oportet Chriſtum diteſcere; and we have not a few of ſuch, which care not for Religion, ſo they might get the ſpoyle, but could be well content to crucifie Chriſt, ſo they might get his garments; for our age is full of ſuch ſpoyling Souldiers, and ſuch wicked Dionyſians, that would rob Chriſt of his golden coat, as neither fit for him in winter nor ſummer.

The worlds maxime.

Neither are they onely ſatisfied with the inheritance of the Church, and taking the houſes of God in poſſeſſion; but their chiefeſt ſtudy is alſo to rob God and the Levite, of the little portion of tythe and offering, which is left unto them; and therefore, we cannot ſay of ſuch, as the Iewes ſaid of the Centurion, that he loved their nation, and built them a Synagogue; but we may truly ſay of many, that although you ſpeake us faire, yet you love us not; but you are like your father the Divell: qui proponit quod delectabile, ſupponit quod exitiale; ungit, pungit; you will give us the tenth of our tythes; and, it may be, once in ten yeares, you will bid us to your dinners; and this is the cauſe that our Church, which was wont to be ſo faire and beautifull, doth now cry, pellis & oſſa ſum miſer: I remember that Egypt in the time of Ioſeph, felt ſo extreame a famine, that the fift part of the land was ſold to relieve the land; yet the Patriarch, in all this care that he had both of the Countrey and of the King, to ſuccour the one, and to inrich the other, never attempted the ſale of the land of the Prieſts, nor once diminiſhed the ſame: And therefore if the holy Patriarch, in ſo great extremity, never ventured to alienate the poſſeſſions of idolatrous Prieſts, though it were to the relieſe of a whole kingdome; why then, with what face dares any politicke worldling curtoll the maintenance of the Church of Chriſt, or untile the houſes, that by religious

The care of Egypt and Ioſeph for the Prieſts.

Princes

Princes have beene consecrated to Gods service? and yet we feele how our maintenance is shortned, how in our tythes we are cousened, and your selves see, how the houses of God are now made houses for men.

The curse of Sacrilege.

But is it possible that this sin should go unpunished? surely no; for, aut non est Deus, aut hoc impunè non erit; And you know what curses the Prophet David pronounceth against them, saying, Doe thou unto them as unto the Midianites, unto Sisera and unto Iabin at the brooke of Kison, which perished at Endor and became as the dung of the earth; make them and their Princes like Oreb and Zeb; yea make all their Princes like as Zeba and Salmana; which say, let us take to our selves the houses of God in possession; ô my God, (marke how pathetically he speakes it) make them like unto a wheele, and as the stubble before the wind, like as the fire that burneth up the wood, and as the flame that consumeth the mountaines, persecute them even so with thy tempest, and make them afraid with thy storme; make their faces ashamed ô Lord, that they may seek thy name; let them be confounded and vexed ever more and more, and let them be put to shame and perish; I know not with what words a man could set forth a more terrible curse and execration, then this holy Prophet doth here set downe the fearefull state of these Church-robbers; and I reade that our ancestors commonly used these words in their donations; Let their account bee without favour in the day of the Lord, whether they bee our heyres or successors, or whosoever els, that shall dare to diminish, or to alter the lands, revenues and inheritance that we have consecrated unto the Lord: and therefore they shall be surely punished, aut in mundo, aut in inferno; for we find that many were plagued here, for an assurance unto others to be plagued hereafter; and therefore we reade that Celce, the Constable of Gertrund, King of Burgundy, having inriched himselfe with the goods of the Church, & hearing one day in the Church, the woes and the curses that are due to Church-robbers, he suddenly shriked in the Congregation, and cried out, This woe is spoken to me, this curse is upon me, and my posterity; and afterward he died most miserably. And an infinite more almost, such fearefull examples I might relate unto you, if the time would permit: and all are to shew, how odiosus this sin is in the sight of God, and how sure it shall be of punishment, if not in this life, then farre more fearefull in the life to come.

Psal. 83. 9, &c.

The forme of donation of goods unto the Church. Lapis. Car. l. 6. cap. 285.

How Church-robbers have beene punished.

Vide D. Gardiner in his scourge of Sacriledge, versus fin.

And then, as it was prophesied of Turnus.

Turno tempus erit magno,
Cum optaverit emptum
Intactum Pallanta, & cum
Spolia ista diemq́ oderit.

The time will be, when Turnus shall wish at the deareſt rate,
Pallas had been untoucht, and this his spoyle and day shall hate.

So the same prophesie will be fulfilled and accomplished in them. And yet for all this, this sinne is so pleasant unto us all, that although in former times, the zeale of Gods house did eate up the godly; yet now, the zeale of these godlesse people have eaten up Gods house, and like King Pharaohs leane ill favoured Kine, that devoured those good and goodly beasts; so have these hunger-bitten fellowes devoured the goodlinesse of our Church.

Psal. 69. 9.

But seeing the punishment hereof is so fearefull, and yet that the same is so delightfull to every one of us; as if this alone were, delitiæ generis humani, the onely delight of men; yea, and that in our Luciferian pride, we are waxed so intollerable, as that we cannot endure our owne sores to be touched, nor abide to heare of helping remedies, but that, multitudo reprehendentium, doth indurare rare impatientiam, we grow worse and worse if we be reproved; I will onely turne my selfe to God, and pray yet against your wickednesse, that there may be an end of these things, before there be an end of all things.

And such is our resolution; so constantly doe we continue in sin, in these sins especially, and in all sins generally: that herein we say with Pilate, Quod scripsi, scripsi, we have subscribed to these things, and to continue in these sins, & we will not

Psal.119.136. not alter it: And therefore every Christian man may say with the Psalmist, that his eyes doe gush with water, or wish with the Prophet Ieremy, that his head were full of water, and his eyes a fountaine of teares, that hee might weepe day and night, because men keepe not the lawes of God: Quia coram pio, vivens impiè, etsi non obligat conscientiam, cruciat tamen sentientem, saith Saint Augustine: for, when the sinnefull man commits his wickednesse before the good mans face, though the godly mans hand toucheth not the sinne; yet the wicked mans sinne toucheth the godly mans heart: and therefore Saint Cyprian said of the relapsed Christians, that he could not chuse but weepe to consider of their sinne; and that neither the soundnesse of his body, nor the sincerity of his soule could any way ease his griefe: so if we doe well consider how the world is plunged in sinne, and so constant in their resolution, never to forsake their sinnes; I am verily perswaded it were almost able to make hearts of stones, to gush forth into streames of waters, as the waters gushed out of the stony rocke.

Aug. Ep. 145. ad Sybast.

Cyprian ad Lapsos.

Virgil. Æneid. l. 2 For, quis talia fando temperet a lachrymis, what heart so flinty, that will not melt into teares, when he doth consider our most constant constancy in all these sins, and then calls to mind the fearefull punishment that is threatned against every sinne? which hath beene the cause of the destruction of Sodome, of the rejection of the Iewes, and the damnation of many infinite thousands, qui jam nolentes ceciderunt in pœnam, quia sæpe volentes ceciderunt in culpam, which now unwillingly are punished in hell, because they have so often sinned, and so willingly continued in sinne: And no marvell: for if you lay more waight upon the roofe, then the pillars can support, the house must needs fall though it be never so strong; even so, if you lay upon any man more waight then he can beare, hee must needs sinke though he were as strong as Atlas; but sin is of an intollerable waight; it presseth God himselfe, as a cart is pressed that is full of sheaves; and it maketh the earth, to reele to and fro, like a drunken man: and therefore as a malefactor that is pressed to death, crieth for more waight, so the waight of sinne maketh the sinner to cry for more vengeance against himselfe, and for the burthen of the Lord, to presse him downe to the pit of hell.

Amos 2.13. Esay 24.20.

Ier.23.

Surely, surely, saith Saint Augustine, it is a great deale more fit, and a great deale indeed more profitable unto us, ut anima carnem ad cœlum vehat, quam ut animam caro ad infernum trahat, that the soule should carrie the body to heaven, then that the body should pull downe the soule to hell; O then let us cease from sin, and let us continue no longer therein; but let us flie from sinne as from a Serpent, saith the Sonne of Syrach. And why, as from a Serpent (saith another) & non potius ab unguibus Leonis aut a Tigridis dentibus, vel a facie Draconis, and not rather, as from the pawes of a Lyon, the teeth of a Tiger, or the face of a Dragon, seeing these are more terrible, and other vermines are more poisonable then the little snake? he answereth out of Esay, because that out of a Serpents root commeth a Cockatrice, and the fruit thereof will be a fiery flying Serpent; to shew indeed that sinne groweth worse and worse, greater and greater, untill the height and fullnesse of our sinnes, doth bring upon us the fullnesse of Gods vengeance; quia abyssus abyssum invocat, for that the greatnesse of the one doth require the severenesse of the other: and thus doe we continue constant in the wickednesse of our lives, and the corruption of our manners.

Why sin is compared to a Serpent.

2. Our constancie in our opinions and the errours of our minds.

2. As we are thus fastned in our sinnes, as with the chaines of iron, quibus ligat nos Diabolus in peccatis; so are we as obstinate in our opinions; that nothing can move us from the same; alleadge what you will against us, Fathers Counsells, Reasons, Scriptures, and all together; yet all can never make us yeeld unto any thing that is contrary to our owne minds and opinions; every man is of the resolution of Pilate, quod scripsi, scripsi; quod sentio, sentiam; as I hold, so I will hold; and as I say, so I will say, and I will not alter it; for as quod volumus, id sanctum est; so quod sentimus, id verum est; what we will, is good; and and what we thinke, is true, whatſoever it be; and this is the cauſe of infinite errours, of all hereſies, of grievous enormities, and of the unwillingneſſe in men to yeeld to any reaſon, unto their Princes; and of their eager willingneſſe, to do contrary unto all reaſon, unto their Prieſts.

Obſtinacy the cauſe of errours, and many enormities.

1. I am no polititian; I ſpeake onely by the rules of Divinity; and there I find it is not lawfull for any man, to touch the perſon or eſtate, or dignity, or prerogatives of his King, the annointed of God; for tolle regalia, tolle Regem, touch the one, you cannot chuſe but touch the other: Chriſt was a King, but becauſe he had not his Royalties, they would have none ſuch for their King; ſuch Kings being like the poore Parſon, that takes all the paines, and the Gentlemen all the tythes; a King in name, but nothing elſe: And therefore as a King, is ſupra nos, ſo his authority, and his prerogative is above all men; we ſhould not ſearch into it; For we are not able to attaine unto the depth of it: and I dare boldly ſay, that he goeth further then he ſhould (whoſe Sonne ſoever he be,) that goeth about to limit the prerogatives of an abſolute Prince; For by that meanes, though he leaves him to be a man, yet he ſcarce leaves him to be a King.

1. Towards our King.

Prerogatives of Kings not to be too narrowly pried into.

2. This obſtinacy of them in their opinions, makes them alſo to offer all wrongs unto their Prieſts, yea to their Fathers, the Reverend Biſhops, the annointed of God: Cham did but laugh at his Fathers nakedneſſe; * but men in theſe daies would puniſh their Fathers ſuſpected nakedneſſe, curſed children of ſuch godly Fathers; Kings were wont to come to the cottages of Prieſts; but now Biſhops muſt ſtoop to the vaſſalls of Princes, if they had their minds: Oh what would they have done! nay what would they not have done, if they ſhould have had their minds? But bleſſed be the God of Iakob, that hath given us ſuch a wiſe and godly Iakob, to be, not onely pater patriæ, but alſo pater patrum, a Father of our Patriarchs, a defender of our Biſhops and of all Chriſtian Miniſters againſt all thoſe, that would touch us, quo tactu neſcio: and therefore long may he live, and let his daies be as the daies of heaven.

2. Towards our Miniſters.

Gen 9.22. * If hee did ſo much; for the Text ſaith no more, but he ſaw the nakednesse of his Father and told his two brethren without.

And thus I have ſhewed thee ô man quid ſit bonum; and yet notwithſtanding, that thou doſt nothing elſe but quod ſcis malum; that although conſtancy and perſeverance be corona virtutum, yet that we are onely conſtant in evill.

And for this that I have ſpoken, I doe not doubt but many will be offended; eſpecially thoſe Puritane Doctors (as I heard ſince I preacht it) that like baſe Baylifes, or crafty Catch-poles, doe ſtand at advantage, to catch young boyes (as they terme us) in a ſlippe, whereby they may accuſe us.

But to this I ſay, that ex ore lactantium, out of the mouthes of babes, hath God ordained ſtrength; and Saint Bernard ſaith, that melius eſt ut ſcandalum oriatur, quam ut veritas relinquatur; and for my ſelfe, I do profeſſe, that I feare none but God, and I hate nothing but ſin; I care not for my life, ſo it be loſt in defence of truth; I looke not for preferment, the world is ſo corrupted; I deſire not the praiſe of men, the ſame being but a vanity; I feare not their diſpraiſe, ſo I deſerve it not; and I aime at nothing more then to ſet forth the glory of God, the diſcharging of mine owne conſcience, and the profiting of Gods people. And therefore liberare animam meam, to free mine owne ſoule, I have ever freely ſpoken my mind without either feare or flattery.

The Authors reſolution.

Well therefore, ſeeing no good is acceptable before God, without a conſtant perſeverance therein, and no evill ſo odious as to continue in any evill, quum humanum eſt errare, ſed diabolicum perſeverare; let us not continue in ſinne, but as Pilate herein was conſtant in good, ſo let our conſtancy be onely in good; every man in his place and calling: We that are Preachers in the preaching of Gods will, and you that are hearers in the performance of the ſame; You my Right Honourable Lord Major, (to whom I ſhould have now directed my ſpeech, if you were heere, with the reſt of the Aldermen your brethren, which either might or ſhould have beene heere) in the puniſhing of vice, and the cheriſhing of vertue: and all men elſe, that looke for eternall life, in performing the good

The conclusion.

The Lord Major was abſent; and therefore this within the parenthesis was ſpoken, in ſteed of what was purpoſed to be ſpoken.

and acceptable will of God, by eſchewing evill and changing our mindes from all wickedneſſe; (leſt that, in the laſt and dreadfull day, we ſhall heare that fearefull accuſation of the accuſer of our brethren, againſt our ſelves, when he ſhall ſay, not bone Deus, ô good God, to move him to Clemency, but, juſte Iudex, ô juſt Iudge, to ſharpen him to ſeverity, though theſe wicked ſinners were thine, per creationem, by creation, yet are they mine per tranſgreſſionem, by tranſgreſſion; thine per paſſionem, by thy bitter paſſion; mine per perſuaſionem, by my ſubtle perſwaſion; thine per gratiam, by the heavenly grace, which thou haſt offered them; mine per culpam, by the manifold ſinnes which they committed againſt thee; for they have forſaken Sacramenta tua, thy holy Sacraments, and they have followed blandimenta mea, my falſe allurements: and therefore, juſt Iudge, ſeeing they belong unto me, let them be condemned with me;) and by doing the things that are good, and continuing therein like Pilate in his reſolution, or like mount Sion that could not be removed; that in the laſt day, we may heare that joyfull invitation of the Redeemer of our brethren, ſpoken to our ſelves, when he ſhall ſay, Come you bleſſed children of my Father, receive the kingdome that was prepared for you before the beginning of the world; for if we thus continue conſtant unto the end, we may be ſure to find the end of our faith, to be the ſaving four ſoules, through Ieſus Chriſt our onely Saviour, to whom, with the Father, and the holy Spirit, be all honour and glory, might majeſty and dominion both now and for ever, and ever Amen, Amen.

Satans ſpeech to God at the laſt day.

Chriſt his ſpeech to the godly at the laſt day. Mat.25. 34.35.36.

The Poet, ſpeaking of a womans conſtancie, ſaith,

Fortis & infelix, & plus quam fœmina, virgo
Ducitur ad tumulum, diroq; ſit hoſtia buſto;
Vtere jam dudum generoſo ſanguine, dixit;
Mors tantum vellem matrem mea fallere poſſet.

Ovid. Metam. l. 13. de Polyxena.

And Horace, deſcribing a right noble and magnanimous man, ſaith,

Iuſtum & tenacem propoſiti virum,
Non civium ardor prava jubentium,
Non vultus inſtantis tyranni,
Mente quatit ſolida, neq; auſter
Dux inquieti turbidus Adriæ:
Nec fulminantis magna manus Iovis:
Si fractus illabatur orbis
Impavidum ferient ruinæ.

Flla ſuper terram, deſecto poplite labens.
Pertulit intrepidos ad fata noviſſima vultus.
Tunc quoq; cura fuit, partes velare tegendas.
Cum caderet, caſtiq; decus ſervare pudoris.
Horat. carm. l. 3.

And therefore the Tragœdian, perſwading us from a puſillanimous mutability, to all conſtant perſeverance in good, ſaith,

Sed flecte mentem, pectus antiquum advoca,
Victasq; magno pectore erumnas doma;
Reſiſte; tantis in malis vinci malum eſt.

Seneca traged. 3.

And if the Heathens, that knew not God, were ſo magnanimous, in theſe heroick vertues, then ſhould we, that are Chriſtians, be much more in all divine graces; and that we may be ſo, let us thus pray to God.

A Prayer for conſtancy in all good

O Immutable everlaſting God, which in thine eſſence art the ſame for ever, and whoſe counſells, and purpoſes ſhall ſtand, more firme and ſtable then the faithfull witneſſe of heaven; we thy poore creatures, that ſoone fell from that happy ſtate, wherein thou haſt created us, and ſo made our ſelves liable to all changes, to be carried away with every wind, like reedes that are ſhaken with any blaſt, to be led by the ſuggeſtions of the divell, and the temptations of this wicked world, from that eternall truth and unchangeable rule of all righteouſneſſe, which our owne conſciences and the remnant of that true light, and naturall reaſon, which is left in us tell us to our faces ſhould not bee done, doe in all humility beſeech thee to forgive us what is paſt, and of thy free grace and mercy towards us, to illuminate our underſtanding

to

to let us see and know what is truth, and what is right; and then kindle our affections and inflame our zeale towards that truth and thy glory, that we may love the same with all our hearts, and knit our soules unto it; and last of all strengthen us with thy grace, and stablish us with thy spirit, that we may continue constant in all our godly resolutions, that neither height nor depth, nor principalities nor powers, nor things present nor things to come, nor terrours nor afflictions, nor life nor death, nor any other creature whatsoever, may be able to change our mind from the truth, or to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Iesus, Amen.

IEHOVÆ LIBERATORI.

FINIS.

THE DELIGHTS OF THE SAINTS.

A MOST COMFORTABLE TREATISE of Grace and Peace, and many other excellent Points; Whereby men may live like Saints on earth, and become true Saints in heaven.

First delivered in a Sermon preached at PAULS Crosse the second day of December, being the second Sunday of the Parliament, and in other Sermons within the Cathedrall Church of Saint PAUL, London.

By GR. WILLIAMS, Bachelour in Divinity, and Parson of Lhan-Lhechyd.

Jehovæ Liberatori.

LONDON,
Printed by George Miller, for Philemon Stephens and Christopher Meredith, at the golden Lyon in PAULS Church-yard. 1635.

TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE, THE RIGHT Reverend Father in God, IOHN Lord Biſhop of Lincolne; Lord Keeper of the Great Seale, Grace and Peace.

Right Honourable,

TO edifie, hath beene ever the height of my ambition: hic ſcripto, ille voce prædicat, ſaith Clemens Alexandrinus; a man may edtfie as well by writing as by preaching. I have ever affected both; and both mine, I acknowledge, are like my ſelfe, who God knoweth, and I confeſſe, am full of imperfections, Quia animarum ſuſceperim curam, qui meam non ſufficerem cuſtodire, & factum eſt, ut docere inciperem prius quam diſcere, as S. Bernard ſpeaketh. Yet I preſumed to preſent this little Treatiſe of grace and peace unto your Honours view: (not to ſeeke for any ſhelter, for what is good herein, will defend it ſelfe, and what ſavoureth of mine infirmity, I deſire it may be pardoned of all, and not patroniz'd by any) but onely to teſtifie my humble thankfulneſſe for thoſe manifold favours which I have received from your Lordſhip, who, in ſome ſenſe, may juſtly claime the ſame intereſt in me, as S Paul did in Philemon, thou oweſt unto me even thy ſelfe: for you commended me to my Tutor in the Vniverſity, you furthered my entrance into the Miniſtery, and after I had laboured, not one night with the Apoſtles, but many daies and nights, and got nothing but afflictions and puritannicall hatred in every place; your Lordſhip was a great comfort to me, and ſome meanes to helpe me to that little meanes I have: And your last most honourable and comfortable words, and loving promise unto me (together with my thrice honourable, and ever truly loved Lord and Master and Mistresse, the Earle of Montgomerie, and his most truly religious Ladies loving respect unto me) have revived my dejected spirits, and given some life againe unto my fainting studies: In regard of which, and many others, your great favours unto me, I thought my selfe obliged, not onely by my daily private prayers unto God for your Lordship, but also by some publike testimony, to declare my most humble thankfulnesse, and dutifull affection unto your Honour. I confesse this is unworthy of your acceptance, but seeing it is the best my meane condition can affoord, I hope your wonted love to me, and my ever ready service and dutifull affection unto you, will excuse my boldnesse, and assure your Honour, that I am one of those many, which will ever heartily pray, that God, the great Rewarder, who hath most graciously blessed you, and made you great, would still preserve and keepe you in the favour of himselfe, and of your King, to the glory of Gods great name, the further increase of your owne honour, and the good of all godly men. And so most humbly craving pardon for my boldnesse, and taking leave, I rest,

Your Honours most truly affected in all duty and service,

GR. WILLIAMS.

TO THE THRICE HONOVRED

Sir John Wynne, Knight and Baronet, to his Right Worshipfull Sonne, Sir Richard Wynne, attendant in Ordinary upon the Prince his Grace, and one of the Gentlemen of his Privy Chamber, and to his two Sonnes in Law, those worthy Knights, Sir Roger Mostynne, and Sir John Bodvell, grace be unto you, and peace, &c.

Honoured Sir,

THose many, great, daily favours of your Worship unto me, ever since I came from my Honourable Lord and Master, the Earle of Montgomeries service, unto your parts, (which I professe have beene my chiefest incouragement of continuing like Naboth at Ahabs gate) and the pious practice of your Worship in all your actions; such daily, private, and publike prayers in your house, that meales are not more frequent than prayers; such care, not only to provide spirituall food, the preaching of Gods Word, to those hungry and thirsting Christians (that do gape and long for the same, as the drie ground doth for raine in the time of drought) in your Parish Church, and Market towne of Lhan Rwst, every second market day, but also by your owne continuall example, of comming, and never missing to come, your selfe, (while your health permits you) and calling others, to hearken unto that divine exercise, for the furtherance of the same. And then such kind and loving entertainment of us Prophets, and the Prophets children at your table, where we have convivium Theologicum: and are most commonly able to make a Iury of Ministers upon any controversiall point of Divinity, so as I am sure in Wales none, in England I think few have the like: and such a desire to have all the poore ignorant people of that countrey instructed in the Catechisme and Principles of Christian Religion, and many more such like fruits of grace. And likewise the worthy service unto your King, and the great great good that you do unto your countrey, by the reconciling of many variances, the puniſhing of lewd offendors, maintaining the publique peace and tranquillity of all, and eſpecially the relieving of ſo many poore as you do, both at your doores, and by your purſe, for which you have ſo many prayers and interceſſours: & impoßibile eſt multorum preces non exaudiri (as S. Chryſoſtome ſpeaketh.)

I ſay theſe things, and many like fruits of grace and peace, that I might juſtly ſpeake of, would prove me to be unthankefull, and unworthy of your love, and, indeed, unmindfull of my dutie to God and his Church, if I did not acknowledge thoſe many kindneſſes, that I have received from your Worſhip, and likewiſe ſet downe ſome of thoſe fruits of piety, and good works, that you do both in Church and common-wealth, to be a patterne unto your brethren, to be imitated herein, and eſpecially to thoſe three worthy Knights, your ſonne and ſonnes in law, and all the reſt of your children and poſterity, which God hath bleſſed, and bleßed them all (I doubt not but for your ſake, and your moſt mild and vertuous Ladie, who brought a bleſſing unto your houſe) equall in grace, in vertue, and in all faire cariage, to the beſt mans children that I do know; that when they ſee not you, when you do ſee the face of God in glorie, they may ever ſee the true records of your pietie and practice, for their honour and patterne for imitation: For howſoever I, duſt and aſhes, am nothing, of none account, and ſhall returne to nothing, yet I hope I may ſay of this my poore labours of verity, as the Poet ſaid of his labours of vanity, that ——— nec Iovis ira, nec ignis,

Nec poterit ferrum, nec edax abolere vetuſtas.

And therefore I preſumed, out of my unfained love, to inſett your honoured name in the frontiſpice of this tract. Accept it as a token of a thankfull heart; for though you may have many greater friends, yet will I ever reſt in the number of your trueſt and faithfulleſt friends,

At your ſervice, wholly to be commanded,

GR. WILLIAMS.

The Epiſtle to the Reader.

Gentle and Chriſtian Reader,

I Muſt confeſſe this little Treatiſe, though it was not in a ſhort time compoſed, (for I preached it all in the Cathedrall Church of S. Paul, in my ordinary Lectures there) yet came it in haſt to be printed; for after I had preached the chiefe heads of moſt part of it at Pauls Croſſe, it was requeſted for the Preſſe, and I had not time lambere fœtum, to over-ſee it againe as I would: and becauſe my bookes and all my notes (ſave onely a few ſcattering papers that I brought with me) were farre from me, almoſt two hundred miles from London, I was faine to let it paſſe without any diligent ſearch for the quotations either of the Scripture places, or of Fathers, ſave onely what I bore in memory, and what were in my notes I brought with me. And by reaſon of my abſence from the Preſſe, I finde many faults committed in the printing, I gathered ſome of them together, and I pray thee (ſweet Chriſtian brother) take thy pen and mend them, and where thou findeſt any other, do the like, and I will take it kindly at thy hands, and my prayers ſhall be ever ready for thee. I hope the matter will prove profitable, and that is my greateſt deſire. For I take God to witneſſe, who is fideliſſimus teſtis, the moſt faithfull witneſſe, that my aime hath been alwaies non ſcire ut ſcirem, nec ſcientiam vendere, not for any gaine, either of credit or of profit, but for the gaine of ſoules, which is uberrimus quæſtus, the greateſt gaine in the world, to ſtudie and preach, and to do all that lieth in me, to diſcharge my duty; and therefore I ever affected verum magis quam verba, ſoundneſſe of matter rather than niceneſſe of words. If any man ſay I did but collect the ſame out of other mens works: I ſay ſo too, And I wiſh, he that ſaith ſo, would do ſo too: Quia facilis eſt oblivio boni. I gathered my ſtones out of many quarries, but I compoſed my frame my ſelfe. And I rejoyce in this, that I deliver what I learned, and not what I invented, as Lyrinenſis ſpeaketh. To the cenſures of malevolent minds, I do expoſe my ſelfe. Let them go on; ſay what they will: Ego ſic vivam ut illis fides non habeatur. I hope God will give me grace, to feare him, and not them: and I hope the godly Reader of this little Tract of mine, will find ſome profit by it; for the moſt neceſſary, and the moſt frequent points of Divinity, that do meet us almoſt in every paſſage of the Scripture, are here fully handled: Scarce any Text of the New Teſtament can be found, but ſome part of this Treatiſe will affoord ſome matter fit for ſome part thereof. What profit it will bring, I leave it to the event: If none, I hope God will eſteeme my labours non ex eventu, ſed ex affectu, not according to what it did, but according to what I deſire it ſhould do: ſo praying to my good God for thee, and for all men, and deſiring thee and all Saints to pray for me, I reſt,

Thy true brother in Ieſus Chriſt,

GR. WILLIAMS.

The chiefe Contents.

Controverſiall Points.

1 Of the will of God.
2 Of univerſall grace.
3 Of the certainty of our eſtate.
4 Of the perſeverance of the Saints.
5 Of our juſtification freely by grace.
6 Of the Authour of ſinne, and puniſhments.
7 Of interceſſion for us.
8 Of praying unto Saints.

Morall Points.

1 Of the afflicted eſtate of the Saints.
2 Of the love of God, and the extent of it.
3 Of a two-fold calling.
4 Of the true Saints in a three-fold reſpect.
5 Of holineſſe of life.
6 Of the neceſſity and excellency of grace.
7 Of each kind of peace, and how had: and of each kind of warre, handled at large.
8 Of the Authour of all goodneſſe.
9 Of the miſery and infirmity of man.
10 Of the word, God, and the foure things it ſignifieth.
11 Of Father, and the manifold comforts thereof.
12 Of Lord, and his foure-fold properties.
13 Of Ieſus, and how he doth ſave us.
14 Of Chriſt: and how, King, Prieſt, and Prophet.
15 Of five Chriſtian Sacrifices. And many other points.

THE DELIGHTS OF THE SAINTS.

ROM. I. VII.

To all that be at Rome, beloved of God, called, Saints; grace be to you, and peace, from God our Father, and from our Lord Iesus Christ.

CHAP. I.

The diuision of the text; how requisite it is for all Preachers to love their people; and of the restriction of saving grace.

IN this Verse is set downe unto us, the Desires and Delights of the Saints; the desire of S. Paul, and delight of Christians: and therefore, as Titus Vespasian was called delicia generis humani, the delight of humane kind; so the contents of this my text may be more fitly termed, Solatia Sanctorum, the joy and solace of the Saints:

Iupiter Ambrosia satur est, est nectare plenus, Saith Persius; but neither the Poets Ambrosia, nor Homers Moly, nor Plinies Centauria, that preserve men (as they say) from all lustfull inchantments, can be so delightfull to the sonnes of men, as grace and peace are to the Saints of God; for as he that findeth the stone of Thracia is never after troubled; so he that findeth grace and peace, can never after be discontented. What therefore the Apostle wisheth unto them, I do wish the same unto all you: that is, grace and peace, from God our Father, and from our Lord Iesus Christ.

Wherein you may observe these three things.

1. The Saints, to whom the Apostle wisheth these blessings, are plainely decyphered.
2. The blessings themselves, wherewith the Saints are delighted, are particularlye expressed.
3. The Authour of these blessings is here perspicuously described.

First, the Saints are decyphered and described three waies.

1. From the number, which the Apostle meaneth, all Saints.
2. From the place, where the Saints inhabit, in Rome.
3. From their proper differences, whereby they are distinguished: And they are three, viz.
   1. Their dilection.
   2. Their vocation.
   3. Their sanctification.

The parts of the Text.

Secondly, the desire of the Apostle, and the delights of the Saints are expressed, From the number of blessings requested, and they be two,

1. Grace.
2. Peace.

Thirdly, the author and the fountaine from whence they flow: is said to bee God the Father, and our Lord Iesus Christ: and

Of these, by the assistance of God, in order: and

First, touching the number to whom the Apostle wisheth these blessings, two things are to be observed;

1. Declaratio amoris: The manifestation of the Apostles love.
2. Restrictio gratiæ: The restriction of the grace of God.

1. Point, The Saints described from their number. Two things observable. 1. The Apostles love. How Ministers should love their people.

1. In that he writeth to all, and wisheth grace and peace to all Saints, he sheweth how largely his love extended it selfe to the Romanes, quòd effuso animo eos omnes complectatur, saith [a] Bucer; that he loved all, remembred all, and excepted none of all; a speciall point required in Gods Ministers. For a Bucer. in hunc locum.

Saint Augustine tells us [b] that nihil præcipit Deus nisi charitatem, nihil culpat nisi cupiditatem; God commandeth nothing but charity, and forbiddeth nothing but cupidity: It is therefore necessary in all, especially in us; for if we could speake with the tongues of men and Angels, that is, so many languages as men use to speake, more then Mithridates could, that had 22. languages, as Volateran saith; and so divinely and truly as the Angels of God, more mellifluously then Origen, cujus ex ore non tam verba quàm mella fluere videntur, out of whose mouth the honey did seeme to flow, as the Magdeburgenses out of Vincentius do report; yet without love our preaching would be no better then sounding brasse, or tinckling cymbals; for when our auditors are not perswaded we teach them out of love and charity, we can never perswade them to beleeve the truth and verity; but as Theocritus saith, τὰ μὲν καλὰ, καλὰ πέφανται τῷ φιλέοντι: Quæ minimè sunt pulchra, en pulchra videntur amanti, every thing comes well from him, to whom we are well affected. And therefore what Saint Augustine saith of every Christian, I may truly say of every Preacher; Universa inutiliter habet, qui unum illud, quò universis utatur, non habet; He hath all things in vaine that hath not charity, whereby he may rightly use all things. I wish therefore with all my heart, that all we Preachers would study, what lyeth in us, to lay aside all maliciousnesse, all suits and contentions in law, whereby our Ministery is made unfruitfull, and live in love and peace with all men; whereby, I assure my selfe, we should purchase more spirituall gaine by love, then all the wealth of the world would be unto us, that we should get by Law.

b Aug. de Doct. Christ. l. 3 c. 10.

Love to their people, how necessary for all preachers. Volateran. l. 17.

Origen how mellifluous he was. Magd. cent. 3. p. 369.

Theocrit. εἰδύλ. β.

Contention and law-suits to be shunned by all Ministers.

2. In that he writeth to all beloved of God, called Saints; it sheweth the restriction of grace; fidelibus tantùm, & non alijs; to the faithfull onely, and to none else, saith Gorram; Non Romæ simpliciter manentibus, sed Deo dunt axat dilectis; Not to all the inhabitants of Rome, but to all the Saints that were in Rome, saith Theophylact; and so Saint Chrysostome also, and all the rest of the Fathers (qui dictorum intelligentiam expectant ex verbis potius quàm imponunt, (as Saint Hillarie saith in another case) which rather seeke the true meaning of Gods Spirit from the words, then impose a false glosse upon the Text to corrupt the truth) doe from hence collect a restriction of grace: to the Saints of God, and not to the sonnes of Belial.

2. The restriction of saving grace. Gorram in hunc locum.

Theoph. in hunc locum.

Hilar. de Trin. l. 1.

Even so the Prophet Esay calling every one that thirsted to come to the waters, meanes none but those that thirsted; And our Saviour inviting all that were wea- ry and heavie laden, to come unto him to bee eased, meanes none but those that were weary: and the like we find almost in every passage of the Scriptures. Mat. 11. 28.

Esay 55. 1.

ry

This restriction therefore of Gods grace, doth sufficiently confute Pelagius, Hemingius, Huberus, and all the rest of the Arminian brood, touching the doctrine of Vniversall grace; who say that God would have all men to be saved; and therefore as he gave his Sonne to die for all, so he offereth saving grace unto all; that all men might be saved, if they would themselves beleeve in Christ, and persevere in faith, according to the condition of the Evangelicall promises: and they doe further understand these Evangelicall promises, to be so offered, and so indefinitely left in the power of man, as that he may either of his owne will receive them and be saved, or reject them and be condemned. Vniversall grace confuted.

But for the fuller understanding of this one point, I will examine these two points: Two points examined.

1. Whether God, by his absolute will, would have all men to be saved.
2. Whether he gave Christ Iesus to die for all men, that they might bee saved. And

To the { First, I answer negatively. / Second, affirmatively. }

Chap. II.

Of the absolute will of God, and his conditionall will, and how they seeme divers and are not; the number of the Elect determined. Why God commandeth things wee cannot doe: why we pray for the reprobate; why grace is denied them, and what this doctrine should teach us.

OF the first I say then, it is not the absolute will of God that all men should be saved, or have saving grace given unto them; for if it were, I demand the reason why they are not saved? for, Voluntati ejus quis restitit? Who hath ever resisted his will? and I pray you looke in Esay 46. 10. Psal. 33. 11. Pro. 19. 21. &c. and then make me an answer. I. Point. Whether God would have all men saved. Rom. 9. 19.

If they say, that the cause hereof is not in the will of God that offereth grace, but in the frowardnesse of mans will that refuseth grace; I answer with Saint Augustine, that Sic velle & nolle, in volentis & nolentis est potestate, ut divinam voluntatem non impediat, & divinam potestatem non superet; So to will or nill, is in the power of him, that willeth or nilleth, as that it neither hindereth the divine will of God, nor especially surmounteth the power of God. Aug. de corrept. & gratia, cap. 9. cap. 14.

For otherwise, it were to make the will of God to depend upon the will of man, and to subordinate the first cause unto the second, which is contrary to the lawes of Nature, And (as Saint Augustine speaketh) it were to make the weake and the peevish will of man, of more power and might then the omnipotent will of God, whereof Saint Ambrose saith, Voluntas ejus, potestas ejus; his will and his power are both a like; because he can doe whatsoever he will doe; for if God would have men to be saved, and men by their nilling or refusing, will not be saved; then certainely, Dei voluntas superata est hominum voluntate, & infirmissimis nolendo impedientibus, non potest facere potentissimus quod vult; The will of God and his desire is overcome by the will and denial of man; so that by the nilling of the most base and impotent creature, the will of the most powerfull and omnipotent God is made void and frustrated. Will of God never frustrated. S. Ambr. in 5. Luc. S. Aug. in Enchrid ad Laurent. c. 97.

And therefore, as Tertullian said of the heathenish Romanes, (because they had a law, that their Emperour might not deifie any man to be a god, unlesse he were approved by the Senate) that the deity depended so upon mans favour, ut si deus homini non placuerit, deus non erit, as that if god pleased not men, he should not be a god; quia homo jam deo propitius esse debebit; because man had that power, to shew such favour unto god, as either to make him or to Tertul. in Apolog. c. 5. The Romanes practice about their gods.

marre him; to give him his Deity, or denie his Esse.

Even so deale these men with the will of God, de salvandis hominibus, touching the saving of men; it must stand to the curtesie and liking of men; If men like to beleeve, and will receive grace, then Gods will shall stand, that he shall have men saved, and so his desire shall be effected; but if men will not yeeld unto his desire, but refuse grace to be saved; then his desire shall be void, and his will of none effect: and so by this meanes, if men will not, God shall have no man saved.

S. Aug. de bono pers.

But the Word of God, and the learned Fathers teach us otherwise; that, touching those he will have saved, Iubet credere, & facit ut credant, hee biddeth them to beleeve, and he worketh faith and beleefe in them: And so Saint Gregory saith, Superna gratia prius agit in nobis aliquid sine nobis, The heavenly grace doth first worke in us without us, before we can worke with it: So another saith, Deus obsignavit pactum in cordibus electorum per internam regenerationem, quam ille ipse operatus est in ipsis: God sealeth his covenant in the hearts of his chosen by an inward regeneration, which regeneration he himselfe worketh in them.

Greg. Mor. l. 16. c. 10.

Abbas de ver. grat. Christi.

God worketh all graces in all that he will have saved

As therefore he worketh grace, faith, hope, and charity, and all other spirituall graces in all those that are saved, so would he worke the same in all, if hee would have all to be saved,

2 Pet. 3. 9. 1 Tim. 2. 4.

Ob. But against this it may be objected, what Saint Peter saith, that he would have all men to be saved, and to come to the knowledge of his truth; And therefore, either there are divers and contrary wils in God; or els it is his will, that all should be saved, but yet are not; because they will not beleeve.

The will of God is not divers. Damasc. l. 2. c. 46.

Sol. I answer: That the will of God is diversly distinguished by the Doctors,

As Damascen, into an { 1. Antecedent / 2. Consequent } will.

Lib. 1. d. 45.

Lombard and the Schoolemen,

Into his { 1. Signified / 2. Well-pleasing } will.

Lib. Exhort. ad castitatem.

Tertullian, into his { 1. Efficient / 2. Permissive } will.

Whereof hee calleth the first voluntas pura, and the other voluntas indulgentiæ.

Enchirid. cap. 102. & 103.

Saint Augustine, into his { 1. Effectuall working, and omnipotent will. / 2. Not working, or not efficient will. }

Others into his { 1. Absolute / 2. Conditionall } will.

Others into his { 1. Secret / 2 Revealed } will.

And yet all these, and all such like distinctions of Gods will, if they be diligently observed and well understood, doe fall into the same end, and doe no waies prove either divers wils to be in God, or any contradiction to be in the will of God; For it is most certaine, that as the essence of God is most simple, without composition or division; so the will of God, which is nothing else but his eternall decree concerning all things, is one and the selfe same, immutable and unresistible; in so much that the wicked, who as much as in them lieth, doe resist the will of God revealed and commanded unto us in his Word, yet notwithstanding, will they nill they, they fulfill the will of God decreed in himselfe from all eternity; as you may see most plainely in the example of Pilate, Herod, and the wicked Iewes, who in crucifying Christ, rebelled and resisted the will of God revealed in his Word, yet herein they did performe the secret will of God, which before all worlds he had determined should be done, as Saint Peter sheweth: Et sic in hoc ipso, quod contra voluntatem Dei fecerunt, de ipsis facta est voluntas ejus; And so in this very thing, wherein they did against Gods will, God

The wicked offending God, do thereby effect the will of God.

Acts 2. 23. Aug. in Enchirid. cap. 98.

God effected his owne will, Et de his, qui faciunt quod non vult, facit ipse quæ vult; And touching theſe men, which doe againſt his will, hee doth whatſoever he will.

Idem de cor. & gratiâ.

Quia voluntas Dei { Alia, quam fieri vult à nobis. / Alia, de nobis, } For ſaith Zanchie.

Zanch. cap 3. de Nat. Dei.

The will of God is either that, which he would have done of us, or that, which he meaneth to do concerning us.

And if this ſeeme to be divers and contrary, that he ſhould command one thing and doe another; as to command Abraham to ſacrifice his Son, and yet to hinder it; to command Pharaoh to let Iſrael goe, and yet to harden his heart, that he could not let them goe; to command the wicked to keepe his lawes, and yet to deliver them to vile affections, to doe thoſe things that were not convenient; to ſay, he willeth all to be ſaved, and yet to decree their reprobation. &c.

Will of God ſeeming divers. Gen. 22. 2. & 13. Exod. 8. 2. c. 4. 21. & c. 7. 3. Deut. 6. 2. Rom. 1. 26.

Sol. I anſwer: That herein indeed it may ſeeme to be divers and contrarie; but that is not in reſpect of his will ſimply conſidered; but

How his will ſeemes divers.

1. Partly, in reſpect of the divers things, which God willeth.
2. Partly, in reſpect of the divers manners, wherewith he ſeemes to will the things that he willeth. For

1. He willeth { 1. Good. / 2. Evill. } Sed alio atq; alio modo; But not after the ſame manner; For he willeth good ſimply of it ſelfe, and for it owne ſake; and he willeth evill, ſed propter bonum, but for to effect a further good; as he willed the death of Chriſt, but for the ſalvation of all the Elect: And therefore the firſt is called voluntas placens, his well-pleaſing will; and the ſecond is called voluntas permiſſiva, his permiſſive will; and

1. God willeth divers things, and how.

2. Sometimes he willeth things ſimply, and this is alwaies performed; and therefore this is onely the will of God properly ſpoken; and ſometimes hee wils things conditionally, as when he willeth all to be ſaved, if they beleeve; and this is not alwaies fulfilled: and therefore properly cannot be ſaid to be the will of God, becauſe his will properly taken, is alwaies abſolute and moſt certainely accompliſhed.

2. God willeth things divers waies.

The conditionall will of God is not properly the will of God.

And ſo in all the Commandements of God, wee muſt underſtand the will of God to be either { 1. Declarans. / 2. Efficiens, }

Zanch. quo ſupra.

The firſt is that, which ſheweth what ſhould be done, and ſo the Law is called doctrina, a rule, which ſheweth us what pleaſeth or diſpleaſeth God.

Lex quomodo dicitur. 1. Doctrina. 2. Mandatum.

The ſecond is that, which cauſeth us to doe what is pleaſing to him, and ſo the Law is called mandatum, when he maketh the Elect to walke in his paths, or worketh faith in their hearts to beleeve in Chriſt. The 1. may be broken by the wicked. The 2. cannot: for my counſell ſhall ſtand, and my will ſhall bee done, ſaith the Lord.

Ezek. 11. 20.

Eſay 46. 10.

Ob. But then it may bee objected: that the wicked ſinne not, becauſe they doe not breake, nor do any thing againſt the abſolute and proper will of God.

I anſwer: That ſinne is not defined to be the tranſgreſſing of the ſecret will of God, which cannot be broken, but of his declared and revealed will, which onely ſheweth what is pleaſing or diſpleaſing to him.

Sin what it is.

Zanch. lib. 3. cap. 4. de Nat. Dei.

Hereby then you ſee the will of God is onely one, immutable and unchangeable; and that, although he giveth his Law unto all, yea, both legem operandi, & legem credendi, to ſhew what ſhould be done, and likewiſe what ſhould be beleeved; yet it is not his abſolute will that all men ſhould either doe or beleeve the ſame, that they might be ſaved; For if it were, who could reſiſt it? God therefore doth not ſo confuſedly propoſe his ſaving grace, as to leave it in the will and power of man, either to receive it, or to refuſe it; but he hath determined the ſet number of them that ſhall receive it, as you may ſee moſt plainely, * that ſo many did beleeve, which were preordained of God to beleeve.

Rom. 9. 18. God hath determined the number of his elect.

* Act. 2. 47.

Ob. But then you will say againe, Why doth God bid us to doe, or to beleeve, when as it is impossible for us, of our selves, to doe the same?

I answer: That he doth it,

In respect of { 1. The Wicked. 2. The Godly.

Why God commanderh the things we cannot doe. 1. In respect of the wicked. 2. In respect of the godly. August.

1. To restraine the impiety of the wicked; or if notwithstanding Gods admonition, they grow worse and worse, then shall they be inexcusable in the day of wrath, and God shall be justified in his sayings, and cleere when they are judged.

2. That the godly might hereby see what they might have done in Adam, and what they may doe in Christ; and therefore to pray for grace from him, to performe duties required of them; for Vt præcipit Deus quod vult, ita dat gratiam implere quod præcipit, As God sheweth them, what he would have done, so he giveth them grace to doe it.

Ob. But yet it may be, the wicked will object that this is plaine delusion; to bid them do, and beleeve; and yet never to will that they should do it.

That God deludeth no man.

Sol. I answer; that to shew what is his will, that is, well-pleasing to him, and to promise life if they doe it, or punishment if they doe it not, is no delusion, though he gives them no power to doe the same; and this our Saviour sheweth in the Parable of them that were bidden to the wedding. For the first were bidden, and came not; the second bidden, and compelled. Did he delude the first, because he did not compell them? No waies; for he bad them; a sufficient token of his love; and they refused, a sufficient contempt to deserve exclusion: and yet the absolute will of the King was not the same in both: for he did but barely bid the first, to shew what he liked, voluntate declarativa, but hee compelled the second, to shew his absolute will, that he would have them come.

Luk. 14. 23.

Even so, when God sheweth the wicked what is pleasing to him, and the duty of them, and thereupon promiseth a reward if they doe it, or punishment if they doe it not; he doth no way delude them, though he doth not give them power to performe this duty of theirs.

God doth justly with the wicked.

When therefore he biddeth the wicked to come unto him, and they refuse to come; if ever after they be excluded, then surely, culpa non est vocantis sed renuentis, the fault is in him that refuseth, and not in him that calleth: and therefore, meritò perijt ægrotus, qui non medicum vocat, sed vltrò venientem respuit, The languishing sonne doth worthily perish, which not onely seeketh no Physitian, but also refuseth the heavenly Physicke offered unto him, saith S. Augustine.

God sheweth mercy to the godly. Exod. 33. 19.

But if we looke further, and see God compelling the one, by working grace and repentance in his heart to do his will, and to beleeve in Christ, this is his mercy, for hee hath mercy on whom he will have mercy; and if he doth not compell the other, that is his justice, for there are vessels of wrath, prepard for destruction; and so as Saint Augustine saith, huic fit misericordia, tibi non fit injuria; he sheweth mercy unto the one, and he doth no wrong unto the other.

Rom. 9. 22.

Aug. de Benedict. Jacob & Esau.

All this Saint Augustine sheweth by this comparison, sicut pluit Dominus super segetes & super spinas, sed segeti pluit ad horreum, spinis ad ignem, & tamen una est pluvia: As the Lord raineth upon the good corne, and upon the briers and thistles; upon the corne, to ripen it for the barne; upon the thornes and bryers, to fit them for the fire, and yet the selfe same raine doth both: even so the will of God, that is, voluntas declarativa, the Word of God is preached both to the good and bad; to the good, for their conversion, and to the bad for their further confusion; because they are made hereby without excuse: * and of this firmissimè tene (saith Saint Augustine) eos, quos vasa misericordiæ fecit, perire non posse; nec quemquam eorum, quos non prædestinavit ad vitam, ullatione posse salvari; Be sure that none of the vessels of mercy can perish, nor of those, whom he hath not predestinated, can any waies be saved.

* When they would not obey the same. Aug. de fide ad Petrum, c. 35.

No elect can bee damned, no reprobate saved. Idem ad Syn. Presb. Ep. 106.

And he sheweth the reason hereof elsewhere, saying: Si omnes liberarentur, lateret quid peccato per justitiam debeatur; si nemo, quid gratia largiretur; If all should be saved, what in justice was due for sinne should not have beene

Why all men are not saved.

knowne;

knowne; if none, the goodneſſe of grace had not beene ſeene; therefore hee giveth grace to ſome, to ſhew the riches of his mercy, and hee denieth it to others, to ſhew the equity of his juſtice, to puniſh man for ſinne. And

For the decree of reprobation, non ponit neceſſitatem damnationis, niſi intercedente peccato, & quidem conſequutivè, quia non cauſaliter eſt a reprobatione damnatio; the ſame being nothing els, but decretum non miſerendi, a decree of not having mercy, it doth not impoſe a neceſſity of damnation upon any man, but in reſpect of his ſinne, that goeth betweene; for which ſinne juſtiſſimè ordinavit eos ad pœnas, he hath moſt juſtly decreed their damnation, that is, their puniſhment. Idem Ibid. Decree of reprobation, what it is.

And therefore, qui liberatur, habet unde gratias agat, qui damnatur, non habet quod reprehendat; He that is delivered, hath that for which he ſhould be thankfull; and he that is condemned, hath nought but his owne ſinnes, that he can reprehend; for ſi in remittendo debitum, bonitas; in exigendo, æquitas; tum nuſquam apud Deum invenitur iniquitas; If in remitting debt we ſhew piety, in demaunding our due, equity; then no way with God can wee finde iniquity. Idem de bono perſeverant.

Hereby then you ſee, that although in reſpect of the merits of Chriſts Paſſion, the worthineſſe of his Perſon, and the power of his will, one drop of his bloud were of ſufficient worth to expiate the ſinnes of the whole world, as S. Clement ſaith, Modicam guttam ſanguinis Chriſti propter unionem πρὸς λόγον pro redemptione totius humani generis ſuffeciſſe: the leaſt drop of his bloud, by reaſon of his hypoſtaticall union with the Deity, were and is a ſufficient pay, ranſome, and ſatisfaction for the ſinnes of all men; yet that it is not the abſolute will of God to give that grace unto all, to apply his death, or to lay hold upon his paſſion for their ſalvation. Chriſt his death of ſufficient merit to ſave all.

And therefore, our Saviour Chriſt himſelfe excepteth thoſe, whom he meaneth not to beſtow his grace upon, from his ſociety, I came not to call the righteous; he excludeth them from his prayer; non pro mundo rogo, I pray not for the world, that is, pro impijs, ſaith S. Hierome, or for thoſe, that wholly addict themſelves to the world, ſaith S. Bernard, or qui ſequuntur concupiſcentiam carnis, which follow the luſt of the fleſh, ſaith S. Auguſtine; and he forbiddeth us to give them the holy pledges of ſalvation; Give not that which is holy unto dogs: and S. Paul here doth not ſo much as wiſh any grace, that is, any ſaving grace unto them: and the Prophet David doth abſolutely pray againſt all grace to be given them, ſaying: Let their table be made a ſnare, ever bow downe their backs, and let that, which was for their wealth, be unto them an occaſion of falling. Mat. 9. 13. Ioh. 17. 9. Pſal. 69. 22.

And therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith, ſi certa eſſet Eccleſia, vel ſi certi eſſent illi qui prædeſtinati ſunt in ignem æternum ire cum Diabolo, tum nec pro ijs oraret Eccleſia plus quam pro ipſo Diabolo: inde autem oramus, & pro ſalute omnium operam damus, quia de omnibus bene ſperamus: If the Church were certaine, or if we knew them that are predeſtinated to everlaſting fire with the Divell and his Angels, then would we pray no more for them than we do for the Divell; but we do therefore pray for all, becauſe, propter ignorantiam, we know them not that are reprobates; ſed juxta judicium charitatis, but according to the judgement of charity, we do hope well of all, to be elected. Aug. de Civit. Dei lib. 21. cap. 24. Why we pray for the reprobate.

To the faithfull therefore, we wiſh χάριν καὶ εἰρήνην; grace and peace; but to the wicked, fire and brimſtone, ſtorme and tempeſt, woes and curſes, this is their portion for ever.

And the reaſon of this deniall of grace unto the wicked (for though there is no precedent cauſe of Gods will, yet as (Zanchie ſaith) there is alwaies a juſt reaſon of his will) in reſpect of themſelves, (beſides many other) may be ſaid to be threefold. Zanch. ibid. de nat. Dei. Why ſaving grace is denied to the wicked.

1. Becauſe Satan, as a prince of this world, ruleth in the hearts of theſe children of diſobedience, and they give themſelves wholly to follow his wicked ſuggeſtions; for as the godly, utuntur mundo, ut fruantur Deo, ita impij utuntur Deo, ut 1. Reaſon.

fruantur mundo, do use the world that they may enjoy God; so the wicked do onely make use of God, that they may enjoy the world: And therefore, what reason have they to expect any grace from Christ, that give themselves wholly to the service of Antichrist?

2. Reason.

2. Because that, although the Sonne of God did sweat the drops and clots of bloud in his agonie, and that in such quantitie, that it trickled downe to the ground, to blesse the earth that was accursed for the sinne of man, and as Lucan saith, of noble Tullus, so I may farre better apply the same to Christ, and say

Lucan. l. 9. Scinditur avulsus, nec sicut vulnere sanguis emicuit lentus; rupto cadit undique venis; discursusq; animæ diversa in membra meantis intercepto aquis nullius vita perempti est tanta dimissa via. Lucan. l. 3.

Sanguis erant Lachrymæ, quæcunq; foramina novit
Humor ab his largus manat cruor: ora redundant,
Et patulæ nares, sudor rubet, omnia plenis
Membra fluunt venis, totum est pro vulnere corpus,
His teares were blood; from every pore
Where nature vented moisture heretofore,
His mouth, his nose flowes bloud; his sweat is red;
His running veines, all parts be bloodied;
And his whole bodi's but one wound become.

Lament. 1.

And as his eyes were full of teares and his body full of stripes, so was his heart full of sorrowes; so full that he might justly demand, in Ieremies words, an ullus dolor sicut dolor meus, whether there was ever any sorrow like unto his sorrow? and we might answer with Niobe

Nec similis toto mœror in orbe fuit, no griefe in all the world was like unto his griefe; his whole life being but a map of sorrow, and his whole body wholly wounded; so that the remembrance hereof is so powerfull and effectuall to the godly, that nihil adeo grave, quod non æquanimiter toleratur si Christi passio in memoriam revocetur; they thinke nothing too much to doe, nor any thing too great to suffer for his sake, that suffered so much for them.

Greg. in Moral.

Yet this curled and wretched world, these generations of vipers, do tread under feet the Sonne of God, and count the bloud of the Testament, as an unholy thing, and despise the spirit of grace; and therefore the blessed Apostle telleth the Church of Philippi, weeping, that They are the enemies of the Crosse of Christ, whose God is their belly, whose glory is their shame, whose end is fearefull damnation: and this very reason Saint Iohn toucheth, when he saith, that Christ came into the world, and the world received him not, but did unto him whatsoever pleased them.

Heb. 6.

Phil. 3. 18, 19.

Iohn 1. 11.

3. Reason.

3. Because that, although the Saints and servants of God have done them no hurt; for Iustus quid fecit? What hath the righteous done? yet they despise them, and trample them under feet, as the clay in the streets; dementia insanabilis, their rage is implacable, their madnesse incurable, and their malice intollerable; & faciunt unitatem contra unitatem; and they conspire together against the godly, and especially against the Ministers of Christ, whose preachings are accounted but as Cassandra's propheste, and themselves deemed worse then Iustinians Orators: And our Saviour objecteth these three reasons against the Iewes:

Ioh. 8. 44. Vide 2 Esdras 1. 28, 29, 30. Luk. 13. 34.

1. Ye are of your father the divell, and the will of your father ye doe.

2. How often would I have gathered you, and ye would not? heere is contempt against himselfe.

3. Thou killest the Prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee; here is cruelty against his Ministers: and therfore as they regard not to know God, so God regards not them, but gives them over unto three fearefull traditions:

Rom. 1. 28.

The wicked delivered to three fearefull traditions.

1. To the lust of a wicked heart:

2. To most vile and base affections:

3. To a reprobate sence, to do those things that are not convenient: whereby it comes to passe, that all of them, impiè vivendo, fictè sperando, justè desperando, miserè pereunt: by living most wickedly, and yet hope for pardon throughout

out all their life, most vainely, and then despaire of pardon at their death, most justly, they doe most miserably perish to everlasting death, where (as Saint Augustine speaketh) nec tortores deficiant, nec torti miseri moriantur, sed per millia millia annorum cruciandi, nec tamen in secula liberandi, neither tormentors are wanting, nor the miserably tormented any waies eased, but for thousand thousands of yeeres plagued, and yet never to bee delivered; and there shall bee (saith Isidorus) semper velle quod nunquam erit, & semper nolle quod nunquam non erit, a will never satisfied, and a nill never gratified; never injoying the ease they would, and alwaies suffering the paines they would not.

Aug ser. 55.

Isidor. tom 1. de summo bono.

Oh then (beloved Brethren) let this one point of Doctrine teach us a double instruction.

What the former doctrine should teach us.

1. To terrifie the wicked from their sinfull waies; for they may assure themselves, that, so long as they remaine wicked, they have no promise of grace, but a most fearefull expectation of eternall destruction: And

1 To terrifie the wicked from their sins.

Si durus est hic sermo; If this be a hard saying, it is so, quia cor durius, because their hearts are harder; for if they returne unto the Lord, the Lord will soone receive them; but if God offereth grace and they refuse the same, then the heavens may wonder and the earth may tremble, if we tremble not at the consideration of this doctrine.

For if the Sunne did stand still at the prayer of Ioshuah, if it retired tenne degrees in the diall of Abaz, at the word of Esayas, and was darkened at the Passion of our Saviour; then no marvell if it stood still, and never moved; if it retired to the uttermost parts of the world, and never returned; or bee utterly darkened, and never inlightened, for very shame and wonder, that light should come into the world, and yet men should love darkenesse more then light, that the grace of God should bee offered, and yet that grace should be refused.

Iosh 10.13. Esay 38 8. Mat 27.45.

Ioh 3.19.

And if mount Sinai trembled at the giving of the Law, or the walls of Iericho fell downe, when the Priests sounded their trumpets, and the earth quaked at the passion of our Saviour, (as fainting under such a hideous burthen, that the most accursed sonnes of mortall men, should put to death the most blessed Sonne of the immortall God) then no marvell if the whole world trembled, to see the wicked making no account of this Law; or if the Fabricke of heaven should fall, when the Priests and Preachers of Gods Word doe sound the trumpets of vengeance against the transgressors of this Law; or if heaven and earth should be dissolved into their ancient Chaos, when truth it selfe shall threaten vengeance to the refusers of his grace, and assure woes and curses to the enemies of his Crosse, and despisers of his Spirit; and yet for all this, that they should still continue feareless and careless in their most vile and abominable courses.

Exod. 19.18. Iosh. 6.20. Mat. 27.51.

But indeed, the heavens and the earth are reserved for that great and terrible day, which is to come; and they are now sustained for the good of the Saints, and the further condemnation of the wicked, which will hastily come upon them, if they doe not speedily repent.

2 Pet. 3.7.

2. This should perswade the good and godly Saints, to have nothing to do with the fooles of wickednesse, but to separate themselves from the society of wicked men, as the Apostle teacheth, 2 Cor. 6.17, 18.

2. To cause the Saints to separate themselves from the wicked. Ephes. 5.7.

CHAP.

CHAP. III.

That Christ died for all men; the word all how taken; the Reasons why Christ died for all; the Objections answered; the End of Christs death twofold; why the wicked are condemned.

2. Point. That Christ died for all men. 1 Tim.2.6. Heb.2.9.

DE 2. Whether Christ Iesus came into the world to die for all men, that all men might be saved, if they would receive him and believe in his name: I answer, that he did: for so the Apostle teacheth, that he gave himselfe a ransome for all men; that he tasted death for all men; and S. Iohn saith, that he is the propitiation, not only for our sinnes, whereby he meaneth the elected Saints, but also for the sinnes of the whole world, that is, of all the men in the world.

1 Ioh.2.2. The foresaid testimonies answered. Acts.10.38.

But to these and all other such places, it is answered,

Mar.1.5.

1. That either all is put for many, as he healed all that were oppressed of the Divell, that is, very many; or all that came unto him, or all that besought him; and so it is said, that all the land of Iudea, and they of Ierusalem, went unto Iohn the Baptist, and were all baptized of him, that is, abundance of people, whole multitudes went unto him, and not every particular man whatsoever.

Mat.4.23.

2. Or els, that all is put, pro singulis generum, non pro generibus singulorum, for all of one kind; as where Christ is said to have healed all sicknesses and diseases; the meaning is, that hee healed all kind of diseases, or diseases of all kind, leprosie, palsie, feavers, &c. and not that he healed every particular man that was diseased: The like phrase is used, Acts 10.12, &c.

The word all taken three wayes.

For it cannot be denied, but that by all is understood,

1. For all the elect.

1. Somtimes the elect onely, as *Ioh.*12.32. and if I were lift up from the earth, that is, upon the crosse, I will draw all unto me, that is, all the elect; and so it is understood in many other places of the Scriptures, as *Esa.*54.13. *Ier.*31.34.

2. For all the reprobate.

2. Sometimes the reprobate onely, as *Phil.*2.21. All seeke their owne, and not that which is the Lord Iesus, that is, all the reprobates and wicked men do onely seek for their own profit and pleasure, and not the glory of the Lord Iesus: And so it is said, that no man received the testimony of Christ, that is, none of all the reprobates and worldly men received the testimony of Christ.

Ioh.3.32.

3. For all men generally.

3. Somtimes the elect and reprobate, as *Rom.*3.23. All have sinned, and are deprived of the glory of God.

And therefore they say, that where Christ is said to have died for all men, and to be the reconciliation for the sinnes of all men, or for the sinnes of the whole world, it must be understood of many, as *Mat.*26.28, This is my blood of the new Testament, which is shed for many, for the remission of sinnes; or els it must be understood of all the faithfull only, and none else.

The foresaid answer rejected. All, or the world, not to be referred onely to the elect.

But to this faire seeming glosse of these men I answer, that although this distinction or restriction of all, in many places, may hold good, for many, or for all of one kind; yet in this case, where Christ is said to have died for all, all must not be restrained to the elect onely; for so S. Iohn saith, that he is not the reconciliation for our sinnes onely, that is, for the elect onely, but also for the sinnes of the whole world: And where it is said, that God gave his Sonne to die for the world, and Christ saith, that he came to save the world, we must not restraine the world to the elect onely, but rather for all the men of the world; for where it is said, God so loved the world, that he gave his onely begotten Sonne, that whosoever believeth in him, should not perish, but have everlasting life; if we should say, that by the world here is understood the elect, this whole sentence of Christ would prove to be full of absurdities.

1 Ioh.2.2. Ioh.3.16. & Cap.11.47.

For that were a strange saying: God so loved the elect, that he gave his onely begotten Sonne, that whosoever of the elect should believe in him, should not perish, but have everlasting life.

Vide Concionem 2. Gods love to the world.

And therefore it must be understood of all men in generall, that God gave his Sonne

Sonne for them all, that whosoever of them all should believe in him, should not perish, but have everlasting life: And so Prosper, Fulgentius, and diverse others after S. Augustine, do averre, that God gave his Sonne to die pro toto genere humano, for all mankind, and that Christ offered himselfe a sacrifice for the sinnes of the whole world; and therefore commandeth us, to preach the Gospell of faith and repentance unto all men, good and bad. Mat 28. ult.

And so the Apostle sheweth, that some shall deny the Lord that bought them: And S. Paul biddeth us, not to destroy him with our meat, for whom Christ died: and in many other places it appeares most manifestly, that God gave his Sonne to die for all men. 2 Pet. 2. 1. Rom. 14. 15. Heb. 10. 29.

And the reason hereof may be said to be twofold. Why Christ died for all men.

1. That all men might have a remedy and a Saviour, if they themselves would receive grace, and lay hold on the same. 1. Reason.

2. That God might be just fied in his saying, and cleare when they are judged, which otherwise could not be; For how could he lay it as a sinne to their charge, to refuse the grace of Christ, if Christ were never sent nor intended to be sent for them? And therefore God sent his Sonne to die for all, that all might be saved, if they would receive him; or be justly condemned, if they did neglect him; for seeing God gave the meanes to helpe them, and they neglected this meanes, then are they without excuse, and they have not a word to speak. 2. Reason. Rom. 3. 4.

Object. But against this it is objected, that he came to give his life a ransome for many, Mat. 20. 28. Esa. 53. 11. therefore not for all; for his sheep, Ioh. 10. 15. therefore not for the goats; for his friends, Ioh. 15. 14. for his Church, Eph. 5. 25. for them that believe, Rom. 3. 22. and for them that obey, Heb. 5. 9. therefore not for his foes, not for aliens, not for infidels, not for the disobedient, and such like.

Sol. I answer; that for the understanding of these, and all such like places, we must remember that the intention and purpose of God, in sending his Sonne into the world, is twofold. The purpose of God in sending his Sonne, twofold.

1. Generall, that all men might have a sufficient remedy given, proposed and offered unto them, to save them, if they accepted the remedy; or to make them without excuse, if they refused or neglected the same. 1. Generall.

2. Speciall, that (seeing God did fore-see the maliciousnesse of man would not of it selfe regard it) by the assistance of his more especiall grace, working in the hearts of his chosen, they should yeeld to accept and apply the grace of Christ for their salvation. 2. Speciall.

And so God gave his Sonne to die for all, in the first sense; but not in the second sense, with a purpose to work the application of his death in all, for the salvation of all; but onely (as I said before) to shew his love in giving him, and to make them without excuse for neglecting him: And he gave him for his sheep, for his friends, &c. with a speciall intent to help their imbecillity, to work grace in their hearts, to make them lay hold and apply the benefits of his death for their eternall salvation; and he gave him for the goats and for his enemies, to save them, if they would believe in him, and to be the cause of their further condemnation, because they do reject him. In what sense Christ is given for all men.

And now, by this one distinction, I may easily answer to all Objections: For.

Object. 1. In that they say, for whom Christ died, for them he interceded and prayeth; and for whom he prayeth not, for them he died not; for none would offer the sacrifice of his body for them, for whom he would not offer the sacrifice of his lips: but for the wicked and reprobates he prayeth not, I pray not for the world, Ioh. 17. 9. therefore, for the wicked reprobates, he died not. Ioh. 17. 9.

Sol. I answer; that for whom he died with a speciall intent to work the effectuall application of his death, thereby to save them, for them he prayed, that so his death might be effectuall for them; & è contra, for whom he prayed not, I confesse he died not, with an intent to work the effectuall application of his death, death, thereby to save them, but only to procure them a sufficient remedy to be saved, if they would, thereby to shew his love in giving this remedy, and to make them without excuse for neglecting the same.

Ob. 2. In that they say, Christ died for those only, in whom he hath attained the end of his death; for that, whatsoever attaineth not unto his end, is done in vaine, and argueth want of wisdome or power in the agent: But the end of Christ his death, that is, salvation, is attained unto onely in the elect, *Mat.*16.16. *Ioh.*3.36. and therefore his death was onely for the elect.

The end of Christs death twofold. 1. End.

Sol. I answer to the minor proposition, that the end of Christs death is twofold.

1. The salvation of the elect, by applying his death unto them, through the speciall working of his grace.

2. End.

2. The manifestation of his love, and making the wicked without excuse, for not receiving his grace; he onely dying for these, to these ends, but not working in them the speciall application of his death, for the saving of their soules. And so the end of Christs death is indeed attained unto, both in the elect and in the reprobate.

Eph.1.7. Col.1.14.

Object. 3. In that they say; For whom Christ died, for them he made full satisfaction for their sinnes, as the Apostle sheweth, In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgivenesse of sinnes, according to the riches of his grace: but Christ made not any satisfaction for the sinnes of the reprobate; for if he had, then God in justice could not punish them for those sinnes, for which Christ had fully satisfied: therefore it cannot bee that Christ died for the reprobates.

Why the wicked are condemned: for not applying the merits of Christ.

Sol. I answer; that Christ made sufficient satisfaction for the sinnes of the reprobates, and yet God in justice may punish them, for want of application of the merits of Christ; for as the patient may well perish, though the physicke be made for him, if he doth not receive and apply the same unto himselfe, as S. Augustine sheweth, when he saith, that we were all sick of sinne, and the heavenly Physitian descended unto us, and brought us heavenly physicke, imo pharmaca benedicta, even most blessed medicines; yet, meritò perijt agrotus, the sick man may well perish, if he doth not receive and apply this heavenly physicke unto himselfe: even so, though Christ died for them, and made satisfaction for their sinnes; yet may they be most justly condemned, for not receiving and applying the same unto themselves, but to suffer τὸ λύτρον μεγα this great price, to be uneffectuall unto them, when they will not lay hold upon the same.

Ioh.3.19.

And this our Saviour sheweth, when hee saith, This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men love darknesse more than light; for this is spoken of the reprobate, and not of the godly; for they love light more than darknesse; and therefore this is the condemnation of the wicked, that light, that is, Christ Iesus, is come unto them, and they refuse to accept him, or to apply his benefits unto themselves, and do love darknesse more than light, because their works are evill.

Mark the difference betwixt 1. Donation. 2. Manifestation. 3. Application. Mat.20.16. Numb.21.9.

And therefore in a word, to determine this question, I say, that the exhibition, or giving of Christ, was for all men, the manifestation of him by the preaching of the Word, unto many, and the speciall application of him by a lively and saving faith, unto few, according to that saying of our Saviour Christ, Many are called, but few are chosen: And this may be seene in the brazen Serpent, which is the most absolute, and, in most things, the most resembling type of Christ, of all that I can remember; for that Serpent was so lifted up, and set so high upon a pole, that all the Israelites might have looked upon the same, and been healed, if they would; but yet all did not looke upon it; and why so? But because God, out of his secret justice, and other causes best knowne unto himselfe, did not work that faith and grace in their hearts, to make them believe the words of the Prophet; and therefore they perished, not for want of a remedy to preserve them, but for not applying that remedy unto themselves, which doth exceedingly magnifie

magnifie GODS goodneſſe, and make them the more abundantly ſinneſull.

And ſo you ſee in what ſenſe Chriſt may be ſaid to have died for all men, and to procure grace for all men, and in what ſenſe he may be ſaid to die only for his elect, and to procure grace onely unto the elected Saints.

The abundance of Gods love unto the Saints.

And from hence we may behold with joy, and conſider with admiration the exuberancie, and the exceeding ſuperabundancy of Gods love unto his elected Saints and choſen people, above all other men in the world; for being all in the ſame maſſe of corruption, cui nihil niſi ſupplicium debebatur, to all which was nothingdue but deſtruction, we could deſerve nothing at the hands of God no more then the wickedeſt men in the world.

And yet he doth not onely give his Sonne for us, (as he did for all men elſe) and offer his grace unto us, (as he doth unto many others) but alſo he extendeth his love further towards us then he doth unto any other; for he pittieth our unaptneſſe to receive, and unableneſſe to retaine his grace; and therefore he helpeth our imbecillity, and worketh grace in our hearts to accept his grace, to apply that grace unto our ſelves, and to retaine that grace unto our lives end: and the fewer he chooſeth, to do this for, the greater is his love towards them; that conſidering all others, which were in the very ſelfe ſame ſtate and condemnation, he would paſſe by them all, and ſhew ſo much grace and favour unto ſo few of us.

And ſo, not of our ſelves, but by the ſpeciall and effectuall working of Gods grace, wee onely, that are elected, doe accept, apply, and retaine the grace of God, and all the benefits of Ieſus Chriſt unto our ſelves, whereby we are juſtified and ſanctified here, and ſhall be ſaved, and glorified hereafter.

O that we would therefore praiſe the Lord for his goodneſſe, and ſhew the wonders that he doth, and the exceeding ſuperabundant kindneſſe that he ſheweth for us, poore children of men.

And thus much ſhall ſerve for the reſtriction of ſaving grace, as it is effectuall and beneficiall onely to the Saints, though the ſame be done for all, and offered as ſufficient unto many; yet not effectually wrought in any, but onely in the Saints and choſen people of God.

CHAP. IV.

The antiquity of Rome; and the iniquity of it; the care of the Saints; Separatiſts blamed; why the Saints dwell among the wicked; the ſucceſſive ſtormes of the Church; and what we ſhould do in theſe ſtormes.

2. Point. The Saints deſcribed from the place where they dwelt. How the godly dwell alwaies among the wicked

2. TOuching the place where the Saints inhabit, it is ſaid to be Rome; concerning which, if we do obſerve

{1. The antiquity / 2. The iniquity} of the ſame, we ſhall eaſily find a ſubject for a large diſcourſe.

1. The antiquity of Rome. Roma, id eſt, Impetus. Virgil. Æneid. 1.

1. Some think that the Pelaſgians overflowing the Countrey of Greece, came into Italy, and builded the City of Rome, and called it Roma by reaſon of the great ſtrength and power thereof, which Roma in Greeke doth ſignifie: Others thinke that the Trojans, reliquias Danaum atq; immitis Achillis, being toſſed to and fro, and wearied, with their wives and children, landing in Italy, their wives (by the advice of a noble Lady, called Roma) did burne up their ſhips, that they might ſaile no further; and therfore they were conſtrained to tarrie there and to build a Citie, which they called Roma, in remembrance of that noble Lady: & ſic alij atq; alij aliud atq; aliud opinati ſunt, every ſeverall man had his ſeveall judgement, as Saint Auguſtine ſpeaketh in the like caſe, and Plutarch ſheweth in this caſe. Plut. in vit. Romuli

But the common received opinion is, that Romulus and Remus, being departed from Alba, did build the same, and erect a Sanctuary of refuge, that what malefactor soever did flie unto the same, hee should be safe from all revenge; whereby, in a short time, it grew so populous, so strong, and so great a Citie, that it excelled all others, and at last became the Empresse and Metropolitan city of the whole world, which as the Poet saith,

Virgil. Eglog. 1. —Inter alias caput extulit urbes, Quantum lenta solent inter viburna cupressi.

a. For the iniquity of Rome.

2. For the iniquity of it, it began in bloud, when Cain-like Romulus did unnaturally murder his naturall brother Remus: so as the Poet saith,

Fraterno primi maduerunt sanguine fratres;

And as Belus King of Ninive erected a golden statue, bearing the image of his Father Beel, and warranted all malefactors free that fled unto the same for helpe; whereby at last, the wicked fugitives adored the same for a god, and so committed horrible idolatry; even so by their wicked asylum, did the Romanes multiply in such multitudes, that they quickly exceeded all others, and as the Poet saith,

Beda in Luc. ca. 11

Inde iræ faciles, & quod suasisset egestas
Vile nefas, magnumq; decus—
Hence quarrells grow; what poverty esteem'd
A vild offence; now's greatest honour deemd;

Lucan. l. 1.

Hinc usura vorax, avidumq; in tempore fanus,
Et concussa fides, & multis utile bellum.
So griping usery growes, so faith is lost,
And civill warre as gainefull sought by most.

And because they gave tollerations for all Religions, there was no hinderance of their increase; because all men are ever readier to yeeld their allegiance, then their conscience unto their enemies: and so by these meanes they grew to the height of all impiety towards God, and of all savadge cruelty towards men: as we reade of Cajus Marius, of whom Lucan saith, Valer. Max.

Lucan. pharsal. l. 2

——Non ille favore
Numinis, ingenti superum protectus ab ira;
Vir ferus, & Romam cupienti perdere fato
Sufficiens—

Cruelty of Marius

——Whom their sterne will to serve
Not the gods love, but anger did preserve,
A cruell and fit man, when fate contriv'd
Romes ruine:

And yet L. Sylla, who strove to be called fœlix for his cruelty, justified him; because as the Poet saith, Cruelty of Sylla.

Ille quod exiguum restabat sanguinis urbi
Hausit, dumq; nimis jam putrida membra recidit, Excessit medicina modum.—
—His sword reft
Rome of that little blood before was left,
And now guilty men are slaine
So long, till none but guilty men remaine.

And Caligula went beyond them both; but Nero was borne to justifie Caligula, saith Suetonius; and so of the rest: repleti omni injustitia, they were full of all unrighteousnesse, saith the Apostle, they respected no truth, they kept no faith, they regarded no justice, but did all that they could do, by all the meanes in the world, to be great and wealthy, though they did not care how wicked, and how ungodly they were.

Rom. 1. ult.

The former doctrine teacheth two things. 1. The care of the Saints.

Yet heere among these wicked people, in hac famosa civitate, in this Citie, famous for her infamie, did these beloved Saints inhabite; whereby we see,

{1. Their care and circumspection.
{2. Their state and condition.

1. It

1. It is naturall in man to desire society, saith Aristotle, and yet there is nothing so dangerous as the society of wicked men, saith Isidorus; for though that ship was not troubled which carried Peter; yet that was greatly tossed which carried Jonas, like that, which carried Jonas; and therefore all the godly that were with him, licet suis meritis firmi, tamen turbebantur alienis, saith Saint Ambrose; though they were firme, in respect of their owne deserts, yet were they hazarded for the wickeds sake.

Aristotles l.1.ca.2 de Repub. Isidor.lib.2.sol.

Ambros.l.4. super Luc.

And therefore these Christians, living among the wicked, in the midst of impiety, were very circumspect of their society, else could they never have preserved their sanctity; even so should wee doe: though wee live among the wicked, yet ought we to choose the society of the godly; for good men will make thee better, but evill men will make thee worse.

For such is the nature of men, saith Saint Gregory, Vt quoties bonus malo conjungitur, non ex bono malus melioretur, sed ex malo bonus contaminetur; that as often as the good is joyned with the bad, the bad will sooner corrupt the good, then the good can convert the bad.

Greg.ho.9.super Exech.

Saint Bernard therefore, writing upon those words of the Canticles, as the lillie among the thornes, so is my love among the daughters, saith, vide quomodo cautè ambules inter spinas, be sure therefore to walke warily; and then, as Ioseph in King Pharaohs court, Daniel in Nebuchadnezzars palace, Mordecai in Ahashuerus house, and these holy Christians, among the wicked Romanes, did live holily and undefiled; so may the servants of Christ live godly in the kingdome of Antichrist.

Bern.in Cant.ser. 48.

The Saints may live godly among the wicked.

For as Saint Ambrose speaketh; non utiq; transire in Egyptum criminosum est, sed transire in mores Egyptiorum; it was no fault to passe into Egypt, but to follow the manners and the sinnes of the Egyptians was reproveable; for Moses went to Egypt, but he used not the Egyptian manners: So may we live in the world, but we must not fashion our selves like unto the world; but, as the children of Israel ambulaverunt per siccum in medio maris, did walke upon drie ground in the midst of the sea; so should we ambulare sanctè in medio mundi, live holily in the midst of the world, saith Saint Gregory: and indeed, non est perfectè bonus, nisi qui inter malos est bonus, he is not perfectly good that is not good among the bad; for it is no thankes to them that live holy in heaven, where there is no provocation to evill; but we must live holily with divels, if we would live blessedly with Angels.

Ambros.ep. ad Irenæum.

Greg lib.6.ep.33.

This therefore condemneth all the pestilent brood of Donatists, the Brownists and Barrowists of our time, who leave our Churches as prophane multitudes, and run away to lawlesse places.

All separatists condemned.

For, as the brightest day hath his clouds, and the purest gold hath his drosse; so the best Churches have their imperfections; and therefore the Spouse of Christ confesseth her selfe to be blacke though comely; and the Church of God is compared to a corne-field, wherein there are tares as well as wheat; and to a threshing floore, wherein there is chaffe as well as corne; quia intus & foris mali tolerandi sunt, ne pacis compago solvatur; and therefore within and without the wicked must be suffered, that the peace of the Church be not disturbed; & licet zizania in Ecclesia esse cernimus, de Ecclesia tamen recedere non debemus; and though we see the tares in the Church, yet must we not therefore leave the Church, saith the same Saint Augustine.

The Church a mingled Congregation.

Aug.de vera Relig.c.5. & l.2.c.12. contra Cresc. Idem in l.De unitate Ecclesiæ.

Idem l.2.ca.28. retract.ex Cypriano.

For, if these beloved of God did not runne out of Rome, that was nothing but tares, but heathenish; why should we forsake the Church upon pretence of some imperfections?

Two reasons, why the Saints dwell among the wicked.

And in very deed there be two speciall reasons, saith Saint Augustine, why the godly Christians should live with the ungodly Atheists.

Aug.in Psal.54

{1. That the evill may be converted.
{2. That the good may be exercised.} For

1. If all the godly should forsake the wicked, how could the wicked bee converted? Saint Peter was an Apoſtata, Saint Matthew was a Publican, Zacheus an Oppreſſor, S. Paul a Perſecutor, Iuſtine Martyr a Gentile, S. Auguſtine a Manichee, Leo Affricanus a Mahumetane, Luther a Monke, Tremellius a Iew, and ſo many others, but by converſing with good men, they were converted unto godlineſſe.

1.Reason.

Saints, what many of them have beene,

2. Reaſon. 1 Cor. 11. 19.

2. Oportet eſſe hæreſes, there muſt be hereſies among you, ſaith Saint Paul, that they, which are approved among you, may bee knowne; for if Arrius had not beene borne, qui poſuit Trinitatem ſubſtantiarum cum Trinitate perſonarum, which maintained a Trinitie of ſubſtances or of Gods, with the Trinitie of perſons, as Aquinas ſaith; and Sabellius on the contrary, qui poſuit unitatem perſonæ cum unitate eſſentiæ, which held the unity of perſon with the unity of eſſence; the truth of thoſe queſtions about the bleſſed Trinity, had never beene ſo ſufficiently determined, by thoſe great Doctors of the Church, Athanaſius, S. Auguſtine, Hilarie, &c. And if the wicked lived not among the godly, their patience ſhould not be exerciſed, their care and circumſpection could not be ſeene, their ſanctity not ſo excellent, nor their victory ſo glorious.

Thom. 1 p. q. 31. ar. 2.

2. The condition of the Saints; and, The afflicted eſtate of them among the wicked. Ovid. l. 1. de remed. amor.

2. We may ſee heereby the eſtate of Gods Church, inter impios & tyrannos, among wicked ungodly men:

Terra ſalutiferas herbas eademq́, nocentes
Nutrit, & urticæ proxima ſæpe roſa eſt.

The ſame ground beares wheat and tares, and bryers grow round about the roſes; and many times, as Chriſt was crucified betwixt two theeves, ſo may a godly man dwell betwixt wicked neighbours; and what is worſe then that? for

Ioh. 19.

Heſiod. lib. 1. ἔργ. καὶ ἡμερ.

Πῆμα κακὸς γείτων ὅσσον τ' ἀγαθὸς μέγ' ὄνειαρ
Ἐμμορέ τοι τιμῆς, ὅς ἔμμορε γείτονος ἐσθλοῦ.

A bad neighbour is hurtfull, but he that hath a good neighbour, hath purchaſed an honourable commodity, ſaith Heſiod: And yet the godly muſt needs dwell among the the wicked; Lot among the Sodomites, Abraham among the Canaanites, Moſes among the Egyptians, and all the Miniſters of Chriſt are ſent forth as Lambes among Wolves: what then can they looke for at the hands of ſuch neighbours, but vexations and afflictions; this is the lot of the righteous; aske of the daies of old, as Moſes ſaith, and you ſhall ſee that from her beginning the Church of God wanted not oppreſſion; and Chriſt himſelfe telleth us, that to her ending ſhe ſhall not be void of affliction, For

Gen. 12. & c. 19. 5. c. 15. 7. & c. 20. 1. Mat. 10. 16.

Deut. 4. 32.

Sanguine fundata eſt Eccleſia, ſanguine cœpit,
Sanguine ſuccrevit, ſanguine finis erit:

Stormes ſucceſſively falling upon the Church. Bern. in parab. Chriſti & Eccleſiæ

No age unafflicted, no Church unaſſaulted, no Saint unattempted, no time but too bad, yet none ſo bad as this; for Saint Bernard tels us that the afflictions of the Church heretofore were like the waves of the ſea, that came one after another.

1. Perſecution, when as alij flammis exuſti, alij ferro perempti, alij patibulo cruciati; Some were ſtoned, as Stephen; ſom crucified, as Peter; ſome beheaded, as Paul; ſome burned, as Laurentius; others baniſhed; and all perſecuted.

1. Storme, Perſecution. Euſeb Eccl. hiſt. lib. 8. c. 11. & 12.

2. Diviſion; For terra Eccleſiæ ſanguine martyrum impinguata, the ground of the Church, being fatted and manured with the bloud of Saints, which is the ſeed of the Church, as S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh, it brought forth fruit the more abundantly, and made many heathens, by the beholding of their conſtancy, to become Chriſtians, as Sozomene writeth: Therefore the divell changed his courſe, and knowing that, nullus pejor quam domeſticus inimicus, none can be worſe then the homebred foe, he ſtirred up ſwarmes of heretickes, that within the boſome of the Church, did ſeeke the ruine of the Church; for while the Church was at peace within it ſelfe, it flouriſhed, & nulla potuit invidia prohibere, Satan with all his malice, the world with all his cunning, and tyrants with all their cruelty, could never hinder the proſperous increaſe of the Church; but when they whetted their tongues, and blunted their pennes againſt themſelves;

2. Storme, Diviſio.

Euſeb. lib. 8. c. 1.

Hie

Hic primum ex alto delubri culmine telis
Noſtrorum obruimur, oriturq́; miſerrima, cades.

Virgil. l. 2. Æneid

Then did the Lord darken the glory of the daughter of Sion, and the Church of Chriſt was moſt grievouſly moleſted.

3. Ambition; for as the cruelty of tyrants ſuperata erat in patientia Martirum, was overcome by the patience of the Martyrs, ſo the ſubtilty of heretickes depulſa eſt in ſapientia doctorum, was diſcovered by the wiſedome of the Saints; and therefore Satan ſent the ſpirit of pride and ambition, whereby the Prieſts themſelves came to be rather Craſſiani * then Chriſtiani, more ſecular then ſpirituall, as Budæus ſpeaketh, aiming at honours, and ſeeking for promotions, and not that which was the Lord Ieſus.

3. Storme, Ambition.

* Of covetous & ambitious M. Craſſus, Budæus l. 5.

4. Diſſimulation and hypocriſie, as a cloake and mantle of their impiety; and ſo the afflictions of the Primitive Church came one after another: But now all of theſe and more then theſe, ut morbus cumulatus, are heaped together one upon another to oppreſſe the Church; our ſoules are among Lyons; our diviſions and diſtractions have rent the Church, like Ieroboams garment; our ambition carries us with Phaeton beyond the moone; and our hypocriſie, if it may be ſaid to be hypocriſie, quæ jam latere, præ abundantia, non valet, & præ impudentia, non quærit; which, by reaſon of the abundance thereof may not, and by reaſon of its impudencie, ſeekes not to be concealed, and therefore is growne to the height, to fill up the meaſure of our iniquity: for every man hath Chriſtum in codice, but non in corde, as Saint Auguſtine ſpeaketh; or as Saint Bernard ſaith, we give linguam Chriſto, our profeſſion unto Chriſt, but animam diabolo, our converſation unto the divell.

4. Storme, Diſſimulation. Our eſtate now, worſe then the ſtate of the Saints in Rome.

Our times how bad.

Aug. l. de ſpiritu & anima ca. 62.

We reade of the Turkes, that, dum volunt eſſe & Iudæos & Chriſtianos nec Iudæi ſunt nec Chriſtiani, while they would be both Iewes and Chriſtians, they are neither Iewes nor Chriſtians; ſo we have a Chriſtian ſhew, but a Iewiſh life, being full of all unrighteouſneſſe: what therefore ſhall the poore Chriſtians doe among ſuch unchriſtian people?

What the Saints ſhould do in afflictions.

1. Let them looke unto the author and finiſher of their peace, and unto all precedent Saints, that ever dwelt in the midſt of ſuch wicked people, and were deſtituted, afflicted and tormented; and yet nullo præmio nec pœna hujus mundi ab æternæ illius patriæ ſocietate ſeducti; neither the allurements nor the puniſhments of this world, could withdraw them from their moſt holy profeſſion; but they were like the palme tree, which, though it hath never ſo much weight on the top, and never ſo many ſnakes at the roote, yet ſtill ſaith nec premor nec perimor, neither am I preſt by the one, nor oppreſt by the other.

1. Looke upon the example of the Saints. Heb. 11. 37. Aug. de Civit. Dei, l. 5. ca. 11.

The goodneſſe of the Palme tree.

For, as the knife may ſcrape the adamant, yet cannot pierce it; as the flames may compaſſe the Salamander, yet cannot burne it; and as the waves may beat upon the rockes, yet cannot ſhake them; even ſo, the wicked may vexe the godly, but they cannot hurt them; capitis pœna nos afficere poſſunt, nocere non poſſunt, they can take away our life, but they cannot hinder us to eternall life.

Juſtinus Martyr. Apol. 2.

And therfore march valiantly ô my ſoule: and let us be like the Cypreſſe tree, quæ etiam hyeme viriditatem ſuam non amittit, which keepes her viriditie and freſhneſſe in the midſt of winter: So let nothing daunt us or diſmay us in the courſe of Chriſtianity; nam verè tuta eſt cum Chriſto & pro Chriſto pugna, in qua nec vulneratus, nec occiſus fraudaberis a victoria, for in this fight with Chriſt and for Chriſt, though we be wounded, though we be ſlaine, yet are we ſure of victory, ſaith Saint Bernard: and therefore, as the old Proverbe is,

The goodneſſe of the Cypreſſe tree.

A proverbe.

Quiſquis benigno navigabit numine;
Is vel ſaligno navigabit vimine:

If God be with us, we need not care who be againſt us.

2. Let them lift up their eyes unto God, and pray unto him, that he would be their helper and defender; nam cum mundus plenus eſt ſpinis, in terra ſunt, in aëre ſunt, in carne tua ſunt; for ſeeing the world is full of thornes, full of wicked men, verſari in his & minimè lædi divinæ potentiæ eſt, & non virtutis humanæ, to dwell

2. To call upon God. Bern. ſuper Cant. ſer. 48.

among them and not to be corrupted by them, is from the grace of God, and not by any power of man; and therefore we should pray to God, who is Θεὸς ἐν μικρὸν, Deus in opportunitatibus, a God in the needfull time of trouble, as Simplicius calleth him, that he would send unto us auxilium divinum quando deest auxilium humanum, his divine helpe from above, when we have no helpe in our selves.

Simplic. in Arist. Phis. lib. 1.

3. To learne patience and circumspection.

3. We should hereby learn patience, and especially circumspection; (as I said before;) for as these Christians, living in Rome, must needs be wary; so, while Rome lives amongst us, we have as great need to do the like; and as there are more motes in the house than are seen in the Sun; so there may be more adversaries about us, more Schismaticks, more ravening wolves, more Romanists than we imagine: therefore I say we should watch, and I say no more but watch.

And so much for the place where the Saints inhabited.

CHAP. V.

Of the love of God; that he loveth mankind best of all his creatures; the love of Christ caused all his sufferings; what the doctrine of Gods love teacheth us; how the sense of his love may be increased; how God is to be loved; two speciall properties of love; how we should love one another, and who is our neighbour.

3. Point: the Saints distinguished from all others three wayes.
1. In respect of love.
Two things observed.
1 Point.
Who the Apostle meaneth here: the regenerate.
Zanch. de nat. Dei. l. 4.
Love like fire.
Accepit solitam flammam, notusq; medullas intravit calor. Virg. Æneid. l. 8. p. 315.

3. Touching the proper differences, whereby the Saints are distinguished, we must take them as they lie in order.

1. Of their dilection, beloved of God:

Touching which, I will observe these two points, { 1. Whom in these words the Apostle meaneth. 2. What things hereby the Apostle teacheth.

De 1. The Latines have no word that doth expresse the etymologie and full meaning of love: and therefore some say, that amor love, is derived of an Hebrew word, which signifies to burne, in respect of the vehement affection of it; and so the Poets resembled it, ——— est mollis flamma medullis.

——— & cæco carpitur igni;

And the Scripture it selfe compares it unto fire, saying, love is as strong as death, the flames thereof are flames of fire: And yet the Latines do affirme, plus esse amare quam diligere, that it is more to love, than to wish well, because that to beare good will to any one is but a piece of love, which is called amor affectivus, and therefore Aristotles definition of love by the act, is more full, when he saith, that φιλεῖν ὅτι βούλεσθαι τινὶ ἃ ὄντα ἀγαθὰ, ᾗ αὐτῷ διωκεμεν πρακτικὸν εἶναι τινος; to love is to will all that, which, in our judgement, we esteem good, to the party loved, and, to the utmost of our power, to procure it to him; and this is amor effectivus, that is, a love declared by outward acts. But here the Apostle useth a word which signifieth more than to love, ἀγαπητοῖς Θεοῦ, beloved of God; for the Greek word ἀγαπᾶν seu ἀγαπητὸς, signifieth the same thing, as Cicero turneth, to be contented, or that wherin we do rest our selves satisfied: as the Father said of the Son, hic est filius meus ἀγαπητὸς, this is my beloved Sonne, in quo acquiesco, in whom I rest my selfe contented. So that herein we find three things.

Pharorius.

Mat. 3. init.
Three things in love.
1 Joh. 4. 10.
1. Thing.
Scalig de subtil. exercit. 317 §. 3.

1. An inclination to the thing chosen to set our liking on; for love doth include, Et judicium eligentis, & actionem sejungentis rem electam ab alijs, saith Scaliger; the judgement of the chuser, and his action, to separate the thing chosen from all other things.

2. Thing.

2. A desire to be united to it, as we may see in Matth. 23. 34. Deuteron. 5. 29.

3. Thing.
Psal. 132. 14.

3. A joyfull contentment in it; as this is my rest for ever, here will I dwell, for I have delight therein.

And

And therefore, though the love of God signifieth no affection or passion, as it doth in man, yet we find therein

1. Εὔνοιαν, a good will, or a decree of having mercy.

2. Φιλίαν, an actuall beneficence, or doing good to them, creating them, sustaining them, and guiding them.

3. Εὐδοκίαν, a delighting or contenting himselfe in them.

And this love of God extends it selfe,

1. And in the highest degree, towards himselfe.
2. Towards all things that be.

Three things in Gods love.

The large extent of Gods love.

1. In respect of the will and unity of essence, the three persons love each other with an unconceiveable essentiall love: and therefore God made all things for his owne sake; and so the Scripture sheweth the love of each person unto the other; as the Father loveth the Sonne, and hath given all things into his hands; and, that you may know, that I love the Father; and as the Father gave me a commandement, so I doe; and, the Holy Ghost is said to be the love of the Father and the Sonne, In quantum est nexus Patris & Filij, & ineffabilis complexus, as Saint Augustine speaketh, ingenti largitate perfundens omnes creaturas pro captu earum; The bond of both the Father and the Sonne, and the suavitie and delight of both, filling all creatures with goodnesse, according to each ones capacity.

1. Towards himselfe.
How each person of the Trinity loves each other.
Ioh. 3. 35.
Ioh. 14. 31.

Johan. de Combis. l. 1. c. 8.

2. He loveth all things that are, and hateth nothing of the things that he hath made; For when he had made all things, he beheld them, and loe they were exceeding good; and in this sense all creatures are beloved of God.

2. Towards all things that are.
Sap. 11. 24.
Gen. 1. 31.

Ob. But you will say, God hateth all that worke iniquity, Psal. 5. 4, 5.

Psal. 5. 4, 5.

Sol. I answer; that in every sinnefull man there are two things to be considered:

1. His nature, which is the worke of God, and this he loveth.
2. His iniquity, which is the worke of man, and for this he hateth him, or this in him; And so you see that God loveth all things that are.

Two things in every man.
1. His nature.
2. His sin.

But you must understand, that although in respect of the act of loving, he doth not love one thing more then another, (because hee loveth all things with one simple act of his will, as Aquinas speaketh) yet in respect of things loved, there is an order in his love: for it is most certaine, that of all creatures that he hath made he loved mankind best.

Thom. 2 p. q. 20. ar. 3.

That there is an order in Gods love.

1. For that, when he made all things, he onely made man according to his owne image and likenesse; and therefore David in admiration of this love of God to mankinde, breaketh forth into such exclamations, O God what is man that thou art mindfull him, &c. thou madest him lower then the Angels, to crowne him with glory and honour: lower it may be in regard of his substance, but higher in respect of Gods Image, which is that glory and honour wherewith he was crowned.

That God loved mankind above all other creatures.
1. Proofe.
Psal 8.
Zanch. de natura Dei.

2. For that, although he loved the Angels with an exceeding great love, yet do we never reade that he was called φιλαγγελος, aut φιλέγκτος, a Spirit-lover, as he vouchsafed to be called, as by a proper name, φιλανθρωπος, a Man-lover as we see, Tit. 3. 4. cùm apparuit φιλανθρωπία Servatoris nostri, when the bountifullnesse and love of God towards man appeared.

2 Proofe.
That God loved mankind above the Angels.

3. For that, after the fall of man, he left an exceeding great liberty unto them, and bestowed many blessings and benefits upon them as witnesses of his love to man, even in that relapsed estate and time of disobedience, (as Saint Paul doth most excellently declare unto the Athenians) which hee hath not done to the relapsed Angels, who presently, upon their fall, were deprived of all tokens of Gods love.

3. Proofe.
Act. 14. 17.

4. For that he sent his deerest Sonne to take out nature upon him, and to bee made man, like unto us, and not to take the nature of Angels upon him, as the Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews doth most divinely observe, when hee saith, that non assumpsit Angelos, sed semen Abrahæ, he assumed not the nature of Angels, but he took upon him the ſeed of Abraham; & quid tam pietatis plenum, quam quod filius Dei pro nobis factus eſt fœnum? And what can be a greater ſigne of love, or more full of piety, than that God ſhould give his only Sonne to be made graſſe for us? (for, all fleſh is graſſe) ſaith S. Bernard.

4. Proofe.
Heb. 2. 16.

Iſa.40.6,7.

5. For that he did not onely give his Sonne, to take our nature upon him, and ſo to become of no reputation, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, but alſo to be made a curſe for us, to ſuffer for us, to be wounded for our ſinnes, to be broken for our tranſgreſſions, and to be crucified for our iniquities, where he ſuffered.

5. Proufe. Phil.2.7. Gal 3 13.

What Chriſt ſuffered

1. Shame.

1. Opprobrium, quo nullum vilius, the greateſt reproach and ſhame that could be, quia morte turpiſſima condemnemus enim, for the death of the Croſſe was accounted the moſt ſhamefull, and moſt diſgracefull death that was, for curſed is every one that hangeth upon a tree, ſaith the Scripture.

Sap.2.19,20.

Deut.21.23.

2. Paine.

2. Supplicium, quo nullum majus, the greateſt paine and torment that could be.

1. In his body.

1. In his body, in all his ſenſes, as

1. In his feeling, the ſharpneſſe of the nailes.
2. In his hearing, their mocks and ſcornes.
3. In his ſmell, their ſtinking ſpittles.
4. In his taſte, the bitterneſſe of gall.
5. In his ſight, the effuſion of teares, his friends bewailing, his foes exulting, and all forſaking him.

2. In his mind.

2. In his mind, ſuch thoughts and ſorrowes, as cannot be conceived, much leſſe by men any waies expreſſed; and all this was done for us, and for our ſake, ut injuſta mors juſtam vinceret mortem, that he, being unjuſtly put to death, ut injuſtus cum injuſtis, & ex injuſtis cauſis, as unjuſt, by the unjuſt, with the unjuſt, and for unjuſt cauſes, he might juſtly deliver us from that juſt death, which we deſerved.

And therefore, if we behold this man of ſorrow and ſay,

Quæ ſunt hæ plagæ, quæ ſunt hæc vulnera, Chriſte?

What ſtripes or wounds be theſe, O bleſſed Chriſt, he will anſwer,

Et plagæ, & ſunt hæc vulnera quæque tua:

All theſe are only thine, quia tibi natus, tibi paſſus, tibi mortuus; for I was born for thee, to ſuffer for thee, and to die for thee; and if thou wouldſt know the impulſive cauſe hereof, and ſay,

The love of Chriſt to us moved him to ſuffer all for us.

Si mea, cur tua diripiunt tua viſcera, Chriſte?

He will anſwer, and his anſwer will be moſt true, that love is the onely cauſe hereof:

O amor, his plagis membra cruentat amor:

His love to man is the cauſe of all theſe things: and all theſe things are ſufficient arguments, to ſhew the ſuperabundancy of his love to man above all other creatures whatſoever; and therefore in many places, this great love of God is ſhewed with notes of incomprehenſibleneſſe, as, ſo God loved the world, ſo as it cannot be expreſſed: and againe, Behold what manner of love the Father hath ſhewed unto us, that we ſhould be called the ſonnes of God.

Ioh.3.16.

1 Ioh.3.1.

And yet here we muſt underſtand that this love of God to mankind is twofold.

The love of God twofold.

1. Common.

1. Common, to the juſt and unjuſt.

Bern.Ser.14.de cœna Dom.

2. Speciall.

2. Speciall, to the elect only, in whom the love of God doth more manifeſtly appeare, and upon whom he beſtoweth all the benefits of his love.

Three ſorts of elects.

And of theſe alſo he loveth ſome better than others; for there be three ſorts of Elects.

1. Sort.

1. Some whom God hath decreed to juſtifie, but as yet are not regenerate, as Paul while he was a perſecutor.

2. Sort.

2. Others, in whom regeneration is inchoated, and the reliques of ſin remaining, as the Saints on earth.

3. Sort.

3. Others, in whom perfect obedience is effected, and their ſanctification fully fully accompliſhed, as the Saints in heaven.

He loveth the firſt well, the ſecond better, the third beſt of all; for the holier we be, and the nearer unto his image, the dearer we are beloved of him; and therefore he ſaith, diligentes me diligo, I love them that love me, and I will ſhew mercy on them that keepe my commandements; as if he ſhould ſay, I love all men well, but I love them eſpecially above all men, that love me and keepe my commandements: And this S. Auguſtine ſheweth moſt excellently, ſaying, Omnia diligit Deus quæ fecit, & inter ea magis diligit creaturas rationabiles, & de illis eas amplius, quæ ſunt membra unigeniti ſui, & multò magis unigenitum: God loveth all that he made; and among them, he chiefly loveth his reaſonable creatures, that is, men, and of all men, the members of his Sonne, and his Sonne himſelfe above them all.

The holier we are the dearer God loves us. 1 Sam 2.30. Exod.20.6.

Aug.tom.9.in Ioh.

Now, theſe things being thus made manifeſt, what the love of God is, how farre it extendeth, and how he loveth all creatures; it is eaſie enough to know, whom the Apoſtle meaneth, by the beloved of God; not thoſe that he loved beſt; for they were in heaven, and not in Rome; nor thoſe that he loved leaſt, becauſe they lived in their ſinnes; but thoſe that were regenerated and ſanctified in ſome meaſure, as the next words do declare, called to be Saints.

Whom the Apoſtle meaneth here; that is, the regenerate, which lived here on earth.

De 2. The Apoſtle in theſe few words doth give us to learn many things, but eſpecially,

1. A confutation of heretiques.
2. A conſolation for Chriſtians.
3. A manifold inſtruction for all men in their lives and converſations.

2. Point. What leſſons wee may learn from this doctrine of the love of God.

1. Seeing the Apoſtle doth not call them diligentes Deum, the lovers of God, or thoſe that love God (though they did ſo too) but dilectos Dei, beloved of God, or thoſe whom God did love, he ſheweth hereby that the love of God is the primary and efficient cauſe of our ſanctity and goodneſſe, and not our goodneſſe the cauſe of his love; and therefore this confuteth the Doctrine of humane merit, and the foggy miſt of the Pelagian hereſie, faining and fancying certaine cauſes without God, (as the Schoole-men ſpeake) that is, not ſubſiſting in God himſelfe, but externally moving the will of God to determine and diſpoſe of ſundry things; As if the works of men fore-ſeene of God, and not the love of God to men, were the cauſe why he elected and called them unto ſanctity; and that not his love and grace to us, but our good uſing of his grace ſhould be the cauſe why he beſtoweth his grace upon us.

1. To confute errours.

The love of God to us is the cauſe of all our goodnes

A doctrine cleane contrary to the order of this Scripture, and indeed contrary to all truth; for our Saviour telleth his Diſciples, you have not choſen me, but I have choſen you, and ordained that you ſhould bring forth fruit, and that your fruit ſhould remaine; Whereupon S. Auguſtine moſt excellently ſaith, hic vacat vana illorum ratiocinatio, qui præſcientiam Dei defendunt, contra gratiam Dei; this confuteth their vaine babling, which defend the preſcience of God, to the derogation and prejudice of the grace of God; for if God did therefore chuſe us, becauſe he did fore-ſee and know we would be good, then he did not chuſe us to make us good, but rather we chooſe him in purpoſing to be good: but our Saviour ſaith, you have not choſen me, but I have choſen you, and the Apoſtle ſheweth, that God did not chuſe us, becauſe he fore-ſaw we would be holy, but he choſe us to the end we might be holy, and that he did not predeſtinate us, upon the fore-ſight of the good uſe of our free will, but according to the good pleaſure of his owne will, quæ omnium quæ ſunt ipſa eſt cauſa, which is the cauſe of all the cauſes that are.

Ioh.15.16.

S. Aug. Tract. 86. in Johan.

God choſe us not for any previſed thing.

Eph.1.4.

And therefore nullum eligit dignum, ſed eligendo efficit dignum, God did chuſe none, becauſe he was worthy; but God maketh him worthy, becauſe he chuſeth him: neither doth he love any of us, becauſe we love him firſt; but therefore we love him, becauſe he loved us firſt; for if he had never loved us, we could never have loved him; his love therefore to us is the cauſe of our love to him, and of all other our goodneſſe, and not our love and goodneſſe the cauſe of his love to us.

S. Aug. con. Iul. Pelag. l. 5. c. 3.

1 Ioh.4.19.

And

And therefore the Apostle heere maketh the love of God to be the maine ground and cause of our vocation and sanctification: and S. Iohn putteth it as the onely cause of our redemption, saying, Christ hath loved us, and washed us from our sins.

1 Ioh. 4.10.

2. To comfort the godly.

2. Here is sufficient consolation, that God loveth us; and therefore if any man would rejoyce, let him rejoyce in this, that hee is beloved of GOD: for Homer. Iliad. 9.

αὖτι νυ πολλῶν
Λαὸν ἔσιν ἀνὴρ ὅν τε Ζεὺς κῆδει φιλήσει:

That God loveth us, is the greatest comfort we can imagine. Amb. l. 2. c. 6. de vita beata.

That man is in stead of many people, whom God shall love: I care not then for the love of the world, so I may have the love of God; I feare not my sinnes, so I may have the love of my Saviour: for I doe not rejoyce quia justus sum, sed quia redemptus sum, non quia vacuus sum peccato, sed quia remissa sunt peccata; that I am just, but that I am justified; not that I have no sinnes, but because my sinnes are forgiven; not because I am beloved of the world, but because I hope I am beloved of God.

3. To instruct us in many things.

3. From this doctrine of the love of God, we may learne many lessons of instructions; as

1. Not to abuse the creatures.

1. Seeing God loveth all his creatures, wee should neither wastfully abuse them with that prophane glutton which our Saviour mentioneth, Luke 16.19. but to gather up the very crummes that nothing be lost; lest God should call us to an account for wasting his goods; nor yet shew our selves cruell towards the basest creatures; for the Lord loveth them: and therefore he commandeth, that they should take their rest upon the Sabbath, and that we should not muzzle the mouth of the Oxe, that treadeth out the corne, that we should not take the damme, that sitteth and cherisheth her young brood, &c. to teach us that we should not use any cruelty or unmercifullnesse towards these silly creatures; for a mercifull and a tender hearted man will be pitifull unto his beasts; as knowing these creatures were made for the use of man; and not that any man should abuse these creatures.

Exod. 20.10.

Deut. 25.4.

Deut. 22.9. Pro. 12.10.

2. To love men better then all other creatures.

2. Seeing the Lord loveth the reasonable creatures better then the bruit beasts; it teacheth us to love men better then our dogges, and Christians better then worldly trash.

3. To love the Saints best. Gal. 6.10.

3. Seeing of all men, God loveth the Saints best, it teacheth us to follow the counsell of S. Paul, To doe good unto all men, but especially to those that are of the houshold of faith, whereof I shall speake more hereafter.

4. To study to increase the love of God. That we may increase to our selves the sence of Gods love.

4. Seeing we our selves (as we hope) are beloved of God, it teacheth us to studie how to retaine and to increase the love of God.

Anton. p. 4 t. 6. §. 10.

And I confesse that at the beginning there is nothing in us, or that can be done by us, which can move God to love us; yet I say that after God hath given us his Spirit, and bettered us by his grace, then may we doe those things that may retaine and increase his love towards us; for quamvis Deus prior dilexit nos, tamen exercendo nos in actu dilectionis augetur dilectio ejus, though God loveth us first, yet by exercising our selves in loving God, we shall increase his love towards us, saith Antoninus.

How we may retaine & increase Gods love towards us.

To the end therefore that wee may retaine and increase Gods love unto us, there are many things to bee done, whereof I will onely name these three;

1. Contempt of vanity.
2. True humilitie.
3. Perfect obedience.

} For

1. By contemning the world.

1. Seneca saith, that nemo dignus est Deo, nisi qui opes contempserit, no man is any waies worthy of Gods love, but he that hath wholly cast away the deceitfull love of worldly wealth; and Saint Gregory saith, that tanto à divino amore disjungimur, quanto infernis delectamur, so much the further we are from Gods love, by how much the neerer we are to the worlds love; And Saint

Greg. dilect. 47. bonorum.

Iames

Iames saith, that the love of the world is enmitie with God: and therefore whosoever would retaine the love of God, must abstaine from the love of the world. Iames 4.4.

2. Humility is the onely vertue that God loveth, melius est vitium cum humilitate quàm virtus cum superbia; God loveth an humble Publican better then a proud Pharisee; 2. By humbling our selves.

Superbos sequitur ultor à tergo Deus: for He beholdeth the proud a farre off, but he giveth grace unto the lowly.

3. Whosoever will keepe my Commandements, my Father will love him, and wee will come unto him, and make our abode with him, saith Christ himselfe: and so you see the things that do both retaine and increase the love of God towards us. 3. By obeying his will. Iohn 14.21.

4. Seeing God loveth us, wee should doe our best endeavour to understand and learne, what wee shall render unto GOD for this his great love unto us?

And I answer, that dilectionis nulla major expetenda est remuneratio, quam ipsa dilectio; nothing is so acceptable in the actions of love, as love againe; and that love is deemed to be lost, which is not requited with love. Leo ser. 7. de iciun. mic. The love of God is to be requited onely with love.

And therefore as the Magi, when they came to Christ opened their treasures and offered their gifts unto him, gold, frankincense, and mirrhe, whereof the first is said to be the gold, whereby love is signified: for as gold is better then all other mettals, so love is the chiefe of all vertues, πίστις, ἐλπὶς, ἀγάπη· μείζων δὲ τούτων ἡ ἀγάπη; Faith, Hope, and Charity, yet the greatest of these is Charity: and as gold maketh the owner rich, so is he truly rich, which is in love with God; and as the gold is made purer in the fire, so is our love made brighter in the fire of temptations. Mat. 2. 11. Love the best of all graces. 1 Cor. 13. ult.

And therefore Victorinus, upon the words of the Apoc. I counsell thee to buy of me gold, doth expound the same to signifie love and charity; lucem intimi splendoris fulgidam, fervore dilectionis ignitam, & per fornacem tribulationis probatam, shining, through the light of its inward brightnesse; fiery, through the fervencie of affection; and tried in the furnace of tribulation: and therefore Thomas saith that the first gift of the Holy Ghost, which we receive from God, is love; and therefore seeing this is the first gift of God to us, whereby hee is moved to doe all other good things for us, let us with the Wise men offer our love in the first place to God againe: for this is the first and great Commandement, to love the Lord thy God with all thy heart; this is the first and chiefest oblation, and this is that, which God chiefly accepteth. Revel. 3. 18. Richard Victor. in Apoc. Thomas 1. p. q. 38. ar. 2. Mat. 22 36, 37.

But because our love extends it selfe to many things, therefore I desire you to observe that, as Saint Augustine tells us, there bee three things, which may bee loved either well or evill; that is, God, our neighbour, and the world; and therefore we should guide our love and rectifie our charity; if it runne let it runne well; if it resteth, let it rest well: and wee find that our desire runneth and our joy resteth; in respect whereof saith the Father, our joy is uniforme, because it is alwaies in one, neither can it be vitiated by any change, or corrupted by any vicissitude; but our desire is mutable, and receiveth many changes; and therefore doth not containe it selfe in one thing, but representeth many species and divers kinds of objects unto our affections; for every course is either from that, or with that, or in that, to which it is; how therefore ought our desire to runne? God should have three things, our neighbour two, and the world one in the course of our desire; for How all things should be loved rightly. Omnis namq; cursus aut de illo est, aut cum illo, aut in illo, ad quod est. De cursu desiderij nostri.

1. Our love by its desire may rightly and orderly runne in things that concerne God, with God, and into God. 1. Resp. Dei.

1. In things concerning God, when our desire receiveth that from him for which it loveth him. 1. De Deo, quando de eo accipit, unde eum diligit.

2. With God, when in nothing it contradicteth or opposeth the will of God. 2. Cum Deo, quando eius voluntati in nullo contradicit.

3. Into

2. In Deum, quando in ipso acquiescere appetis.
2. Respectu proximi

3. Into God, when it desireth to rest and content it selfe in God, as in its only good.

2. Our desire may run, in things concerning our neighbour, and with our neighbour.

1. Bo proximo.

1. In things concerning our neighbour, or touching the good of our neighbour, as when we do rejoyce in his health, and are glad of his progresse in the way of grace.

2. Cum proximo.

2. With our neighbour, when we desire him as our companion of our journey in the wayes of God; that is, when we wish that he, together with us, might keep and observe the lawes and commandements of God, which are the wayes that we are to walk in.

But into our neighbours our desire should not run, as that it should place its hope and confidence in man; which the Scripture doth so plainely forbid, and pronounce a curse to them that do it.

Ier. 17. 5.

3. Respectu mundi.

3. Our desire should be only one in respect of the world, that is, ut de ipso curramus, that we run from it, and from the things that concerne it, not unto it, nor with it, nor into it. And

1. De mundo quando curris.

1. Our desire doth run in things concerning the world, Quando foris Dei opere inspecto, per admirationem & laudem, ardentius intus ad ipsum se convertit, that is, when we do outwardly behold the works of God, and our love or desire doth inwardly convert it selfe with the more ardency of spirit, to the admiration and praise of God.

2. Cum mundo quomodo curris.

2. Our desire doth run with the world, if through the mutability of these temporall things, either by dejecting it selfe, and despairing in adversity; or by exalting it selfe, and presuming in prosperity, it doth conforme it selfe unto the world, which the Scripture forbids us plainly for to do.

Rom. 12. 2.

3. In mundum quando curris.

3. Our desire doth run into the world, when it doth alwaies desire to rest and to be satisfied with the delights and pleasures of this world.

And therefore, we should guide, order, and direct our love, that it should run by the desires thereof, in things concerning God, with God, and into God; in things concerning our neighbour, and with our neighbour, but not into our neighbour; and in things concerning the world, but neither with the world, nor into the world; that so it may rest it selfe with joy and contentment only in God alone, and in nothing els. Hac est ordinata charitas, and this is well guided love, and rightly ordered charity, besides which, all that we do, is no well ordered charity, but ill disposed cupidity, saith S. Augustine.

Non est ordinata charitas, sed inordinata cupiditas. Aug. de substantia dilectionis. cap. 5.

Now touching the loving of God, the Schoole-men do assigne three degrees of loving him: that is,

Three degrees of loving God. Thom. in 1. de perfect. spirit. vitæ. c. 3.

1 Degree. Bern. in 1 de diligend. Deo.

1. Quantum diligibilis est, as much as he is worthy of love; and so he is only loved as he should be of himselfe, and therefore S. Bernard crieth out, O my God, my helper; I will love thee, but after mine owne measure; lesse indeed than right, yet plainly, not lesse than I am able, who albeit I cannot so much as I should, yet cannot I further than I am able; and indeed I shall do more, when thou wilt vouchsafe to give me more, yet never for all this shall I be able to doe as much as thou art worthy.

2. Degree.

2. Secundum totam virtutem alicujus diligentis, according to the full power and strength that is in him that loveth, that is, fully to love him, according to all the vertue of the lover: and so he is loved of the Angels and blessed Saints.

3. Degree. That we should love God three wayes.

3. To the uttermost of our ability, so farre forth as our imbecillity will permit us: and thus we are to strive to love him three waies.

1. Placabiliter.
2. Ordinabiliter.
3. Appretiabiliter.

} saith Niderus in 1. precept.

1. Way. God is to be loved for his owne sake. Love twofold.

1. To love him for his owne sake, and not in respect of any outward profit; for there is a double kind of love.

1. Concupiscentia

1. Concupiſcentiæ, of Concupiſcence, in reſpect of our owne profit; and ſo a man loves his horſe or his aſſe, for the good ſervice he hath from them. 1. Of profit.

2. Amicitiæ, of friendſhip, as when I love a man meerly for the good things that are in him; and ſo God is to be beloved abſq; intuitu præmij, without reſpect unto any profit to be gained by him; nam minus te amat qui aliquid tecum amat, nec propter te amat, ſaith S. Auguſtine. 2. Of friendſhip. Aug. Confeſſ.

And therefore it was the commendation of Iob, not only to love God when he was compaſſed about with proſperity, but to love him in the middeſt of his adverſity; ſo did not they that loved Chriſt and followed him for the loaves ſake: if therefore we love God aright, we muſt not love him for wealths ſake, but for his owne ſake. Bern. in l. de dilig. deo Deo.

2. To love him ſo, that we direct our ſelves and all ours, both inward and outward actions, to the extolling and increaſing of his glory; as when we apply our whole life to his ſervice, then we love him with all our heart; when we captivate our ſenſes to the obedience of Chriſt, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, then we love him with all our underſtanding; and in briefe, when all our works and actions are ſprung from the love of God, and do aime at the glory of God, then we love him with all our ſtrength. 2. Way. All our actions ſhould tend to the glory of God. 2 Cor. 10.

And ſo S. Auguſtine ſaith, that all our actions ſhould begin from the love of God, (quia fructus bonus non eſt, qui de radice charitatis non ſurgit; for that can be no good fruit, which ſpringeth not from the root of Charity) and they ſhould tend to the praiſe and glory of God; quia virtutes veræ non ſunt, quæ in Deum finaliter non referuntur; becauſe they are no true vertues, which are not finally referred to God. Aug. de Spirit. & lit. c. 25. Idem de civit. Dei, lib. 19.

And therefore we ſay, that it is requiſite, that the love of God ſhould be the cauſe of the love of our neighbour, and that we ſhould love our neighbours propter Deum, for the honour of God: and ſo of all other actions, they ſhould all tend to the honour of God, as the Apoſtle ſheweth; whether ye eat or drinke, do all to the glory of God. 1 Cor. 10. 31.

3. To love him above all things, and to reſpect him and his will above all the world: and ſo Scotus ſaith, God is to be loved extenſivè, above all things; ſo that nothing in the world, nor all the things of the world, ſhould be equally prized with God; and therefore we ſhould wiſh all things not to be, rather than God ſhould not be: and intenſivè, ſo that we ſhould be more willing to ſuffer the hatred of any thing in the world, than the hatred of God. 3. Way. God is to be loved above all things. Scotus in 3. diſt. 27.

For he indeed is that pearle, for the gaining whereof, a man ſhould ſell all that ever he hath, as our Saviour ſheweth: O therefore love the Lord all ye his Saints, and love him above all things: for he that loveth father or mother, wife or children, or any thing els more than me, the ſame is not worthy of me, ſaith the Bleſſed Verity; And therfore S. Bernard ſaith, animam meam odio haberem, ſi eam alibi quam in Domino & in ejus amore invenirem; I would hate mine own ſoule, if I found it not in the Lord, and in the love of God. Mat. 13. Pſal. 31. 27. Mat 10. Bern. Lib. de amor. Dei, cap. 2.

And yet for all this, we ſee how many leave the Lord to love worldly vanities; ſome their pleaſures, ſome their riches, ſome one thing, and ſome another; and the lovers of God are like the winter gatherings, like the grapes of vintage, rare and few.

But all men will ſay, they love the Lord; and therefore, leaſt we ſhould deceive our ſelves, ſub ſpecie recti, under the colour of truth, we ſhould examine and find out the truth hereof by a double property of love. Two properties of love.

1. To unite the lover, as much as poſſible may be, to the thing loved, and in want of the fellowſhip therof, to deſire and ſeeke it above all things in the world: for it is the nature of love to make unions, and it is called charitas, quaſi chara unitas, becauſe love is never well, but when it is with the thing loved; for ſo the Church in the Canticles ſaith, I greatly deſire to ſit under the ſhadow of my well-beloved, and I am ſicke of love, that is, I faint for the fellowſhip of my beloved. 1. Property of love is to deſire to be united to the thing loved. Cant. 2. 3. 5.

Pſal.42.1. Revel.6.10.

And therefore, if wee love God, then as the Hart brayes for the water brookes, ſo our ſoules do long after God; we ſhould cry for him, and ſay, how long tarieſt thou holy and true? and we ſhould not let our ſoules be glued upon the vanities of this life.

2. Property of love is to fulfill the deſire of him that is loved. Ioh.14.21. 1 Ioh.3.11. Ioh.13.34.

2. To accompliſh and fulfill the minde and will of him that is loved; ſo our Saviour ſaith, he that hath my Commandements, and doth them, the ſame is hee that loveth me; and this is the love of God, that wee keepe his Commandements: And becauſe this might be thought to bee too generall, therefore he ſaith, that this is the Commandement that he giveth us, that we ſhould love one another.

Ioh.13.35.

And therefore, by this we may certainely know that we love God, if wee love one another: and ſo our Saviour ſaith, hereby not onely your ſelves, but all men ſhall know that you are my Diſciples, if you love one another: The love of our neighbour then is the ſureſt ſigne of the love of God; for per amorem proximi amor Dei nutritur, through the love of our neighbours, is the love of God increaſed; therefore Saint John ſaith it is an abſurd thing to ſay we love God, which wee have not ſeene, if we love not our neighbours, which we daily ſee: for our neighbour is the image of God; and thou doſt not love thy Prince if thou doſt hate his picture.

1 Ioh.4.20.

Gen.1.26.

And therefore Theodoſius counted the Theſſalonians traitors for abuſing his ſtatue: and ſo God pronounceth that whatſoever diſgrace is done unto his Saints, the ſame is done unto himſelfe.

Mat.25.45.

Three reaſons why we ſhould love all men. 1. Reaſon.

And there be three ſpeciall reaſons to induce us to love all men;

Iob 31.13. Mal.2.10.

1. Becauſe we are all made of the ſame lumpe, by one and the ſame Creator; for it is naturall for all things to love all that are of the ſame nature; and therefore Iob ſpeaking of his ſervants, ſaith, did not hee that made me in the wombe make him? and the Prophet likewiſe ſaith, have we not all one Father? and therefore why ſhould we not love one another, and not deale treacherouſly every one againſt his brother?

2. Reaſon. Mat.5.45.

2. Becauſe we are all bound to imitate God, as much as poſſibly we can; and he loveth all, and hateth none, nor any thing, that is his creature; and therefore Chriſt adviſeth us to love all men, that ſo we may be the children of our Father, which is in heaven; for that the more univerſall our love is, the more conformable we are to God.

3. Reaſon. Luk.16.24.

3. Becauſe God hath ſo diſpoſed all things, that there is nothing in the world, but at ſometimes or other, it ſhall have need of the love and helpe of others; and Dives may at ſometimes ſtand in need of Lazarus; and therefore reaſon bids us doe to them, as we would have them to doe to us: and becauſe we are all members one of another; therefore God commands us to love our neighbours as our ſelves.

Mat.19.19.

Queſt. But heere ſome perhaps may demand, who is my neighbour, that I ſhould love him?

Every man is our neighbour.

Reſp. To this I anſwer briefly, that our Saviour by the Parable of the Samaritan, that fell among theeves, ſheweth that, not onely thoſe, which dwell at the next doore to us or in the ſame pariſh with us, but alſo all men, created in the image of God, although they dwell in India, yea, though they be our enemies, as the Iewes and the Samaritans were, yet are they our neighbours; and therefore all men are to be loved of us; friends, foes, aliens, acquaintance, good and bad.

We muſt love our enemies. Aug. l. contra Adamant. c.18. Thom in Caten. ſuper Mat.c.5.45.

Indeed, moſt men may be eaſily induced to love their friends; but many men cannot be perſwaded to love their foes; for the Phariſees ſaid there was a law, of loving our friends and hating our enemies, but Saint Auguſtine denieth ſuch a law to be written of hating our enemies, and our Saviour biddeth us to love them, Mat.5.45. for amare amantem, naturæ eſt; inimicum, charitatis eſt: to love our friends is naturall, but to love our enemies is heavenly, and Chriſtian-like, ſaith Aquinas.

And

And, beſides many others, there be three ſpeciall reaſons to perſwade us to love our enemies.

Three reaſons to move us to love our enemies.

1. Becauſe there is that in our greateſt enemy, which is a farre greater cauſe of loving him, in reſpect of God, than any offence or wrong that he can do to us, to make us hate him in reſpect of himſelfe; and that is, our owne nature, and the image of God, which ſhould be loved, whereſoever we ſee it, either in our friend or foe.

1 Reaſon.

2. Becauſe we are commanded to forgive all treſpaſſes, that are done againſt us; or els our owne treſpaſſes ſhall not be forgiven unto us; and we can never forgive all the offences of them, whom we can never love; and therefore the Apoſtle doth ever place love to our brethren before the forgiveneſſe of their faults.

2 Reaſon, Mat. 6.

Eph 4.32. Col 3.8,9.

3. Becauſe he that hates his enemy commits a greater ſin againſt God, than his enemy can commit againſt him; for he offending me, ſinnes againſt man; but I, in not forgiving and not loving him, do moſt deſperately run againſt the commandement of God, and tell him to his face, that fleſh and bloud cannot indure this precept of God; and ſo we run into deeper danger for not loving our enemies, than our enemies do by offending us; therefore we ought, by all meanes, to love our enemies.

3 Reaſon He that forgives not his enemy, ſinnes more than his enemy.

Others could be contented to love the good, but cannot indure to love the bad; to whom I anſwer, that we are bound to love the wicked, and to do good for ſinners, non quia peccatores, ſed quia homines, not becauſe they are ſinners, but becauſe they are men: and therefore Ariſtotle, being demaunded why he did give his almes to a wicked and diſſolute fellow, anſwered; Non mores ſed hominem commiſeratus ſum, I pitied the man, I reſpected not his manners: So S. Auguſtine ſaith, Etſi peccator eſt qui petit, da tamen, non tanquam peccatori, ſed quia homo; nam quod homo, opus Dei eſt; quod peccator, opus hominis eſt; if a ſinner ſhould ask, give him, not becauſe he is a lewd ſinner, but becauſe he is a poore man, which is the work and image of God: And ſo S. Gregory ſaith, Dedi, non quia peccator, ſed quia homo; I love him, and I help him, not becauſe I ſuſpected him to be a ſinner, but becauſe I knew him to be a man, of mine owne nature and condition; & humanum eſt humanis caſibus ingemiſcere; and it is humanity in men to pitie and relieve all humane frailties.

We muſt love the wicked.

Laert. l. 5. c. 1.

And therefore we muſt diſtinguiſh of the good and bad things that are in lewd and wicked men, and ſo hate their ſinnes, which are the works of men, and love their perſons, which are the works of God, as S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh; or otherwiſe, as Abraham ſaid unto God, We ſhall deſtroy the righteous with the wicked; we ſhall confound good things for evill things ſake.

Aug. cont. Fauſt. l. 19. c. 24.

And ſome there be, that think they do God good ſervice, when they hate and perſecute the godly; confeſſio nominis non examinatio criminis, the confeſſion of the name of Chriſtians, and not the examination of their crimes, brought them into hatred, ſaith Tertullian: ſo now the brood of ſerpents, the children of this world, do hate the godly eo nomine, becauſe they are godly, as Ariſtides was baniſhed out of Athens, juſtus quia juſtus, for no other cauſe but for uprightneſſe: and this is more than heatheniſh impiety: for, though we are commanded to love all, and to do good to all; yet are we more eſpecially injoyned to do it unto the houſhold of faith, as David did unto the Saints; and therefore, when our Saviour ſpeaks of that love, which we ought to beare towards all men, his precept is, thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelfe; but when he ſpeaks of that love which we ought to beare towards the Saints, he ſaith, This is my commandment, that you love one another, as I have loved you; and that was farre more than he loved all others; to teach us, how to value and to love every thing according to its worth; for ſeeing the godly man hath a double cauſe of love in him, that is, Gods image in his nature, and Gods graces in his perſon, we ought to eſteem him, and to relieve him, as Joſeph did his brother Benjamin, five times as much as the reſt of his brethren.

It is the greateſt impiety to hate the godly.

Tertul. in apolog. c. 2.

That the Saints ought moſt chiefly to be beloved. Gal. 6. 10. Pſal. 16. 2.

Luke 10. 27, 28.

Joh. 15. 15.

A double cauſe of loving the godly.

Gen. 43. 34.

The fearfull ſtate of them that abuſe the godly.

And therefore this doth ſhew, how fearfull is their ſtate, that, inſtead of loving the godly more than any, do hate and abuſe them worſe than all, and above all the world beſides; and the more godly they ſee men, the more loads of ſcornes and reproach they lay upon them; thinking to ſhew themſelves wittie, by ſpitting out their poyſoned ſpite againſt the Saints; but they may know it to their everlaſting terrour, that their gibing and jeſting at thoſe, whom they terme puritans, to bring their profeſſion, the profeſſion of godlineſſe, into diſtaſt among prophane wretches, comes very neare, nearer than they think, unto the ſinne againſt the Holy Ghoſt, which ſhall never be forgiven, neither in this world, nor in the world to come; for he that would diſgrace any man, becauſe he makes profeſſion of ſerving God, and profeſſeth a deteſtation of all ſinnes, doth he not do deſpight unto the Spirit of grace, when he laboureth what he can, to work a deep diſgrace of thoſe good things, which the Holy Ghoſt worketh in the hearts of thoſe godly profeſſours?

Gibing at puritans how hainous.

Mat. 12.31, 32. Mat. 3.29.

Prophane mens reply;

Object. But you will ſay; they ſcoffe not at the holineſſe of their profeſſion, but at their hypocriſie in that profeſſion, which make a ſhew of holineſſe, and yet commit the greateſt wickedneſſe, and, with the Phariſees, devoure widowes houſes under the colour of long prayers.

Anſwered.

Sol. I anſwer, what a ſhift is this of Satan, to wound Chriſt through the ſide of a Chriſtian, and to ſcoffe at godlineſſe through the profeſſours of holineſſe; for do you not ſee theſe ſcoffers have a like baſe eſteem of all profeſſours, if they ſee them zealous? And if any man doth but tell them, ſuch a man is a puritan, do they not preſently flout him, though they never knew him? And if one man that is reputed a puritan, doth but once deceive you, or fall into ſome groſſe ſinne, (as who denieth not, but, as there was a Iudas among the Apoſtles, ſo there may be hypocrites among the profeſſours of godlineſſe, or as David did once commit adultery, and S. Peter denied his Maſter, ſo the beſt Saints may ſometimes faile) then preſently this is inough, to make them open their mouthes wide againſt all the generation of Gods children, and to cry out againſt all profeſſours, that they are nothing but hypocrites, and diſſemblers of religion, to hide and cover theſe their ſinnes under this cloke and mantle of piety.

Hypocrites will ever bee among the godly, as whores among honeſt women.

2 Sam. 11.4. Mat. 26.70, 72.

That the wicked Jeſters at religious men do hate religion.

Nay more than this, to let you ſee, they hate not diſſimulation, but religion; not the hypocriſie of phariſaicall profeſſours, but the profeſſion of the moſt zealous Chriſtians; I pray you mark, what are the things that they ſcoffe at in theſe men? Are they not ſome of the beſt exerciſes of Religion, as their going to Sermons, their ſanctifying of the Sabbath, their reading of the Scriptures, their ſinging of Pſalmes, their refraining from oathes, their abſtaining from drinking, and the like? and they lay hypocriſie to their charge, to cover their owne blaſphemies againſt religion, even as the Iewes laid treaſon and gluttony, and all other ſinnes againſt Chriſt, to cover their own malice and hatred againſt him.

Luke 23.2. Mat. 11.19.

The exerciſes of religion nothing the worſe, becauſe they are abuſed by the wicked.

But ſuppoſe, and be it granted, that ſome Profeſſours are hypocrites, doth that warrant any ſcoffing Iſhmael, or give leave to any prophane Atheiſt, to diſgorge his filthy heart againſt the ſacred exerciſes of religion, which theſe hypocrites do practiſe? For is true praying to God the worſe, becauſe hypocrites do pray only with their lips? Or is the hearing of Gods Word, and the reading of the holy Scripture the further off from working faith in our hearts, becauſe faigned profeſſours do theſe things only for a ſhew? Or is any holy exerciſe any jot the worſe, becauſe wicked men do uſe it? No more than the Sun is defiled by ſhining upon the dunghill, or the Scripture prophaned, becauſe it was alledged by the Divell.

Mat. 4.6.

And therefore let this perſwade all men, that would be beloved of God, to love all men, and eſpecially all thoſe that are godly, and that do their beſt to ſhew their faith by their works, and their inward holineſſe by their outward profeſſion; becauſe all thoſe that deſire the love of God, and profeſſe themſelves to love God, muſt teſtifie the ſame by their unfained love to all men; and this their love towards men, muſt be actually ſhewed by the doing of all outward good, that ſhall any

Wherein our love to our neighbours doth conſiſt any waies lie in our power to doe for them; as,

1. In praying for them, that God would blesse them, and defend them from evill, and forgive them those offences that they have committed either against him or us; and, in briefe, that they might be saved.

2. In building them up, or instructing them in our most holy faith, and expounding unto them the way of God; by exhorting them what to do; and admonishing them what they should not do; rebuking them, when they do amisse; comforting them, when they are in afflictions; and incouraging them, to go on in all godlinesse.

3. In preserving them, what we can, from all manner of dammage in their estates; for so the Lord saith, If thou meetest thine enemies oxe or his asse going astray, thou shalt surely bring it backe to him againe, Exod. 23.5,6. and if we must do it to our enemie, then surely we must do no lesse to any other neighbour.

4. In administring to their necessities, according to the uttermost of our abilities; for if thine enemie hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drinke; and so of all poore men, we are bound to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and never to turne away our face from our owne flesh, but in these things, & in omnibus alijs rebus egenos adjuvare debemus, and in all other things, that we are able, we ought to help and relieve the needy, as S. Chrysostome saith.

These things and the like are the surest testimonies of our love unto our neighbour; and the love of our neighbour is the onely touchstone, for the triall of this truth of our love to God.

And so much for the first note, whereby the Saints are differenced from all other men, which is, their dilection.

1. Praying for them. Psal. 122.6. Heb. 13.18. 2 Thes. 3.1. Rom. 10.1.

2 Instructing them Iude v. 20. Acts 18.26. Heb. 3.13. 1 Thes. 5.14. Lev. 19.17. Heb. 10.24.

3. In preserving them from dammage.

4. In relieving their necessities. Rom. 12.20.

Chrys. in Rom. 12. hom. 21.

CHAP. VI.

Of a twofold calling; three things to be considered about our civill calling; our calling to grace twofold; the difference of the one from the other; God calleth us diverse wayes; outward calling without the inward is uneffectuall; Of the meanes, time, persons, tokens and helps of our inward and effectuall calling.

2. TOuching the second differenee, whereby the Saints are distinguished from all other men, which is their vocation or calling, we must remember that there is a twofold calling.

1. Vocatio ad munus. } A calling to an office.
2. Vocatio ad gratiam. } A calling to salvation.

2. The Saints are distinguished from all other in respect of calling.

A twefold calling.

1. In this sense Saul was called to be a King, Iudas to be an Apostle; and of this calling the Apostle saith, Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called; where you must observe, the Apostle presupposeth, and takes it for granted, that every man had some calling in the common-wealth, before he was called by the Church; and truly it can neither be a wise nor politique government, of any people, that suffer men to live, like drones, upon the sweat of other mens browes, without any manner of vocation or calling in the world; and therefore Pharaoh, as soone as ever he saw Iosephs brethren, demaunds this, as the first question of them, What is your occupation? Or of what trade, or calling are you? Because no man should be terræ inutile pondus, such a burden upon the earth, as to live upon the same without some speciall calling.

1 A civill calling.

1 Cor. 7.20.

That every one should be of some calling or other.

Gen. 47.3.

And then, when any man is resolved to take such or such a calling upon him, let him examine these three points.

Three things to be considered touching our civill calling.

2. Whether the calling be lawfull or not.
3. What abilities he hath to discharge such a calling.
3. With what mind or purpose he intends to enter upon that calling.

1. Whether our calling be lawfull or not.

1. There be many callings, that many doubts of the lawfulnesse of them, and many many that we need not doubt; becauſe we know them to be unlawfull, as bawds, panders and common gameſters, that have none other trades to live, but by theſe unlawfull games; for God hateth the hire of a whore and the price of a dog; that is, all goods gotten by any baſe, ſordid, or unjuſt waies; and he promiſeth onely to preſerve his ſervants in all their waies; but if they goe out of their waies, that is, out of the rules of Gods Word, which is the ſole way of Gods children, then they are ſo farre from any promiſe of bleſſing, or comfort, or preſervation, that they are rather threatned and aſſured to be grounded to powder and to be daſhed all to peeces: And therefore I doe wonder how any one, that thinkes there is a God, and beleeves the truth of Scripture, dares live, and looke for any bleſſing upon any gaine, that is gotten in any unlawfull calling.

Deut. 23. 18.

Pſal. 91. 11.

Pſal. 119. 1.

No bleſſing upon any thing that is gotten in an unlawfull calling.

2. We muſt conſider what abilities, either of minde or body, we have to execute and diſcharge the duties of that calling, which we intend to take upon us; becauſe as the Poet ſaith,

—Non omnia poſſumus omnes;

And as the common proverbe is, ex quolibet ligno non fit Mercurius, every body is not able to be a Souldier, and every head will not make a Scholler; and therefore every one ſhould make choice of that vocation, not which he thinkes would be moſt profitable for him, or moſt honourable in the world, but which he hopes he ſhould be moſt able to diſcharge, for the glory of God and the benefit of his Church and Common-wealth.

2. What abilities we have to diſcharge our calling.

Every man not fit for every calling.

3. We muſt ever remember with what mind and to what end we do undertake, or will continue in ſuch a calling; which ſhould be (as I ſaid even now) not onely to inrich our ſelves, (though none denies, but every man may looke to live, and hope for that meaſure of wealth and honour as God ſeeth fitting for him, by his vocation and calling) but alſo for the glory of God and good of others; quia non nobis nati ſumus; becauſe we are not borne for our ſelves, but for others.

3. With what purpoſe we take any calling upon us.

2. The other calling is the calling of grace and a calling of us unto health and ſalvation, and this calling is either

1. Inefficaciter
2. Efficaciter.

that is, formally or effectually, outwardly or inwardly.

The 1. is generall and common to all; and

The 2. is ſpeciall and peculiar unto ſome.

2. The religious calling, or the calling unto grace and ſalvation, which is twofold.

Of the firſt our Saviour ſaith many are called but few are choſen, and

1. Generall, Mat. 20. 16.

Of the ſecond the Apoſtle ſaith, whom he hath predeſtinated them he calleth, that is, effectually by the grace of his ſpirit; becauſe this calling flowes from the grace of predeſtination, whereof Saint Peter ſaith, make your election and your calling ſure: and

2. Speciall, Rom. 8. 30.

2 Pet. 1. 10.

The difference betwixt theſe two callings conſiſteth herein; that the firſt brings men onely to a profeſſion of Chriſt and to become outward worſhippers of him; but the ſecond draweth men to become members of Chriſt; the firſt inlighteneth our ſoules, with the knowledge of Chriſt; but the ſecond illuminateth our underſtanding and ſtirreth up our wills to the faith of Chriſt; and the firſt changeth our hearts lightly and ſleightly to the externall obedience of ſome civill duties or to the reſtraint of ſome outward corruption, as it did in Judas, Simon Magus and Demas, and the like; but the ſecond worketh a full and a through change of the heart of the godly from all evill unto all good, at leaſt in their deſires and to the uttermoſt of their abilities; as it did in Saint Peter, Saint Paul, and thoſe Chriſtians that are mentioned in Acts 2. 36, And therefore this effectuall calling hath alwaies with it theſe three inſeparable effects, and companions.

The difference betwixt theſe two callings.

1. To unite us unto Chriſt, to make us members of him.
